The major premise of the argument in favor of the discharge of the appellants is that this court has decided in a recent case that insurance is "trade," within the meaning of the provisions of the Anti-Trust Law of this state, under which these appellants were prosecuted and convicted. The exact question in the case of Re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89, was whether the word "trade," in the title to the Anti-Trust Law, (being chapter 257, Laws 1889,) so far as it relates to the business of insurance contained in the first section of the Act, was broad enough to fairly indicate that such a provision with respect to insurance was a part of the Act; and the court held the Act valid so far as it related to the business of insurance, that being covered by the title of the Act. This is what the court did say: "The question presented is, Does the word 'trade,' used in the title, fairly indicate and include the provisions of the Act with reference to insurance? It is argued that the usual meaning of the word should govern, and in that sense it has reference to the business of selling or exchanging some tangible substance or commodity for money, or the business of dealing by way of sale or exchange in commodities; and it is said that the use of the word in connection with that of 'products,' in the title, qualifies the meaning of 'trade,' and makes it all the more apparent that the construction contended for is the correct one. This is the commercial sense of the word, and possibly may be the most common signification which is given to it, but it is not the only one, nor the most comprehensive meaning in which the word is properly used. In the broader sense, it is any occupation or business carried on for subsistence or profit. . . . The broader signification given to the word by most of the lexicographers would fairly embrace and cover the provision of the Act with reference to the business of insurance. The title prefixed to an Act may be broad and general, or it may be narrow and restricted, but in either event it must be a fair index of the provisions of the Act. . . . That the broader meaning of the word 'trade' was the one intended by the Legislature is manifest from the incorporation of the insurance provision in the body of the Act. . . . How can it be said that the business of insurance is foreign to the title of the Act, when the subject expressed in the title, taken in its broadest sense, and the one intended by the Legislature, would embrace such business?" So it may be fairly said, as it is in the printed brief of counsel for appellants, that a legislative and a judicial definition of insurance is that it is "trade," within the meaning of the Anti-Trust Law of this state.

The minor premise of counsel is that "trade," as defined by this court in the case of Re Pinkney, supra, means interstate commerce. This is an assumption, rather than a fair and logical deduction from the language used in the opinion. Trade between citizens of this state is not interstate commerce. Trade between a citizen of this state and a citizen of another state temporarily in this state is not interstate commerce. In fact, at the time the opinion in the case of Re Pinkney was written, there were no facts in the case that would suggest to the mind of the writer any question as to interstate commerce, because nowhere in the complaint, proceedings, or record of that case is it hinted that the unlawful combination intended and designed to control the cost of insurance was made or attempted by other persons than residents of the state of Kansas. So that it can be positively asserted that the word "trade," as used in that decision, meant then, and means now, trade between citizens of this state,—domestic trade, if you please,—and not trade or commerce between citizens of different states, or interstate commerce. It is a conclusive presumption of the law that this court knew that the Legislature of this state had no power to regulate interstate commerce, and the presumption is equally strong and conclusive that by the use of the word "trade" the intercourse between citizens of different states that constitutes interstate commerce was not in contemplation. It has been judicially determined, time and time again, by the highest judicial authority in the land, that issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357, in an elaborate opinion by Mr. Justice Field, says: "The policies are simple contracts of indemnity against loss by fire, entered into between the corporations and the assured, for a consideration paid by the latter. These contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one state to another, and then put up for sale. They are like other personal contracts between parties which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration. Such contracts are not interstate transactions, though the parties may be domiciled in different states. The policies do not take effect—are not executed contracts—until delivered by the agent in Virginia. They are, then, local transactions, and are governed by the local law. They do not constitute a part of the commerce between the states any more than a contract for the purchase and sale of goods in Virginia by a citizen of New York whilst in Virginia would constitute a portion of such commerce. In Nathan v. Louisiana, 49 U. S. 8 How. 73, 12 L. ed. 993, this court held that a law of that state imposing a tax on money and exchange brokers who dealt entirely in the purchase and sale of foreign bills of exchange was not in conflict with the constitutional power of Congress to regulate commerce. The individual thus using his money and credit, said the court, 'is not engaged in commerce, but in supplying an instrument of commerce. He is less connected with it than the shipbuilder, without whose labor foreign commerce could not be carried on.' And the opinion shows that, although instruments of commerce, they are the subjects of state regulation and, inferentially, that they may be subjects of direct state taxation. 'In determining,' said the court, 'on the nature and effect of a contract, we look to the lex loci where it was made or where it was to be performed. And bills of exchange, foreign or domestic, constitute, it would seem, no exception to this rule. Some of the states have adopted the law-merchant, others have not. The time within which a demand must be made on a bill, a protest entered, and notice given, and the damages to be recovered, vary with the usages and legal enactments of the different states. These laws, in various forms and in numerous cases, have been sanctioned by this court.' And again: 'For the purposes of revenue the Federal government has taxed bills of exchange, foreign and domestic, and promissory notes, whether issued by individuals or banks. Now, the Federal government can no more regulate the commerce of a state than a state can regulate the commerce of the Federal government, and domestic bills or promissory notes are as necessary to the commerce of a state as foreign bills to the commerce of the Union. And if a tax on an exchange broker who deals in foreign bills be a regulation of foreign commerce, or commerce among the states, much more would a tax upon state paper, by Congress, be a tax on the commerce of a state.' If foreign bills of exchange may thus be the subject of state regulation, much more so may contracts of insurance against loss by fire." The doctrine of this case was distinctly affirmed by the supreme court in the case of Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 566, 19 L. ed. 1029, in which Mr. Justice Miller says: "The case of Paul v. Virginia decided that the business of insurance, as ordinarily conducted, was not commerce, and that a corporation having an agency by which it conducted business in another state was not engaged in commerce between the states." The case of Paul v. Virginia, supra, was distinctly affirmed in the cases of Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148, and Philadelphia Fire Assn. v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 80 L. ed. 842, and has been cited approvingly in many other Federal and numerous state decisions. It must now be regarded as the law of the land, in spite of the facetious criticisms of counsel for appellants. In Paul v. Virginia, supra, a statute of that state required that every insurance company not incorporated by Virginia should, as a condition of carrying on business in Virginia, deposit securities with the state treasurer, and obtain a license; and another statute made it a penal offense for a person to act in Virginia as agent for an insurance company not incorporated by Virginia without such license. Paul, having acted as such agent without a license, was convicted and fined under the statute. So that case arose out of an attempt on the part of the state of Virginia to enforce its penal laws for the regulation of the business of insurance within its borders; and in this respect it is very similar to the case we are now discussing.

In the case of Leavenworth v. Booth, 15 Kan. 628, which was the prosecution of a local agent of a foreign insurance company for a violation of a city ordinance that required foreign insurance companies to pay certain license taxes for the privilege of doing business in said city, this court, by Mr. Justice Valentine, said: "It must be remembered that the insurance company involved in this controversy is a foreign insurance company, having no rights in this state except such as the state may see fit to confer upon it. It has no power to do business in Kansas by virtue of its organization in Wisconsin. It has no power to do business in Kansas by virtue of the laws of Wisconsin, or by virtue of the Constitution or laws of the United States, or by virtue of all combined. Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Ducat v. Chicago, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. ed. 972; Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 566, 19 L. ed. 1029. It can do business in Kansas only under the laws of Kansas, and by permission from the state of Kansas. This state might absolutely exclude it, or might require that it do business only under a license, and might require that it not only get a license from the state, but also that it get a license from every city, county, or village in which it should attempt to do business. The state may permit such insurance company to come into the state under such just restraints and regulations as the state may choose. Hence the state is not bound to permit said insurance company to come to this state, as individual citizens of other states have a right to do, and then, for the purpose of raising revenue, resort only to the ordinary modes of taxation. On the contrary, the state, without resorting to taxation at all, may require that such insurance company shall pay for the privilege of coming into the state, and of doing business therein, and may require that it shall not only pay a sum to the state for the privilege of doing business therein, but that it shall also pay a sum to every municipal corporation in the state in which it shall attempt to do business. And all this the state may do without violating any provision of its own Constitution." This case asserts in the strongest possible language the right of this state to regulate the business of insurance within its borders, not only with reference to those insurance companies that may be organized under our laws, but especially with regard to insurance companies organized under the laws of sister states, doing or desiring to do business in this state.

At this writing it is probable that every state in the Union has passed laws upon this subject, until it may be said that the right of state regulation of the business of insurance is universally recognized and upheld. So it can be confidently said that this court, when it held in Re Pinkney that insurance was "trade," did not contemplate that the term used could be tortured into interstate commerce; and it can be said with equal confidence that the settled law of this country is that the issuing of a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce. As we have seen, neither the major nor minor premise of the argument of counsel for the appellants is sound, and that the inevitable conclusion—that Congress alone has power to regulate interstate commerce, and to provide penalties against insurance trusts and combinations—does not follow. The court did not mean "trade," as synonymous with interstate commerce. The business of insurance is not interstate commerce. The state has power to regulate and control—and to provide penalties for the transgression of its regulating and controlling statutes—the business of a foreign insurance company within its boundaries. If the theory of the counsel for the appellants ever ripens into authoritative judicial decision, the power of the state to regulate and control the business of insurance within its limits is gone. The insurance department, and every act upon the statute books for the protection of the policy holders, and every line looking to the punishment of the violators of its public policy in this respect, goes with it, except, possibly, as to such companies as may be organized and operated under the laws of this state.

We recommend that the judgment of conviction be affirmed.

Per Curiam:
It is so ordered.

Johnston, J., concurs.

Horton, Ch. J.:

I dissent from the judgment ordered, not, however, upon the ground of the interstate character of insurance, as urged by the attorney for the appellants, but because of my reasons for my dissent in the case of Re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89. The subject of an Act must be clearly expressed in its title. Chapter 257 is penal in its nature. The title thereof should not be extended by construction. Common or popular words are to be understood in a popular sense. In the construction of statutes, a word which has two significations should ordinarily receive that meaning which is generally given to it.

Considering the provisions of the Constitution concerning titles to bills or acts, and the foregoing cardinal rules of construction, I do not think the word "trade," used in the title of said chapter 257, Sess. Laws 1889, indicates or includes, in any public sense, or as generally understood, lawyers, doctors, insurance agents, or insurance companies. When I speak of the profession or business of a lawyer, a doctor, or an insurance agent, I do not say he is a trader or tradesman, or is in trade, nor that he is carrying on a trade, or doing well in his trade. I have never heard any person, in referring to the success of a lawyer, a doctor, or an insurance agent, say of either that he is prosperous in his trade, or that he is doing well in carrying on his trade, or that he is an energetic trader. Indeed, I never have heard insurance agents spoken of as "in trade." I think the decisions referred to in the foregoing opinion except the one of this court 47 Kan. 89, all tend to show that insurance is not "trade." The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case Paul v. Virginia, cited, say insurance policies "are not subjects of trade and barter, offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one state to another, and then put up for sale." 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357.

Valentine, J.:

I concur in the decision of this case, and in affirming the judgment of the court below. It is evident from the body of the Act (chapter 257, Laws 1889) that the Legislature, in using the word "trade" in the title to the Act intended to include insurance, but did not intend to include interstate commerce; and it is the duty of the courts to carry out the will and intention of the Legislature, when enacted into law, and when the same can be fairly ascertained, and not to defeat the same, although the Legislature may not have used the most appropriate language in expressing its will and intention. There is nothing in this case with reference to lawyers or doctors, or their business or profession. Hence it is wholly unnecessary to say anything with reference thereto.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

JACKSON, MATTHEWS & HARRIS
v.
NATIONAL BANK OF McMINNVILLE.

(.....Tenn.....)

A drummer or commercial traveler has no implied authority to indorse checks in the name of his principal because he has power to collect accounts and receive money and checks payable to his principal.

(January 5, 1893.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Warren county in NOTE.—Extent of the authority conferred upon traveling salesmen.

Authority to collect payment.

It will be seen from the cases following that the courts have for the most part denied the implied authority of a traveling agent to receive payment for goods which he sells without having them in possession.

18 L. R. A.

A clerk employed to procure orders has no authority thereby to receive payment. A purchaser who pays such clerk for the goods sold without making any inquiry of the principals does so at his own risk. Puttock v. Warr, 3 Hurst. & N. 979, 81 L. T. 86.

A drummer employed to solicit orders for goods, but not having possession thereof, and not having favor of defendant in a suit brought to compel defendant to pay to plaintiffs the amount of a check which had been drawn in their favor and cashed by defendant on the indorsement of one of their employes. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. C. Lind and Smith & Dickenson for appellants.

Messrs. Murray & Fairbanks for appellee.

Holman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainants were wholesale grocery merchants in the city of Nashville, and had in their employ as a traveling salesman or drummer one Gibson. Gibson's duty, under his employment, was to travel through the country, take orders from retail merchants for goods, and collect the bills as they became due. For complainants Gibson sold a bill of goods amounting to $228.90 to J. J. Meadows, of Warren county. On October 12, 1891, before Meadows' bill became due, and while Gibson was still in the service of complainants, he proposed to Meadows that, if he would then pay the bill, he would be allowed a discount of 2 per cent. To this Meadows agreed, and gave to Gibson his check on the defendant for $224.89, payable to the order of Jackson, Matthews & Harris. On the face of the check was inserted the statement authority in fact to receive payment therefor, has no implied authority to receive payment. And payment made to him at the time the order for the goods is given is not binding on his principal. Clark v. Smith, 83 Ill. 298.

One who pays a drummer for goods forwarded from his principals upon an order given to the drummer makes payment at his peril. In a suit by the principals to recover the price of the goods, the defendant must show that the drummer had authority to collect, and such authority is not presumed. Greenhood v. Keator, 9 Ill. App. 183.

Independently of controlling usage to the contrary, the sale of goods by an agent or the fact that he is authorized to solicit orders for goods, does not of itself authorize him to receive payment.

A drummer employed by one firm took an order which he forwarded to another firm, who shipped the goods to the buyer. The latter paid the drummer, who failed to account for the proceeds. The vendors sued the buyer for the price and it was held that evidence of the usage among drummers and their employers as to the former's authority to collect payment was not admissible in an action between others than their employers and a buyer of goods, there being no evidence that the usage in the two cases was the same. Janney v. Boyd, 30 Minn. 319.

A salesman employed to solicit orders by sample has no implied authority to collect the purchase money, if there is no evidence of express authority, or authority springing from custom or usage. But he may do so where such is the general custom recognized by the principal, even though the salesman is without possession of the goods. Meyer v. Stone, 46 Ark. 210, 55 Am. Rep. 577.

A drummer authorized to sell goods on credit may have authority implied from custom to receive payment. The words on the bill, "Payable at office," are not constructive notice to the buyer of the agent's want of authority. The buyer, not having noticed the words in fact, and having paid the drummer in good faith, is not liable for the price of the goods a second time to the principals, the drummer having failed to account for the money paid him. Putnam v. French, 53 Vt. 402, 38 Am. Rep. 682.

Where a drummer took an order for goods, which order he transmitted to his principals, who shipped the goods directly to the buyers together with a bill upon which were printed legibly the words "Agents not authorized to collect" and about thirty days afterwards he called upon the buyers and asked for and received payment, it was held, in the absence of evidence of other acts of the agent, or of any general habits or dealings between the parties, (1) that omitting from consideration the words quoted there was not shown any authority in the agent to collect; and (2) that the words quoted were sufficient notice of the agent's want of authority whether the buyer saw them or not. 18 L. R. A.

not. McKindly v. Dunham, 55 Wis. 515, 42 Am. Rep. 740.

A salesman selling his principal's goods on commission has authority to sell goods on credit, but not to collect subsequently the price of the goods; and payment to the salesman will not discharge the purchaser, unless he shows some authority in the agent other than that necessarily implied in a mere power to make sales. And where with the goods a bill is sent, having upon its face a notice that salesmen are not authorized to collect, which bill is used by defendant in checking the goods, it is gross negligence not to see the notice; and payment thereafter to the salesman will not protect the purchaser. Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. L. 249, 90 Am. Dec. 655.

Where an order for goods was taken by a drummer, and the goods were shipped by his principals to the buyer, together with a bill upon which was printed the following words: "Settlements must be made directly with us; in no case with an agent or salesman unless he presents our written authority. We shall hold purchasers responsible for the strict observance of this rule;" and the buyers afterwards paid the agent,—it was held that they were not thereby discharged. Authority to sell does not include authority to collect. Kane v. Barstow, 42 Kan. 465.

A drummer, not entrusted with possession of the goods, which were sold on four months' credit, and expressly forbidden by terms of his employment from receiving payment for them, six days after the sale drew a draft upon the buyer for a part of the price, and stated to the latter that he would either return to him within ten days the amount of the draft, or would credit the amount on the bill for the goods. It was held that payment of the draft did not discharge the buyer pro tanto. Authority to receive payment is not implied from authority to sell. Butler v. Dorman, 68 Mo. 298, 30 Am. Rep. 795.

An order for goods transmitted by plaintiff's agent was filed by them, the goods being sent directly to the purchasers together with a bill in plaintiff's name—the buyers afterwards paid the agent for the goods. It was held that there having been no prior dealings between the parties, and the goods having been sent directly to the purchasers, it was their duty to find out whether the agent had authority to receive payment; and, in the absence of competent evidence that he had such authority, payment to him was not binding on the plaintiff. Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

An agent, having sold property of his principal, took in part payment the purchaser's note, which he forwarded to the principal. Subsequently the agent, having been discharged by the principal, and not having the note in his possession, told the buyer that he (the agent) was authorized to collect, and thereupon received payment. It was held that that it was "in full of acct. to date." Upon the back of the check Gibson indorsed the names of complainants, "Jackson, Matthews & Harris, by Gibson," and presented it to the defendant bank, where it was paid to him by the cashier, and charged against the deposit account of Meadows. Gibson failed to pay over or account to complainants for this money. Complainants having learned that Gibson had collected other money due them, and failed to account for it, ordered him in, and discharged him. Gibson absconded. Subsequently complainants sent to J. J. Meadows a statement of his account, requesting payment. Meadows replied that he had paid the account to Gibson by giving him a check on the defendant bank, and had settled with the bank and taken up the check. Complainants demanded of defendant payment to them of the check, which was refused. Complainants filed their bill to hold the bank liable, and to recover the amount of the check, alleging that Gibson had no right to indorse complainants' name, and that the payment of the check to him was unauthorized. The defendant answered, stating, in substance, that Gibson was authorized to indorse complainants' name to checks and receive the money thereon; that, if not expressly empowered, he was by implication authorized so to do; that Gibson, while in complainants' service, had frequently re-authority to sell and take in payment a note payable to the principal did not of itself create authority to receive payment of such note.

It seems, that if the note had been entrusted to the possession of the alleged agent by the payee thereof, payment to the agent would be justified. Draper v. Rice, 56 Iowa, 114, 41 Am. Rep. 88.

A drummer authorized to sell by sample, but not to receive payment, sent to his principals an order for goods. The goods were shipped directly to defendant, the buyer, and a bill and draft sent at the same time. Defendant claimed that he had paid for the goods by crediting the price of them upon the account due him from the agent; but he had paid one who had no authority to collect payment, and who had no possession of the goods; and the plaintiff, having done nothing to mislead the defendant, was entitled to recover. Dunn v. Wright, 51 Barb. 244.

Plaintiff's salesman, having authority to sell goods on commission, sold defendants certain goods on six months' credit. Ten days after the sale defendants paid the salesman for the goods, less a discount of 5 per cent, and took his receipt. A finding that he had no authority to collect payment was affirmed.

It seems that an agent in possession of goods with authority to sell has also authority to receive payment in cash, and perhaps so, even if he sells on credit. But where he has no possession of the goods and sells on credit, that must be other evidence of his authority to justify a payment to him. Seiple v. Irwin, 30 Pa. 513.

In Capel v. Thornton, 8 Car. & P. 832, it was said of an agent: "If he as their agent had authority to sell goods so had he (in the absence of advice to the contrary) an implied authority to receive the proceeds of such sale." But the agent in this case had taken orders as principal and had been in the habit of collecting payment and giving receipts in his own name and the payment in question was made before notice of his agency.

An agent having express authority only to take orders for sales agreed to take in part payment for one sold an old safe belonging to the purchaser. The principal received the order, agreed to its terms, and afterwards shipped the new safe to the purchaser, who paid the agent the balance due on the transaction. It was held that the agent was held out by the plaintiffs as having authority to collect as well as to sell and that they could not recover. Harris v. Zimmerman, 81 Ill. 413.

In a Georgia case action was brought to recover the price of two parcels of goods sold to defendant. The first parcel was ordered by defendant directly of plaintiff. The second parcel was ordered through the plaintiff's traveling salesman, who had authority to sell but was specially instructed not to collect; he did not have possession of the goods which were shipped directly by plaintiff to defendant. Upon the invoice were printed the words, "All bills must be paid at this [i. e. plaintiff's] office." Defendant testified that he did not see this notice. There was evidence that the agent had collected bills from other parties with plaintiff's knowledge; and that the accounts between the agent and plaintiff had been settled, the former giving his note in full of all sums alleged to be due from himself to his principal on account of collections made by the former prior to such settlement, the price of the goods in suit being one of said collections.

The trial court having refused to charge that there was evidence of authority in the agent to collect; or on the question of ratification as requested by defendant, and the verdict and judgment being for plaintiff, the judgment was reversed and new trial ordered. Luckie v. Johnson, (Ga.) May 18, 1892.

A traveling agent has no implied authority to draw a bill on a customer payable to his own order and obtain an acceptance and payment thereof. And such payment does not discharge the debtor's liability to the principal. Hogarth v. Wherley, L. R. 10 C. P. 690, 14 Moak, Eng. Rep. 474.

An agent who has sold goods and taken therefor a negotiable note payable to his principal has no implied authority thereafter to receive payment by discounting the note before it is due and when it is not in his possession. Holland v. Van Bell (Ga.) April 27, 1892.

The doctrine of most of the above cases is not accepted in some states. Thus in Maine it is held that a traveling salesman authorized to sell may collect the price in the absence of custom to the contrary, or actual knowledge by the buyer that the salesman's authority is limited. And the words printed in red ink at top of bill-head, "All bills must be paid by check to our order, or in current funds at our office,"—do not put the buyer on his guard, as matter of law. Trainer v. Morison, 79 Me. 160.

So in Tennessee a drummer took orders for goods, which were shipped by the principals to the buyers, without any contract or correspondence between them, or any directions given by the principals upon transmission of the goods. Upon receipt of them the buyers paid the drummer. The court held that the buyers could presume rightfully that the agent was authorized to receive payment as well as to sell, and in the absence of knowledge of any limitation upon his authority, the payment to him would be protected. Hoskins v. Johnson, 5 Sneed, 469.

The rule that an agent authorized to sell has power to receive payment was applied in Collins v. Newton, 7 Baxt. 299. In that case a sale by sample, was made by an agent and the goods ordered were shipped directly from the principal to the buyer, who afterwards paid that part of the price ceived checks payable to complainants, indorsed complainants' name, and received the money thereon, and that these acts of Gibson were known to and had been ratified by the complainants; that they were estopped from denying his authority, and that it was inequitable for complainants to undertake to visit the consequences of their own negligence and misplaced confidence upon respondent. The chancellor being of opinion that it would be inequitable to visit the loss of the Meadows check upon the defendant, as to it he dismissed the bill. Complainants have appealed.

In the brief of counsel for the defendant it is insisted that there is no such privity between the complainants and the defendant as will authorize the bringing of this suit; that, where a check is made payable to the order of one person, and upon the faith of a forged indorsement the bank pays to another, this is not such an acceptance by the bank as will make it liable to the payee, because the bank did not accept the check for the payee, nor promise to him to pay it, but on the contrary refused to do so. To sustain this proposition, the case of First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 848, 24 L. ed. 229, is referred to. It is true that the court in that case held that a payment to a stranger upon an unauthorized indorsement does not operate as an acceptance of the check so as to authorize an action by the real owner to recover its amount as upon an accepted check. But the case of First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, on this point, has been expressly dissented from by this court, and we do not now regard this as an open question in this in controversy to the agent. The court held that payment might be safely made to him, unless the buyer was notified not to pay him.

An agent for the sale of sewing machines held out by his principal as a general agent has authority to accept as a payment on account a part of the amount of a note given in payment of a sewing machine. And such payment on account is binding on the principal. Sumner v. Saunders, 51 Mo. 89; Brooks v. Jameson, 55 Mo. 505.

Permitting an agent to make similar collections will prevent a principal from repudiating a payment made to the agent. Estey v. Snyder, 76 Wis. 624.

Effect of agent's possession of goods.

Possession of goods by a traveling agent who sells them is evidence of authority to collect payment therefor. Bailey v. Pardridge, 134 Ill. 188, affirming 20 Ill. App. 351; John Hutchinson Mfg. Co. v. Henry, 44 Mo. App. 268; Keown v. Vogel, 25 Mo. App. 35; Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 536; Rice v. Groffmann, 56 Mo. 434.

Yet a drummer who never had authority to sell goods and collect payment cannot after revocation of his authority pass any title to goods of his former principal, although he has obtained a wrongful possession of them. And the buyer never having dealt previously with the principal through this drummer cannot claim that he was misled by an apparent authority. Abrahams v. Weiler, 87 Ill. 179.

An agent for the sale of sewing machines in certain counties, having a central office, sold a machine to defendant, who gave in payment his promissory note payable at said office. The agent had authority to receive payment on cash sales, or sales on the installment plan when made by him and on purchasers' notes guaranteed or indorsed by him; and for a year or more had collected money on notes given for machines, and forwarded sums so collected to the plaintiffs, his principals. It was held that there was evidence that from the course of dealing between the agent and his principals, defendant had good reason to believe that the agent had authority to collect the note given by defendant; and the jury having found for defendant the judgment on their verdict was affirmed. Kasson v. Nollner, 43 Wis. 646.

The authority of an agent to accept payment of a note due to his principal, which is incidentally touched upon in the case above is a matter not included in this note except so far as it relates to drummers or traveling agents.

Authority to accept payment in anything else than money.

An agent authorized to sell has no authority to receive in payment for the goods other goods and money. Authority to sell is not authority to barter. Taylor & F. Organ Co. v. Starkey, 59 N. H. 142.

S. L. R. A.

An agent authorized to take orders for the sale of property has not authority to make a bargain to exchange the same. Sioux City N. & S. Co. v. Magnus, 1 Colo. App. 45.

A commission allowed to one who solicits orders upon sales affected through such orders does not constitute him or prove him to be an agent with authority to make absolute contracts of sale; much less to receive payments and make agreements to receive payments in other goods by way of barter. Clough v. Whitcomb, 105 Mass. 482.

Authority to a special agent to sell for cash will not justify an exchange for other property. Drury v. Barnes, 29 Ill. App. 166.

A drummer who is furnished with cash to pay his expenses and also given authority to make further drafts on his employer for the same purposes, if necessary, has no authority to give in exchange for his board the goods of his principal. Nor does the fact that the agent has authority to sell goods, collect the price therefor, and use the money to pay his own traveling expenses, render the principal liable. Having once paid in cash to the agent the amount of his expenses for which the goods were exchanged by him the principal can recover of the inn-keeper the full agreed price of the goods. Nicholson v. Pease, 61 Vt. 534.

A drummer authorized to take orders and not having the goods in his possession cannot bind his principal by a contract of exchange in which the drummer took an order for goods of his principal and forwarded the same, and received in exchange goods of the buyer. In the absence of evidence of the drummer's authority to receive payment such authority is not presumed, and even if it existed it would not authorize the agent to make an exchange or barter. Hayes v. Colby, 65 N. H. 192.

An unauthorized agreement by a traveling salesman to take other goods in part payment for those sold by him is binding on the principal if he ships the goods to the purchaser and the latter had no notice of the agent's want of authority. Billings v. Mason, 80 Me. 496.

"It is elementary law that an agent has not prima facie authority to receive anything but money in payment." Benjamin, Sales (Bennett's ed. 1892), pp. 723, 729.

Plaintiff's agent sold goods to defendant, the contract of sale containing the words, "Special Notice. All payments must be made directly to the Union School Furniture Company, and not to its agents." There was evidence that in fact the agent had collected money due on sales made by him and that

-state. In the case of Pickle v. Muss, 88 Tenn. 380, it was decided, in the opinion of a majority of the court, that acceptance of a bank check, and promise to pay it in accordance with its directions, will be inferred when the drawee bank receives and retains the check, and charges it to the account of the drawer, who had sufficient funds on deposit to meet it, and subsequently lifted the check on settlement with the bank, although the check may have been presented to the bank by, and the money paid on it to, an unauthorized person. All the members of complainants' firm testify that Gibson had not been empowered to indorse the firm's name on checks received in payment of goods. Several drummers were examined as witnesses for defendant to prove, and a majority of them say with some qualification, that it is the usage and custom of traveling salesmen and drummers, who are empowered to collect and receipt bills and accounts, to indorse the names of their principals to checks received in payment for goods; and it is insisted that by implication Gibson was authorized to indorse complainants' name to the check, and receive the money. We do not think the usage or custom sufficiently proven, nor do we intimate an opinion that such a power can be inferred from usage or by implication. A person cannot by proof establish a usage or custom which, in his own interest, contravenes the established commercial law. Vermilye v. Adams Exp. Co. 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 139, 22 L. ed. 609. No authority will be implied from an express authority. Whatever powers are strictly necessary to the effectual exercise of the express powers will plaintiff had received money so collected. In the case at bar the agent undertook to accept an account due from himself to the buyer in part payment of the amount due from the latter to the plaintiff on account of the goods sold. It was held that even if authority to receive payment in cash was shown by the evidence, it did not therefore show authority to settle the account in the manner stated. Union School Furniture Co. v. Mason (S. Dak.) June 18, 1892. See also Gerard v. McCormick, 130 N. Y. 261, holding that an agent cannot use money of his principal to pay his own debt; and that a creditor who receives such money with notice, although he receives it in good faith, must refund the same to the principal.

And see note to same case in 14 L. R. A. 234, on agent's power to use property of his principal for payment of his own debt.

Authority to pledge principal's credit for traveling expenses.

Where the use of a horse and carriage is necessary for a drummer in transacting the business of his principals, the drummer may hire upon the credit of his principals. And this power is not taken away by the fact that the principals have supplied him with cash and instructed him not to pledge their credit, where the other party is not aware of such instruction. Bentley v. Doggett, 61 Wis. 224, 37 Am. Rep. 837. See also Huntley v. Mathias, 90 N. C. 101, 47 N. C. Rep. 518, where it was held that where a drummer hired a horse and carriage to drive about through the country upon the business of his principals, the latter were liable for his tort in overdriving the horse. The nature of the agency justified the inference that the agent had authority to hire the conveyance.

Drummers while actively engaged on business of their principal usually pay hotel bills in cash and an hotel keeper cannot collect a bill for drummer's board charged to the employer without notice to him. Covington v. Newberger, 99 N. C. 523. And see Nicholson v. Pease, 61 Vt. 554.

Authority to sell samples.

It seems that a purchaser may be justified in assuming that a drummer has authority to sell his samples; and that in determining the agent's authority possession of the goods is a more important element than the fact that the goods are samples. And where such a sale is ratified by the principals, the payment to the agent is ratified also; and the principals cannot recover payment a second time of the buyer. Bailey v. Pardridge, 134 Ill. 183.

In Kohn v. Washer, 64 Tex. 131, 53 Am. Rep. 745, a drummer authorized to show samples and take orders, sold his samples and converted the proceeds. No evidence was offered of custom or usage as to the disposition of samples by drummers. In the absence of such evidence the principals were not bound by the sale.

The same principle was applied in Savage v. Pelton, 1 Colo. App. 143.

Other cases relating to powers of drummers.

The rule that an authority in a drummer to take orders was not an authority to make sales was applied and affirmed in Bensberg v. Harris, 46 Mo. App. 404.

The court cannot know judicially that an agent who travels to solicit orders for a commercial house also has authority to cancel his contracts and receive back goods shipped to a customer and not satisfactory to him. The nature of the employment does not indicate such an authority, which must be established by evidence if it exists. Diversy v. Kellogg, 44 Ill. 114, 92 Am. Dec. 154.

A drummer forwarded to his principals an order for goods which were shipped to the buyer. The drummer had agreed with the buyer that the goods were to be furnished at list prices less a discount of 10 per cent, which was to be paid by the drummer himself. He was afterwards discharged by his principals. In an action by them to recover the full list price of the goods it was held that they were entitled to do so. Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Brown (Tex. App.) Oct. 18, 1890.

The plaintiffs, part-owners of a vessel, having agreed to sell her, placed in the hands of another part-owner, as their agent, a bill of sale, the spaces for the consideration and buyer's name being left blank. The agent employed defendant to make the sale, which he did; and shortly afterwards cashed the agent's drafts for a part of the purchase money before receipt thereof from the buyer. The agent failed to account to his principals for this sum. The court held that an agent authorized to sell personal property which he has in his possession and can deliver must be deemed authorized to receive the price, in the absence of any known limitation upon his authority. And it seems that if defendant had paid the drafts after receiving the purchase money he would not have been liable to plaintiffs; but the agent had no actual or implied authority to collect from defendant the purchase money before it had been paid by the buyer. The payments upon the drafts were in effect loans to the agent, and defendant was obliged to account to plaintiffs for the amount thereof. Whitton v. Spring, 74 N. Y. 160.

An agent to sell goods and collect bills has no authority to bind his principals on a contract for advertising his business in a newspaper. Tarpy v. Bernheimer, 42 N. Y. S. R. 134. S. C. B.

be conceded to the agent by implication. In order, therefore, that the authority to make or draw, accept, and indorse commercial paper as the agent of another may be implied from some other express authority, it must be shown to be strictly necessary to the complete execution of the express power. The rule is strictly enforced that the authority to execute and indorse bills and notes as agent will not be implied from an express authority to transact some other business, unless it is absolutely necessary to the exercise of express authority. Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 77. Possession of a check payable to order, by one claiming to be agent of the payee, is not prima facie proof of authority to demand payment in the name of the true owner. Id. § 812. A bank is obliged by custom to honor checks payable to order, and pays them at its peril to any other than the person to whose order they are made payable. Id. § 481. It must see that the check is paid to the payee therein named upon his genuine indorsement, or it will remain responsible. Pickle v. Muse, 88 Tenn. 380. An authority to receive checks in lieu of cash in payment of bills placed in the hands of an agent for collection does not authorize the agent to indorse and collect the check. Graham v. United States Sav. Inst. 46 Mo. 186; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 284; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 294. The indorsement of the check was not a necessary incident to the collection of accounts. Graham v. United States Sav. Inst. 46 Mo. 186.

It follows that a drummer or commercial traveler, employed to sell and take orders for goods, to collect accounts, and receive money and checks payable to the order of his principal, is not by implication authorized to indorse such principal's name to such checks. No equitable considerations can be invoked to soften seeming hardships in the enforcement of the laws and rules fixing liability on persons handling commercial paper. These laws are the growth of ages, and the result of experience, having their origin in necessity. The inflexibility of these rules may occasionally make them seem severe, but in them is found general security.

The decree of the chancellor is reversed, and a decree in favor of complainants against the defendant will be entered here for the amount of the Meadows check with interest from date of filing the bill, and the costs.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Arunah M. PRIOR, Appt.,

v.

Christian SWARTZ.

(.....Conn.....)

1. Wharves or channels extending below low-water mark may be made by the proprietor of land adjoining navigable water to connect himself with such water so long as he does nothing to interfere with the free navigation of the waters.
2. The designation of land under navigable water for the planting of and cultivation of oysters, under Gen. Stat., §§ 2342, 2349, does not destroy the right of an adjoining owner to build wharves or dig channels below low-water mark in front of his land for the purpose of connecting himself with navigable water.

(June 30, 1892.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County in favor of defendant in an action brought to restrain defendant from interfering with and digging channels through plaintiff's oyster beds. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. B. Curtis and H. W. R. Hoyt for appellant.

Mr. Samuel Fessenden, for appellee:

Riparian and littoral rights in the several states of the United States are settled by the respective states for themselves.

Wilson v. Black-Bird Creek Marsh Co. 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 245, 7 L. ed. 412; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224; St. Louis v. Myers, 118 U. S. 506, 28 L. ed. 1181.

In this state the owners of land bounded on a harbor or navigable water, while they own only to high-water mark, have a right of occupation of the intervening soil to the channel, with the right to construct wharves and other structures for the purposes of commerce, below that line to the channel, provided they do not obstruct the paramount rights of navigation, and conform to such regulations as the state imposes upon them.

1 Swift, Dig. 109; East Haven v. Hemmingway, 7 Conn. 186; Chapman v. Kimball, 9 Conn. 38, 21 Am. Dec. 707; Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 137; Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 117; Groton v. Hurlburt, 22 Conn. 178; Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 846; Burrows v. Gallup, 32 Conn. 498, 87 Am. Dec. 186; Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 421; Seeley v. Brush, 35 Conn. 419; Lockwood v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 37 Conn. 337; Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382; Union Wharf Contractors v. The Starin, 45 Conn. 585; Hawley v. Beardsley, 47 Conn. 571; New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 199; Morris v. Beardsley, 54 Conn. 334; Ladies Seamen's Friends Soc. v. Halstead, 58 Conn. 144; Farist Steel Co. v. Bridgeport, 18 L. R. A. 590, 60 Conn. 278; Gould, Waters, § 170; State v. Sargent, 45 Conn. 858.

The defendant's injury then, if any, is damnum absque injuria. The decisions above

NOTE.—The above case with the cases reported immediately following furnish a very valuable review of much of the law of waters.

On the subject of wharves or piers made by a riparian owner, see Miller v. Meridenhall, 8 L. R. 18 L. R. A.

A. 89, and note, 43 Minn. 95, 19 Am. St. Rep. 219; Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 722, 43 Minn. 110; Eisenbach v. Hatfield, 13 L. R. A. 622, and note, 2 Wash. 236.

quoted, without legislative authority, entirely justified the defendant's acts.

Lewis, Em. Dom. §81; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 106; Dutton v. Strong, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 23, 17 L. ed. 29; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 74; Yates v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 64, 21 L. ed. 801; Tuck v. Olds, 29 Fed. Rep. 788; Case v. Loftus, 89 Fed. Rep. 790; Gould, Waters, §§ 180, 181; Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls W. P. Co. 26 Minn. 232; State v. Minneapolis Mill Co. 26 Minn. 229; Miller v. Mendenhall, 8 L. R. A. 89, 43 Minn. 95, 19 Am. St. Rep. 219; Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 722, 43 Minn. 104; Stevens Point Boom Co. v. Reilly, 46 Wis. 237; Atlee v. Northwestern U. Packet Co. 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 389, 22 L. ed. 619.

Conn. Gen. Stat., Rev. 1888, § 2349, upon which plaintiff's rights are founded, provides that "nothing herein contained shall affect the rights of any owner of lands, in which there may be salt-water creeks or inlets, or which may be opposite to or contiguous to such navigable waters."

The rights of the defendant are carefully guarded by these provisions of the statute. The right of fishery of every kind in navigable waters has always been held and enjoyed in subordination to the right of navigation, and any erection or improvement which can be admitted by the latter will not be prevented by the former right.

Moulton v. Libbey, 87 Me. 472, 59 Am. Dec. 57; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carier, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597, 90 Pa. 88, 35 Am. Rep. 632; Post v. Kreischer, 32 Hun. 49; Clark v. Providence, 1 L. R. A. 725, 16 R. I. 337; Gould, Waters, § 180.

Seymour, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It will not be necessary to state fully the finding in this case in order to understand the points involved. The defendant, owning land adjoining that part of Long Island sound known as "Stamford Harbor," and within the navigable waters of this state, built a wharf opposite and contiguous to his land from the upland, above high-water mark, to low-water mark, and thence, below low-water mark, out towards the channel of the harbor; and, for the purpose of connecting the end of his wharf with the harbor channel, he dug a channel between the two; also a channel in front of and alongside the end of his wharf. The wharf was built and the channels were dug to enable steamers and other vessels to receive and discharge passengers and freight to and from the defendant's adjoining upland, and in order that he might use the waters of Long Island sound opposite and contiguous to his land for the purposes of navigation. The plaintiff contends that, while it is the law of this state that the owner of the adjoining upland has the exclusive right of access to the water, over and upon the soil between high and low water mark, and the exclusive privilege of wharfing and erecting piers over the same, yet in no case has it been decided, and the law is not so, that he has a right to build his wharf below low-water mark. It is stated in Swift's System (vol. 1, chap. 23, p. 341) that "all rivers that are navigable, all navigable arms of the sea, and the ocean itself on our coast, may in a certain sense be considered as common, for all the citizens have a common right to their navigation. But all adjoining proprietors on navigable rivers and the ocean have a right to the soil covered with water as far as they can occupy it, that is, to the channel, and have the exclusive privilege of wharfing and erecting piers on the front of their land. . . . Nor may adjoining proprietors erect wharves, bridges, or dams across navigable rivers so as to obstruct their navigation." This statement of the law is quoted in the opinion in East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 186, with the suggestion that the court does not understand by it that the adjoining proprietors are seized of the soil covered by water, but that they have a right of occupation, properly termed a "franchise." The controversy between the parties regarded the title to the soil, with the wharf and store standing thereon, between high and low water mark on the east side of Dragon river, which is an arm of the sea where the tide ebbs and flows, and was navigable adjoining the premises for large vessels. That case decided that the proprietor of land adjoining a navigable river has an exclusive right to the soil between high and low water mark, for the purpose of erecting wharves and stores thereon. We do not recall any case in this state in which the precise point made in this case was in issue.

There are, however, expressions in the opinions in several cases which indicate the general views of at least the judges writing the respective opinions. Thus in Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 346, Judge Storrs says: "In Connecticut it is now settled . . . that the owner of the upland adjoining such [adjacent] flats becomes entitled, by virtue of his ownership of the upland, to the exclusive right of wharfage out over them in front of said upland to the channel of an arm of the sea adjoining such flats." In Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 882, the court says: "It is conceded that by the settled law of Connecticut the title of a riparian proprietor terminates at ordinary high-water mark. It is also conceded that, though his title in fee thus terminate, yet he has certain privileges in the adjoining waters. Among the most important of these privileges are (1) that of access to the deep sea; (2) the right to extend his land into the water by means of wharves, subject to the qualification that he thereby does no injury to the free navigation of the water by the public." In State v. Sargent, 45 Conn. 358, the right of owners of land bounded on a harbor, to "embark therefrom and go upon the sea," is recognized. And in New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 199, the right of a party, owner of the upland, to extend his wharf, if he desires, to the channel of the harbor, in that case some 900 feet below low-water mark, is expressly stated, and the words "deep water" and "channel" are used as synonymous. Aside from these references, the reason ordinarily stated for giving to riparian proprietors the right of wharfage, to wit, to facilitate commerce and the loading and unloading of ships, together with the common sense of the matter, clearly indicates that the right should not be restricted as claimed by the plaintiff, unless there are positive decisions to that effect or imperative reasons for so doing. If, in view of the opinions already quoted, the question is to be regarded as an open one in this state, we see no good reason why it should not be decided in accordance with the convenience of riparian proprietors, and for the encouragement of commerce, so long as there is no counter-balancing injury involved to others. Except in cases where navigability begins at low-water mark, the right to wharf out to low-water mark only would be no privilege to adjoining proprietors nor benefit to commerce. It is significant that the word "wharf," as ordinarily defined, implies a structure in aid of navigation and to which vessels have access. This is well stated in Langdon v. New York, 98 N. Y. 151, thus: "A wharf is a structure on the margin of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded. . . . Hence water of sufficient depth to float vessels is an essential part of every wharf, a necessary incident thereof or appurtenance thereto, without which there can be no wharf and no wharfage. Indeed a wharf cannot be defined or conceived except in connection with adjacent navigable water." It seems to us therefore that a proprietor of land adjoining Stamford harbor, and waters of a like character in this state, has a right to connect himself with navigable water by means of wharves or channels extending from and adjacent to his upland, so long as he does nothing to interfere with the free navigation of the waters.

The defendant claimed that the Legislature had passed an Act, which was recited in the finding, which directly authorized the erection of the wharf in question. The grounds over part of which the wharf was built and the channels dug were designated for the planting and cultivation of oysters by a committee of the town of Stamford in accordance with the statutes. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant had no right to wharf out into said grounds or to dig said channels in the same, the same being situated below low-water mark and within the navigable waters of this state; that, the plaintiff having acquired his title to the grounds through original designations of a competent committee appointed for that purpose, his rights therein could not be affected by adjoining landowners, as the rights of such landowners, in contemplation of the statute, only extended to low-water mark; that the statute gave the defendant no right to build a wharf or dig a channel below low-water mark, and no right to build any wharf; and that, even if it did, it gave him such right only as subservient to the plaintiff's right to plant and cultivate oysters, and the right to build such wharf could be exercised only by obtaining the plaintiff's consent so to do. The court ruled adversely to the claims of the plaintiff, and rendered judgment for the defendant. The view we have taken of the law makes it unnecessary for us to examine the Act of the Legislature referred to. If, as we hold, the owner of the uplands in question had a right, as incident to such ownership, to connect the same by means of wharves or channels with the navigable water of the harbor, nothing has been done, so far as appears, to legally deprive him of that right, and the designation of the grounds for the planting and cultivation of oysters under the terms of the statute (Gen. Stat. §§ 2848, 2849,) is ineffectual for that purpose.

There is no error in the judgment appealed from.

The other Judges concurred.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Uri L. LAMPREY and Wife, Repts.,

v.

STATE of Minnesota, Impleaded, etc., with Oscar M. Metcalf, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

1. When the United States has disposed of the lands bordering on a meandered lake, by patent, without reservation or restriction, it has nothing left to convey, and any patent thereafter issued for land forming the bed, or former bed, of the lake, is void and inoperative.

2. Where the United States has made grants, without reservation or restriction, of public lands bounded on streams or other waters, the question whether the lands, forming the beds of the waters belong to the state, or to the owners of the riparian lands, is to be determined entirely by the law of the state in which lands lie.

*Headnotes by MITCHELL, J.

3. The same rules govern the rights of riparian owners on lakes or other still waters as govern the rights of riparian owners on streams. Hence, if a meandered lake is "non-navigable," in fact, the patentee of the riparian land takes the fee to the center of the lake; but, if the lake is "navigable" in fact, its waters and bed belong to the state, in its sovereign capacity, and the riparian patentee takes the fee only to the water line, but with all the rights incident to riparian ownership on navigable waters, including the right to accretions or relictions formed in front of his land by the action or recession of the water.

NOTE.—On the subject of ponds and lakes, see Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson (N. H.) post, 679, and 18 L. R. A.

note, also Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. (N. Y.) post, 686, and note.

See also 18 L. R. A. 679; 26 L. R. A. 609.

4. The division of waters into navigable and nonnavigable is merely a method of dividing them into public and private, which is the more natural classification; and the definition or test of navigability to be applied to our inland lakes must be sufficiently broad and liberal to include all the public uses, including boating for pleasure, for which such waters are adapted. So long as they continue capable of being put to any beneficial public use, they are public waters.

(January 10, 1893.)

APPEAL by the State from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to determine adverse claims to certain vacant and unoccupied real estate which formerly constituted the bed of a meandered lake. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moses E. Clapp, H. W. Childs and W. N. Jones, for appellant:

Whatever may be said as to the title of the state to the bed of the lake, by virtue of sovereignty, it is very apparent that the United States had no title to convey to Gilmore.

The conclusiveness of a patent goes only to the government, and parties claiming under junior patents.

Sedgwick & Wait, Title to Lands, § 887.

When issued without authority it may be impeached collaterally.

Doe v. Winn, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 880, 6 L. ed. 500; St. Louis Smelt & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 644, 26 L. ed. 878.

The issuance of the patent is a merely ministerial act.

Stoddard v. Chambers, 48 U. S. 2 How. 285, 11 L. ed. 269; Davis v. Weibold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 288; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 400, 35 L. ed. 439.

A state court will relieve against a patentee when the issuance of a patent is unauthorized.

Groves v. Fulsome, 16 Mo. 544, 57 Am. Dec. 247; Huntrecker v. Clark, 12 Mo. 387; Gaines v. Hale, 16 Ark. 25; Bagnell v. Broderick, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 451, 10 L. ed. 242.

The government never owned or acquired title to the beds of lakes within the thirteen original states.

The new states have, upon their admission into the Union, the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction, as to the soil of their navigable waters, as the older states.

Gould, Waters, § 89; Re Bevans, 17 Copp's L. O. 18; Re Burns, 2 Copp's L. L. 1090; Webber v. State Harbor Comrs. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 65, 21 L. ed. 801; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 334, 24 L. ed. 228.

Within the history of the government, it never has been its policy to meander any lands to which it claimed title.

The only purpose of meander lines is to bound and about the lands granted upon the waters whose margins are thus meandered.

Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 880, 35 L. ed. 432.

Where waters are once meandered and the abutting lands surveyed and conveyed by the government with reference thereto, the government is not only thereby divested of all previously assumed jurisdiction but it would not be in good conscience for the government to assume such jurisdiction or ownership.

Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 412, 35 L. ed. 444.

When the Revolution took place the people of each state became themselves sovereign, and, in that character, had the absolute right to all their navigable waters, and the soils under them for their own common use, subject only to the rights since surrendered by the Constitution.

Martin v. Waddell, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 410, 10 L. ed. 1012.

The new states have upon their admission into the Union the same rights, sovereignty and jurisdiction, as to the soil of navigable waters, as the older states.

Gould, Waters, § 89; Webber v. State Harbor Comrs. and Barney v. Keokuk, supra.

The question of ownership of the soil under the water is one which each state is entitled to determine for itself, in accordance with its views of local law and public policy.

Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 334, 24 L. ed. 227; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 382-402, 35 L. ed. 433-440.

This country adopted the common law of England only so far as it was applicable to their situation.

Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18, note; Perrin v. Lepper, 84 Mich. 292; Coburn v. Harvey, 18 Wis. 148; Guest v. Reynolds, 68 Ill. 478, 18 Am. Rep. 570.

All the learning of the British tribunals before 1878 will be found devoted almost exclusively to tide waters. No instance can be found where the case involved the proprietorship of a lake bed substantially denuded of all its waters. They were cases, so far as soil was concerned, where the abutting land had been affected by the natural action of the waters. To whom shall the increase of the abutting land belong? To whose benefit were the waves, year after year, imperceptibly, adding to the shore either by accretion or reliction? Discovered from the land of the riparian owners, the deposit or the recession, save after the lapse of many years, it may be, was of slight, if any, value to the crown. To meet such cases the law of accretion, which is identical with that of reliction, had its origin and rests upon the maxim de minimis non curat lex.

1 Bl. Com. *261.

Will it not be a strained application of that principle to yield to plaintiff's contention in this case? When the reason ceases, the rule also ceases.

The most reasonable view to take of the subject, is to regard such lakes and ponds as a class sui generis, requiring the application of such salutary rules as will meet their peculiar requirements.

Walker, Introduction to American Laws, 7th ed. 54.

Courts elsewhere have not hesitated to repudiate commonly received notions as to what constitutes the common law.

Canal Comrs. v. People, 5 Wend. 463.

In Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 385, the court says: "Neither can the rule as to riparian ownership be applied to this pond which is applied to ordinary fresh-water streams. A boundary upon it does not carry title to its center, but only to low-water mark. Such is the rule as to boundaries upon natural ponds and lakes."

Canal Comrs. v. People, supra; Champlain & St. I. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb. 484; Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 393; Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 88 Barb. 102; Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 242.

Indiana repudiates the doctrine that the riparian owner owns to the thread or center of a non-navigable lake.

Stoner v. Rice, 6 L. R. A. 387, 121 Ind. 52; Eduard v. Ogle, 76 Ind. 808; Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 511; Rockwell v. Baldwin, 53 Ill. 19; Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 197.

Messrs. Stryker & Moore, for parties interested, adversely to plaintiffs:

In the case of the lake here under consideration, no alluvion or reliction was possible.

Alluvion is an addition made to land by the washing of the sea, a navigable river, or other stream, where the increase is so gradual in its progress that it cannot be perceived how much is added in any moment of time.

2 Bl. Com. 262; 3 Rolle, Abr. 170.

Without a current, tide or waves, there can be no alluvion or reliction; none of these exist in a surface lake.

Evaporation, percolation, and the disappearance of water through drainage, and other artificial causes, are no more like to alluvion and reliction than is this shallow pool to the ocean and great rivers in which the doctrine contended for by respondent originated, and to which alone it belongs.

Smith v. St. Louis Public Schools, 30 Mo. 290; Chapman v. Hoskins, 2 Md. Ch. 485. See Throop v. Coburg & P. R. Co. 5 U. C. O. P. 509, and cases therein cited. Vattel, Law of Nations, 121; Callis, Sewers, 51; 2 Bl. Com. 262; 1 Stephen, Com. 419, note p. See also St. Clair County v. Livingston, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 46, 68, 23 L. ed. 59, 63; Lammers v. Nissen, 4 Neb. 250; Berry v. Snyder, 8 Bush, 266, 96 Am. Dec. 219.

Respondent claims that it is the universal rule of all states and countries that the riparian proprietor owns in fee by virtue of his grant, bounded by a lake, to its center or thread. A careful perusal of the cases cited by him, as well as of the following, which enunciate a rule the reverse of that stated by him, convinces us that both the weight of reason and authority are against him.

See Ladd v. Osborn, 79 Iowa, 98; Mariner v. Schulte, 18 Wis. 692; Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 233; Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. Id. 214; 8 Kent, Com. 429, note a; Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 201, 29 Am. Dec. 501; Nelson v. Butterfield, 21 Me. 229; Mansur v. Blake, 62 Me. 88; Wood v. Kelley, 30 Me. 47; Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120; Primm v. Walker, 88 Mo. 94; Indiana v. Milk, 11 Fed. Rep. 889; State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461; Paine v. Woods, 108 Mass. 160; Com. v. Vincent, Id. 441; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261; West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158; Canal Comrs. v. People, 5 Wend. 423; Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 877; Fletcher v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257; Jakevay v. Barrett, 38 Vt. 316; Austin v. Rutland R. Co. 45 Vt. 215; Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 511; Seaman v. Smith, 24 Ill. 521; Niles v. Burke, 1 Pugsley 18 L. R. A.

(N. B.) 237; Burke v. Niles, 2 Hannay (N. B.) 166; Zeller v. Southern Yacht Club, 34 La. Ann. 838; 12 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 506; 2 Cruise, Dig. 886; Gould, Waters, § 208; Angell, Watercourses, §§ 41, 42.

Though the Massachusetts and Maine rule is based upon the Colonial Ordinance of 1647, yet it is to be noted that the courts give as a reason for their decision, that it is in accord with the common-law rule.

Paine v. Woods, supra.

The Minnesota cases have covered the following ground, and we think that they have gone no further. The meander line is not a boundary. The riparian proprietor upon streams navigable in fact, and upon the great lakes, owns the land in fee to the low-water mark.

Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 74; St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. First Div. 26 Minn. 81; Everson v. Waseca, 44 Minn. 247; Wait v. May (Minn.) Feb. 28, 1892.

And though the riparian proprietor does not take title in fee below low water, he is entitled to enjoy riparian rights incident to the land, and he may disassociate such rights from the shore line and convey them to persons having no interest in the original riparian estate.

Brisbane v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 114; Rippe v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. Id. 18; Carli v. Stillwater, St. R. & Transfer Co. 28 Minn. 373; Stillwater Union Depot St. R. & Transfer Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 297; Miller v. Mendenhall, 8 L. R. A. 89, 43 Minn. 95; Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 723, 43 Minn. 104; Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Eastman, 47 Minn. 301; Gilbert v. Eldridge, 13 L. R. A. 411, 47 Minn. 210.

If the United States did not dispose of this land through the riparian patents, and we think it did not, title passed by the Gilmore patent. That patent can only be attacked in a direct proceeding to set it aside.

Davis v. Wieboldt, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238; St. Louis Smelt. & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 26 L. ed. 875; Johnson v. Towlesley, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 72, 20 L. ed. 485.

Mr. Uri L. Lamprey, for respondents:

In the patents conveying these riparian lands pursuant to the survey of 1853, the lake is the boundary whether the meander line coincide with the shore or not.

Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82; St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. First Div. 26 Minn. 81; Carli v. Stillwater St. R. & Transfer Co. 28 Minn. 373; Everson v. Waseca, 44 Minn. 247; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 74; Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co. 124 U. S. 178, 33 L. ed. 872; Palmer v. Dodd, 64 Mich. 474; Fuller v. Dauphin, 124 Ill. 542; Menasha Wooden Ware Co. v. Lawson, 70 Wis. 600; Wright v. Day, 33 Wis. 260; Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 233; Sphung v. Moore, 120 Ind. 852; Gould, Waters, § 76; Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 35 L. ed. 442.

All additions to land, when formed by gradual and imperceptible degrees, belong to the riparian proprietor. There is no distinction in this respect between soil gained by accretions and that uncovered by relictions. Nor does it make any difference whether the waters are navigable or unnavigable.

Rome:

Gaius (by Poste), § 70, p. 165; Justinian (by Sandar), lib. 2, title 1, p. 167.

France:

Code Napoleon, lib. 2, Property, § 556; Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Mart. O. S. 11.

England:

2 Bracton, chap. 2; 2 Bl. Com. *262; Hale, De Jure Maris, chap. 1, § 2; King v. Yarborough, 8 Barn. & C. 91; Re Hull & S. R. Co. 5 Meea. & W. 830; John Doe on Demise Seabkrists & East India Co. 10 Moore, P. C. C. 140. This rule was also the Hindoo law.

Musummat Imam Bandi and Wajid Ali Kuhn v. Hurgovind Ghose, 4 Moore, Ind. App. 408.

The United States:

Gould, Waters, 2d ed. (1891) § 155.

Alabama:

Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9, 38 Am. Dec. 267.

Arkansas:

Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120.

California:

Tappendorf v. Downing, 76 Cal. 169. See also Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co. 81 Cal. 120, 89 Am. Dec. 164; Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 471; Fillmore v. Jennings, 78 Cal. 634.

Connecticut:

Welles v. Bailey, 55 Conn. 292. See also Middleton v. Sage, 8 Conn. 228; Perry v. Pratt, 81 Conn. 442; Lockwood v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 37 Conn. 391.

Illinois:

Livingston v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56; Chicago Dock & Canal Co. v. Kinzie, 93 Ill. 416. See also Bristol v. Carroll County, 95 Ill. 84; Kehr v. Snyder, 114 Ill. 818; Elgin v. Beckwith, 119 Ill. 867.

Iowa:

Kraut v. Crawford, 18 Iowa, 554, 87 Am. Dec. 414. See also Cook v. Burlington, 30 Iowa, 99, 6 Am. Rep. 649.

Kentucky:

Berry v. Snyder, 8 Bush, 266, 96 Am. Dec. 219. See also Miller v. Hepburn, 8 Bush, 826.

Louisiana:

Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Mart. O. S. 19; Livingston v. Heerman, 9 Mart. O. S. 656; Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 123; Kennedy v. Municipality No. 2, 10 La. Ann. 54; Cambre v. Kohn, 8 Mart. N. S. 295; Syndic. of Barrett v. New Orleans, 18 La. Ann. 106. See also Barre v. New Orleans, 22 La. Ann. 612.

Maryland:

Linthicum v. Coan, 64 Md. 439; Giraud v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. 249; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Chase, 43 Md. 28; Chapman v. Hoskins, 2 Md. Ch. 485; Ridgely v. Johnson, 1 Bland, Ch. 816, note; Goodsell v. Lawson, 42 Md. 345; Patterson v. Gelston, 23 Md. 432.

Massachusetts:

Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. 278, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Adams v. Frothingham, 8 Mass. 352, 8 Am. Dec. 151. See also Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276; Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. 544.

Michigan:

Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co. 62 Mich. 626.

Minnesota:

18 L. R. A.

Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82; Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Eastman, 47 Minn. 801. See also Stillwater Union Depot St. R. & Transfer Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 297; Brisbine v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 114; Carli v. Stillwater St. R. & Transfer Co. 28 Minn. 373; Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls W. P. Co. 26 Minn. 223; Wast v. May (Minn.) Feb. 28, 1892.

Mississippi:

The Magnolia v. Marshall, 39 Miss. 110.

Missouri:

Smith v. St. Louis Pub. Schools, 30 Mo. 290; Benson v. Morrow, 61 Mo. 845; St. Louis v. Lemp, 98 Mo. 477; Campbell v. Laclede Gas Light Co. 84 Mo. 852; St. Louis Pub. Schools v. Risley, 40 Mo. 857; Busse v. Russell, 86 Mo. 209; Lamme v. Busse, 70 Mo. 463.

Nebraska:

Lammers v. Nissen, 4 Neb. 245; Bissell v. Fletcher, 19 Neb. 725.

New Hampshire:

Gerrish v. Clough, 48 N. H. 11, 97 Am. Dec. 561, 2 Am. Rep. 165.

New Jersey:

Camden & A. Land Co. v. Lippincott, 45 N. J. L. 405.

New York:

Cook v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 487, 17 Am. Rep. 270; Dickinson v. Codwise, 1 Sandf. Ch. 214, 7 L. ed. 804; Halsey v. McCormick, 18 N. Y. 147; Mulry v. Norton, 29 Hun, 660; People v. Jones, 112 N. Y. 597; Emans v. Turnbull, 3 Johns. 812.

North Carolina:

Murry v. Sermon, 8 N. C. 56; Beaufort Comrs. v. Duncan, 46 N. C. 234.

Ohio:

Lamb v. Rickets, 11 Ohio, 811; Niehau v. Shepherd, 26 Ohio St. 40.

Oregon:

Minto v. Delaney, 7 Or. 343; Pearcy v. Bybee, 20 Or. 385.

Pennsylvania:

Morgan v. Scott, 26 Pa. 51.

Rhode Island:

Prior v. Comstock, 17 R. I. —.

South Carolina:

Spigener v. Cooner, 8 Rich. L. 301, 64 Am. Dec. 755.

Tennessee:

McClure v. James, 7 Lea, 98.

Texas:

Fulton v. Frandolig, 63 Tex. 330.

Vermont:

Newton v. Eddy, 23 Vt. 519.

Wisconsin:

Boorman v. Sunnucks, 42 Wis. 283.

This rule relative to accretions has always been the law of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co. 134 U. S. 178, 33 L. ed. 872; New Orleans v. United States, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 662, 9 L. ed. 573; Banks v. Ogden, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 57, 17 L. ed. 818; St. Clair County v. Livingston, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 46, 23 L. ed. 59; Jones v. Soular, 65 U. S. 24 How. 41, 16 L. ed. 604; Jones v. Johnston, 59 U. S. 18 How. 156, 15 L. ed. 323; Johnston v. Jones, 66 U. S. 1 Black. 222, 17 L. ed. 120; St. Louis Pub. Schools v. Risley, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 99, 19 L. ed. 850.

By law the bed of the lake, whether covered by water or not, belongs to the riparian owner.

Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 882, 85 L. ed. 438; Justinian, lib. 2, title 1, §§ 22, note; Poste, Galus, lib. 2, § 72; Sir Matthew Hale, De Jure Maris, lib. 1, chap. 1; Woolrych, Waters, *46; Phear, Rights of Waters, *11; Gould, Waters, § 78; Coulson & Forbes, Law of Waters, p. 98; Co. Litt. 4 a & 5 a; MacKenzie v. Bankes, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 1324; Ridgway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248; Stoner v. Rice, 6 L. R. A. 887, 121 Ind. 51; Forayth v. Smale, 7 Biss. 201; Hodges v. Williams, 95 N. C. 331; Finley v. Hershey, 41 Iowa, 889; Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co. 62 Mich. 623; Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18, 77 Am. Dec. 435; Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196, 100 Am. Dec. 154; Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Cobb v. Davenport, 82 N. J. L. 369; Boorman v. Sunnucks, 42 Wis. 238.

The common law is the law of this state.

State v. Pule, 12 Minn. 164; Blackman v. Wheaton, 19 Minn. 326; Locke v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. First Div. 15 Minn. 350; Dutcher v. Culver, 24 Minn. 584.

Under the swamp-land grant to Minnesota, until the proper steps have been taken by the proper officers to determine that certain lands are swamp lands, and until the same have been duly certified to or confirmed to the state, the state has no title to them as against a purchaser thereof from the government. Such is the express provision of the Act itself.

Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. O. R. Co. 113 U. S. 165, 28 L. ed. 680; Prior v. Lambeth, 78 Mo. 588.

The land must be selected as swamp land within the two years' limitation contained in the Act, or the title lapses.

Pengra v. Munz, 29 Fed. Rep. 830; Cañn v. Barnes, 5 Fed. Rep. 326.

The determination of the question, what are and what are not swamp lands within the purview of the Act, rests entirely with the secretary of the interior, and his decision, unless impeached for fraud or mistake other than an error of judgment, is final.

French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 170, 23 L. ed. 812.

When the government has once granted its lands it cannot by any subsequent act or patent defeat that grant.

Stoner v. Rice, 6 L. R. A. 887, 121 Ind. 51; Fuller v. Dauphin, 124 Ill. 542; Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 471; Minto v. Delaney, 7 Or. 837; Kraut v. Crawford, 18 Iowa, 549; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 871, 85 L. ed. 438.

Sovereignty is divided into two classes—domain public and domain of the state. Whatever rights the state has here are based upon the principle of domain public, not domain of the state.

See Gould v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 N. Y. 545; Smith v. Rochester, 93 N. Y. 477, 44 Am. Rep. 398, and cases cited.

Each state, as sovereign, has succeeded to the rights which the king formerly possessed in such rivers and in the soil beneath.

Gould, Waters, § 42.

All prerogatives must be for the advantage and good of the people, otherwise they might not be allowed by law.

Bacon, Abr. title, Prerogatives, p. 1; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161.

A stream is a public highway whenever it is suitable in its natural condition for general use in travel or in the transportation of property.

Gould, Waters, § 107; Hale, De Jure Maris, chaps. 2, 3.

Streams which are not floatable, or cannot in their natural state be used for the carriage of boats, rafts or other property, are absolutely private.

Gould, Waters, § 108, and many cases cited.

The mere possibility of occasional use during brief or extraordinary freshets does not give it a public character.

Gould, Waters, § 109; Munson v. Hungerford, 6 Barb. 265; Morgan v. King, 35 N. Y. 454, 91 Am. Dec. 58; Morgan v. King, 18 Barb. 277; Morgan v. King, 30 Barb. 9; Curtis v. Keesler, 14 Barb. 511; Olson v. Merrill, 42 Wis. 203; Thunder Bay River Boom Co. v. Speechley, 31 Mich. 338, 18 Am. Rep. 184; Middleton v. Flat River Boom Co. 17 Mich. 538; Hubbard v. Bell, 54 Ill. 110, 5 Am. Rep. 98; Cates v. Wadlington, 1 McCord, L. 580, 10 Am. Dec. 699; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Treat v. Lord, 42 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298; Lewis v. Coffey County, 77 Ala. 190, 54 Am. Rep. 55; Article on Streams Periodically Navigable, 5 Alb. L. J. 407.

The public right is limited to those streams and inlets which are capable of public use.

Rowe v. Granite Bridge Corp. 21 Pick. 344; United States v. The Montello, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 480, 22 L. ed. 891; United States v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Woodb. & M. 401; Wethersfield v. Humphrey, 20 Conn. 218; Glover v. Powell, 10 N. J. Eq. 211; Flanagan v. Philadelphia, 43 Pa. 219; Sullivan v. Spottswood, 82 Ala. 163; Atty-Gen. v. Woods, 103 Mass. 436, 11 Am. Rep. 890; Colchester v. Brooks, 7 Q. B. 839.

The public right may be extinguished by natural causes like recession of the water.

Res v. Montague, 4 Barn. & C. 598.

Fresh-water streams which are not a common passage are private property.

Gould, Waters, § 46, and many cases cited; Hodges v. Williams, 95 N. C. 331, 59 Am. Rep. 242; Stapp v. The Clyde, 43 Minn. 193.

Where riparian estates are conveyed the general presumption is that the purchaser's title extends as far as the grantor owns. And this rule applies to a grant from the crown, a state, or the United States. Even a marsh, bayou, or swamp may constitute a well-defined boundary of a tract of land, and the thread of the channel or stream flowing through it, if any, may be regarded as the boundary line.

Gould, Waters, 2d ed. §§ 195, 196; Boston v. Richardson, 18 Allen, 155; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Pratt v. Lamon, 2 Allen, 275-284; Devonshire v. Pattinson, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 263; Micklethwait v. Newlay E. Co. L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 133; Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Sta. 190; Wishart v. Wyllie, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 389; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 397; Thomas v. Hatch, 3 Sumn. 170; Johnson v. Anderson, 18 Me. 76; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. 447; Varick v. Smith, 9 Paige, 547, 4 L. ed. 811; Walton v. Tift, 14 Barb. 216; Demeyer v. Legg, 18 Barb. 16; Hammond v. McLachlan, 1 Sandf. 328; Herring v. Fisher, 1 Sandf. 344; Jackson v.

Lewis, 12 Johns. 252; People v. Law, 34 Barb. 494; Wetmore v. Law, 34 Barb. 515; Goce v. White, 20 Wis. 426; Arnold v. Elmore, 16 Wis. 509; Newhall v. Ireson, 8 Cush. 595, 54 Am. Dec. 790; Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 434; Stanford v. Mangin, 30 Ga. 355; Williams v. Buchanan, 23 N. C. 535, 85 Am. Dec. 760; Riz v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 520, 22 Am. Dec. 472; Hammond v. Ridgely, 5 Harr. & J. 245, 9 Am. Dec. 522; Kingsland v. Chittenden, 6 Lans. 15; Muller v. Landa, 31 Tex. 265, 98 Am. Dec. 529; Norris v. Hall, 1 Mich. 202; Lord v. Sydney, 12 Moore, P. C. C. 478; Boston v. Richardson, 105 Mass. 351-355; Lunt v. Holland, 14 Mass. 149; Cold Spring Iron Works v. Toland, 9 Cush. 492; Claremont v. Carlton, 2 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Dec. 88; Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. 518, 16 Am. Dec. 447; Arthur v. Case, 1 Paige, 447, 2 L. ed. 710; Coibert v. O'Conner, 8 Watts, 470; Hayes v. Bowman, 1 Rand. (Va.) 417-420; Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Harr. & J. 195; Ridgely v. Johnson, 1 Bland, Ch. 316, note; Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 510, 38 Am. Dec. 112; Morgan v. Reading, 8 Smedes & M. 366; The Magnolia v. Marshall, 39 Miss. 109; Gavit v. Chambers, 3 Ohio, 496; Jones v. Souard, 65 U. S. 24 How. 41, 16 L. ed. 604; Lawson v. Mowry, 53 Wis. 219; Cansler v. Henderson, 64 N. C. 469; Huff v. Tobey, 56 N. Y. 633; Phinney v. Waits, 9 Gray, 269, 69 Am. Dec. 288; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261; Mansur v. Blake, 62 Me. 38; Holden v. Chandler, 61 Vt. 291; Mill River Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 34 Conn. 462; Primm v. Raboteau, 56 Mo. 407; Dunkles v. Wilton E. Co. 24 N. H. 489; Smith v. Ford, 48 Wis. 115-163; Carter v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 26 W. Va. 644, 53 Am. Rep. 116; Turner v. Holland, 54 Mich. 300; Brumagin v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24; Felder v. Bonnet, 2 McMull. L. 44. 37 Am. Dec. 545; Brooks v. Britt, 15 N. C. 481.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1853, at the time of making the United States survey of sections 4, 5, 8, and 9, township 28, range 22, there was in the center of these four sections a shallow, non-navigable lake, comprising about 300 acres, which the government surveyor meandered, in accordance with the rules and instructions of the department, "to meander all lakes and deep ponds of the area of twenty-five acres and upwards," (1 Lester, Land Laws, 714,) and in doing so ran the meander lines substantially along the margin of the lake. The lake and the meanders thereof appear on the official plat of the survey, and are referred in the field notes. By this survey the lands bordering on the lake were subdivided into fractional governmental subdivisions and lots, the lake forming the boundary thereof on one side. The survey and plat were approved by the secretary of the interior in 1854. Subsequently, and prior to 1856, the United States, by patents, conveyed, without reservation or restriction, to various parties, all of these lands, which were described in the patents by their governmental subdivision or lot, according to the plat and survey, which were referred to in, and made part of, the patents. By sundry mesne conveyances from the patentees, the plaintiffs and defendant Metcalf have become the owners of all these riparian lands. Since the survey in 1853 the lake has been, through natural causes, gradually and imperceptibly drying up, until now its former bed is all dry land. In 1860, after the lake had partially dried up, the United States land department caused a survey to be made of the land constituting that part of the former bed of the lake situate between the original meander line and the then existing margin of the lake, and in 1873 assumed to issue a patent therefor to one Gilmore, who subsequently conveyed to plaintiffs and Metcalf, who assert title to the former bed of the lake both as grantees of the riparian lands according to the original survey of 1853, and also, in part, under the Gilmore patent. The state, on the other hand, claims that the Gilmore patent is void, and that the patents, according to the original United States survey, only conveyed the land to the margin of the lake, as it then existed, and that the former bed of the lake belongs to the state, in its sovereign capacity. In the pleadings the state also asserted title under the "swamp-land grant" from the United States; but this claim was abandoned on the trial, and very properly so, because, for manifest reasons, it was entirely untenable.

It will be thus seen that the question presented is, What rights in or to the soil under water does the patentee of land bounded by a meandered inland lake acquire by his patent? The same question was suggested in Huntman v. Hendricks, 44 Minn. 423, but not decided, in view of its great importance, and the fact that it was not fully argued by counsel. The importance of the question, both to the public and to riparian owners, is apparent, when we consider that there are many thousand of such lakes in this state, which, although most of them may not be adapted for navigation, in its ordinary, commercial sense, have been, from the earliest settlement of the state, resorted to and used by the people as places of public resort, for purposes of boating, fishing, fowling, cutting ice, etc., and the further fact that observation teaches that the waters of many of these lakes are, from natural causes, slowly but imperceptibly receding, so that a part of what was their bed when surveyed has, or in time will, become dry land. The right of the public to use these lakes for the purposes referred to, as well as the right of riparian owners to these relict lands, and consequently their right of access to the water after such reliction occurs, are therefore all involved in the question presented. The question ought to be approached and considered from a practical, as well as legal, standpoint; and as the common law is a body of principles, and not of mere arbitrary rules, the effort should be to apply the spirit and reason of these principles to the state of facts presented.

There are certain matters which are so well settled that they may be summarily disposed of at the outset. Without troubling ourselves to consider what were the rights of the United States in these waters before they conveyed the lands bordering on them, it is well settled that, having disposed of lands bordering on a meandered lake by patent, without reservation or restriction, they have nothing left to convey, and consequently the land department was thereafter without jurisdiction, and the Gilmore patent, issued in 1873, was inoperative and void; also that a meander line is not a boundary, but that the water whose body is meandered is the true boundary, whether the meander line in fact coincides with the shore or not; also, that grants by the United States of its public lands bounded on streams or other waters, made without reservation or restriction, are to be construed according to the law of the state in which the lands lie; and, consequently, whether the land forming the beds of these lakes belongs to the state, or to the owners of the riparian lands, is a question to be determined entirely by the laws of Minnesota. In support of these propositions, we need only cite Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 871, 85 L. ed. 428; and Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 85 L. ed. 442.

In St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. First Div., 26 Minn. 81, this court was led, from certain dicta in St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 74, to suppose that the supreme court of the United States meant to hold otherwise as to patents of public lands bordering on navigable streams; but that no such doctrine has been adopted by that court is evident from Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224, and subsequent cases. We therefore approach the question in this case untrammelled by the binding authority of any Federal decisions, or even by any direct decisions in this state, in which this is still an open question. What the relative rights of the state and of riparian owners in the waters and beds of these lakes are, largely depends upon the question whether the rules of law as to the rights of grantees of lands bordering on running streams are applicable to grants of land bordering on lakes. The early English decisions, dealing, as they did, mainly with arms of the sea and rivers in which the tide ebbed and flowed, furnish but little light on this subject. In many of the states of the Union, this branch of the law is still somewhat unsettled, and, as said in Huntsman v. Hendricks, supra, the decisions are somewhat conflicting. The subject was recently very ably and exhaustively considered by the eminent jurist, the late Justice Bradley, in Hurdin v. Jordan, supra, in which all the authorities—Roman, English, and American—are collected and reviewed; and we think we may fairly say of the decision in that case that the result and logic of it is that, at common law, the rules governing riparian rights on streams apply, mutatis mutandis, to grants of land bordering on lakes; consequently, if they are non-navigable the grantees, if their grants are without reservation or restriction, take to the center of the lake, but that if they are navigable the grantees take the fee only to high water, but with all the riparian rights incident to the ownership of riparian land, including the right to accretions and relictions. It is true that case was controlled by the law of Illinois, and the only question was what the law of that state was; but, having determined that the courts of Illinois had adopted the common law on the subject, it became necessary to ascertain what the common law was; and in that point of view the conclusion arrived at on that question is pertinent here.

18 L. R. A.

As has been already suggested, there are but few authorities on the question in England; for in England proper there are but few lakes, and in Scotland the civil law prevails. The case of Bristow v. Cormican, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 641, goes far towards sustaining the conclusion reached in Hardin v. Jordan, although it must be admitted that it is left in some doubt as to whether the presumption of ownership to the thread of the stream, which exists with regard to owners of land on the banks of nontidal streams of running water, exists also on inland lakes, navigable in fact, but nonnavigable in the common-law sense.

Coulson & Forbes, in their work on the Law of Waters, (page 98,) say that it does not appear that by the English law there is any difference as to the ownership of the soil between land covered with still and running water, except, perhaps, in the case of large inland lakes or seas, where the rule that the adjoining riparian owner is owner ad medium flum aquæ might cause inconvenience.

The decisions in Massachusetts, (of which Maine was a part,) and which have been followed in most of the New England states, are not particularly in point, for the reason that they have their foundation in the colonial ordinance of 1641-47, prohibiting towns from granting away ponds containing more than 10 acres, called "great ponds," and providing that such ponds should be free to the public for fishing and fowling.

In New Jersey, which adhered strictly to the old common-law definition of "navigable waters," it was held that a lake (which, according to the English common law, was non-navigable) was the private property of the riparian owner; thus applying the same rule that would be applied in case of a non-navigable stream. Cobb v. Davenport, 82 N. J. L. 369.

Whatever doubt once existed as to the law in New York would seem to be fully set at rest by the recent decision of the court of appeals (second division) in Gouverneur v. National Ice Co., 184 N. Y. 355, post, 695, in which, after reviewing all the decisions of the state on the subject, the court holds "that a deed of land bordering on a small, non-navigable lake or pond is prima facie presumed to convey title to the center," saying there would seem to be no substantial reason for the application of a different rule in the legal construction of grants of land bounded on them than is applied to conveyances bounding premises on fresh-water streams, and that the difficulty in locating lines, under this rule, of different proprietors, is not an objection to its general application, as the same difficulties would be met with in the bays or bends of rivers.

Substantially the same views are expressed in Lenbeck v. Nye, 47 Ohio St. 336, 8 L. R.

A. 578, the court saying that no solid ground is readily perceived for limiting a grant of land bordering on a non-navigable lake to the water's edge, when, in the case of a non-navigable stream, its operation extends to the center.

In Ridgway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248, it was held that the owner of land bordering on a non-navigable lake, lying within the congressional survey, is the owner of the bed of the lake to the thread thereof, or a line along the middle of the lake; the court adding that they could see no difference between non-navigable lakes and non-navigable rivers, although later, as will be seen, the court somewhat limited this common-law right.

In Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125, the rule of riparian ownership previously applied to the Detroit river was applied to Lake Muskegon; the court saying that they were not able to discover any fact or circumstance sufficient to make a substantial difference in principle between the two cases, and that the general understanding and common usage of the country have as clearly recognized the principles of riparian ownership with reference to lakes as to rivers within the state, and repudiated any distinction as arbitrary, having no foundation in the nature of things. The same court, in Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48, (followed in Stoner v. Rice, 121 Ind. 51, 6 L. R. A. 887, limited this common-law right by holding that the riparian owner of a fractional lot bounded by a non-navigable lake could only take so much of the lake as is required to fill out the subdivision of the section which he owned. The court seemed to think that they were required to so hold, under the decision in Brown v. Clements, 44 U. S. 8 How 650, 11 L. ed. 767, but which, with due deference, does not seem to us to have the least application to the question of riparian rights under a grant of land bordering on water. But, having held that the bed of a non-navigable lake belonged neither to the state nor the United States, the court was compelled to the somewhat peculiar position of holding that if the lake was so large that the lines of the granted lots or fractional subdivisions would not, when extended, embrace the whole of it, then the riparian ownership would extend to the center. We are compelled to the conclusion that this attempted limitation upon riparian ownership is illogical, purely arbitrary, and impracticable.

The same question has been before the courts of Wisconsin in several cases. Dela-plaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 43 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 886; Boorman v. Sunnucks, 43 Wis. 288, and Diedrich v. Northwestern U. R. Co. 43 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 899. The general result of these decisions is that, while the courts of that state hold that, whether a stream is navigable or non-navigable in fact, the title of the bed to the center of the current is in the owner of the bank, but that as to lakes a different rule applies, and that the owner of the land bordering on any meandered lake, whether navigable in fact or not, takes the land only to the water's edge; but no special reason is given why a different rule should be applied. The courts of that state do, however, hold that the riparian proprietor has, as such, the exclusive right of access to and from the lake in front of his land, and of building his piers and wharves in aid of navigation, not interfering with the public easement where the lake is navigable; also, that he has the accretions formed upon or against his land, and those portions of the bed of the lake adjoining his land which may be uncovered by the recession of the water; there being no distinction in respect to the rights of riparian owners, between accretions and relictions. With these rights conceded to the riparian owner, the question whether the fee of the bed of the lake, while it remains covered with water, is in him or in the state, is more speculative than practical. In most cases where a distinction has been made between riparian rights on streams and on lakes it seems to have been merely assumed, without much consideration, that the rules applicable to running water were not applicable to lakes or ponds. The only reasons we have ever seen suggested for a distinction are—First, the supposed difficulty of running the lines between adjoining riparian owners of lands bordering on lakes, and, second, the supposed injustice that might result, in some cases, in giving the owner of a very small estate on the shore of a lake a very large reliction in front of it. But it seems to us that neither of these are adequate reasons for departing from a well-settled principle. Both of them are more imaginary than real, and would occur only in exceptional or extreme cases, and are almost as likely to occur in the case of riparian ownership on a tortuous river, with an ill-defined or changeable channel, as in the case of such ownership on the borders of a lake. The owner of a mere "rim" on the bank of a river may sometimes acquire an accretion or reliction much larger than the parent estate, but that is an incident to all riparian ownership; and it was never suggested, in the case of a stream, that such a state of facts furnished any reason for making the case an exception to the general rule.

Courts and text-writers sometimes give very inadequate reasons, born of a fancy or conceit, for very wise and beneficent principles of the common law; and we cannot help thinking this is somewhat so as to the right of a riparian owner to accretions and relictions in front of his land. The reasons usually given for the rule are either that it falls within the maxim, de minimis lex non curat, or that, because the riparian owner is liable to lose soil by the action or encroachment of the water, he should also have the benefit of any land gained by the same action. But it seems to us that the rule rests upon a much broader principle, and has a much more important purpose in view, viz. to preserve the fundamental riparian right—on which all others depend, and which often constitutes the principal value of the land—of access to the water. The incalculable mischiefs that would follow if a riparian owner is liable to be cut off from access to the water, and another owner sandwiched in between him and it, whenever the water line had been changed by accretions or relictions, are self-evident, and have been frequently animadverted on by the courts. These considerations certainly apply to riparian ownership on lakes as well as on streams. Take the case in hand, of our small inland lakes, the waters of many of which are slowly but gradually receding. The owners of lands bordering on them have often bought with reference to access to the water, which usually constitutes an important element in the value and desirability of the land. If the rule contended for by the appellants is to prevail, it would simply open the door for prowling speculators to step in and acquire title from the state to any relictions produced in the course of time by the recession of the water, and thus deprive the owner of the original shore estate of all riparian rights including that of access to the water. The endless litigation over the location of the original water lines, and the grievous practical injustice to the owner of the original riparian estate, that would follow, would, of themselves, be a sufficient reason for refusing to adopt any such doctrine. That the state would never derive any considerable pecuniary benefit,—certainly, none that would at all compensate for the attendant evils,—we may, in the light of experience, safely assume. Our conclusion, therefore, is that upon both principle and authority, as well as consideration of public policy, the common law is that the same rules as to riparian rights which apply to streams apply also to lakes, or other bodies of still water. In this state, we have adopted the common law on the subject of waters, with certain modifications, suited to the difference in conditions between this country and England, the principal of which are that navigability in fact, and not the ebb and flow of the tide, is the test of navigability, and that we have repudiated the doctrine that the state has any private or proprietary right (as had the king) in navigable waters, but that it holds them in its sovereign capacity, as trustee for the people, for public use. In accordance with the rules of the common law, we therefore hold that where a meandered lake is non-navigable in fact, the patentee of land bordering on it takes to the middle of the lake; that where the lake is navigable in fact, its waters and bed belong to the state, in its sovereign capacity, and that the riparian patentee takes the fee only to the water's edge, but with all the rights incident to riparian ownership on navigable waters, including the right to accretions or relictions formed or produced in front of his land by the action or recession of the water. Of course, it is a familiar principle that these riparian rights rest upon title to the bank or shore, and not upon title to the soil under the water. Comparing what was said in Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82, (Gil. 59,) with what is perhaps implied in St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. First Div., 26 Minn. 81, it may be not entirely clear whether the doctrine of this court is that a patentee of land on navigable water takes the fee to low water, or only to high water; but this is a matter of little practical importance in any case, and of none in the present one.

What has been already said is sufficient for the purposes of the present case; but, to avoid misconception, it is proper to consider what is the definition or test of "navigability," as applied to our inland lakes. The division of waters into navigable and non-navigable is but a way of dividing them into public and private waters—a classification which, in some form, every civilized nation has recognized; the line of division being largely determined by its conditions and habits. In early times, about the only use—except, perhaps, fishing—to which the people of England had occasion to put public waters, and about the only use to which such waters were adapted, was navigation, and the only waters suited to that purpose were those in which the tide ebbed and flowed. Hence, the common law very naturally divided waters into navigable and non-navigable, and made the ebb and flow of the tide the test of navigability. In this country, while still retaining the common-law classification of navigable and non-navigable, we have, in view of our changed conditions, rejected its test of navigability, and adopted in its place that of navigability in fact; and, while still adhering to navigability as the criterion whether waters are public or private, yet we have extended the meaning of that term so as to declare all waters public highways which afford a channel for any useful commerce, including small streams, merely floatable for logs at certain seasons of the year. Most of the definitions of "navigability" in the decided cases, while perhaps conceding that the size of the boats or vessels is not important, and, indeed, that it is not necessary that navigation should be by boats at all, yet seem to convey the idea that the water must be capable of some commerce of pecuniary value, as distinguished from boating for mere pleasure. But if, under present conditions of society, bodies of water are used for public uses other than mere commercial navigation, in its ordinary sense, we fail to see why they ought not to be held to be public waters, or navigable waters, if the old nomenclature is preferred. Certainly, we do not see why boating or sailing for pleasure should not be considered navigation, as well as boating for mere pecuniary profit. Many, if not the most, of the meandered lakes of this state, are not adapted to, and probably will never be used to any great extent for, commercial navigation; but they are used—and as population increases, and towns and cities are built up in their vicinity, will be still more used—by the people for sailing, rowing, fishing, fowling, bathing, skating, taking water for domestic, agricultural, and even city purposes, cutting ice, and other public purposes which cannot now be enumerated or even anticipated. To hand over all these lakes to private ownership, under any old or narrow test of navigability, would be a great wrong upon the public for all time, the extent of which cannot, perhaps, be now even anticipated. When the colony of Massachusetts 250 years ago, reserved to public use her "great ponds," probably only fishing and fowling were in mind, but, as is said in one case, "with the growth of the community, and its progress in the arts, these public reservations, at first set apart with reference to certain special uses only, became capable of many others, which are within the design and intent of the original appropriation. The devotion to public use is sufficiently broad to include them all, as they arise." West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158. If the term "navigable" is not capable of a sufficiently extended meaning to preserve and protect the rights of the people to all beneficial public uses of these inland lakes, to which they are capable of being put, we are not prepared to say that it would not be justifiable, within the principles of the common law, to discard the old nomenclature, and adopt the classification of public waters and private waters. But however that may be, we are satisfied that, so long as these lakes are capable of use for boating, even for pleasure, they are navigable, within the reason and spirit of the common-law rule. When the waters of any of them have so far receded or dried up as to be no longer capable of any beneficial use by the public, they are no longer public waters, and their former beds, under the principles already announced, would become the private property of the riparian owners.

Judgment affirmed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

CONCORD MANUFACTURING CO.

v.

ROBERTSON, ROWELL & CO.

(.....N. H.)

1. Explicit legislative authority is necessary to the alienation to an individual of the public rights in the beds of large ponds.
2. An abutter's use of the bed of a public water is governed by the rule of reasonableness applied to the facts of his case.
3. The manner in which, and the extent to which, the bed of a public body of water can be reasonably appropriated to the exclusive use of a littoral proprietor is in New Hampshire determinable on a bill in equity.
4. One erecting a structure below the edge of a public body of water without having the question of its reasonableness judicially determined assumes the risk of its being found to be unreasonable and abated as a nuisance.
5. There may be a severance of an abutter's private right of use and occupation in a public body of water from his adjoining upland.
6. No prescriptive rights can be acquired by an individual in public waters.
7. An abutter has a common-law right to improve and occupy tide land above and below low-water mark where it ought to be improved and occupied.
8. The waters of a great pond in New Hampshire cannot be lawfully diverted to the damage of one owning land on a stream flowing from the pond.
9. The right of a littoral proprietor to cut ice on a great pond belonging to the public is not exclusive although he may have advantages over others in the right to erect stagings and platforms in front of his lot for use in filling 'ice-houses, and the extent of his right as against persons owning land on a stream flowing from a pond may be limited by the exercise of the same right by the public.

10. The total quantity of ice that may be taken by all persons from a great public pond is as to the owners of a mill on a stream flowing from the pond limited to what will constitute a reasonable use of the pond which is the extent of the water right attached to the soil and invested in the owner of the basin through which the water flows.

(March, 15, 1890.)

CASE presented to the law term upon an agreed statement of facts in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful diversion of water from plaintiff's mills. Discharged and held for trial.

Plaintiff is the owner of a water power on a stream flowing from Long pond in Concord. Defendants leased a tract of land bordering on the pond and from it went upon the pond and cut and carried away ice to be stored and sold in the usual course of defendants' business as ice merchants. Plaintiff claimed that this act in a preceptible and substantial degree diminished the flow of water in the stream thereby diminishing the power which it had been accustomed to use, and thereby damaging the plaintiff. They claimed that the whole water capacity of the pond was used by the city of Concord and by the plaintiff; the city taking what it needed for furnishing itself with a water supply and the remainder being required by plaintiff to run its mills, and, being insufficient for that purpose, that whatever power was not furnished by the water must be obtained by the use of steam generated by coal, and that in so far as the water power was unlawfully diminished more coal must be used to the direct damage of plaintiff. The defendants denied that the city of Concord and plaintiff needed the entire water capacity of the pond and claimed that the taking of ice by the defendants had not in any perceptible or substantial degree diminished the flow of water from the pond; that the ice taken by the defendants was less than enough to produce one seventeenth of an inch of water over the whole pond and that therefore it will never be missed in the use of the pond as a reservoir.

NOTE.—For ownership of ice and right to take it from waters, see Brown v. Cunningham, 12 L. R. A. 583, and note, 82 Iowa, 512; also Barrett v. Rockport Ice Co., 16 L. R. A. 774, 84 Me. 155.

On the subject of ponds and small lakes, see Henry v. Newburyport, 5 L. R. A. 179, and note, 149 Mass. 582; also Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 1 L. R. A. 466, 147 Mass. 548; Monatiquoit River, 18 L. R. A.

Mills Props. v. Braintree Water Supply Co., 4 L. R. A. 272, 149 Mass. 478; Fernald v. Knox Woolen Co., 7 L. R. A. 459, 82 Me. 48; Atty-Gen. v. Revere Copper Co., 9 L. R. A. 510, 152 Mass. 444; Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 13 L. R. A. 255, 154 Mass. 303; Lamprey v. State (Minn.) ante, 670; Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. (N. Y.) post, 623.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel C. Eastman and J. S. H. Frink, for plaintiff:

Riparian and littoral owners can use the water of a stream or pond in any way that does not practically and in a perceptible and substantial degree diminish and impair the equal and common right of the lower proprietor.

Elliot v. Fitchburg R. Co. 10 Cush. 191, 57 Am. Dec. 85.

There was no suggestion that the Massachusetts Ordinance of 1641 gave any greater rights to any one.

In 1852, in Cummings v. Barrett, 10 Cush. 186, Chief Justice Shaw says that the question of ice-cutting comes up as one of first impression, and that these rights have not been adjudicated.

In 1803, Judge Hoar, in West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158, does decide what Chief Justice Shaw hesitated to do, that great ponds are free for cutting ice. This is placed upon the ground that new public uses may be declared as they arise. If not judicial legislation, it comes very near it.

Paine v. Woods, 108 Mass. 160.

The plaintiff not only was the owner of the dam, and now has all the rights of flowage and in the pond not taken by the city of Concord but it is the owner of a privilege lower down, covering both sides of the stream.

In virtue of this ownership it has the right to use of the water flowing over it, in its natural current, without diminution or obstruction. The consequence of this principle is, that no proprietor has a right to use the water to the prejudice of another. No one has the right to diminish the quantity which will, according to the natural current, flow to the proprietor below, etc.

Coultes v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 864, 57 Am. Dec. 287.

One may be liable for unreasonably diverting the water from its natural course to the prejudice of another.

Bealy v. Shaw, 6 East, 208; Runnels v. Bullen, 2 N. H. 587; Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 858.

It does not matter who is the owner of the fee in Long pond. The defendants have not and do not claim to have any rights from any one who is. They cannot take the rights of the plaintiff, whatever might be done by the state.

Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 134 Mass. 267; Mill River Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 84 Conn. 462.

Even in cases where the ice is treated as an accretion to the soil, the rights of millowners to have the stream flow without diminution are recognized.

State v. Pottmeyer, 88 Ind. 402, 5 Am. Rep. 18 L. R. A.

224; Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 46, 40 Am. Rep. 196.

Messrs. Chase & Streeter and W. L. Foster, for defendants:

In 1725 the Colony of Massachusetts, claiming to be the owner of the territory included within the limits of Concord, granted it to certain proprietors. The plaintiff's title to its land and water power came from this source.

At the time of said grant the Massachusetts Ordinance of 1641 was in full force, and it controlled the grant.

In effect, Long pond was reserved for public uses by the grant and the ordinance which governed it.

This case therefore differs from all other cases now or previously before the court. It has elements that other cases do not possess, namely, the ownership of the soil and political jurisdiction over its inhabitants by Massachusetts, at the time of the grant.

We do not rely alone upon the union that existed between New Hampshire and Massachusetts bay at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1641, and the subsequent perpetuation by New Hampshire of the laws then in force, as the respondent in State v. Welch (now before the court) and parties in other cases have been compelled to do. (See Nudd v. Hubbs, 17 N. H. 524; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 561.) But in addition to that position we claim that the ordinance was a part of the grant itself.

The Massachusetts court, by numerous decisions, has held that the Ordinance of 1641 makes great ponds public—"to lie in common for public use."

West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158; Paine v. Woods, 108 Mass. 160; Fay v. Salem & D. Aqueduct Co. 111 Mass. 37; Hittinger v. Eames, 131 Mass. 539; Gage v. Steinkraus, 131 Mass. 222; Roswell v. Doyle, 131 Mass. 474.

Accordingly the court holds that "the right of cutting and taking ice, either for use or for sale, from a great pond which is one of the public waters of the Commonwealth, is a public right, which may be exercised by any citizen who can obtain access to the pond without trespassing upon the lands of other persons, and who does not, by his exercise of the right, unreasonably interfere with its similar exercise by others."

Paine v. Woods, supra.

The ordinance of 1641 is held to be in force in Maine, as a part of its common law, as well as by reason of its union with Massachusetts.

Barrows v. McDermott, 78 Me. 441.

In Brastow v. Rockport Ice Co., 77 Me. 100, the court says: "In this state all ponds containing more than ten acres are public ponds and the right to cut ice upon them is a public right, free to all."

The plaintiff's and defendants' rights to water and ice in Long pond closely resemble the rights of riparian proprietors upon a running stream.

Every riparian proprietor may make a reasonable use of the stream running over his land.

Almost every imaginable use of a stream will cause some diminution of its water, or obstruction of its current, or otherwise affect it, so that others will not get the same benefit in kind and degree from its use that they would get if it had not been previously used. When the courts say that one riparian proprietor shall not use the water of a stream so as to work actual or material injury to others, they mean actual or material injury to the rights of others. And, by "material injury" must be understood an injury resulting in damages of a substantial nature, not merely nominal.

Crawford v. Rambo, 44 Ohio St. 279.

Where the rights are correlative and equal, reasonableness in view of all rights is the boundary of each one's rights.

Hayes v. Waldron, 44 N. H. 580, 84 Am. Dec. 105; Norway Plains Co. v. Bradley, 52 N. H. 109; Holden v. Lake Co. 58 N. H. 553; Green v. Gilbert, 60 N. H. 144.

Doe, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By the grant of the original township of Gilmanton, (including territory afterwards set off as Gilford and Belmont,) made in 1727, and amended in 1729 by the provincial executive in the name of the king, the premises were bounded by two lines,—one running from the westerly corner of Barnstead northwest "to Winnipisiogee pond, or the river that runs out of the said pond," the other running from the westerly corner of Barnstead northeast six miles on the Barnstead line, then northwest two miles, "then north to Winnipisiogee pond, then on the said pond and river to meet the first line." The river Winnipisiogee running out of Lake Winnipisiogee flows into and out of Sanbornton bay (now commonly called "Lake Winnesquam.") The title of the township of Gilmanton passed from the king to the grantees as private owners and tenants in common (Lawrence v. Haynes, 5 N. H. 83, 20 Am. Dec. 554; Atty-Gen. v. Tarr, 148 Mass. 809, 2 L. R. A. 87), and their water boundary was the lake, the river, and the bay. Besides being a conveyance of land to the persons named as grantees, the grant was a town charter, issued to "the said men and inhabitants, or those that shall inhabit said town;" and it contained no express allusion to a distinction between the boundary line of the private land title and the jurisdiction line of the municipal corporation. In State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461, the town was indicted for not repairing Mosquito bridge, which connected Gilmanton and Sanbornton at a place where the boundary was either a part of the river or a part of the bay. In the agreed statement of facts on which the case was first submitted, it is said (page 462) that the "bay is about ten miles long, and from two to three miles wide in the broadest part;" that the bridge is "about thirty-seven rods long;" and that "there is so much current where this bridge is that no ice forms about it." It was held that the agreed statement must be discharged for a trial of the question whether the water at the bridge was a river. If it was a river the center of it was the line to which the town was bound to repair. If it was not a river but a part of the bay, which is a large pond, the boundary of private land title at that place was the water's edge. It was assumed that the line of private ownership was the limit of the defendants' territorial jurisdiction and public duty, and upon this assumption it was necessary to ascertain whether the water under the bridge was river or pond. The ground of the decision is stated (p. 468) by Parker, Ch. J.: "Where a grant is made extending to a river, and bounding upon it, the center of the stream is the line of the boundary. . . . But in relation to grants bounding on ponds, lakes, or other large bodies of standing fresh water, that principle does not apply, but the grant extends only to the water's edge. . . . If, therefore, the line of the township of Gilmanton . . . strikes a river, and the boundary is then upon a river, the grant extends to the thread of the river; but if it strikes any large body of standing water, by whatever name it is called, it will go only to the water's edge." At the subsequent trial, the court instructed the jury that "the point for them to settle was whether there was a current or not; and if they should find that there was a regular, steady, and perceptible current, however small, it mattered not what was the width of the water, or what it was called, it was a river, and the defendant was liable to maintain the bridge." State v. Gilmanton, 14 N. H. 467, 470. The defendants, being found guilty, moved for a new trial, and contended (page 472) that, if the instructions given to the jury were correct, "then are all our large lakes and bays . . . nothing in fact but rivers, for in all of them there must necessarily be a small current towards the outlet; and if the current be the only thing that decides the character of our inland waters, then must these lakes and bays be decided to be private property, and the towns adjoining . . . be liable to erect bridges over the same." It was held (pages 476, 477) that "the fact that there is a current from a higher to a lower level does not make that a river which would otherwise be a lake;" that the definition of "river" on which the verdict was found "would not be applicable to all bodies of water in which there might be a current;" that the instruction given to the jury "must, of course, be taken in connection with the subject-matter to which it related," and that "where it is admitted, or certainly not denied, as in the present case, that the water is not a lake nor a pond, the material difference between which is in size, the only criterion by which to determine whether it is a river is the existence of a current." An admission that the water was neither lake nor pond would have been an admission that it was a river, and would have left no question for the jury. Judicial notice was taken of the geography of the country, (page 477.) a knowledge of which might enable the court to decide whether the water at the bridge was a part of the river or a part of the bay. The question might be one of fact, on the trial of which the current might be one of the items of competent evidence, and for the decision of which a legal test might not be necessary. A view, taken by court or jury, without a ruling or instruction on any question of law, might be enough. To ocular proof could be added other evidence of the current, the quantity of water, and the comparative size and form of the basin of the bay and the channel of the river. The judgment ordered on the verdict established the fact that (for the purposes of that suit) the water under the bridge was a part of the river. At some place the water ceases to be Winnipisogee lake, and begins to be Winnipisogee river. Further south, it expands into another large pond, from which it issues, still further south, as a river. At each of these places of expansion and contraction the boundary of private landowners runs from the water's edge to the middle of the river. The second decision in the Gilmanton Case seems to determine that a current is not the only competent evidence of the points at which these changes occur in the boundary line.

However unsatisfactory State v. Gilmanton may be on the mode of finding the line between large ponds and streams running into or out of them, on other subjects it is clear and decisive. A large pond is not private property. When land, granted by the government to individuals for private use, is bounded by such a pond, the boundary is the water's edge. Sanbornton bay is a large pond. It does not appear that there had been any doubt on these points in this state before the first decision of the Gilmanton Case in 1838. Since that time they have not been open questions. In respect to title, the law divides natural fresh-water ponds into two classes,—the small, which pass by an ordinary grant of land, like brooks and rivers, from which, as conveyable property, they are not distinguished; and the large, which are exempted from the operation of such a grant, for reasons that stop private ownership at the water's edge of the sea and its estuaries. Tide waters and large ponds are public waters. Whatever exceptions, if any, may be found, this is the rule. It is well known that the fee of Lake Winnipisogee and Sanbornton bay is not in the owners of the adjoining land, and that all natural pools of fresh water are not the property of the state. The standard of size, or other test, that establishes their public or private title, is a point left undecided by our reported cases. But the law, classing large ponds with tide waters, and small ponds with fresh rivers and brooks, necessarily provides a mode of determining to which class every pond belongs. By the decision in State v. Gilmanton, and by uniform usage and a general concurrence of opinion, it is settled that the distinction between public and private waters is not based on tidal motion, or on the presence of salt. The action of the tide furnishes a convenient means of locating the boundary of the largest reservoir of public water, (The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. 12 How. 443, 455, 13 L. ed. 1058, 1063.) but does not show what reservoirs of fresh water are the property of the state. For the purposes of admiralty jurisdiction and the Federal power of regulating commerce "the doctrine of the common law as to the navigability of waters has no application in this country. Here the ebb and flow of the tide do not constitute the usual test, as in England, or any test at all of the navigability of waters. There no waters are navigable in fact, or, at least, to any considerable extent, which are not subject to the tide; and from this circumstance tide water and navigable water there signify substantially the same thing. But in this country the case is widely different.

A different test must, therefore, be applied to determine the navigability of our rivers, and that is found in their navigable capacity. Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact." The Daniel Ball v. United States, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 557, 568, 19 L. ed. 999, 1001; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. 12 How. 443, 454, 455, 13 L. ed. 1058, 1063; Frets v. Bull, 58 U. S. 12 How. 466, 13 L. ed. 1068; Jackson v. The Magnolia, 61 U. S. 20 How. 296, 299, 15 L. ed. 909, 911; Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 574, 17 L. ed. 107; The Hine v. Trevor, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451; The Jas. E. Eagle v. Fraser, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 15, 19 L. ed. 365; United States v. The Montello, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 430, 23 L. ed. 891; Müller v. New York & Brooklyn, 109 U. S. 385, 395, 27 L. ed. 971, 975. The reason of the English rule "was that the limit of the tide in all the waters of England was . . . the limit of practicable navigation, and, . . . as there could be no use for an admiralty jurisdiction where there could be no navigation, this test of the navigability of those waters became substituted as the rule, instead of the navigability itself. Such a rule . . . could have no pertinency to the rivers and lakes of this country, for here no such test existed. . . . The true rule in both countries was the navigable capacity of the stream; and, as this was ascertained in England by a test which was wholly inapplicable here, we could not be governed by it." The Hine v. Trevor, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 555, 565, 18 L. ed. 451, 454. For highway purposes, fresh water is navigable, in the American common-law sense, if it is in fact, in its natural condition, reasonably capable of valuable use as a public way. Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Olcott Falls Co. 65 N. H. 290, 377, 13 L. R. A. 826; Morgan v. King, 85 N. Y. 454, 91 Am. Dec. 58; United States v. The Montello, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 430, 441, 443, 23 L. ed. 891, 894; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 336, 24 L. ed. 224, 227; Cooley, Const. Lim. 726-728. The Merrimack river was formerly used in connection with the Middlesex canal as a highway for a line of boats between Concord and Boston. Many streams are highways for logs. But while the public right of way in a floatable or navigable fresh river or small pond is, in this state, an easement in the submerged land of the riparian proprietors, the public right of flotation or navigation in large ponds and arms of the sea is one of the objects accomplished by vesting the beds of such waters in the state, in trust for public use, as they were formerly vested in the crown. State v. Gilmanton, and Connecticut River Lumber Co.

v. Olcott Falls Co. supra; Com v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 451, 479, 482, 484, 492. The purpose and nature of the trust in which the right of way in Connecticut river is held is the ground on which it was decided in the Olcott Falls Case,—that the right is not relinquished or discontinued by an ordinary grant of the land under and around the waterway. For the same reason the title of the soil under large ponds and tide waters does not pass by an ordinary governmental grant of land bounded by or on them, or by a mere grant of a township or lot in which they are situated, although they may come within a municipal jurisdiction established by the same grant, (East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 186, 198-200;) and the purpose and nature of the trust in which the basins of these public waters are held are such that an alienation of the title of the soil is not an exercise of executive power, and cannot be effected without legislative authority.

The acquisition of water rights by prior appropriation for manufacturing and other purposes is a new doctrine, adopted and extended where the English riparian rule has been considered inapplicable, or applicable only to a limited extent to local conditions. Cary v. Daniels, 8 Met. 466-468; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 118 U. S. 9, 24-26, 28 L. ed. 889, 895; Pom. Riparian Rights, § 11; Atchison v. Peterson, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 507, 510, 511, 22 L. ed. 414, 415; Bacey v. Gallagher, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 670, 681-683, 22 L. ed. 452, 454, 455; Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 457-461, 25 L. ed. 240, 242, 243; Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 276, 25 L. ed. 790, 791. "The former decisions of this court, in cases involving the rights of parties to appropriate waters for mining and other purposes, have been based upon the wants of the community, and the peculiar condition of things in this state." Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 47, 48. Liberties of hunting and fishing, and other common rights, always exercised here in the wild and unoccupied districts of the public domain, and retained in large ponds and tide waters, after the adjoining dry land became private property, have been impaired in England by monarchical and feudal theories and usages, and a system of legal inequality in the enjoyment of public property, not consistent with the purposes for which this state was settled, and not adopted by its inhabitants. In every government of laws, a body of unwritten, common law is inevitable. No legislature can foresee the innumerable variety of complications in human affairs, or provide a statutory rule sufficiently precise and definite to meet each particular case. 1 Paterson, Liberty of the Subject, 141, 143, 145. "Common law, as well as statute law, grows out of the situation and circumstances of the people." Brown v. Langdon, Smith, (N. H.) 178, 182. Differences of condition produce differences of law. A great proportion of the English common law "grew into use by gradual adoption, and received from time to time the sanction of the courts of justice, without any legislative act for interference. It was the application of the dictates of natural justice and cultivated reason to particular cases." 1 Kent, Com. 471. The dictates of justice and reason, applied to the situation and circumstances of New Hampshire settlers, were in many respects materially different from the law of England. "To such a colony there is no doubt that the settlers from the mother country carried with them such portion of its common and statute law as was applicable to their new situation." Parke, B., in Kielley v. Carson, 4 Moore, P. C. 63, 84; Phillips v. Eyre, L. R. 6 Q. B. 1, 19. The immigrants brought, not the whole body of written and unwritten laws under which they had enjoyed rights and suffered wrongs, but only such as were suited to their condition and wants, consistent with their new state of society, and conformable to the institutions they intended to establish, and the general course of policy they intended to pursue. State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550, 561; Pendergast v. Young, 21 N. H. 234, 236, 237; Cochecho R. Co. v. Farrington, 26 N. H. 428, 488; Hall v. Martin, 46 N. H. 837, 846; Lisbon v. Lyman, 49 N. H. 553, 569; Cole v. Lake Co. 54 N. H. 242, 279, 283, 285, 286; Going v. Emery, 16 Pick. 107, 115, 26 Am. Dec. 645; Canal Comrs. & Appraisers v. People, 5 Wend. 423, 463; Williams v. Williams, 8 N. Y. 525, 541; People v. Canal Appraisers, 33 N. Y. 461, 468, 476, 477; Roberts v. Baumgarten, 110 N. Y. 380, 383; Suth. Stat. Constr. § 15; Cooley, Const. Lim. 34, 35.

By the English rule thus modified, the legal title of New Hampshire land was in the king, who held it as trustee in his official and representative capacity, with no private interest. The dry land, and the soil under fresh rivers, brooks, and small ponds, was convertible, by his grant, into private property, for settlement, and for the advancement of the common welfare. The seashore, arms of the sea, and large ponds, by reason of their special adaptation to public uses, were set apart and reserved as public waters. They could not be converted into private estate or subjected to a private easement, by the trustee's grant, or by any act of the executive branch of the government. The distinction is between what the trustee held for public use and what he held for the purpose of sale or other appropriation to private use for the public benefit. Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 57, 68, 21 L. ed. 798, 802. "The use of navigable waters is inalienable." 3 Kent, Com. 427. "It is incompetent for the crown in modern times to abridge or destroy . . . the public rights either of navigation or fishery." Gould, Waters, §§ 21, 82, and authorities cited; Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Olcott Falls Co. 65 N. H. 387, 388, 18 L. R. A. 826. Public and private rights have been enlarged by the gradual abolition of the king's despotic power. 4 Bl. Com. 409, 418-420. But in judicial decisions the change has not been methodical or consistent. Land covered by public water is capable of many uses. Rights of navigation and fishery are not in the whole estate. And sufficient reasons have not been given for regarding all but two of the rights and uses comprised in the title as the private property of a former trustee, or convertible into private property by his grant. He "held the seashores as well as the land under the sea," and other property of the same public class, "for the use and benefit of all the subjects, for all useful purposes, the principal of which were navigation and the fisheries." Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 451, 488; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 71-73, 76, 77, 10 Am. Dec. 356. The true rule, applied to Sanbornton bay, made the water's edge the boundary of the proprietors of Gilmanton.

The law of public waters is presumably uniform, and on many questions it is not material whether an authority relates to tide water or to large ponds. Blundell v. Catterall, 5 Barn. & Ald. 268, was an action of trespass qu. cl. for driving bathing machines across a beach. "The plaintiff was the lord of the manor of Great Crosby, which is bounded on the west by the River Mersey, an arm of the sea. As lord of the manor, he was the owner of the shore, [the land between high and low water mark,] and had the exclusive right of fishing thereon with stake nets. The defendant was the servant at an hotel erected . . . upon land in Great Crosby fronting the shore, and bounded by the high-water mark. . . . The proprietors" of the hotel "kept bathing machines for the use of persons resorting thither, who were driven by the defendant in machines across the shore into the sea for the purpose of bathing." The shore being a part of the plaintiff's manor, and the hotel grounds being bounded by high-water mark, the defendant contended "that by the common law of England all the king's subjects had a right, not only to traverse the ocean itself in every direction, as well for commerce, trade and intercourse as for every other lawful purpose, but also that they had a general public right of way over the seashore to and from the sea, . . . as well during the recess as during the flux of the tide, for all lawful purposes, and the king could not grant the shore so as to supersede or to deprive the public of the exercise of that right; . . . that, even if the public right was not so extensive, yet, at all events, the king's subjects had a right of bathing on the seashore . . . in such a way as is conformable to decency; that they had also, as incident thereto, a right to pass over the seashore, not merely on foot, but with horses and carriages,—that is to say, with bathing machines for that purpose,—whether the seashore belonged to the king as public property, or to any individual as being now or even immemorially private property; and that such public right could not be superseded by the king's grant of the seashore as private property." It was held by a majority of the court—Holroyd, Bayley, and Abbott—that there was no public right of using the shore for bathing, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. "The question is," says Holroyd, J., "with regard to the shore,—that is to say, the land between the high and the low water mark. . . . A general public right in all the king's subjects to use the seashore for all such temporary purposes as they please would be, I think, inconsistent with the nature of permanent private property, or with the seashore becoming such permanent private property. If, therefore, the right of bathing, and the right of passing over the seashore on foot and with carriages, claimed as incident thereto, be claimed under the supposed general right of the public to use the sea and the shore for all such temporary legal purposes as they may please, such a public right of general appropriation is inconsistent with the fact of the locus in quo being private property, and of the fishing therein being also a private exclusive right, as stated in the case. . . . Where the soil remains the king's and where no mischief or injury is likely to arise from the enjoyment or exercise of such a public right, [of bathing,] it is not to be supposed that an unnecessary and injurious restraint upon the subjects would, in that respect, be enforced by the king." "By the seashore," says Bayley, J., "I understand the space between the ordinary high and low water mark, and the property in this is, prima facie, in the king. It may, indeed, by grant or prescription, belong to a subject; but, until the contrary is shown, the presumption is that it belongs to the king. Many of the king's rights are, to a certain extent, for the benefit of his subjects, and that is the case as to the sea, in which all his subjects have the right of navigation, and of fishing, and it is so in highways, along which all his subjects have the right of passage; and the king can make no modern grants in derogation of those rights. . . . The right, [of bathing,] as claimed, is not confined to any particular place, if it exists at all, but it must exist upon every part of the seashore. Every private building, then, erected upon the seashore, and even wharves and quays, would be an obstruction to that right, and, of consequence, abatable or indictable. And yet, in how many instances are such buildings, wharves, and quays erected. Every embankment by which land is redeemed from the sea would obstruct the exercise of this right, and be a nuisance, and so would the erection of stakes for holding nets; and yet how frequently are such embankments made, and such stakes set up. . . . The inconveniences which would result from" the general common-law right claimed by the defendant, "afford to my mind a strong argument against its existence. . . . If an individual had the grant of the seashore from the crown, and were using it for recreation or bathing he or his family might be interrupted and deprived of all privacy by the exercise of this common-law right. . . . The king, for the public welfare, may suffer such a right to be exercised in those parts of the shore which remain in his hands. . . . In those places in which convenience has required the right, and it has continued from the time of legal memory, there will be a right by custom; and where that is not the case, the crown or its grantees are not likely to withhold it, upon proper terms," and under proper regulations." The opinion of Abbott, C. J., presents the same argument from the inconvenience of a right of bathing that would prevent the building of wharves and the reclamation of land from the sea; and the same suggestion that, where the king is the owner of the shore, it is not probable that any obstruction to bathing will be interposed on his behalf.

The effect of these opinions, and of the judgment recovered by the lord of the manor, is that the English shore was not originally vested in the king as a mere official trustee, holding the legal title for the public use and benefit, but that he had such a private interest in it that he or his grantees could exclude the owners of the adjoining land from the privilege of bathing in the sea, and exact rent or tolls from all persons crossing or entering the shore for that purpose. A different view is taken in the dissenting opinion of Best, J., who says: "We have been told that lords of manors will find it to their interest to indulge the public with the privilege of going on or over the sands of the sea, and that judges and juries will check the vexatious exercise of the right to exclude them. But the free access to the sea is a privilege too important to Englishmen to be left dependent on the interest or caprice of any description of persons. . . . The owner of the soil of the shore may erect such buildings or other things as are necessary for the carrying on of commerce." Although a wharf on a tidal river, "in order to be useful, must be carried out beyond the high-water mark, and, whilst the tide is up, must somewhat narrow the passage of the river, yet such wharves are necessary for the loading and unloading of vessels, and the right of passage must be accommodated to the right of loading and unloading the craft that pass. The law in these as in all other cases limits and balances opposing rights, that they may be so enjoyed as that the exercise of one is not injurious to the other.

. . . . The universal practice in England shows the right of way over the seashore to be a common-law right. . . . So far from the law allowing lords of manors to restrain persons from bathing, it will give them every facility for this recreation. . . . Bathing machines were used before my time, . . . and I think the use of them is essential to the practice of bathing. Decency must prevent all females, and infirmity many men, from bathing except from a machine. Attempts have been made to make those who use machines pay some acknowledgment to the lord of the manor where they are used; but I cannot find that any of those attempts have yet succeeded. . . . Selden, who wrote his 'Mare Clausum' to prove that an exclusive right might be acquired in parts of the sea, admits that the sea was originally common to all, and . . . he has collected from the works of the learned of all nations . . . that the sea and its shores were common to all men, as much so as the air that blows over them. This, I think, proves that the doctrine is reasonable, and ought to be adopted into our law, unless there is something in our particular situation to exclude it; and, so far from it being the case, there never was a country, the local situation of which, and the habits and interests of the inhabitants of which, so much required such a law. . . . The right of using the shore for the purpose of fishing does not depend on any particular law applicable to fishing only, but is part of the more general right of the subjects to the sea and its shores.

18 L. R. A.

My opinion is founded on these grounds: The shore of the sea is admitted to have been at one time the property of the king. From the general nature of this property, it could never be used for exclusive occupation. It was holden by the king, like the sea and the highways for all his subjects. The soil could only be transferred subject to this public trust; and general usage shows that the public right has been excepted out of the grant of the soil. . . . Unless I felt myself bound by an authority as strong and clear as an Act of parliament I would hold on principles of public policy—I might say public necessity—that the interruption of free access to the sea is a public nuisance. In the first ages of all countries not only the sea and its shores but all perennial rivers were left open to the public use. In all countries it has been matter of just complaint that individuals have encroached on the rights of the people. In England our ancestors put the public rights in rivers under the safeguard of Magna Charta. The principle of exclusive appropriation must not be carried beyond things capable of improvement by the industry of man. If it be extended so far as to touch the right of walking over these barren sands it will take from the people what is essential to their welfare whilst it will give to individuals only the hateful privilege of vexing their neighbors. It has been said that lords of manors should have a right to prevent bathing, that they might hinder persons from doing it in places of public resort. Magistrates are armed with authority to bring to punishment such as bathe indecently. I would rather rely on disinterested and responsible magistrates than on an interested and irresponsible lord of a manor."

It is said that the strip of land between the lines of high and low water, called the "shore" or the "foreshore," may be, and commonly is, parcel of the manor adjacent. Hale, De Jure Maris, chap. 4; Gould, Waters, § 21; Clement v. Burns, 48 N. H. 609, 616. In Blundell v. Catterall, the plaintiff, being "the owner of the shore" "as lord of the manor," and having the constructive possession that accompanies title, maintained trespass qu. cl. against a driver of bathing machines. In Mason's Will, New Hampshire was described and devised as "my manor of Mason Hall." Belknap, Hist. N. H. Farmer's ed. 15, 94; 1 N. H. Prov. Papers, 42, 110. One of the mistakes he "fell into was the idea of lordship, and the granting of lands not as freeholds, but by leases subject to quitrents. To settle a colony of tenants" here "was indeed a chimerical project. . . . The settlements began by an equal division of property among independent freemen. Lordship and vassalage were held in abhorrence." Belknap, Hist. N. H. 17, 89, 90. Such authorities as Blundell v. Catterall, and Calmady v. Rowe, 6 C. B. 861, are irrelevant where there is no manorial lord. 2 Bl. Com. 90-98. No one claims to be the feudal successor of Mason. The success of the people in the Masonian controversy (Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 186, 187, 20 Am. Rep. 194,) did not leave the province in the condition in which it would have been if they had failed. And whatever titles and powers would have been gained by the Masonian claimant, and whatever public and private rights would have been lost by the rest of the community if he had prevailed, he would not have acquired, in public waters, a private right that was not vested in the Plymouth company, under whom he claimed, or in the crown.

The private interest of the king in tide land, and his power of conveying it to favorites, to be held as a private interest, were parts of a social system which the settlers of New Hampshire considered oppressive, and from which they endeavored to escape. They "could not have been expected to encounter the many hardships that unavoidably attended their emigration to the new world, and to people the banks of its bays and rivers, if the land under the water at their very doors was liable to immediate appropriation by another as private property, and the settler upon the fast land thereby excluded from its enjoyment, and unable to take a shellfish from its bottom, or fasten there a stake or even bathe in its waters, without becoming a trespasser." Martin v. Waddell, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 367, 414, 10 L. ed. 997, 1014. A private ownership of this wilderness, vested in the king, and a regal or executive power of conveying those reservoirs which the interests of these settlers required the government should hold for common use, would be in conflict with the general object of their migration. The mediæval rule cannot be accepted without material modification. It is not necessary to reject the theory that the legal title of public waters was in the king. The entire equitable title and beneficial interest being held and enjoyed by the public, and being capable of alienation only by an exercise of legislative power, it matters not who is trustee. But no fiduciary theory can be adopted that allows the trustee to defeat the public purpose of the trust.

Martin v. Waddell, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 367, 409-413, 10 L. ed. 997, 1012, 1014, was an action of ejectment for 100 acres of the tidal bed of Raritan river and bay in New Jersey. It was held that the tidewater trust survived the grant of the province to the Duke of York. "The country mentioned in the letters patent was held by the king in his public and regal character as the representative of the nation, and in trust for them. . . . We do not propose to meddle with the point . . . as to the power of the king since Magna Charta to grant to a subject a portion of the soil covered by the navigable [meaning tidal] waters of the kingdom, so as to give him an immediate and exclusive right of fishery either for shellfish or floating fish within the limits of his grant. The question is not free from doubt. . . . But from the opinions expressed . . . in the case of Blundell v. Catterall, 5 Barn. & Ald. 287, 294, 304, 309, and in the case of Somersett v. Fogwell, 5 Barn. & C. 883, 884, the question must be regarded as settled in England 18 L. R. A.

against the right of the king, since Magna Charta, to make such a grant. . . .

When the revolution took place, the people of each state became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them for their own common use.

. . . . The dominion and property in navigable waters, and in the lands under them, being held by the king as a public trust, the grant to an individual of an exclusive fishery in any portion of it is so much taken from the common fund intrusted to his care for the common benefit. . . . The questions upon this charter are: . . . Whether the dominion and propriety in the navigable waters and in the soils under them passed as a part of the prerogative rights annexed to the political powers conferred on the duke; whether, in his hands, they were intended to be a trust for the common use of the new community about to be established, or private property, to be parceled out and sold to individuals, for his own benefit.

The estate and rights of the king passed to the duke in the same condition in which they had been held by the crown, and upon the same trusts. . . . If the word 'soil' be an appropriate word to pass lands covered with navigable water, . . . it is associated in the letters-patent with 'other royalties,' and conveyed as such. No words are used for the purpose of separating them from the jura regalia, and converting them into private property, to be held and enjoyed by the duke apart from and independent of the political character with which he was clothed by the same instrument. . . . It was expressly enjoined upon him, as a duty in the government he was about to establish, to make it as near as might be agreeable in their new circumstances to the laws . . .

of England; and how could this be done if, in the charter itself, this high prerogative trust was severed from the regal authority,—if the shores, and rivers, and bays, and arms of the sea, and the land under them, instead of being held as a public trust for the benefit of the whole community, to be freely used by all for navigation and fishery, as well for shellfish as floating fish, had been converted by the charter itself into private property, to be parceled out and sold by the duke for his own individual emolument?"

Martin v. Waddell "was not an action for disturbing the plaintiff in a right of fishery, but an action to recover possession of the soil itself; and in giving judgment for the defendant, the court necessarily decided upon the title to the soil." Den v. Jersey Company Assn. 56 U. S. 15 How. 426, 14 L. ed. 757. The reasoning which led to the conclusion that the public trust was not terminated by the legal construction of the king's grant tends to show that this trust could not be extinguished by him. As the conversion of tide land into private property would have been inconsistent with the duke's duty of establishing a government, as near as conveniently might be, in the new circumstances, agreeable to the laws of England, it does not appear how such a conversion could be an exercise of royal power. The grant was of a large territory containing "all the land from the west side of Connecticut to the east side of Delaware bay, . . . together with all the lands, islands, soils, rivers, harbors, mines, minerals, quarries, woods, marshes, waters, lakes, fishings, hawking, hunting, and fowling, and all other royalties, profits, commodities, and hereditaments to the said several islands, lands, and premises belonging and appertaining, with their and every of their appurtenances, and all our estate, right, title, interest, benefit, advantage, claim, and demand, of, in, or to the said lands and premises, or any part or parcel thereof, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, together with the yearly and other the rents, revenues, and profits of all and singular the said premises, and of every part and parcel thereof." Poore, Charters & Constitutions, 783, 784. The American construction of this deed being that it did not make the grantee private owner of the tidal basin of Raritan river and bay, it would seem that the grantor's ownership of American tide land was not an interest of a private character. "All our estate, right, title, interest, benefit, advantage, claim, and demand of, in, or to the said lands and premises" is comprehensive language, and was intended to describe all the grantor's real estate in New Jersey and New York. The terms of the grant suggested no distinction between the titles of dry land and tide land. The water's edge was not mentioned as a boundary line of rights or powers. If all the right, title, and interest of the grantor on both sides of that line included the land on one side in a sense in which it did not include the land on the other side, the result is apparently due to the nature of his title, and a difference in his conveying powers, and not to a lack of conveying words. If the method of construction employed in Martin v. Waddell were adopted here, it would not tend to sustain private ownership upon the king's express conveyances of shores or arms of the sea, or of such fresh ponds as our law assigns to the same class of property. But the first law of public waters is the fiduciary character of the king's title; and under this law, as interpreted in this state, no construction of his grants is necessary, in cases like the present. Without explicit legislative authority, he could neither discontinue a public easement of navigation or flotation in a fresh river or small pond, (the bed of which could be made private property by his grant,) nor alienate the bed of large ponds or tide waters. "The soil of the seashore, to the extent of three miles from the beach, is vested in the crown; and I am not aware of any rule of law which prevents the crown from granting to a subject that which is vested in itself." Erle, Ch. J., in Free Fishers & Dredgers v. Gann, 11 C. B. N. S. 387, 418. The common law of this state regards the legal title of public waters (including the soil under them) as having been vested in the king in his fiduciary capacity for the special fiduciary purpose of securing public rights; and, according to the general law of trusts, this capacity and purpose gave the trustee no private right. The barren, legal title was held by him, not as a natural person, but as a corporation, endowed with perpetuity, (1 Bl. Com. 469,) and in his public and regal character as representative of the nation who had the entire equitable and beneficial interest. This public interest, like the royal succession, would not be affected by his grant of the crown, and all rights, titles, and interests vested in him in all his capacities, public and private. The people inherited the equitable title of public waters as he inherited the throne,—by force of a common-law rule which he could not rightfully annul. At the Revolution, the state, as sovereign, succeeded the king in the office of trustee. In contemplation of law, the equitable title of the people was the same before and after the transfer of the legal title from one trustee to another. Anything less than the substance of this principle would fall short of the modification of English law required by the situation and policy of the province.

18 L. R. A.

When a road was laid out under section 2 of the Act of 1719, the land damages and expense of construction and repair were a municipal burden. In a technical sense, the road was the king's highway. His ownership of the public easement was a matter of form. When the way was taken for public use by the legislative power of eminent domain, no private interest was conveyed to him. He became a mere titular proprietor. In the same ceremonial and fiduciary sense, tide lands and large ponds were his. Provincial usage shows that these reservoirs were understood to be devoted, by natural law, to public uses. A private interest of the king in this property was a relic of a regal supremacy that is now extinct in England. The emigrants had no occasion to bring it with them. Beginning their settlement in the forest, with many of the advantages of an original organization of society, exercising in town meeting and provincial assembly substantially all the powers of local self-government, and enjoying a large measure of practical independence, they had no motive to adopt the unsound and useless doctrine of the trustee's private interest that had led, in the old country, to great abuses, some of which it had been necessary to correct by sections 33, 47 and 48 of the great charter. "By the law of nature every man . . . has an equal right of pursuing and taking to his own use all such creatures as are feræ naturæ, and therefore the property of nobody. . . . The whole island was replenished with all sorts of game in the time of the Britons, who lived in a wild and pastoral manner, without inclosing or improving their grounds, and derived much of their subsistence from the chase, which they all enjoyed in common. But when husbandry took place under the Saxon government, and lands began to be cultivated, improved, and inclosed, the beasts naturally fled into the woody and desert tracts, which were called the forests; and, having never been disposed of in the first distribution of lands, were therefore held to belong to the crown. These were filled with great plenty of game, which our royal sportsmen reserved for their own diversion, on pain of a pecuniary forfeiture for such as interfered with their sovereign. But every freeholder had the full liberty of sporting upon his own territories, provided he abstained from the king's forests." This liberty of freeholders was afterwards limited to lords of manors and other privileged classes. The right of the crown "was exerted with the utmost rigor at and after the time of the Norman establishment; not only in the ancient forests, but in the new ones which the conqueror made, by laying together vast tracts of country depopulated for that purpose, and reserved solely for the king's royal diversion, in which were exercised the most horrid tyrannies and oppressions, under color of forest law, for the sake of preserving the beasts of chase; to kill any of which, within the limits of the forest, was as penal as the death of a man. . . . King John laid a total interdict upon the winged as well as the four-footed creation. . . . The cruel and insupportable hardships which those forest laws created to the subject occasioned our ancestors to be as jealous for their reformation as for the relaxation of the feudal rigors and the other exactions introduced by the Norman family, and accordingly we find the immunities of Charta de Foresta as warmly contended for, and extorted from the king with as much difficulty, as those of Magna Charta itself." 2 Bl. Com. 411, 414-416, 418, 419, and notes by Christian, Kerr, and Coleridge. "Though the forest laws are now mitigated, and by degrees grown entirely obsolete, yet from this root has sprung a bastard slip, known by the name of the 'game law,' now arrived to and wantoning in its highest vigor, . . . both productive of the same tyranny to the commons, but with this difference: that the forest laws established only one mighty hunter throughout the land; the game laws have raised a little Nimrod in every manor." 4 Bl. Com. 415, 416. An "exclusive right of fishing in a public river is also a royal franchise, and is considered as such in all countries where the feudal polity has prevailed; though the making such grants . . . was prohibited for the future by King John's great charter, and the rivers that were fenced in his time were directed to be laid open, as well as the forests to be disafforested. This opening was extended by the second and third charters of Henry III. to those [rivers] also that were fenced under Richard I., so that a franchise of" exclusive "fishery ought now to be at least as old as the reign of Henry II." 2 Bl. Com. 39.

"In the old Teutonic Constitution, just as in the old Roman Constitution, large tracts of land were the property of the state, the ager publicus of Rome, the folkland of England. As the royal power grew, as the king came to be more and more looked on as the impersonation of the nation, the land of the people came to be more and more looked on as the land of the king, and the folkland of our Old English charters gradually changed into the terra regis of Domesday. Like other changes of the kind, that Norman conquest only strengthened and brought to its full effect a tendency which was already at work; but there can be no doubt that, down to the Norman conquest, the king at least went through the form of consulting his Witan, before he alienated the land of the people to become the possession of an individual,—an Old English phrase, before he turned folkland into bookland. After the Norman conquest, we hear no more of the land of the people; it has become the land of the king, to be dealt with according to the king's personal pleasure. From the days of the first William to those of the third, the land which had once been the land of the people was dealt with without any reference to the will of the people. . . . Now this wrong . . . is redressed. A custom as strong as law now requires that at the beginning of each fresh reign the sovereign shall, not by an act of bounty, but by an act of justice, give back to the nation the land which the nation lost so long ago. The royal demesnes are now handed over to be dealt with like the other revenues of the state, to be disposed of by parliament for the public service; that is to say, the people have won back their own; the usurpation of the days of foreign rule has been swept away. We have . . . gone back to the sound principles of our forefathers; the terra regis of the Norman has once more become the folkland of the days of our earliest freedom. . . . The land which, to put it in the mildest form, the king held in trust for the common service of the nation, was now again employed to its proper use." Freeman, Eng. Const. 2d ed. 189, 140, 142; May, Const. Hist. chap. 4; 1 Bl. Com. 286; Gould, Waters, §§ 19, 21, note 2. The trustees' private interests, gained by usurpation, and lost when the ancient limitations of executive power were restored, was a wrong which the New England colonists could not have intended to bring over and perpetuate. It was not adapted to their circumstances, but was at variance with the institutions they endeavored to establish, and the rights for which they were disposed to contend.

The argument that the private use of tide waters and large ponds by abutters disproves the public title, (Blundell v. Catterall, supra,) is not conclusive. Like other general rules, the public title, and the king's want of capacity to convert such waters into private property, are applied with a due observance of private rights, founded on necessity and convenience, and maintained by uniform usage. The dictates of justice and reason, which retain in the government, for common use, the fee of large ponds, and the shores and arms of the sea, (and in some states large fresh rivers,) have vested a reasonable private right of using this public property in the owners of the adjoining land. Clement v. Burns, 43 N. H. 609, 616-619; Clark v. Peckham, 10 R. I. 35, 38, 14 Am. Rep. 654; Thornton v. Grant, 10 R. I. 477, 14 Am. Rep. 701; Potter, J., in Providence Steam Engine Co. v. Providence & S. S. S. Co. 12 R. I. 348, 356-370, 84 Am. Rep. 652; East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 186, 202, 208; Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 117, 121, 50 Am. Dec. 274; Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 332, 395, 16 Am. Rep. 46; Sherlock v. Bainbridge, 41 Ind. 35, 13 Am. Rep. 802; Delaplains v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386; Diedrich v. Northwestern U. R. Co. 42 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 399; Union Depot Street R. & Transfer Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 297, 47 Am. Rep. 789; Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375, 51 Am. Rep. 116; Dutton v. Strong, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 23, 31, 32, 17 L. ed. 29, 32; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272, 289, 19 L. ed. 74, 78; Yates v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 497, 504, 19 L. ed. 984, 986; Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 57, 65, 21 L. ed. 798, 801. This right is not bounded by low-water mark. For shipping purposes in Portsmouth, it is reasonably necessary that wharves should be built from the upland, not only across the land uncovered at low tide, but also beyond it. In Lake Winnipisiogee, a steamboat wharf must extend to a navigable depth in the dry season. Atles v. Northwestern U. Packet Co. 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 389, 393, 22 L. ed. 619, 620. An abutter's use of the bed of a public water like a riparian owner's use of a fresh river flowing over his land, is governed by the rule of reasonableness applied to the facts of his case.

"By the common law, the king was the proprietor of the soil under the navigable water, and this, being regarded as a private emolument of the crown, was susceptible of transfer to a subject. But such transfer did not divest or diminish, at least after Magna Charta, the public rights in the water, and, consequently, the grantees of the crown held the property in subjection to the common privilege of fishery and navigation. . . . The king could not deprive the subjects of the realm of these general rights. This was a power that resided in parliament." "By the rules of the ancient law, the owner of land along the shore was entitled to no right as an incident of such ownership, except the contingent ones . . . of alluvion and dereliction. . . . On the other hand, the title to the soil under tide water was in the sovereign, and such title was attended with the usual concomitants of the ownership of realty; and it consequently followed . . . that, in order to enable the owner of the upland to fill in or wharf out below the line of high water, it was absolutely necessary to adopt some principle different from those of the common law." Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 84 N. J. L. 532, 550, 554, 8 Am. Rep. 269. In that case it was held that, by a local custom of New Jersey, abutters have an inchoate right to wharf out to low-water mark; that this right is a license, revocable before execution; and that, under a statute making it lawful for them to build docks or wharves upon the shore in front of their lands, and in any other way to improve the same, and, when so built upon or improved, to appropriate the same to their own exclusive use, the license does not become irrevocable until the improvement is made. The doctrine that the soil under tide water is a private emolument of the sovereign, (subject to public rights of fishery and navigation,) and 18 L. R. A.

that, without express or implied license, abutters cannot build wharves, or bathe in the sea, in front of their own land, is not introduced here by applying the dictates of justice and reason to the situation of the American people. The public title of the beds of large ponds, (State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461,) including a public right of fishery that cannot be impaired by prescription, (State v. Franklin Falls Co. 49 N. H. 240, 250, 252-257, 6 Am. Rep. 518;) and the private right of wharfing out (Clement v. Burns, 48 N. H. 609, 617-619,) are not overthrown by such cases as Marshall v. Ulleswater S. Nav. Co. 3 Best & S. 732, L. R. 7 Q. B. 166; Bristow v. Cormican, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 641; Johnston v. Bloomfield, 8 Ir. C. L. Rep. 68; and other authorities cited in Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. supra. If due weight is given to the axiom that common law grows out of the institutions and circumstances of the country, the conclusion is unavoidable that the rights of abutters and the public in American public waters are the whole property, and not merely what was left for the subjects of the realm by the ancient monopolies of the English executive and the manorial lords.

Hamlin v. Pairpoint Mfg. Co., 141 Mass. 51, 57, was an action of tort for building a wharf on the plaintiff's tide-land in Acushnet river. The defendants contended that the plaintiff had no rights in the soil below low-water mark. By a special Act, passed in 1806, (Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 209,) the Legislature had authorized the owners of lots adjoining Acushnet river in New Bedford to erect and maintain wharves parallel with their several lots to the channel of the river. It was held that, whether this did or did not give the lot owners an unrestricted fee, it operated as a legislative grant to them of an interest in the soil between their lots and the channel, and gave them a possessory title for the purpose of building wharves, sufficient to maintain trespass. In this state such grants are not necessary. What form of action is appropriate when the abutter has not actual possession is a question of no practical importance. If the state has a right of action for the possession when a wharf is wrongfully built in front of his land, (Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385, 398, 28 Am. Rep. 634) this does not preclude his recovering a judgment that will enable him to exercise his right of wharfing out. The proceeding at English common law to obtain leave to build a wharf or other structure on the king's tide land was a writ of ad quod damnum to ascertain what injury would ensue. Upon the return of a favorable verdict, the proposed work was authorized by the king's license. Comyns' Dig. Ad Quod Damnum; Gould, Waters, §§ 21, 43, 609. In this state, the manner in which and the extent to which the bed of a public water can be reasonably appropriated to the exclusive use of a littoral proprietor is determinable on a bill in equity. The ascertainment, location, and measurement of his right before he attempts to exercise it may be more useful than any remedial course that can be taken after a controversy has arisen on his alleged violation of the public right. Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Olcott Falls Co. 65 N. H. 290, 390-392, 13 L. R. A. 826. If there were no statutes relating to chancery jurisdiction, the common law would furnish necessary and convenient procedure. Walker v. Walker, 63 N. H. 321, 56 Am. Rep. 514; Boody v. Watson, 64 N. H. 162, 171, 178, 179. If it is reasonable that flats should be filled or permanent works constructed by abutters, and that they should not be deprived of their improvements without compensation, or that limitations or conditions should be imposed for the protection of public or private interests, a decree, made upon a hearing of all interested parties maintains the equities of the case, and so adjusts the exercise of the public and the private right that there shall be no substantial infringement of either. Without a decree or judgment on the question of reasonable use, the abutter assumes the risk of his construction of a wharf, warehouse, weir, tide mill, or other thing, below the water's edge, being found to be unreasonable, and his structure being an abatable nuisance. This risk has been assumed, from the earliest settlement to the present time, without fear of loss; and, if any public or private wrong or inconvenience has resulted, it is not generally known. The experience of more than 250 years has shown no practical difficulty in the question of the abutters' reasonable private use, and no defect in the law calling for such amendments as have been made in Massachusetts in relation to tide waters.

An abutter's private right of use and occupation in a public water, though conveyable by his deed of his upland, (Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Turner v. Holland, 65 Mich. 458; Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 599, 619, 620, 56 Am. Rep. 642,) is a severable part of his estate. In value, it may be the chief part. The reason of the law does not forbid him to sever and sell or lease the right he may not wish to exercise. Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 848, 852, 853; Ladies' Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Halstead, 68 Conn. 144, 150, 152; Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 104, 7 L. R. A. 722; Goodsell v. Lawson, 42 Md. 848. Being a part of his estate, it cannot be taken from him for private use without his consent, or for public use without compensation. In some instances it may not be material whether the fee below the water's edge is in him, subject to reasonable public use, or in the state, subject to his reasonable private use. In some places the public right of use is more, in others it is less, important than the private right. Convenience requires a rule, and no serious inconvenience has arisen from the adoption of the water's edge as the boundary of public and private ownership. Whether the water's edge, which is the high-water line in tide waters, is the low-water line in large ponds, (Gould, Waters, § 203; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 836; Paine v. Woods, 108 Mass. 160, 170,) may be a question to be considered in determining what common-law forms of action are appropriate when remedies are demanded for alleged infringements of the public or the private rights existing below the line of high water.

"Navigable water" "is here held to mean all such waters as are actually navigable, whether fresh or salt. When it is considered that the rights and interests of the public, such as fishing, ferrying, and transportation, are preserved in all navigable waters by the inherent and inalienable attributes of the sovereign, it would seem to follow that the controversies which have arisen over the nominal ownership of the soil under such waters have been magnified beyond the real interests involved. This becomes still more apparent when we consider the character and extent of the property which may, in the nature of things, be acquired and enjoyed in running water. Aqua currit et debet currere. Neither sovereign nor subject can have any greater than a usufructuary right therein." Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463, 479, 480, 44 Am. Rep. 898. In that case it was held that all conveyable rights of property in the bed of Hemlock lake, in the southwestern part of New York, had been vested in the state of Massachusetts and its grantees. Salt marshes and thatch beds, specially needed by owners of cattle before sufficient mowing ground was obtained by removing the forest, have been conveyed and inherited as private property (subject to public rights) since they were divided into lots and apportioned among the early settlers. Belknap, Hist. N. H. chap. 2, (Farmer's ed. p. 20;) Bell, Hist. Exeter, 20, 80, 81, 85, 40, 42, 180, 181, 435, 487, 498, 441, 444; Acts June 27, 1780, January 15, 1784, November 26, 1812, and July 1, 1819, (ed. 1880, p. 191;) Gen. Laws, chap. 281, § 9; Knowles v. Dow, 20 N. H. 185-187; Potter, J., in Providence Steam-Engine Co. v. Providence & S. S. S. Co. 12 R. I. 348, 357, 34 Am. Rep. 652. Whether this private property is a mere exclusive, assignable, and inheritable right to the crop of thatch, or a fee vested in persons described in the Act of 1794 as "owners of salt marshes," is a question that need not now be considered. Legislation of the subject of seaweed, rockweed, and flatsweed shows that by usage and universal understanding other parts of the tide land are public property. Acts June 12, 1789, June 18, 1793, June 14, 1800, December 13, 1808, and June 21, 1814; Laws 1840, chap. 564; Laws 1850, chaps. 994, 1001; Index N. H. Laws, p. 335, title Marshes; Id. p. 496, title Seaweed; Rev. Stat. chap. 123, §§ 2, 8; Gen. Stat. chap. 263, §§ 8, 9; Gen. Laws, chap. 281, §§ 10, 11. Taking from thatch grounds the weed deemed "necessary to preserve and fertilize" them, "without leave first obtained from the owner or owners thereof," is prohibited as a "damage" to the private right of the persons designated as "owners." Taking weed from the seashore is regulated in a manner calculated to prevent "inconveniences and disputes" among persons exercising a public right. This distinction is a legislative recognition and confirmation of the understanding that has always prevailed in the tide-water region, where grass-producing lots in salt-water rivers and arms of the sea have been claimed and mowed under private titles derived from the towns.

The English doctrine of the king's private interest in public waters, the need of his license to authorize a reasonable private use of them by abutters, and the necessities of commerce, raised an equitable demand for an exception to the rule that private rights cannot be acquired from the crown by prescription. Gould, Waters, §§ 22, 37. In this state, the law of public waters being what justice and reason require, there is no exceptional power of invading the public right by prescription. State v. Franklin Falls Co. 49 N. H. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 518; Collins v. Howard, 65 N. H. 190; Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 57, 68, 21 L. ed. 798, 802. Private rights in thatch grounds, acquired from the public proprietor, not by prescription, but by express grants of lots laid out for private use below high-water mark, have no tendency to show that they would have been acquired by a grant of upland bounded by tide water, or by a grant of upland within the bounds of which such grounds were found. They seem to be an instance of the operation of the rule that private rights are not acquired in public waters unless an alienation of the public property is included in the terms of a grant by express words or necessary implication. Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 451, 491-497. If there are exceptional cases not governed by this rule, the existence of the rule is not a matter of doubt. When a lot of salt marsh (or the right of cropping it) has been converted into private property by an express public grant made by authority shown by usage to be competent to exercise this power over the marsh, its passing by deed or devise as parcel of a distant farm of which it is in fact a part would not be an infringement of the rule. In Clement v. Burns, 43 N. H. 609, the plaintiff, owning land adjoining the tide water of Cochecho river, had built a wharf above and below high-water mark, and the wharf had been taken for a highway by eminent domain. The defendant, exercising the right of navigation in public water, brought mud in boats up the river to the wharf. Exercising a highway right, he put the mud on the wharf, and removed it in a reasonable time to his farm; and, if these had been all the facts, he would have prevailed in the suit. On other facts, judgment was ordered for the plaintiff. Manure belonging to the plaintiff had been carried by rains and tides to the shore beyond the wharf, and mixed with the soil, and with some of the defendant's mud which had been casually dropped overboard in unloading his boats. This mixture the defendant carried away and converted to his own use, and for this act the plaintiff recovered damages. The state's ownership of the shore did not authorize the defendant to appropriate to his own use whatever property of other persons might be found there. If he had taken a boat belonging to the plaintiff, it would have been no defense that he found it on public land or public water. The mingling of the plaintiff's manure with the state's soil and the defendant's mud by natural causes and accident raised a question of title by accretion of realty or confusion of personalty (3 Kent, Com. 428; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 685, 686; 2 Kent, Com. 360-365) which the court did not consider. It was assumed that the plaintiff continued to be the owner of the manure, and that the defendant's appropriation of it was a tort. From this assumption it followed that the plaintiff was entitled to a remedy in some form of action. He was not the owner, and he had no possession, actual or constructive, of the ground on which the rains and tides had deposited the manure. The conclusion that he could maintain trespass quare clavum may have been reached by "overlooking nice technicalities," (page 620,) which there would have been no occasion to disregard if the land title and legal possession had been in him, and the defendant had been a trespasser when he brought his boats to the wharf. At the present time, when the plaintiff had a legal and just cause of action, and the sufficiency of the declaration is contested, the question of remedy is disposed of by amendment, and not by disregarding the distinctions between common-law forms of action. Cushing, Oh. J., in Carleton v. Cate, 56 N. H. 180, 186; Stebbins v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 59 N. H. 148; Peaslee v. Dudley, 63 N. H. 220; Winnipisogee Paper Co. v. Eaton, 64 N. H. 284; Tasker v. Lord, 64 N. H. 279; Morse v. Whitcher, 64 N. H. 591; Sleeper v. Kelley, 65 N. H. 206.

In Maloon v. White, 57 N. H. 152, the defendants hauled sand from the seashore to repair highways. The plaintiff alleged, but failed to prove, that the hauling would expose his land to be overflowed and washed away. In Clement v. Burns, if any substantial injury to the plaintiff's upland, or to his private right of using the shore, had been directly or indirectly caused by the defendant's removal of the public soil, the plaintiff would have had an appropriate and adequate remedy. Com. v. Tencksbury, 11 Met. 55, 58, 59; Doe v. Morrell, Smith, (N. H.) 255; 3 Kent, Com. 437; Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 618-620; Washb. Easem. 429-438. As the wharf had been taken by eminent domain, it was not necessary to try the question whether his construction and use of it was an exercise of his private right, as owner of the upland, to a reasonable, exclusive use of the public land below high-water mark. This right of reasonable use was correctly described in the decision as "an interest in the shore, . . . which interest he may vindicate by suit." The expression "subject only to the paramount right of navigation," if it means that the fee and legal possession of the shore were in the plaintiff, or that the public had no right but that of navigation, cannot be sustained.

In some respects there has been a marked difference between Massachusetts and New Hampshire law, but in both jurisdictions large ponds are withheld from private ownership for reasons that are distinctively American. "Every inhabitant that is an householder shall have free fishing and fowling in any great ponds, and bays, coves, and rivers so farre as the sea ebbes and flowes within the presincts of the towne where they dwell, unlesse the free men of the same towne or the generall court have otherwise appropriated them, provided that this shall not be extended to give leave to any man to come upon others proprieties without there leave." Mass. Body of Liberties, (enacted in 1641,) article 16, printed in 28 Mass. Hist. Coll. (8d Series,) 219, Mass. Colonial Laws 1660-1872, (ed. 1889, p. 87,) and Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 465. "The great purpose of the 16th Article of the Body of Liberties was to declare a great principle of public right, to abolish the forest laws, the game laws, and the laws designed to secure several and exclusive fisheries, and to make them all free." Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58, 68; West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158, 165. In this state, free fishing and free fowling in great ponds and tide waters have not needed the aid of a statute for the abolition of written or the declaration of unwritten law. So far as the Ordinance of 1641 introduced or confirmed these liberties, it was an enactment of New Hampshire common law. The limitation to householders within the town where they dwell is not admissible in this jurisdiction, and is not in force in Massachusetts. Lakeman v. Burnham, 7 Gray, 487; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 527. The recognition of the validity of appropriations of great ponds to private persons before 1641 (West Roxbury v. Stoddard, supra; Berry v. Raddin, 11 Allen, 577, 580; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 516, 525, 526, 528; Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 154 Mass. 805, 808, 18 L. R. A. 255,) is an exception not required here for any purpose of justice or convenience. The proviso excluded the construction which might be claimed to give public access to public waters across private property.

In 1647 the want of a definition of "great ponds" was supplied, and the 16th article of the Body of Liberties was amended by changing the proviso and adding new clauses: "Provided, that no town shall appropriate to any particular person or persons any great pond containing more than ten acres of land, and that no man shall come upon another's property without their leave, otherwise than as hereafter expressed. The which clearly to determine, it is declared that, in all creeks, coves, and other places about and upon salt water where the sea ebbes and flowes, the proprietor of the land adjoining shall have propriety to the low-water mark, where the sea doth not ebb above a hundred rods, and not more wheresoever it ebbes further. Provided that such proprietor shall not, by this liberty, have power to stop or hinder the passage of boats or other vessels in or through any sea, creeks, or coves to other men's houses or lands. And for great ponds, lying in common though within the bounds of some town, it shall be free for any man to fish and fowl there, and may pass and repass on foot through any man's propriety for that end, so they trespass not upon any man's corn or meadow. [1641-47.]" Mass. Colonial Laws 1660-72, (ed. 1889,) p. 170; Mass. Ancient 18 L. R. A.

Charter, chap. 63, p. 148; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58, 67, 68. Under this Law of 1641 and 1647 (printed since 1660, with the date "1641, 1647," and called in some decisions the "Ordinance of 1641," in others the "Ordinance of 1647,") "the state owns the great ponds as public property held in trust for public uses." Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548, 557, 1 L. R. A. 466. "Great ponds, not appropriated before the Colony Ordinance of 1647 to private persons, are public property, the right of reasonably using and enjoying which, for taking ice for use or sale, as well as for fishing and fowling, boating, skating, and other lawful purposes, is common to all." Hittinger v. Eames, 121 Mass. 539, 546; Gage v. Steinkrauss, 181 Mass. 222; Rowell v. Doyle, Id. 474; Potter v. Howe, 141 Mass. 357, People's Ice Co. v. Davenport, 149 Mass. 323. "By this ordinance it was intended to devote the great ponds to public use. . . . They were not thenceforth to be appropriated to the use of any particular person or persons, but were declared to be 'lying in common.'" West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158, 166. The retention of title in the government, in trust for public uses, placed great ponds and tide waters in the same common-law class of property. Drury v. Natick, 10 Allen, 169, 179; Paine v. Woods, 108 Mass. 160, 169; Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, supra.

It was formerly held that the Ordinance of 1647 "was annulled with the charter by the authority of which it was made," and that the rule established by it had derived from usage the force of common law in that colony, (Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 485, 493, 4 Am. Dec. 155;) but the correctness of this view is doubted, (Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58, 76; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 517.) "Whether the ordinance is a part of the statutory or of the common law in the territory of the Massachusetts Colony it is perhaps unnecessary to determine. It was never extended over Plymouth by an Act of the general court. It is, however, the law throughout the whole commonwealth." It "has been extended to Plymouth, to Nantucket, to the county of Dukes, and to Maine, and this has been done by usage and by judicial decision." Litchfield v. Scituate, 186 Mass. 39, 46. "It is in force throughout the whole territory of this state, including those parts which were formerly the colony of Plymouth, Nantucket, and Dukes county, and also in Maine, although none of these were under the jurisdiction of the colony of Massachusetts bay." Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, supra; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58, 75, 76, 79; Weston v. Sampson, 8 Cush. 847, 854, 54 Am. Dec. 764; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 523. "When the Ordinance of 1647 is said to be part of the common law of Plymouth colony, all that is meant is that . . . it has been extended to that territory by usage and by judicial decision." Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 154 Mass. 805, 808, 18 L. R. A. 255.

In view of the early extension of Massachusetts jurisdiction to the Piscataqua, the settlement of a large portion of our territory under Massachusetts grants, the number of settlers who came from Massachusetts to all parts of this province, and the extent of Massachusetts influence upon New Hampshire law, the Ordinance of 1647 could well be considered as common law by adoption here (as it is in other parts of New England) if it were in harmony with the usages and interests of the state. Belknap, Hist. N. H. chaps. 2, 17, 18; Smith, (N. H.) 448, 503; Brown v. Langdon, Smith, (N. H.) 178, 182, 183; Story, Const. § 81; and authorities before cited. It describes a "great pond" as one "containing more than ten acres of land." There may be no objection to this definition; and, if the provision relating to tide waters had become a part of our law, its acceptance would have tended to show that the definition of great ponds had not been rejected. While the ordinance maintains the public title of large ponds, it converts into private property, and gives away, a great amount of tide land. The main object of the gratuity "has always been understood to be to induce the erection of wharves for the benefit of commerce." Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 515. "The object . . . has often been declared to be the erection of wharves and similar structures, and the reclaiming of the flats." Henry v. Newburyport, 149 Mass. 582, 585, 5 L. R. A. 179. In this state, the transfer of the fee to the abutters has not been necessary to encourage improvements below high-water mark. Their common-law right of reasonable use has been sufficient for all the purposes for which the ordinance changed the common-law title. If a change of title had been needed, the premises conveyed by the ordinance would have been excessive in length and insufficient in width. Its operation was not limited to the short and comparatively few sections of the shore on which improvements had been or were likely to be made. Abutters would not be induced to build wharves at a few points in front of their land by giving other persons the rest of the shore of the sea and the Piscataqua. The gift of a wharf lot to the abutter who build a wharf upon it would have been enough for the benefit of commerce. If such a bounty had been necessary, the ordinance would have been defective in giving no title or right to use below low-water mark. Private ownership of so much of the tide land (not exceeding 100 rods in width) as is bare twice a day, and public ownership where vessels can come to a wharf at low tide, is not an adequate or useful adjustment of rights for commercial purposes. Where tide land ought to be improved and occupied by the abutter above and below low-water mark, he has a common-law right to improve and occupy it. When it is doubtful whether his proposed use and occupation of it would be reasonable, a decision of the question of reasonableness can be obtained in an appropriate action brought by him or the attorney-general.

In Lamprey v. Nudd, 20 N. H. 209, (decided in the county of Rockingham at the December term, 1847,) it was held that the provision of the Massachusetts ordinance relating to the shore of tide waters has not been adopted and is not in force in this state; and there is no ground on which that case can be overruled. The introduction of any other line than high-water mark as the marine boundary would overturn common-law rights that had been established here by a usage and traditional understanding of 200 years' duration before they were questioned in Lamprey v. Nudd; and the rejection of the whole ordinance, except the clause defining a "great pond" as one "containing more than ten acres of land," may leave little ground for the claim that this definition has become a part of our law. There would be a distinction between public and private ponds if the ordinance had not been passed, and the common-law classification can be determined and applied by common-law means and methods. Parties are entitled to judgments in which their legal rights are ascertained and established. How far the marine territory of a nation extends from high-water mark is a question which courts may be compelled to decide on other evidence than written law. Reg. v. Keyn, L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 68. The decision in State v. Gilmanton, 14 N. H. 467, that Sanbornton bay is a large pond and a public water was not based on the Massachusetts ordinance. However slight the argument in favor of any particular dimensions in determining whether a pond is public or private property, the law requiring a decision of the question authorizes the adoption of a necessary rule. A standard of size seems to be indispensable, and, if a more satisfactory measure is not found, ponds of more than 10 acres may properly be classed with Sanbornton bay.

The division of lakes and ponds into public and private classes of property is not a Federal question. So far as state courts have considered the subject, they seem to agree that such a division must be made, and that lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, Ontario, and Champlain are public waters. This modification of what has been supposed to be the English rule seems to be put on the ground that the six largest lakes flowing into the St. Lawrence are inland seas, navigable in fact, and used for an extensive commerce. Before determining whether a lake or pond is public or private property, the law does not wait to see how much it will be used for commerce. Its commercial use may depend on the future unknown population and business of the surrounding country. A great amount of transportation would probably be introduced on Sanbornton bay by the rise of a large city at each end of it. If natural capacity for navigation were the test, some degree of capacity would have to be selected. A pond is not a public water merely because small logs can be floated through it in May or June. But a sufficient reason has not been given for selecting Champlain as the measure, rather than Sanbornton bay, or some smaller basin. All bodies of fresh water can be connected with the sea by canals; and, if a natural channel for shipping to and from the sea were required in the class of public waters, the largest Amercian lakes would be private property. The abandonment of the arbitrary tidal test makes it necessary to choose another, and it may be impossible to find one that is not arbitrary. Nothing can be more arbitrary than six exceptions to the English rule. The authorities in other states tend strongly to limit the exceptions to a small number. Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. 102; Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 869, 377, 38 N. J. L. 223, 97 Am. Dec. 718; Lembeck v. Nye, 47 Ohio St. 336, 8 L. R. A. 578; Ridgway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248; Stoner v. Rice, 121 Ind. 51, 6 L. R. A. 387; Beckman v. Kreamer, 43 Ill. 447, 92 Am. Dec. 146; Lincoln v. Davis, 58 Mich. 375, 390, 51 Am. Rep. 116; Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48; contra, Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 509, 60 Am. Rep. 575. In this jurisdiction, there is a different classification. "For the purposes of this Act, all natural ponds and lakes containing more than twenty acres shall be deemed public waters." Laws 1887, chap. 86, § 3. The purposes of the Act are stated in section 1, which provides that "no actions shall be maintained against any person for crossing uncultivated land to reach any public water for the purpose of taking fish unless actual damage has been sustained;" and in section 2, which provides that "in all actions brought to recover damage for crossing land to reach any public water for the purpose of taking fish, the cost shall be limited to an amount not exceeding the damages recovered, if such damages do not exceed $13.38." Although section 1 is apparently invalid, and section 2 may be contested as a discrimination inconsistent with equal rights, the act is evidence of an understanding that a pond of twenty acres is public water. But it does not show that all smaller ponds are private property. It was not intended to be a conveyance of public title, or an abandonment of public rights. The Massachusetts Act of 1869, chap. 384, (Pub. Stat. Mass. chap. 91, §§ 10, 11,) "changes the law in regard to the size of great ponds, in which the public may have the right of fishing," and "gives to the riparian proprietors of any pond not more than twenty acres in extent, the exclusive control of the fisheries therein existing." As the law now stands, the public have no right of fishing in any pond not more than twenty acres in extent." Com. v. Tiffany, 119 Mass. 300, 303; Com. v. Vincent, 108 Mass. 441, 448; Com. v. Perley, 180 Mass. 469. The statutory size seems to be expressly changed only so far as a single public use is concerned. The New Hampshire Act of 1887 is much more limited. It relates merely to actions for crossing private land to reach public water for the purpose of taking fish. The bed of Long pond, containing in its natural condition about 160 acres, is the property of the state. The water's edge is the boundary of the lot which the defendants hired, and from which they went upon the pond to get ice. Before the township was granted, the public held not only the basin of the pond, but also the bed, banks, and valley of the brook that flows from the pond to the river. In that position of the title the public owner could divert the entire pond from its outlet without infringing private rights between the pond and the river. If the original title of the valley had remained unchanged, this suit could not be maintained. But the public owner elected to convert into private property the mill site which the plaintiffs now own, (situated on the brook, about 100 rods below the outlet of the pond,) and to grant it to individuals from whom the plaintiffs derive their title. The Massachusetts grant of the township, recognized and established as a valid conveyance, is as effective as if made by the government of this province. The grant of the bed of the brook to private proprietors, whose title has come to the plaintiffs, conveyed rights of air, light, heat, and water. No express mention of these rights was necessary. They passed as parcel of the estate. If the original owner had desired to retain an unlimited right to divert the pond and destroy the mill privilege, there should have been an express reservation. A right to the natural flow of the brook, not unreasonably diminished or polluted, was inherent in the land, and one of the rights of use and occupation of which the title was composed. It may have been more valuable than all the others. By an elementary rule of conveyancing, it passed from grantor to grantee, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary. The operation of the rule did not depend upon the question whether the water was a natural pond, large or small, before it entered the plaintiff's lot. The water right, having passed to them from the original public owner, is a part of their mill lot in the legal and essential sense in which a right to rains, winds, electricity, and the use of them on that lot, is a part of their realty. If the Legislature should authorize the governor to sell Long pond, his deed of it to the defendants would convey nothing to the plaintiffs, and would not convey to the defendants the right of unlimited use, which ceased to exist when the mill privilege was converted into private property by governmental grant. If the plaintiffs have been injured by an unreasonable use of the pond, or of any other lot of land or water, there is a legal remedy. Cary v. Daniels, 8 Met. 466, 476, 480, 41 Am. Dec. 532; Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Met. 55, 57; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 84-87; 8 Kent, Com. 439, 440; Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 43 N. H. 569, 578, 82 Am. Dec. 179; Holden v. Lake Co. 53 N. H. 552; Thompson v. Androscoggin River Imp. Co. 54 N. H. 545, 549-554; Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Olcott Falls Co. 65 N. H. 290, 391, 392, 13 L. R. A. 826. In Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548, 557, 558, 1 L. R. A. 466, it was held by a majority of the court that the Ordinance of 1641-47 introduced a peculiar rule, under which, by an implied reservation in grants of land on streams flowing from great ponds, the public owner retained a right to divert the ponds. This change of the common law has not been adopted in this state.

In exercising the public right of cutting and gathering ice the defendants may have advantages as tenants of a littoral proprietor. Stages and platforms, erected by them in the pond in front of their hired lot, and used in filling their ice houses, may be claimed to be within their lessors' right of reasonable use, of which wharfing out is an example. Such appliances may not harm the plaintiffs' mill privilege, but the abutters' right to take ice is not exclusive. The public may have access to the pond over a highway laid out under the general highway law, or under chapter 97, Laws 1887, entitled "An Act Providing for Highways to Public Waters." The quantity of water the defendants can rightfully divert from the brook in a solid or liquid form may be restricted by other persons exercising the public right at the same time, or earlier in the same season. The public character of the right does not multiply indefinitely what could be legally taken if only one person exercised the right. The quantity that can be taken by all is limited by the reasonable use which is the extent of the water right attached to the soil and vested in the owner of the basin through which the water flows. But for reasons suggested in Cummings v. Barrett, 10 Cush. 186, 189, 190, the removal of large quantities of ice from ponds may not always be injurious to mills on outflowing streams. The agreed facts do not show that the defendants' removal of ice was an unreasonable use of the pond, or that the plaintiffs suffered damage. As the parties do not agree on these points, the case must stand for trial. The competency of evidence on the question of reasonable use is to be considered when evidence is offered.

Case discharged.

Carpenter and Bingham, JJ., did not sit. The others concurred.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (3d Div.).

Mary M. GOUVERNEUR et al., Repts.,
v.
NATIONAL ICE CO. of New York, Appt.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. The title to land under the waters of small inland lakes and ponds is presumed to belong to the proprietors of the adjoining up-lands.

2. The common-law rule governing the construction and extent of grants of land bordering and bounded on non-navigable waters is applicable alike to conveyances bounding lands on fresh-water rivers and small non-navigable lakes or ponds.

3. Describing one boundary of a conveyance of land as along a certain pond will carry title to the center of the pond unless a contrary intention appears.

NOTE.—Ownership of the bed of lakes and ponds.

The recognized doctrine in this country is that the bed of the great navigable lakes belongs to the public, and, so far as it is included within the boundary of any state, is owned by that state.

Thus it is said in Smith v. Rochester, 32 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 363, to be generally conceded that the doctrine of riparian ownership of the bed of waters does not apply "to the vast fresh-water lakes or inland seas of this country."

And in Sloan v. Biemiller, 34 Ohio St. 492, it is decided that riparian owners do not own the soil or control the fisheries to the center of Lake Erie or Sandusky bay.

So in Lincoln v. Davis, 58 Mich. 375, 51 Am. Rep. 116, it is decided that Thunder bay, which is a portion of Lake Huron, is public water; although the question in that case was as to fisheries and not directly as to the ownership of the bed of the lake.

In Seaman v. Smith, 24 Ill. 531, the line of land bounded on Lake Michigan is held to be that at which the water usually stands when undisturbed.

So Lake Pontchartrain is declared, in Zeller v. Southern Yacht Club, 34 La. Ann. 838, to be an arm of the sea, and the alluvion or batture that is upon its shores not to be susceptible of private ownership.

Lake Champlain, which covers nearly 1,000 square miles and is navigable for nearly 150 miles, is held both by New York and Vermont courts to be public and not subject to riparian ownership. Champlain & St. L. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb. 424; Austin v. Rutland R. Co. 45 Vt. 215; Jakeway v. Barrett, 33 Vt. 516; Fletcher v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257.

And therefore a riparian owner cannot maintain ejectment for land made by a stranger by filling out from the shore. Austin v. Rutland R. Co. supra.

In State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461, Lake Winnipissee is held to be public although the decision is made to turn in that case upon the question whether a certain portion of the outlet was a stream or lake, and no distinction as to the size or navigability of the lake seems to be made important.

Small lakes and ponds.

The whole subject of the ownership of the bed of small lakes is a very difficult one. Early decisions tended to support the doctrine that the bed of any lake, however small, did not belong to the riparian owners, and the courts are at present somewhat divided on this question, while the whole number of decisions directly upon the subject is small.

The Massachusetts Ordinance of 1647 made every lake of more than 10 acres' extent public. West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158. And the Massachusetts and Maine decisions therefore necessarily denied that riparian ownership of such lakes extended to the center.

Thus in Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261, although the question was as to the flowing of land and not as to title below low-water mark, it was assumed that such title was in the public and the question was whether parol evidence was admissible to show the intention as to the boundary of a large natural pond several miles in circumference, where its surface had been raised by a dam above the conveyance in question.

So in Wood v. Kelley, 30 Me. 47, the question was as to the boundary of land on a pond which had been raised by a dam, and low-water mark of the pond as raised was held to be the boundary.

In Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 29 Am. Dec. 501, it is decided that the boundary of land on a natural pond goes only to the margin.

The Maine decisions are like those of Massachusetts governed by the Ordinance of 1647 which was operative in Maine, as that state was originally a part of Massachusetts.

4. The designation of the courses and distances of the shore line in a deed describing one boundary of the land conveyed as "along" a certain pond, will not prevent the passing by the grant of title to the center of the pond.

(October 1, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, reversing a judgment of a Special Term for Putnam County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain land covered by water. Reversed.

Statement by Bradley, J.:

The action is ejectment, and was brought in January, 1888, to recover the possession of certain premises consisting of water and land under water of a natural pond or lake known as "Hinckley pond" or "Croton lake," situated in the town of Patterson, county of Putnam, and is about 2,500 feet in length, and 800 feet in width, in the broadest place, and covers 45 acres. Two streams, constituting its surface inlets, enter in at the southerly end. The outlet at the north end is known as "Muddy brook." The pond is within a tract of land granted June 17, 1697, to Adolph Phillipse by William III., king of England, by letters-patent, which embraced the present Putnam county. The plaintiffs, by descent and as successors in interest of the patentee, who died intestate, seised of the premises, in 1749, have title to them, unless it has in the mean time been alienated or otherwise defeated. The plaintiffs' ancestors, by five deeds, of dates January 18, 1796, February 6, 1818, March 9, 1818, May 1, 1828, and September 30, 1845, conveyed all the lands surrounding and adjacent to the pond to grantees therein mentioned. The several deeds, respectively, described parcels of lands, and mentioned the quantities embraced within the boundaries; and the following are the only portions of the descriptions given by the said conveyances, in the order of their dates, essential to the questions here for consideration. In the first: "Thence north, sixteen degrees west, forty-three chains and seventy-nine links, to Muddy brook, and down the same as it runs until it bears due west," etc. This first-mentioned course intersected the pond some distance southerly from what now appears to be the outlet. In the second: "Thence south, eighty-one degrees east, five chains, . . . to Hinckley pond, near a large rock; thence northerly, along said pond, to the outlet thereof; that is, to Muddy brook." In the third: "Thence running north, nineteen degrees west, fourteen chains forty links, . . . to a birch sapling marked, on the east side of Hinckley pond; thence south, thirteen degrees west, three chains twenty-six links, along said pond; thence south, seven degrees fifteen minutes west, seven chains sixty links, along do.; thence south, thirty minutes west, two chains, along do.; thence south, five degrees

For the doctrine of the New Hampshire court, see State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461.

The decisions in other states which deny private ownership of the bed of small lakes have usually cited the Massachusetts and Maine decisions and have not always recognized the fact that these were based on the ordinance.

In Wisconsin the court lays down the doctrine generally that land bounded on a natural lake or pond goes only to the shore. Diedrich v. Northwestern U. R. Co. 48 Wis. 248; Boorman v. Sunnucks, 48 Wis. 253; Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 48 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386.

This doctrine is applied to Lake Monona which is 9 miles in circumference and navigable. Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. supra.

Also to a pond 4 or 5 feet deep covering about 160 acres which is meandered by the government survey. As to this it is held that no fee to the soil passes with the adjoining land. Boorman v. Sunnucks, supra.

In Illinois it was decided in Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 509, that a natural body of water five or six miles long, and in some places one mile wide, which was fed by springs, was a lake and not a stream, and that riparian ownership did not extend to the center of it. This case nevertheless is said in Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 423, not to establish in Illinois the doctrine that the bed of small lakes does not belong to riparian owners as there was another ground on which the decision was also based. Therefore the United States Supreme Court refused to adopt the doctrine laid down in that Illinois case in a case arising in that state although the question is one on which Federal courts must follow the state decisions as part of the local law.

In Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 199, it is held that the proprietorship of surrounding lands will not in all 18 L. R. A.

cases give ownership to the bed of non-navigable lakes and ponds although this might be so in the case of a small lake; but that each case depends largely on its own facts. In that case it was held that riparian owners had no title of a shallow freshwater pond covering about 14,000 acres, and having no outlet.

But in Ridgway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248, it was held that the owner of land on a non-navigable lake owns the bed to the middle of the lake. This was a case of ownership under a grant of a fractional subdivision of a section bounded on a small lake and the ownership was held to extend to the middle of the lake which was in the same quarter section.

The subsequent case of Edwards v. Ogle, 76 Ind. 302, explained this case and denied that the decision would apply to extend a government grant of a fractional section into another section or subdivision in order to reach the middle of the lake; but that the bed of the lake would be included in the grant only within the lines of the section or subdivision within which the land lay.

In Stoner v. Rice, 6 L. R. A. 337, 121 Ind. 51, the same doctrine is applied so as to give the purchaser from the government of lands bordering on a non-navigable inland lake all the land within the full subdivision of which his lot forms a portion, including that part which is beyond the meander line of the lake and covered by water. The Indiana cases then clearly establish for that state the doctrine that as to a meandered lake a purchaser from the government will not take to the centre of the lake unless that is within the subdivision of which his land forms a part, but that the bed of such lakes is the subject of private ownership.

This seems to leave undetermined the question which might arise in case of lakes of considerable size as to the ownership of subdivisions of land east, two chains, along said pond; thence south, fourteen degrees fifteen minutes east, two chains ninety-five links, along do., to a bunch of basswood sprouts marked, at Abiol Crosby's corner." Another description in the same deed: "Thence nine degrees thirty minutes east, ten chains eighty-eight links, along Abiol Crosby, to a bunch of basswood sprouts marked; then due west one chain, along Hinckley pond; thence south, sixty-five degrees west, four chains, along do.; thence south, thirty-seven degrees west, five chains eighty-five links, along do.; thence north, seventy-one degrees thirty minutes west, six chains eighty-eight links, along do., to the brook leading in said pond." In the fourth: "Beginning near the south side of a large rock, on the west side of Hinckley pond; . . . thence running south, sixteen degrees west, five chains sixteen links, along said pond." In the fifth: Beginning at a stake in a swamp south of Hinckley pond; thence several courses and distances; then "north, sixteen degrees east, six chains forty-eight links, to a maple marked, by said pond; then north, sixty degrees west, four chains ninety links, along said pond, to the beginning." About twelve hundred feet in length of the northerly portion of the premises in question lies along the two courses of the lines so given in the first two deeds, and the balance, about thirteen hundred feet in length, of the southerly portion of them is between the lines so described as along it, in the last three deeds. Through those five deeds, and sundry mesne conveyances, the defendant took title to upland adjacent to and surrounding the whole of the pond, except a portion at the northeasterly corner, formerly owned by one William Merritt, and such rights as the New York & Harlem Railroad Company acquired to a strip along its west shore. In 1850 and 1851 William Merritt, who then had title to a portion of the upland, conveyed to the predecessors of the defendant all his interest in the premises in question. And in 1850 or 1851 the defendant's predecessors filled in a portion of the pond, built an ice house thereon, and provided some other appliances for gathering ice. After the construction of the New York & Harlem Railroad, and in the winter of 1850 and 1851, the defendant's predecessors commenced gathering ice there, and shipping it to market on the railroad. This was done every year thereafter, unless the winter of 1853-54 may be excepted. And the defendant acquired its interest there in 1867, then made preparations for the business of gathering ice from the pond, and storing it for shipment and market, and erected buildings and provided means and facilities for such business, which it has since then carried on quite extensively there. The trial court found that the plaintiffs had no title to and were not entitled to the possession of the premises, and refused to find that by the lines, as defined in the deeds of the parcels of land around and adjacent to the lake, excluded the premises in question from the conveyances, and directed judgment for the defendant.

entirely covered by the water of the lake where the border is included in grants to individuals.

In Michigan the doctrine is thoroughly established that the title of riparian owners extends to the middle line of a non-navigable lake. (Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co. 62 Mich. 623; Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48), and that the ownership of a fractional subdivision bounded on an inland lake will extend to the soil covered by water within that subdivision.

So in Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 124, it was held that the bed of Muskegon lake belongs to riparian owners, at least as far out as it is susceptible of beneficial private use. It was not necessary in that case to decide whether or not private ownership extended to the center of the lake although the court inclined to the doctrine which would thus extend it.

In New Jersey it was held that a lake the private ownership of which had been expressly recognized by the state and which was 8 miles long by 1 mile in width and deep enough for large vessels but had no navigable outlet did not belong to the state but to private owners. Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 369.

But in a recent decision by a vice-chancellor it was held that a devise of land which in plain language made the edge or margin of a small lake the boundary did not include any part of the bed of the lake. The court said this would be true by construction of law as well as by the terms of the devise. But this is not the doctrine of most recent cases.

The recent decision by the United States Supreme Court in Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 423, powerfully re-enforces most of the other modern decisions which affirm the private ownership of the bed of small lakes and ponds. The court declares that by common law fresh-water lakes, and ponds, except the great navigable lakes, belong to the owners of the soil adjacent, who own usque ad flum aqua. The court then holds that the common law is the law of Illinois in this respect and denies that the case of Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 509, which is noticed above, establishes a different doctrine in that state. The lake in question here was two or three miles in extent but not navigable and had two outlets into Lake Michigan which was about two miles distant.

The main case above establishes this doctrine also in New York, and the opinion of the court very fully reviews prior New York decisions on the subject. It substantially overrules the case of Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 377, which decides that a boundary of land upon a fresh-water pond did not go below low-water mark.

Wheeler v. Spinola was regarded as authority in Sweet v. Syracuse, 60 Hun. 23, but this latter case was reversed on other grounds in 129 N. Y. 316, without touching upon this question.

Hemlock lake, which was in Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 393, regarded as a subject of private ownership, is about 7 miles long by 1/4 mile in width.

In Crooked Lake Nav. Co. v. Keuka Nav. Co., 4 N. Y. S. R. 390, the bed of the outlet of a small fresh-water lake at a point where the navigability terminated, was held to be the property of riparian owners.

Cazenovia lake, the bed of which was held in Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 38 Barb. 102, to belong to private owners, was about five miles long by 1/4 of a mile wide.

In Ohio, also, a recent decision establishes the doctrine that a non-navigable inland lake is the subject of private ownership. Lembeck v. Nye, 8 L. R. A. 573, 47 Ohio St. 323.

That meander lines do not cut off land between

Messrs. Calvin Frost and N. A. McBride, for appellant:

Courses running as in the five deeds from plaintiff's ancestors carry title to the center of watercourse.

Angell, Watercourses, § 9.

If the owner of land bordering on an inland unnavigable watercourse owns the soil of the bed of the watercourse and conveys the upland giving the watercourse as a boundary, the grant carries to the middle of the watercourse, unless the grantor expressly excludes the land under water by other expressions in the deed.

Where lines run to monuments on the bank of a watercourse, and then by, with, along, down or up the same, the deed carries to center.

Child v. Starr, 4 Hill, 369; Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. 518, 16 Am. Dec. 447; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Knight, 23 N. Y. 498; Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 85 Am. Dec. 687.

Running the lines to monuments on the shore, and then by courses and distances along "the pond," did not restrict the title to the shore.

Childs v. Starr, supra; Kings County F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 87 N. Y. 291, 41 Am. Rep. 361; Rice v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 520, 22 Am. Dec. 472; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Knight, supra.

When lands are bounded in deeds of conveyance by a lake the title of grantees extends usque ad medium flum.

Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 86 Barb. 112; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. 99, 11 Am. Dec. 249; Morgan v. King, 35 N. Y. 457, 91 Am. Dec. 58; Okenango Bridge v. Paige, 83 N. Y. 178, 38 Am. Rep. 407; Smith v. Rochester, 99 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 398; Silsby Mfg. Co. v. State, 104 N. Y. 562; Crooked Lake Nav. Co. v. Keuka Nav. Co. 4 N. Y. S. R. 890.

The plaintiff's ancestors by their said five deeds conveyed the bed of the pond by the conveyance of the upland.

Ridgway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248; Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18; Cobb v. Davenport, 82 N. J. L. 869; Brazon v. Bressler, 64 Ill. 492; Lembeck v. Nye, 8 L. R. A. 578, 47 Ohio St. 336; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 871, 35 L. ed. 423.

Messrs. Eugene Frayer and E. A. Brewster, for respondent:

Defendant has no title by grant of the premises in question.

The premises here in question are a pond or lake, as distinguished from a stream or river.

The deeds of plaintiff's predecessors did not pass title to the premises in question—the water and lands under water of the pond.

The common law and civil law alike agree in making a radical distinction in this particular between lakes or ponds and rivers or streams.

Les Cinqquante Livres du Digeste, lib. 41, title I, 1, 12; Angell, Watercourses, 7th ed. 37, § 41; Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 377; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261; Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 29 Am. Dec. 501; Indiana v. Milk, 11 Fed. Rep. 889; Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 511.

An entirely different rule from that applicable to streams applies when land is conveyed, bounded along or upon a natural lake or pond. In such case the grant extends only to the water's edge.

Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, Wheeler v. Spinola, Waterman v. Johnson, and Bradley v. Rice, supra; State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461; Wood v. Kelley, 30 Me. 47; Fletcher v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257; Mariner v. Schulte, 13 Wis. 692; West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158; Mill River Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 84 Conn. 462; Bloomfield v. Johnston, 8 Ir. C. L. Rep. 68; Burke v. Niles, 2 Hannay (N. B.) 166; such lines and the water of a meandered lake is established by decisions beyond controversy. Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 871, 35 L. ed. 423; Forsyth v. Smale, 7 Biss. 201; Clute v. Fisher, 65 Miss. 46; Pere Marquette Boom Co. v. Adams, 44 Mich. 408; Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 43 Wis. 238; Stoner v. Rice, 6 L. R. A. 397, 121 Ind. 51.

In England it seems to be established by Bristow v. Cormican, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 641, that a nontidal lake is the subject of private ownership. The lake here in question was about 15 miles in length by 10 in width.

The law of Scotland also following the civil law gives the ownership of small lakes to riparian owners. Mackenzie v. Bankes, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1324.

Derelict and accretions.

In Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 23, it is held that derelict land left by the ebbing waters of a meandered lake belonged to the riparian owners.

So in Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 43 Wis. 233, accretions on a meandered lake are held to be property of the riparian owners, although, as will be seen above, the decisions in that state hold that riparian ownership extends only to the waters.

In Hodges v. Williams, 95 N. C. 331, 59 Am. Rep. 242, it was held that no rights by reliction could be acquired by a riparian owner; but the ground of decision was that the bed of the waters was owned by another person under a prior grant. 18 L. R. A.

The doctrine of private ownership is thus clearly recognized in this case.

Artificial ponds.

In a multitude of cases, which there is no attempt to collect here, the private ownership of artificial ponds has been assumed.

In Mansur v. Blake, 62 Me. 38, the boundary of an artificial pond made by a dam is held to be the same as that on a stream, i. e. at the center of the pond.

So in Mill River Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 84 Conn. 462, land bounded by an artificial mill-pond is held to extend to the center unless clearly limited to the margin, and this doctrine was applied to a pond 200 years old.

Likewise in Finley v. Hershey, 41 Iowa, 389, a dam across a stream making an artificial pond was held not to defeat the riparian owner's right to the use and improvement of the water.

A careful review of all the decisions shows that the tendency of leading modern cases is very emphatically toward the doctrine of private ownership in the bed of small lakes. What lakes are to be considered large enough to be public is a question somewhat unsettled and one which it seems must be decided according to the facts of each particular case, and without any very definite rule yet established for its determination.

For rivers and lakes as state boundaries, see Buck v. Ellenbolt (Iowa) 15 L. R. A. 187. B. A. R.

Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 233; Diedrich v. Northwestern U. R. Co. 42 Wis. 248; Kanouse v. Stockhouser, 43 N. J. Eq. 42; Sweet v. Syracuse, 60 Hun, 28.

The contrary rule would be in clear violation of the English and American rule that land cannot pass as appurtenant to land.

Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. 447; Harris v. Elliott, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 25, 9 L. ed. 383.

Courses and distances between known monuments exclude all lands not included in the description.

Jackson v. Hathaway, supra. See also Olap v. McNeil, 4 Mass. 689; Sibley v. Holden, 10 Pick. 249, 20 Am. Dec. 521; Taylor v. Hammond, 11 Pick. 193; Harris v. Elliot, supra; Thomas v. Hatch, 38 Sumn. 170; Starr v. Child, 20 Wend. 149; Phillips v. Bowers, 7 Gray, 21; Smith v. Slocomb, 9 Gray, 36, 69 Am. Dec. 274; Halsey v. McCormick, 13 N. Y. 296; Mott v. Mott, 68 N. Y. 246; Higginbotham v. Stoddard, 73 N. Y. 94; Storey v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Dec. 146; Tag v. Keteltas, 16 Jones & S. 241; Lee v. Lee, 27 Hun, 1; King's County F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 87 N. Y. 287, 41 Am. Rep. 861; Carter v. White, 101 N. C. 80; Falker v. West Shore & B. R. Co. 17 Abb. N. C. 279; People v. Colgate, 67 N. Y. 512; Lembeck v. Nye, 8 L. R. A. 578, 47 Ohio St. 336; Kanouse v. Stockhouser, supra; Lankin v. Terwilliger (Or.) March 4, 1892.

If plaintiffs had sold simultaneously all their lands about the lake, without reservation of right of way the law would, nevertheless, have still reserved to them such a right.

Washb. Easem. 4th ed. pp. 164, 260; Clark v. Cogge, Cro. Jac. 170; Brigham v. Smith, 4 Gray, 297, 64 Am. Dec. 76; Seymour v. Lewis, 13 N. J. Eq. 439, 78 Am. Dec. 108; Dales v. Ceas, 5 N. Y. Week. Dig. 400; Shoemaker v. Shoemaker, 11 Abb. N. C. 80.

Bradley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant alleges several defenses, and the one founded upon the denial of the plaintiffs' title is that their ancestors conveyed the premises in question by deeds to certain grantees many years before this action was commenced. If this proposition of fact is sustained, the other alleged defenses will require no consideration.

The premises which are the subject of controversy consist of a body of water formerly known as "Hinckley pond," and later as "Croton lake," and land under the water, situated in the town of Patterson, county of Putnam. This is a natural pond or lake, about 151 rods in length, and in the broadest place about 48 rods in width, and covers about 45 acres. It has two inlets at the southerly end, and an outlet known as "Muddy brook" at the north end; and the court found that there was a slight and very sluggish current running through the pond from south to north. The plaintiffs do not claim title to any of the land adjacent to the lake, as that was all conveyed by their ancestors by five deeds made in the years 1796, 1813, 1828, and 1845. Natural ponds and small lakes are private property. They pass by grant of land in which they are included. They are also presumed, if nothing appears to the contrary, to belong to the riparian owners. And there would seem to be no substantial reason for the application of a different rule in the legal construction of grants of land bounded on them than is applied to conveyances bounding premises on fresh-water streams. Our attention has been called to no case in this state where the question has arisen, and essentially, been the subject of determination. In Canal Comrs. v. People, 5 Wend. 447, and in Canal Appraisers v. People, 17 Wend. 597, the chancellor said: "The principle itself does not appear sufficiently broad to embrace our large fresh-water lakes or inland seas, which are wholly unprovided for by the common law of England;" and that a different rule must probably prevail as to them, "and also as to those lakes and streams which form the natural boundaries between us and a foreign nation." A like remark was made in Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 393, by Judge Ruger, who added: "We have arrived at the conclusion that all rights of property to the soil under the waters of Hemlock lake were acquired by and belong to its riparian owners." Hemlock lake is about seven miles long, and a half mile in width. And the fact that the title to the land in western New York, within which is Hemlock lake, was not derived from this state, was not deemed and is not important upon the question of its proprietorship, because it came within the class of small lakes the bed of which is the subject of private ownership. In Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. 102, it was held that land conveyed by deed bounding it on Cazenovia lake, which was five miles long and three fourths of a mile in width, extended to its center. But the conclusion reached in that case may have been supported upon another ground, which was there considered. In Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 877, the question was considered in its application to a pond the size of which does not appear; and it was there said that "a boundary upon it does not carry title to its center, but only to low-water mark. Such is the rule as to boundaries upon natural ponds and lakes;" and, in support of the proposition, are there cited Canal Comrs. v. People, 5 Wend. 423; Champlain & St. L. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb. 484; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261; Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 29 Am. Dec. 501.

In the Commissioners' Case the relator claimed certain rights in the Mohawk river, which he alleged were impaired by the plaintiffs in error; and the Railroad Company Case had relation to alleged rights in Lake Champlain, which is a large navigable lake, about 180 miles in length, and varying from about fifteen miles to less in width. This is a large navigable lake, and the Mohawk has been held to be a public river. Those two cases seem to have no necessary application to the present one. Reference further on is made to the other two cited cases.

The controversy in Wheeler v. Spinola had relation only to a strip of land between high and low water mark on the south side of Flax pond, upon which strip the defendant was charged with committing trespass in cutting thatch; and as the title under which the defendant claimed was by deed bounding the land upon the pond, it was held to extend to low-water mark. This covered the locus in quo, and was as far as the court was called upon to go for the purposes of the defense. While the views of the learned judge upon whose opinion that case was decided are entitled to much weight, the question now under consideration was not there necessarily considered or determined; and, so far as we are advised, it remains in this state an open one for consideration. There is a conflict of authority upon the subject by adjudication in some of the other states; and, in holding that by conveyances bounding lands on natural ponds the grantees take title only to low-water mark, Massachusetts seems to have taken the lead. Waterman v. Johnson, 18 Pick. 261. That case was decided in 1833. There was a reason for such rule in that state, in the fact that by a Colonial Law or Ordinance adopted in 1641, and amended in 1647, great ponds, which were defined as those containing more than ten acres, were declared public property, and, after this ordinance was so amended in 1647, such ponds have not been subject to private ownership. West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158; Hittinger v. Eames, 121 Mass. 539. And after referring to Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 86 Barb. 102, and to what was there held in relation to the proprietorship of Cazenovia lake, Mr. Justice Hoar in the West Roxbury Case added that the state of New York had no statute similar in its provisions to the Massachusetts ordinance before mentioned. In Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 29 Am. Dec. 501, (decided in 1836,) the question was not discussed, but the court said that no case had been cited or found where the rule of construction applicable to boundaries on streams had been extended to a pond or lake, and cited Waterman v. Johnson to the contrary. It is unnecessary to refer to the relation to the colony and state of Massachusetts of the territory constituting the state of Maine, up to the time of its admission as a state into the Union, as such previous relation may be entitled to no consideration from the time it became a state. In State v. Gilmanton, 9 N. H. 461, the question was whether the town of Gilmanton was chargeable with repairs of a bridge over what may be termed the outlet of Winnipisioegus lake, and that was said to be dependent on the fact whether the place crossed by the bridge was a river or bay. It was the boundary of the town; and it was accordingly held that, if a river, the line of the town would go to the center, and only to the water's edge, if a bay. This question of fact was reserved for trial. The cases cited in support of the proposition were Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. 518, 18 Am. Dec. 447, and Canal Comrs. v. People, 5 Wend. 423. And the court there added that such seems to have been the legislative construction in that state of grants bounding land on lakes and ponds, as appears from the annexation of islands to the towns adjacent, etc.

In Kanouse v. Stockbower, 48 N. J. Eq. 42, it was held that the line bounding the land on the pond or lake was in terms confined to the edge of it, and for that reason, as well as in construction of law, the land devised embraced none under the water, nor any beyond low-water mark. The proposition that the rule applicable to boundaries on fresh-water streams does not apply to lakes or ponds was held in Boorman v. Sunnucks, 42 Wis. 233, and Diedrich v. North Western U. R. Co., 42 Wis. 248, 24 Am. Rep. 899. And the same in Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 509. In Fletcher v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257, there was really no question that the boundary of the land on Lake Champlain was other than at low-water mark. And the court, referring to the rule relating to boundaries of land on a fresh-water stream, added that a different rule prevails where land conveyed is bounded on large natural ponds or lakes, and cites the Waterman and Canal Commissioners Cases. The determination of some of the cases above cited is founded upon the proposition that the riparian owners do not have title to lakes and ponds. And in Paine v. Woods, 108 Mass. 169, Mr. Justice Gray said that "the question whether the title in the land under a great fresh-water pond or lake is in the proprietors of the lands adjoining, or in the crown, does not seem to have been ever judicially determined in England;" and cites Marshall v. Ulswater S. Nav. Co., 3 Best & S. 732, where the question whether the soil of lakes prima facie belongs to the riparian owners on either side ad filum aquæ, or whether it belongs prima facie to the king, was raised and undetermined. But later it was held that the right to the soil of nontidal lakes was not necessarily in the crown. Bristol v. Cormican, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 641, 24 Moak, Eng. Rep. 431. Whatever may be the doctrine applicable to small inland lakes and ponds elsewhere, the presumption in this state is that the land under their waters belongs to the proprietors of the adjoining lands. Smith v. Rochester, 93 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 398. Such is the common-law rule in the states where the grantees of land so situated and described by boundary, in grants on or along such waters, take to the center. Rice v. Buddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48; Railway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248; Lembeck v. Nye, 47 Ohio St. 326, 8 L. R. A. 578. And in Ridgway v. Ludlow it was held that a prescriptive right acquired by adverse possession to land adjacent to such a lake extended to the middle of it. In Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428, the subject had very thorough consideration, was elaborately discussed, and the conclusion there reached and adopted by a majority of the court was that, by the common law, the grantee of lands bounded upon an inland non-navigable lake or pond takes title to its center. The lake there in question is in the state of Illinois, and is two or three miles in length. And the court reviewed the case of Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, supra, which was criticised, held not to have correctly declared the common law applicable to that state, and was disregarded as authority on the subject. This is in harmony with the rule in our state that the title to the soil under such waters is in the riparian owners and, analogously to that relating to the conveyance and proprietorship of lands bounded on fresh-water streams, it would seem, for the same reason, to be alike applicable to such lakes and ponds. The reason for the distinction in the cases where it has been recognized has not been the subject of much discussion by the courts. But a reason given by Judge Gresham in Indiana v. Milk, 11 Fed. Rep. 889, had relation to the inconvenience or difficulty in locating in the lakes the lines of the several proprietors of the uplands. He was dealing with a lake covering 14,000 acres. But he added that "a person might by purchasing the lands surrounding a lake, in view of the size and other circumstances, be held to own the bed. Each case depends largely on its own facts."

While a lake may be of such form as to render the designation in it of the lines of the several riparian owners in certain cases somewhat difficult, that fact, in its relation to the practical effect of the rule, is not an objection to its general application. No case will probably arise in which their respective rights in that respect may not be ascertained and defined in reference to the location and extent of the boundaries of their lands on or along the lake. Bends or bays in rivers may to some extent present like difficulties. The value, such as they have, of small non-navigable lakes and ponds, as a general rule, is mainly in their relation to the adjacent lands. There may, however, be exceptional cases. The pond in question has, since the conveyance of the surrounding lands, become useful in its production of ice, by reason of railroad facilities for transportation of it to market. But this fact, and the extent of the business and of the preparations made there by the defendant to carry it on, have no bearing upon the question we are now considering. The inquiry has relation to the title in the soil under the water of the pond or lake. The views already given lead to the conclusion that the common law, relating to the construction and extent of grants of land bordering and bounded on such waters, is applicable alike to conveyances bounding lands on fresh-water rivers and small non-navigable lakes or ponds. Such is the character of the one in question, and whether its bed was embraced in or excluded from the grants made by the deeds before mentioned is dependent upon their construction. The boundaries are described as along the pond, and, unless in some manner qualified or restricted, they, by legal construction, had the effect to embrace its bed within their grants. This, in such case, is the presumed intent, unless the contrary appears. Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 85 Am. Dec. 637; Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. 518, 16 Am. Dec. 447; Mott v. Mott, 68 N. Y. 247.

It is, however, urged that, as in the last three of those deeds the lines along the pond are described by courses and distances, the intent thus appears to restrict the grants to those lines, and that such is the legal effect. It may be observed that the outer boundary of the waters of the pond are represented by courses and distances, as appears by the deeds; and, since they are described as along the pond, was the boundary in legal effect necessarily so restricted by that method of description as to exclude the bed from the grants? A boundary line, described as "along the shore" of a fresh-water stream, does not extend the grant to its center, (Child v. Starr, 4 Hill, 369;) and a like construction is applicable to a boundary by the bank of such a stream, (Starr v. Child, 5 Denio, 599; Halsey v. McCormick, 18 N. Y. 296.) In those cases the prescribed limitation of the boundary lines to the shore and bank did not permit the extension of the grant by construction to the thread of the streams. And the same may be said of Peoples v. Jones, 112 N. Y. 597. Our attention has been called to cases relating to conveyances of lands adjacent to highways, where it was held that a line described as running along a highway from and to monuments located on one side of it did not vest in the grantee title to its center, but by the terms of the description the roadbed was excluded. Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. 447; Kings County F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 87 N. Y. 287, 41 Am. Rep. 861; Smith v. Slocumb, 9 Gray, 86. While there is, in legal effect, analogy between the boundary of grants on highways and streams, there is this distinction: that it is not practicable to locate monuments in the channels of the latter; and it is usual to refer, in the description of boundary, to their location adjacent to the water, to mark the place of intersection with the stream. In Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 85 Am. Dec. 637, among the courses in the description of the premises, were those to a hemlock stake "standing on the east bank of the river, from thence down the river, as it winds and turns, 24 chains and 94 links, to a hard maple tree," etc. This maple tree, as appears by the opinion of the court, was described as standing on or near to the east bank; and, in holding that the grantee took title to the center of the river, the court said: "It is never thought that monuments mentioned in such a deed, as occupying the bank of the river, are meant by the parties to stand on the precise water line, they are used to fix the termini of the line which is described as following the sinuosities of the stream. . . . Where the grant is so framed as to touch the water of the river, and the parties do not expressly except the river if it be above tide, one half of the bed of the stream is included by construction of law. If the parties mean to exclude it, they should do so by express exception."

In Child v. Starr, 4 Hill, 375, the chancellor remarked that "running to a monument standing on the bank, and from thence by the river or along the river, etc., does not restrict the grant to the bank of the stream; for the monuments in such cases are only referred to as giving the direction of the lines to the river, and not as restricting the boundary on the river." In Seneca Nation of Indians v. Knight, 28 N. Y. 498, the boundary of the land was described as beginning at a post standing on the bank of Lake Erie, at the mouth and on the north side of Cattaraugus creek, and, after describing other lines, proceeded: "Thence . . . to a post standing on the north bank of Cattaraugus creek; thence down the same, and along the several meanders thereof, to the place of beginning." It was held that the grant was to the center of the creek. The court there referred to and approved the remark before mentioned of the chancellor in the Childs Case, and added: "Parties may restrict their grants, but the restriction ought to be found in very plain and express words." And in Kings County F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens the court cited with approval the Seneca Nation Case, and in like manner noticed such remark of the chancellor in the Childs Case. Inasmuch as a boundary by or along a watercourse is effectual to take the grant, by legal construction, to its thread, it would seem that the application of the courses and distances of the boundary along the water of the stream may not be treated as qualifying the effect which would be given to the grant if they were omitted. If the boundary were not expressed as along the pond, it might and would be assumed that there was an intent to so restrict; and it may be observed that the courses and distances between the outer lines intersecting it are not controlled by any monuments given in the deeds other than along the pond. A question somewhat similar to this arose in Riz v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 520, 23 Am. Dec. 472. There the boundary on a river was described by courses and distances between the two points of intersection of the outer lines with the stream by reference to monuments located near it, and it was held that the boundary was in the river. The present case is distinguishable from those where the line is described as along the shore or on the bank. Here there is nothing in the terms of the deeds which places the boundary along there outside the water of the pond. The boundary is described as along the pond. The courses and distances given represent the sinuosity of the line of connection of the water with the shore; and the boundary, as described along the pond, as generally understood, means on its water. And the fact that the length of the lines running to and from the monuments at the pond is the distance to and from them on the bank does not, of itself, affect the question. Such is usually the case of the description of land bounded on streams in which the grants are treated as ad filum aquae. And as said by Mr. Justice Cowen in Lucas v. Carley, where the grant is so framed as to touch the water of the river, one half the bed of the stream is included by construction of law. This, of course, means to the extent of the boundary in contact with the water. It is a matter of common knowledge in respect to lands bordering on streams and other bodies of water that it is usual in surveys, when made, to so describe the uplands as to compute the number of acres they contain, as generally in them, exclusive of the soil beneath the water, is mainly the value, and the quantity of the uplands embraced in a conveyance constitutes, in view of the situation, the basis for the measure of the consideration. The conveyances embracing the land surrounding this lake or pond were made many years ago. No circumstances appear bearing upon the purpose, construction, or effect of those conveyances inconsistent with the intent of the grantors to include its bed within them. If these views are correct, the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiffs had no title to the locus in quo was justified by the evidence; and the order should be reversed and the judgment affirmed.

All concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

OHARTIERS BLOCK COAL CO., Appt.,
v.

W. L. MELLON et al.

(.....Pa.....)

1. The right to drill oil or gas wells through a stratum of coal belonging to another person to reach oil or gas in a lower stratum belonging to the owner of the surface is a right which exists at all times although it must be exercised so as to do no violence to the rights of the owners of the coal.
2. An injunction will be refused in the exercise of the discretion of the court when it would work an injury greater than the wrong to be redressed.

(January 9, 1883.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, for Al-legheeny County denying an injunction to restrain defendants from drilling oil and gas wells through a bed of coal which plaintiff had purchased for the purpose of removal and sale. Affirmed.

Complainant is the owner of 187 acres 49 perches of coal underlying a tract of land in South Fayette Township, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. The deed conveying to it the coal conveyed also ample mining rights and privileges. The owner of the surface subsequently made leases for oil and gas purposes and the lessees began to drill for the purpose of reaching oil or gas. The plaintiff thereupon filed a bill to restrain the defendants from drilling the wells. The case was heard upon affidavits, some twenty-three being filed in behalf of defendant, and from thirty-five to forty in behalf of plaintiff. The defendants' gas wells that have been drilled in coal-bearing regions. The practical importance of the case is as great as its novelty.

NOTE.—The most remarkable thing about the above decision is that it is one of first impression. It is strange that the question involved has not before arisen considering the multitude of oil and 18 L. R. A.

affidavits tended to show that in sinking the wells all precautionary measures for protecting the plaintiff's property and the lives of the miners would be taken. That the surface hole would be 16 inches in diameter, and that from the surface to a point 18 inches into the limestone the rock would be reamed out and a ten-inch tubing inserted, thread jointed, and made of wrought iron. Around this outside tubing cement would be used completely filling the space between the rock and the tubing from its base to a point 12 feet above the coal seam. That a second tubing would be inserted inside of the first 8½ inches in diameter extending from the surface to about 500 feet below the coal, and the space between the two tubes filled with cement. Inside of this second tube the casing of the well itself would be inserted which would extend from the surface down about 1500 feet below the coal so that the escape of gas or oil from the well could only be effected through this central casing. Numerous affidavits stated that actual experience had fully demonstrated that wells could be safely drilled through coal without danger to persons engaged in working the same; that outside of the larger casing the sand, sediment, and pieces of rock taken from the well were placed, and in a short time became as hard as the rock itself, and would effectually protect the outer casing from the action of water and prevent any corrosion or leaking. That casings so protected had been used in wells for periods of three years or more and then removed and found practically in as good condition as when put down. That sulphur water would not injure iron unless the iron was exposed to the action of the air as well as that of the water. That when the space outside of the casing had been once filled from the bottom to the top and permitted to harden there was no way known to remove the casing without drilling out the rock again. That no casings well put down had ever been known to leak either oil or gas. That whenever a hole was worn in the casing, or any vent by which the water could get into the well, the well must be recased or cemented, and that in the experience of men well versed in the business no injury had ever been known or heard of because of drilling wells through coal beds.

On the other hand, plaintiff's affidavits tended to show that gas is so subtle, and will pass through such minute openings that it is almost if not wholly impossible to construct a pipe line on the surface that will not let more or less gas escape and the danger is greatly increased when the pipe is put into the well where it cannot be examined and tested after it is put together to ascertain whether it is entirely tight and does not leak. That there could be no system devised that would surely prevent all liability to danger due to the leaking of the gas from the well into the strata below the coal thence up into the excavations, into the coal strata, or into the seams and perhaps porous strata around the coal which would be liable to be tapped at any moment into the mine during its working; that the seams have openings as many as a thousand feet away from the chambers where the gas was collected under pressure and that it would be impossible to leave a bed of coal large enough around the well to prevent gas from working into the mine. That it was impossible to pack the cement into the openings perfectly tight because on account of the uneven spaces it was liable to clog at different points and pack down only to such point leaving open spaces below it. That iron and steel were peculiarly affected by the corroding action of sulphur water found in all coal mines and that sixteen pound mine rails would be rendered completely useless in less than a year by the corroding action of such water, and that it was impossible to use iron for the piping and pumps within the mines because it would not withstand such action and that if the water came in contact with the casing it would eat through it in a very short time thereby permitting the escape of gas into the mine; that the cement used contained more or less lime which was subject to the action of sulphur water and would be eaten out leaving spaces even through the cement which would admit of the escape of the gas. That new iron pipes had been known to be eaten through in less than sixty days. That the surface over mines was peculiarly subject to slide or shift, and when it took place the force was such that the casings even when supported by the cement could not withstand it but would be bent, cracked, and broken thereby permitting the escape of the gas into the mine; and that the cement was further subject to breakage from the heavy tools used inside the casing, and the shooting of the wells as well as from the blasting within the mines. That if it was necessary to leave large blocks of coal around the wells the necessary spaces for approach to the place of operation in the mine and for ventilation would be so zigzag that the cost of mining would be increased to such an extent that the mining itself would be rendered unprofitable and the coal interests destroyed; that the suction required to ventilate the mine is so strong that it would facilitate the escape of the gas into the mine.

Several mining inspectors testified that they would not permit a mine to be worked, if they could help it, where the coal was being taken out near a gas well, or an oil well producing gas; and testified that several mine disasters had been traced to explosions caused by leaking and escape of gas. One miner testified that soon after the putting down of a well through the mine in which he worked oil was found on the water that drained from the pit mouth and there was a strong smell of oil in the entries so that it was considered unsafe for him to work in the mine and it further appeared that many miners had stopped work because of fear of explosions. One affidavit set out that a 36 inch pipe line was laid in a ditch 12 feet below the surface for the purpose of carrying natural gas over the top of a mine which was at least 40 feet below the pipe; that a break took place in one of the joints of the line and shortly afterwards an explosion occurred in the mine which set it on fire and it was fully six months before the fire was extinguished.

The further facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. D. T. Watson, J. S. Ferguson and J. G. MacConnell, for appellants:

Defendants do not dispute the title of the plaintiffs to the coal, but claim the right to drill through this coal to reach oil they suppose to exist below, and having drilled through the coal to use the aperture for the removal of oil or other substances.

If the defendants have no such right it is a proper case for injunction, because it will prevent repeated trespasses, and will also prevent irreparable mischief from escaping gas, for neither of which there is an adequate remedy at law.

Scheele's App. 85 Pa. 88; Stewart's App. 56 Pa. 418; Pennsylvania Lead Co's App. 96 Pa. 124, 42 Am. Rep. 584; Butting's App. 105 Pa. 521.

The decree cannot be justified on the grounds that the appellee had the right of way by necessity through the coal and property of the appellants, and this:

(1) Because such ways are only over the surface of the land where from the facts surrounding the case the court implies that the parties agreed to make a grant of it or to reserve a right of way.

The case at bar is readily distinguishable from these apparent surface cases where the surrounding circumstances are such as to impress upon the transaction the implication of a grant.

Washburn, Easements, *82, 83; Goddard, Easements, 266, 268.

(2) A way of necessity is a way of approach to and egress from a certain tract of land for all purposes or for the purposes for which it was used when the implication of the right of way arises. There cannot be a right of way, for example, to use a lot as a stone quarry which is the use to which the lot is subject at the time, and afterwards because some other article might be discovered on the lot, or it would be advantageous to erect a rolling mill and hotel on the lot, that such right of way can be enlarged to embrace these new purposes. The use is restricted to the purpose apparent at the time.

(3) There cannot be a way of necessity for a thing granted which is destruction of the grant itself or seriously interferes with it.

Washburn, Easements, p. 82; Pierce v. Selleck, 18 Conn. 822.

(4) A way of necessity is strictissimi juris. It only arises in cases of strict necessity. But in the case at bar whether or not any one or all of the wells will strike oil is uncertain and cannot be determined until each well is bored through. Therefore when the well is being drilled there is no necessity for it, but it is a mere experiment to see if there be oil at the point where it is being drilled.

McDonald v. Lindall, 8 Rawle, 492; Wissler v. Hershey, 23 Pa. 838; Washburn, Easements, p. 164; Goddard, Easements, 268, 298; Brigham v. Smith, 4 Gray, 297, 64 Am. Dec. 76; 8 Kent, Com. *428; Cooper v. Maupin, 6 Mo. 624, 35 Am. Dec. 456; McTavish v. Carroll, 7 Md. 352, 61 Am. Dec. 353; Gale & Wheatly, Easements, 71-85; Pennington v. Galland, 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 561; Collins v. Prentice, 15 Conn. 89, 88 Am. Dec. 61; Pierce v. Selleck, 18 Conn. 828; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 802; Ogden v. Grove, 88 Pa. 487; 18 L. R. A.

Oliver v. Pitman, 98 Mass. 50; Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord, L. 445, 18 Am. Dec. 746, and note.

(5) If in any emergency this court should hold that there was a way of necessity through the coal grant to the appellants this way is limited strictly to one way only and not six or more ways as convenience might dictate.

McDonald v. Lindall, 8 Rawle, 496.

As in the case where the land is conveyed and the surface only described, the party takes to an indefinite extent both above and below, why if the coal is granted and the space that is occupied by the coal is also granted does not the party take to an indefinite extent below the coal. Not but that a party might provide differently, but if he does not, there can be no implication of a reservation.

Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 13 L. R. A. 627, 148 Pa. 293.

Mr. J. McF. Carpenter, for appellees:

We are now "confronted by a condition, not a theory." A condition unknown and unthought of when the doctrine relating to ways of necessity was established. In Sanderson v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 86 Pa. 405, 27 Am. Rep. 711, Mr. Justice Woodward said: "To render a particular case an exception to the general principles controlling the exercise of dominion over property by its proprietor, it must be ascertained to be exceptional in its surroundings or its facts. From necessity the principles are sometimes relaxed."

Mr. Neely, our lessor, owned all above and all below the coal. As said by counsel in Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 118 Pa. 189, 57 Am. Rep. 445, "This is really a case for the application of the great maxim relating to lands and to property, cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum, which in the revised version reads, so far as our case is concerned, cujus est solum ejus est usque ad achælum."

Mining rights are peculiar and exist from necessity, and the necessity must be recognized and the relative rights of land and mine owners adjusted and protected accordingly.

Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, supra.

We have the right to make a lawful use of our own property, and if in so doing we necessarily do some injury to our neighbor which can in any event be compensated in damage, the court ought not to restrain us.

The law must keep up with the times in which we live. In our western states the importance of the great mining interests is such that by the mining laws, one who "strikes a lead" may follow the "vein," even through the property of his neighbor; and in Nevada a mine owner may take neighboring land for the purpose of sinking a shaft for the benefit of his mine. Dayton G. & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 894.

It would be an extraordinary condition of affairs that would justify the interference of the court, and an extraordinary exercise of power on the part of the court to say that this great industry must cease in a vast territory, the value of which for oil purposes can scarcely be approximated.

Marvin v. Brewster Iron Min. Co. 55 N. Y. 538, 14 Am. Rep. 322; Ewing v. Sandotal C. & Min. Co. 110 Ill. 290.

Paxson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a case of first impressions, and of very grave importance, and in view of these facts we have been asked to express our opinion of the law bearing upon it, notwithstanding it is an appeal from a decree awarding a preliminary injunction. The facts are probably as fully before us now as they will ever be. The contest arises between the owner of the surface or his lessees and the Charters Block Coal Company, the plaintiff below and appellant, which is the owner in fee of the coal beneath the surface. The company purchased the coal on December 22, 1881, and the deed conveying it granted not only all the coal, but also the mining rights and privileges, including the right to enter mines and carry away all the coal: the right to make openings or entries, air courses, watercourses, drainage, and shafts, with right of ingress and egress for the purpose of making such openings, with right of way for taking such coal or any other coal and minerals through the entries; and also the right to enter upon the surface of the land for the purpose of taking into and placing on the same any material that it may desire and need in its coal operations; and, when making entries or shafts, the right to deposit the débris and slack near the openings. The grantor, in conveying the coal with these privileges, reserved to himself no right, privilege, or easement in said coal, or any part thereof, and no right of way through said coal from the surface, to obtain gas or oil, or any other substance. It is not likely, at the time the grant was made, that it occurred either to the grantor or the grantee of the coal that underneath the latter there might lie another substance of perhaps greater value than the subject of the grant itself. It now appears that the coal is underlain with the oil and gas bearing sand, which can only be reached by sinking wells from the surface through the strata of coal. Shortly before the filing of this bill it began to be known that oil or gas existed in large quantities in that part of Allegheny county where the appellant's works are situated, and active operations had begun in the early summer of 1891 by oil operators, to obtain this oil and gas. About this time the surface owner made leases for oil and gas purposes, and the lessees began at once to drill. This bill was then filed by the appellant company for the purpose of obtaining an injunction against the defendants, to restrain them from further drilling wells then commenced, and from drilling any other well or wells which would pass through the coal. The bill was filed upon the allegation and belief that the defendants had no right whatever to drill the wells. The plaintiff company also claimed that it was impossible for such wells to be drilled in such a manner as to allow the removal of all the coal without exposing the mine to leakage from gas from said wells, and rendering the mine operations so hazardous to plaintiff's property and plaintiff's employes as to very greatly injure and depreciate the value of said coal property, if not wholly to destroy the value thereof. The case was heard below upon bill, answer, and affidavits. The court, as we understand the decree, refused to grant a preliminary injunction as against any well or wells on said tract of land which at the date of the decree had been drilled by the defendants through the Pittsburgh vein of coal, and also refused to enjoin the defendants from drilling wells on said tract at any place or places where they will not pass through said Pittsburgh vein of coal, but will pass through lower strata of coal. The court awarded an injunction, however, as to any wells not already drilled which would pass through the Pittsburgh vein, and, in addition to the ordinary injunction bond, the decree required that the defendants should execute and deliver to the plaintiff their bond in the sum of $10,000, with two sureties to be approved by the court, conditioned that in putting down and operating any wells now in process of drilling, or which may hereafter be drilled under this decree, said defendants shall protect said coal and property of said plaintiff, and also the plaintiff's employes in and about said coal, from all damages by reason of said wells, and that they will use the best methods, devices, and appliances in the construction and operation of such wells; and that before said wells are abandoned they shall securely plug the same above each oil and gas bearing sand. Subsequently the decree was modified so as to remove the injunction from the two wells now commenced, but which have not gone down through the Pittsburgh coal vein, on defendants' giving bond as before stated.

The learned judge below justified his decision, as we learn from his opinion in another case heard before him, and involving substantially the same questions, upon the ground that the owner of the surface has a right of way by necessity through the coal to reach his oil and gas lying beneath it. But he concedes that to make such right available it would require a large modification of the rules in relation to a right of way by necessity over the surface. "Yet," to use his own language, "my present impressions are that it can and should be sustained in a reasonable manner, having due regard for the interest and rights of both parties. But it cannot be permitted to an extent that will destroy the grant of the coal, nor even to seriously depreciate it, without ample compensation. The owner of the surface cannot bore where he pleases, nor as often as he pleases. The right of designating the reasonable location of the one right of way by necessity, which the law recognizes, has always been held to be in the owner of the land. If he refuses to designate such way, then the owner of the right of way can designate it, or can apply to the court to have it located." This is a new question, and one that is full of difficulty. The discovery of new sources of wealth, and the springing up of new industries which were never dreamed of half a century ago, sometimes present questions to which it is difficult to apply the law, as it has heretofore existed. It is the crowning merit of the common law, however, that it is not composed of ironclad rules, but may be modified to a reasonable extent to meet new questions as they arise. This may be called the "expansive property of the common law." Mining rights are peculiar, and exist from necessity, and the necessity must be recognized, and the rights of mine and land owners adjusted and protected accordingly. We have an illustration of this in Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 445. The mining of coal and other minerals is constantly developing new questions. Formerly a man who owned the surface owned it to the center of the earth. Now the surface of the land may be separated from the different strata underneath it, and there may be as many different owners as there are strata. Lillibridge v. Lackawanna Coal Co. 143 Pa. 293, 18 L. R. A. 627. The difficulty is to so apply the law as to give each owner the right of enjoyment of his property or strata without impinging upon the right of other owners, where the owner of the surface has neglected to guard his own rights in the deed by which he granted the lower strata to other owners. In the earlier days of the common law the attention of buyers and sellers and therefore the attention of the courts, was fixed upon the surface. He who owned the surface owned all that grew upon it and all that was buried beneath it. His title extended upward to the clouds and downward to the earth's center. The value of his estate lay, however, in the arable qualities of the surface, and, with rare exceptions, the income derived from it was the result of agriculture. The comparatively recent development of the sciences of geology and mineralogy, and the multiplication of mechanical devices for penetrating the earth's crust, have greatly changed the uses and the values of lands. Tracts that were absolutely valueless, so far as the surface was concerned, have come to be worth many times as much per acre as the best farming lands in the commonwealth, because of the rich deposits of coal, or iron, or oil, or gas known to underlie them at various depths. These deposits are sometimes found, however, beneath well-cultivated farms, so that the surface has a large market value apart from the value of the deposits of coal or other minerals under it. In such cases the owner is rarely able to utilize the lower stores of wealth to which he has title, by mining operations conducted by himself, and for this reason he sells them to some person or corporation to be mined and to be moved. So it often happens that the owner of a farm sells the land to one man, the iron or oil or gas to another, giving to each purchaser a deed or conveyance in fee simple for his particular deposit or stratum while he retains the surface for settlement and cultivation precisely as he held it before. The severance is complete for all legal and practical purposes. Each of the separate layers of strata becomes a subject of taxation, of incumbrance, levy, and sale, precisely like the surface. As against the owner of the surface, each of the several purchasers would have the right, without any express words of grant for that purpose, to go upon the surface to open a way by shaft, or drift, or well, to his underlying estate, and to occupy so much of the surface, beyond the limits of his shafts, drift, or well, as might be necessary to operate his estate, and to remove the product thereof. This is a right to be exercised with due regard to the owner of the surface, and its exercise will be restrained within proper limits by a court of equity, if this becomes necessary; but, subject to this limitation, it is a right growing out of the contract of sale, the position of the stratum sold, and the impossibility of reaching it in any other manner.

18 L. R. A.

So far our way is clear of difficulty, because the several owners of the mineral deposits are exercising their right to have access to their respective estates against their vendor. Our question is over the right of the vendor to reach strata underlying a stratum which he has conveyed to another. Having sold the coal underlying the surface, is he to be forever barred from reaching his estate lying beneath the coal? Prior to the sale of the coal, his estate, as before observed, reached from the heavens to the center of the earth. With the exception of the coal, his estate is still bounded by those limits. It is impossible for him to reach his underlying estate, except by puncturing the earth's surface, and going down through the coal which he has sold. While the owner of the coal may have an estate in fee therein, it is at the same time an estate that is peculiar in its nature. Much of the confusion of thought upon this subject arises from a misapprehension of the character of this estate. We must regard it from a business, as well as a legal, standpoint. The grantee of the coal owns the coal, but nothing else, save the right of access to it, and the right to take it away. Practically considered, the grant of the coal is the grant of a right to remove it. This right is sometimes limited in point of time; in others it is without limit. In either event, it is the grant of an estate determinable upon the removal of the coal. It is, moreover, a grant of estate which owes a servitude of support to the surface. When the coal is all removed, the estate ends, for the plain reason that the subject of it has been carried away. The space it occupied reverts to the grantor by operation of law. It needs no reservation in the deed, because it was never granted. The grantee has the right to use and occupy it while engaged in the removal of the coal, for the reason that such use is essential to the enjoyment of the grant. It cannot be seriously contended that, after the coal is removed, the owner of the surface may not utilize the space it had occupied for his own purposes, either for shafts or wells, to reach the underlying strata. The most that can be claimed is that, pending the removal, his right of access to the lower strata is suspended. The position that the owner of the coal is also the owner of the hole from which it has been removed, and may forever prevent the surface owner from reaching underlying strata, has no authority in reason, nor, do I think, in law. The right may be suspended during the operation of the removal of the coal to the extent of preventing any wanton interference with the coal mining, and for every necessary interference with it the surface owner must respond in damages. The owner of the coal must so enjoy his own rights as not to interfere with the lawful exercise of the rights of others who may own the estate, either above or below him. The right of the surface owner to reach his estate below the coal exists at all times. The exercise of it may be more difficult at some times than at others, and attended with both trouble and expense. No one will deny the title of the surface owner to all that lies beneath the strata which he has sold. It is as much a part of his estate as the surface. If he is denied the means of access to it, he is literally deprived of an estate which he has never parted with. In such case the public might be debarred the use of the hidden treasures which the great laboratory of nature has provided for man's use in the bowels of the earth. Some of them, at least, are necessary to his comfort. Coal, oil, gas, and iron are absolutely essential to our common comfort and prosperity. To place them beyond the reach of the public would be a great public wrong. Abounding, as our state does, with these mineral treasures, so essential to our common prosperity, the question we are considering becomes of a quasi public character. It is not to be treated as a mere contest between A. and B. over a little corner of earth. We have already seen that, when the owner of the surface parted with the underlying coal, he parted with nothing but the coal. He gave no title to any of the strata underlying it, and it is not to be supposed for a moment that the grantor parted with or intended to part with his right of access to it. We are of opinion that he has such right of access. The only question is how that right shall be exercised, by what authority, and under what limitations.

While there is some analogy between such right and the common-law right of way of necessity over the surface, we quite agree with the learned judge below that it would require a large modification of the common-law rule. We do not see our way clear to apply the doctrine of a surface right of way of necessity to the facts of this case. While the right of the surface owner to reach in some way his underlying strata is conceded, it involves too many questions affecting the rights of property, and of injury to the underlying strata, to be settled by the judiciary. It is a legislative, rather than a judicial, question. It needs and should promptly receive the interposition of the legislative authority. That body is now in session, and we have no doubt its wisdom will enable it to dispose of this somewhat difficult question in such manner as to protect the rights of the surface owner, and yet do no violence to the rights of others to whom he has sold one or more of the underlying strata. With the right conceded, there can be no serious difficulty in the lawmaking power affording a proper remedy. That remedy should be carefully guarded. The owner of the underlying strata should not be permitted at his mere will and pleasure to interfere with strata lying above him. All this requires an amount of legal machinery that a court of equity cannot supply, however wide its jurisdiction and plastic its process. In all such cases there should be a petition to the court, and a decree regulating the mode of exercise of the right. There should also be a provision for the appointment of a jury of view to assess the damages. In this way the rights of the surface owner can be preserved without any wrong to the owner of the coal.

While we do not fully sustain the reasons given by the learned judge below, we will not interfere with this decree for another reason. The plaintiff company has not yet sustained any irreparable injury by reason of the sinking of these wells, and it may never do so. We find ourselves upon a new road, without chart or compass to guide us, and we propose to move slowly. The appellants have appealed to us as chancellors, and, even if we concede their right to be clear, it does not follow that, as chancellors, we will enforce it. The effect of doing so would be to leave the owner of the surface at the absolute mercy of the owner of the coal. It is true, he can buy the coal of the latter, but only on the terms dictated by the owner. To grant the injunction as claimed by the appellant would be to destroy the estate of the surface owner in the minerals below the coal. If this were the only case of the kind in the state, we might perhaps modify our views to some extent, but when we reflect upon the fact that many other similar cases exist, and that a vast quantity of the leased coal lands in the western part of the state are underlain with oil and gas, precisely as in the case in hand, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that vast interests may be affected by our decree, and great injury done to the rights of others. It is familiar law—too familiar to need the citation of authority—that the decree of a chancellor is of grace, not of right, and that he is not bound to make a decree which will do far more mischief, and work far greater injury, than the wrong which he was asked to redress. For these reasons we will not disturb the decree of the court below. The appellant company has its remedy at law, and to that we will remit it.

The decree is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, at the costs of the appellant.

Williams, J.:

I concur in the decree made in this case, and in the opinion which so ably vindicates it, but I would go further. I would lay down the broad proposition that the several layers or strata composing the earth's crust are, by virtue of their order and arrangement, subject to reciprocal servitude; and, as these are imposed by the laws of nature, and are indispensable to the preservation and enjoyment of the several layers or strata to and from which they are due, the courts should recognize and enforce them. When the servitude is the result of natural forces affecting the conformation of the surface, the courts have taken notice of it, and enforced it for and against adjoining owners. Thus, the owner of land crossed by a stream has a right, as against the owner above him, to insist on the delivery of the stream to him within its natural channel, and he is in turn bound to receive it from such upper owner. He is under a like duty to deliver it to the owner below him, and has a like right to insist that such owner shall receive it from him. The true foundation on which the relative rights and duties of these several owners must rest is not found in the order of their respective purchases, nor in the terms of the conveyances under which they take title. It is not found in any statute regulating the flow of streams or the duties of riparian owners. It is found in the character of the surface over which the stream flows, and the operation of the laws of gravity upon the water of the stream. A purchaser of land is bound to take notice of its situation, and is conclusively presumed to have bought with full knowledge of, and in subordination to, the servitude which that situation imposes. But the relation of successive farms along the course of a stream is no more clearly due to the forces of nature than are the order and position of the rocks and minerals which comprise the earth's crust. One who buys a single stratum is bound to know where it is, and how it is situated with reference to the strata above and below it; and he must be conclusively presumed to have taken title subject to the servitudes imposed by nature upon it as the necessary consequence of its position among the rocks that underlie the surface. He knows that his stratum lies upon and is supported by the rocks below it, and that other rocks lie upon and are supported by his stratum. He knows that his estate can only be reached by passing through the strata that overlie it, and that the estates below him can only be reached by passing through his. This necessity is not the result of any act of his, or of his vendor, but of the relation the several strata bear to each other as arranged in their order by the forces of nature. They are to each other the reciprocal obligations of access and support. The lower can only be reached through the upper; the upper can only be supported by the lower. The courts have long recognized the servitude for support, and in a multitude of cases on both sides of the Atlantic have compelled its observance and punished its neglect. They have enforced the right to support as one existing independently of, and requiring no aid from, statutes or contracts, and as resting on the order of creative work and the laws of nature. This right may be waived by the owner of the surface, (Penn Gas Coal Co. v. Versailles Fuel Gas Co. 181 Pa. 522,) but, if not waived, the owner of the lower stratum cannot escape its obligation. But the necessity for access results from the work of nature just as truly as the necessity for support. Both must be had in nature's way, or not had at all. Take away the servitude for support, and the surface may be made unsafe for either residence or cultivation, and so become valueless. Take the servitude for access which the natural arrangement of the stratified rocks imposes upon the surface, and the mineral deposits in them are inaccessible, and therefore useless. Recognize these reciprocal servitudes, and the value of the surface is preserved, while the mineral deposits are made accessible, and made to minister to the comfort and advancement of the race. They rest on the same foundation. To change the figure, they may be said to be the obverse and the reverse of the same coin. They are due from and due to every layer of the earth's crust in succession, from the surface to the center, because of the relation these layers hold to each other in the order of their creation. We do not hesitate to enforce the servitude for support, whether subjacent or adjacent, or to regulate the extent and manner in which it shall be rendered and enjoyed. With equal propriety and with equal ease we may enforce the servitude for access, and regulate the extent and manner in which it shall be rendered and enjoyed. The power of the chancellor would extend to all incidental subjects, and enable him to impose terms as to the manner in which an owner of the lower estate should exercise his right of access, the precautions he should employ, and the compensation he should make for actual injury done. It is interesting to note how generally business men engaged in developing the mineral resources of the state have recognized this right of access, and interposed no obstacle in the way of its exercise. I have before me, as I write, the estimate of well-informed producers and dealers, thoroughly familiar with the several oil fields in the state, and identified with the business from the early developments on Oil creek, thirty years ago, to the present time. This estimate fixes the total number of oil wells drilled in Pennsylvania at about 60,000, exclusive of wells drilled in localities known to produce only gas. Three fourths of the whole number are within the limits of the carboniferous measures, and one half have penetrated workable veins of coal. During these thirty years of active operations the question of the right of access to the sand rocks in which the oil is found has never before reached this court. This cannot be accounted for except upon the theory of the general concession of the right by all parties concerned in the ownership of the coal and in the operations of mining. The magnitude of the business, and the importance of this question, will be evident when it is remembered that these wells have had an average cost of about $4,000 each before oil could be secured from them, and a total cost of $240,000,000. The actual production of oil has ranged from 4,000 barrels per day thirty years ago, to 110,000 barrels per day. It is now standing at not far from 60,000 barrels. The price has fluctuated between 50 cents per barrel and $3. A conservative estimate of the production—total production—places it about 560,000,000 of barrels, with an average value of not less than $1 per barrel in its crude state. For twenty years the northern oil field was within and immediately adjoining the judicial district in which I presided, and I never heard of an accident in a coal mine that was charged upon, or that could be traced directly or indirectly to, the wells that penetrated the coal, or to the escape of oil or gas from them into the coal or the mined-out openings from which the coal had been taken. The manner in which wells are cased and tubed renders the possibility of such escape so remote as to reduce the risk of accident to proportions that are practically insignificant. But if the risk was much greater it could be provided for by requiring additional precautions to be taken, and security to be given for the reimbursement of the owner of the intermediate estate for any loss he might sustain. As it now stands, the decree of this court recognizes the existence of a right of access existing in the nature of things, wholly independent of all statutory enactments, and yet refuses to enforce that right, or regulate its exercise. It says to the owner of the lower estate: "You have an undoubted right of access to the layer of the earth's crust in which your wealth lies, but equity will not protect or aid you in its exercise. The owner of the intermediate stratum may sue you, and recover damages from you, for doing what it is your right to do, and a chancellor cannot hear your complaint, or lift his hands to protect you, until the Legislature has provided him with ears and hands for that purpose."

18 I. R. A.

I would hold that the jurisdiction is as clear as the right of access; that the parties are in a court competent to deal with the whole subject; and that the decree of the court should be affirmed for that reason, and at the costs of the appellant.

Green and McCollum, JJ.: We fully concur in this opinion.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Re ESTATE OF James T. SWIFT, Deceased.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. A tax on the right of succession under a will, or devolution in case of intestacy, is imposed by the New York Collateral Inheritance Tax Law of 1887, chap. 713, amending the Act of 1885, chap. 483, although the language of the statute is "all property which shall pass, etc., . . . shall be and is subject to a tax."
2. Real estate situated out of the state owned by a decedent residing in the state at the time of his death, is not subject to the Collateral Inheritance Tax Laws of New York, even after it has been converted into money which is in the hands of the executors.
3. Personal property of a resident decedent, whereever situated, whether within or without the state, is subject to the New York Collateral Inheritance Laws.
4. The residuary estate is not subject to any deduction for the purpose of determining the collateral inheritance tax payable thereon because of a provision of the will directing payment of the tax on the specific legacies as an expense of administration.

(January 24, 1893.)

APPPEAL by the People of the State of New York and Theodore W. Myers, Comptroller of the City of New York, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of the Surrogate's Court for the City and County of New York, affirming an order assessing the value of the property of James T. Swift, deceased, which was subject to taxation under the Collateral Inheritance Tax Act. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. W. Rosendale, Atty-Gen., for appellants:

The statute known as the Collateral Inheritance Tax Law does not impose a property tax, but a charge for the privilege of acquiring property.

Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 816, 58 Am. Rep. 502.

In the following cases, arising in various states, the tax has been held to be a succession and not a property tax:

Mager v. Grima, 49 U. S. 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 78 Am. Dec. 387; Schootfeld v. Lynchburg, 78 Va. 866; Strods v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Scholey v. Rev. 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 881, 23 L. ed. 99; State v. Dalrymple, 3 L. R. A. 372, 70 Md. 294; Fullen v. Wake County Comrs. 66 N. C. 861; Peters v. Lynchburg, 78 Va. 927; Com. v. Herman, 16 W. N. C. 210; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L. R. A. 171, 88 Fed. Rep. 184.

To hold that the tax was one on property would enable an estate which had assets amounting to a large sum invested in government bonds to entirely escape taxation.

The question has not been definitely determined by this court.

See Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 806, 58 Am. Rep. 502; Re Howe, 2 L. R. A. 825, 112 N. Y. 103; Re Cager, 111 N. Y. 847; Re Sherwell, 125 N. Y. 879.

The tax imposed by the Collateral Inheritance Tax Law is no more a tax upon property than is the Corporation Tax Act of 1880.

People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328.

Under the will of decedent, the residuary legatees did not take an interest in real estate, but only in personal property.

It is immaterial that the term "devise" was used in the residuary clause of the will.

Willard, Real Estate, pp. 505, 511, 528;

NOTE—On the subject of collateral inheritance taxes, see Re Romaine, 12 L. R. A. 401, and note, 127 N. Y. 80; Re Stewart, 14 L. R. A. 836, 131 N. Y. 274; Com. v. Ferguson, 10 L. R. A. 240, and note, 137 Pa. 596; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L. R. A. 171, and note, 88 Fed. Rep. 184; People v. Sherwood, 3 L. R. A. 464, 18 L. R. A.

See also 18 L. R. A. 713.

113 N. Y. 174; Catlin v. Trinity College, 3 L. R. A. 203, 113 N. Y. 123; State v. Dalrymple, 3 L. R. A. 372, and note, 70 Md. 294; State v. Gorman, 2 L. R. A. 701, 40 Minn. 232; Re Howe, 3 L. R. A. 825, 112 N. Y. 100.

Myers v. Eddy, 47 Barb. 263; Wiltse v. Shaw, 100 N. Y. 191.

There was a conversion of the real estate into personality from the time of the death of testator, and the only duty resting on the executors was to carry out the direction contained in the will.

Dodge v. Pond, 23 N. Y. 69; Fisher v. Banta, 66 N. Y. 463; Lent v. Howard, 89 N. Y. 169; Kane v. Gott, 24 Wend. 641, 35 Am. Dec. 641; Underwood v. Curtis, 127 N. Y. 523; Robert v. Corning, 89 N. Y. 225; Greenland v. Waddell, 116 N. Y. 234.

Equitable conversion having taken place, the residuary legatees being residents of this state, such persons would have been liable in this state to taxation for state, county, and city purposes, upon their interest in the estate of Mr. Swift as personal property.

Fisher v. Banta and Underwood v. Curtis, supra; Miller v. Com. 111 Pa. 321.

The personal property of decedent in New Jersey was subject to the Collateral Inheritance Law.

8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 565, 566; Re Romaine's Estate, 12 L. R. A. 401, 127 N. Y. 80.

The actual must yield to the legal situs, which is that of the domicile of the beneficiaries. Orcutt's App. 97 Pa. 179.

Mr. Nelson S. Spencer, for respondents:

As the tax is one which is payable out of the property, neither the real estate nor its proceeds are taxable by the state of New York. The real estate is not so taxable because it is out of its jurisdiction. The proceeds are not so taxable because the tax is levied as of the date of the testator's death, and the proceeds have come into this state only since his death. There is no language in the Act under which they can be taxed.

Re Vassar's Will, 127 N. Y. 1.

No state, by any law or procedure, can tax property or persons out of its jurisdiction.

Re State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. ed. 179; Lorillard v. People, 6 Dem. 268; Re Devey, N. Y. Daily Reg. Oct. 21, 1889; Drayton's App. 61 Pa. 172; Re Bittinger's Estate, 129 Pa. 353.

The tax is one paid out of capital; it is a deduction by the state from capital upon its transmission by the state from dead to living hands.

3 Dowell, History of Taxes, p. 148; Bastable, Public Finance, bk. 4, chap. 8, § 7; Re Howard, 5 Dem. 433.

It is quite apparent from the terms of the statute that the tax levied by the state of New York is one on property, and not on any person or persons.

New York Laws 1887, chap. 718.

Such is the purport of the decisions of this court.

Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 806, 58 Am. Rep. 502; Re Enston, 8 L. R. A. 464, 113 N. Y. 174; Re Stewart's Estate, 14 L. R. A. 836, 131 N. Y. 274; Re Romaine's Estate, 12 L. R. A. 401, 127 N. Y. 80; Re Vassar's Will, supra. See also Re Bittinger's Estate, supra.

Even if the direction in the will did work an equitable conversion, it will not serve the state of New York in its effort to tax foreign real estate. The surrogate's court is not a court of equitable jurisdiction. Not being in a court of equity, the state cannot invoke the doctrine of equitable conversion, and if it were in a court of equity, equity would not apply the doctrine. It will only apply it in favor of those persons who have a right to pray that the acts which ought to be done may be done.

2 Story, Eq. 114.

Real property in New Jersey has no protection from the state of New York.

Taxation and protection are correlative obligations, and it is contrary to justice and fundamental principles to impose the one and withdraw the other.

People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 574.

It cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended that our citizens should be subject to taxation here and in other states also upon the same property.

People v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576; Re Stewart, supra.

The personal property in question was tangible property situated on the real estate in New Jersey. It also was without the jurisdiction of the state of New York and not taxable.

The policy of the statute in question here is to tax all property within the state of New York, and none out of it.

Re Romaine's Estate, supra; People v. Taxes Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224; Alvany v. Powell, 55 N. C. 51; People v. Smith, supra; Story, Conf. L. 8th ed. p. 543; Westlake, Private International Law, 3d ed. 1890, chap. 7, p. 168; Mr. David A. Wells' article on Taxation in Lalor's Cyclopædia of Political Science.

The passing of the personal property in question depends upon the favor of the state of New Jersey.

Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185.

In such a case the lex rei sitæ controls.

Wharton, Conf. L. § 608.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

James T. Swift died in July, 1890, being a resident of this state and leaving a will by which he made a disposition of all his property among relatives. After many legacies of money and of various articles of personal property, he directed a division of his residuary estate into four portions, and he devised and bequeathed one portion to each of four persons named. The executors were given a power of sale for the purpose of paying the legacies and of making the distribution of the estate. At the time of his death, the testator's estate included certain real estate and tangible personal property in chattels situated within the state of New Jersey, which was realized upon by the executors and converted into moneys in hand. When, upon their application, an appraisal was had of the estate in order to fix its value under the requirements of the law taxing gifts, legacies and inheritances, the surrogate of the county of New York, before whom the matter came, held, with respect to the appraisal, that the real and personal property situated without the state of New York were not subject to appraisal and tax under the law, and the exceptions taken by the Comptroller of the city of New York to that determination raise the first and the principal question which we shall consider.

Surrogate Ransom's opinion, which is before us in the record, contains a careful review of the legal principles which limit the right to impose the tax, and his conclusions are as satisfactory to my mind as they evidently were to the minds of the learned justices of the general term of the supreme court, who agreed in affirming the surrogate's decree upon his opinion.

The attorney-general has argued that this law, commonly called the Collateral Inheritance Tax Law, imposes, not a property tax, but a charge for the privilege of acquiring property, and, as I apprehend it, the point of his argument is that, as there is no absolute right to succeed to property, the state has a right to annex a condition to the permission to take by will, or by the intestate laws, in the form of a tax, to be paid by the persons for whose benefit the remedial legislation has been enacted. That is, substantially, the way in which he puts the proposition, and if the premise be true that the tax imposed is upon the privilege to acquire, and, as he says in his brief, is like "a duty imposed, payable by the beneficiary," possibly enough, we should have to agree with him. We might think, in that view of the act, that the status of property in a foreign jurisdiction was not a controlling circumstance. But if we take up the provisions of the law by which the tax is imposed, and if we consider them as they are framed and the principle which then seems to underlie the peculiar system of taxation created, I do not think that his essential proposition finds adequate support. The law in force at the time of the decease of the testator is contained in chapter 718 of the Laws of 1887, amending chapter 488 of the Laws of 1885, and is entitled "An Act to Tax Gifts, Legacies and Collateral Inheritances in Certain Cases."

By the first section it is provided that "all property which shall pass by will . . . from any person who may die seised or possessed of the same, while a resident of this state, or, if such decedent was not a resident of this state at the time of his death, which property or any part thereof shall be within this state . . . shall be and is subject to a tax . . . to be paid . . . for the use of the state," etc.

In the 4th section it is provided that "all taxes imposed by this Act, unless otherwise herein provided for, shall be due and payable at the death of the decedent," etc.

By the 6th section, it is provided that the executor shall "deduct the tax from the legacy or property, subject to said tax, or if the legacy or property be not money, he shall collect the tax thereon upon the appraised value thereof from the legatee, or person entitled to such property, and he shall not deliver, or be compelled to deliver, any specific legacy or property subject to tax to any person until he shall have collected the tax thereon," etc. The language of the Act has been justly condemned, for being involved and difficult to read clearly; but, considering the language employed in these and in other sections of the law, in its ordinary sense, I think we would at once say that if the Legislature had not actually imposed a tax upon the property itself, upon the death of its owner, it had certainly intended to impose a tax upon its succession, which was to be a charge upon the property, and which operated, in effect, to diminish pro tanto its value, or the capital, coming to the new owner under a will, or the intestate laws. Could any one say, after reading the provisions of this law, that it was the legatee, or person entitled, who was taxed? I doubt it. Property, which was the decedent's at the time of his death is subjected to the payment of a tax. The tax is to be deducted from the legacy; or, when deduction is not possible from the legacy not being in money, and a collection from the legatee or the person entitled to the property is authorized to be made, the tax so to be collected is described as "the tax thereon," that is, on the property.

If it should be said that such an interpretation of the law is in conflict with the doctrine which some judges have asserted, respecting the nature of this tax, I think it might be sufficient to say that the phraseology of the New York law differs, more or less, from that of other states, and seems peculiarly to charge the subject of the succession with the payment of the tax. But I do not think it at all important to our decision here that we should hold it to be a tax upon property precisely.

A precise definition of the nature of this tax is not essential if it is susceptible of exact definition. Thus far, in this court, we have not thought it necessary, in the cases coming before us, to determine whether the object of taxation is the property which passes or not; though, in some, expressions may be found which seem to regard the tax in that light. Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 806, 58 Am. Rep. 503; Re Enston, 113 N. Y. 174, 8 L. R. A. 464; Re Sherwell, 125 N. Y. 879; Re Romaine's Estate, 127 N. Y. 80, 13 L. R. A. 401, and Re Stewart's Estate, 131 N. Y. 274, 14 L. R. A. 836. The idea of this succession tax, as we may conveniently term it, is, more or less, compound; the principal idea being the subjection of property, ownership of which has ceased by reason of the death of its owner, to a diminution, by the state reserving to itself a portion of its amount, if in money, or of its appraised value, if in other forms of property. The accompanying, or the correlative, idea should necessarily be that the property, over which such dominion is thus exercised, shall be within the territorial limits of the state at its owner's death, and therefore, subject to the operation and the regulation of its laws. The state, in exercising its power to subject realty, or tangible property, to the operation of a tax, must, by every rule, be limited to property within its territorial confines.

The question here does not relate to the power of the state to tax its residents with respect to the ownership of property situated elsewhere. That question is not involved. The question is whether the Legislature of the state in creating this system of taxation of inheritances or testamentary gifts, has not fixed as the standard of right the property passing by will or by the intestate laws.

What has the state done, in effect, by the enactment of this tax law? It reaches out and appropriates for its use a portion of the property at the moment of its owner's decease, allowing only the balance to pass in the way desired by testator, or permitted by its intestate law, and while in so doing it is exercising an inherent and sovereign right, it seems very clear to my mind that it affects only property which lies within it, and, consequently, is subject to its right of eminent domain. The theory of sovereignty, which invests the state with the right and the power to permit and to regulate the succession to property upon its owner's decease, rests upon the fact of an actual dominion over that property. In exercising such a power of taxation as is here in question, the principle, obviously, is that all property in the state is tributary for such a purpose, and the sovereign power takes a portion or percentage of the property, not because the legatee is subject to its laws and to the tax, but because the state has a superior right or ownership, by force of which it can intercept the property, upon its owner's death, in its passage into an ownership regulated by the enabling legislation of the state.

The rules of taxation have become pretty well settled, and it is fundamental among them that there shall be jurisdiction over the subject taxed; or, as it has been sometimes expressed, the taxing power of the state is co-extensive with its sovereignty. It has not the power to tax directly either lands or tangible personal property situated in another state or country. As to the latter description of property no fiction transmuting its situs to the domicile of the owner is available, when the question is one of taxation. In this connection the observations of Chief Judge Comstock, in People v. Taxes Commr., 28 N. Y. 244, and of some text-writers, are not inappropriately referred to. He had said that lands and personal property having an actual situation within the state are taxable, and, by a necessary implication, that no other property can be taxed. He says, further: "If we say that taxation is on the person in respect to the property, we are still without a reason for assessing the owner resident here in respect to one part of his estate situated elsewhere and not in respect to another part. Both are the subject of taxation in the foreign jurisdiction."

In Judge Cooley's work on Taxation it is remarked (p. 159) that "a state can no more subject to its power a single person, or a single article of property, whose residence or situs is in another state, than it can subject all the citizens, or all the property of such other state to its power."

Judge Cooley had reference in his remarks to the case of bonds of a railroad; for he cites the case of "State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds," in the United States Supreme Court, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 800, 21 L. ed. 179, where Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion, and, in the course of it observed that "the power of taxation, however vast in its character and searching in its extent, is necessarily limited to subjects within the jurisdiction of the state."

Judge Story, in his work on the Conflict of Laws, speaking of the subject of jurisdiction in regard to property, said (sec. 550) that the legal fiction as to the situs of movables yields when it is necessary for the purpose of justice, and, further, "a nation within whose territory any personal property is actually situated has an entire dominion over it while therein, in point of sovereignty and jurisdiction, as it has over immovable property situated there."

The proposition which suggests itself from reasoning, as from authority, is that the basis of the power to tax is the fact of an actual dominion over the subject of taxation at the time the tax is to be imposed.

The effect of this special tax is to take from the property a portion, or a percentage of it, for the use of the state, and I think it quite immaterial whether the tax can be precisely classified with a taxation of property or not. It is not a tax upon persons. If it is called a tax upon the succession to the ownership of property, still it relates to and subjects the property itself and when that is without the jurisdiction of the state, inasmuch as the succession is not of property within the dominion of the state, succession to it cannot be said to occur by permission of the state. As to lands, this is clearly the case, and rights in or power over them are derived from or through the laws of the foreign state or country. As to goods and chattels it is true; for their transmission abroad is subject to the permission of and regulated by the laws of the state or country where actually situated. Jurisdiction over them belongs to the courts of that state or country for all purposes of policy; or of administration in the interests of its citizens, or of those having enforceable rights, and their surrender, or transmission, is upon principles of comity.

When succession to the ownership of property is by the permission of the state, then the permission can relate only to property over which the state has dominion, and as to which it grants the privilege or permission.

Nor is the argument available that, by the power of sale conferred upon the executors, there was an equitable conversion worked of the lands in New Jersey, as of the time of the testator's death and, hence, that the property sought to be reached by the tax, in the eye of the law, existed as cash in this state in the executor's hands, at the moment of the testator's death. There might be some doubt whether the main proposition in the argument is quite correct and whether the law did not vest in the residuary legatees subject to the execution of the power of sale. But it is not necessary to decide that question. Neither the doctrine of equitable conversion of lands nor any fiction of situs of movables can have any bearing upon the question under advisement. The question of the jurisdiction of the state to tax is one of fact, and cannot turn upon theories or fictions, which, as it has been observed, have no place in a well-adjusted system of taxation.

We can arrive at no other conclusion, in my opinion, than that the tax provided for in this law is only enforceable as to property which, at the time of the owner's death was within the territorial limits of this state. As a law imposing a special tax it is to be strictly construed against the state and a case must be clearly made out for its application. We should incline against a construction which might lead to double taxation; a result possible and probable under a different view of this law. If the property in the foreign jurisdiction was in land or in goods and chattels, where, upon the testator's death, a new title or ownership attached to it, the bringing into this state of its cash proceeds subsequently, no matter by what authority of will, or of statute, did not subject it to the tax. A different view would be against every sound consideration of what constitutes the basis for such taxation, and would not accord with an understanding of the intention of the Legislature as more or less plainly expressed in these Acts.

Another question, which I shall merely advert to in conclusion, arises upon a ruling of the surrogate with respect to appraisal, in connection with the clause of the will directing that the amount of the tax upon the legacies and devises should be paid as an expense of administration. The appraiser, in ascertaining the value of the residuary estate for the purpose of taxation, deducted the amount of the tax to be assessed on prior legacies. The surrogate overruled him in this, and held that there should be no deduction from the value of the residuary estate of the amount of the tax to be assessed either upon prior legacies, or upon its value. He held that the legacies taxable should be reported, irrespective of the provision of the will; and that a mode of payment of the succession tax prescribed by will is something with which the statute is not concerned. I am satisfied with his reasoning and can add nothing to its force. Manifestly, under the law that which is to be reported by the appraiser for the purpose of the tax is the value of the interest passing to the legatee under the will, without any deduction for any purpose, or under any testamentary direction.

A question is raised as to the effect upon the law, contained in the Acts of 1885 and 1887, of the passage of chapter 215 of the Laws of 1891; but as that has been the subject of another appeal, and is fully discussed in the opinion of the Matter of the Estate of Prime,—no reference will be made to it here.

My brethren are of the opinion that the tax imposed under the Act is a tax on the right of succession, under a will or devolution in case of intestacy; a view of the law which my consideration of the question precludes my assenting to.

They concur so far in my opinion as it relates to the imposition of a tax upon real estate situated out of this state, although owned by a decedent residing here at the time of his decease; holding with me that taxation of such was not intended, and that the doctrine of equitable conversion is not applicable to subject it to taxation. But as to the personal property of a resident decedent, wheresoever situated, whether within or without the state, they are of the opinion that it is subject to the tax imposed by the Act.

The judgment below, therefore, should be so modified as to exclude from its operation the personal property in New Jersey, and, as so modified, it should be affirmed, without costs to either party as against the other.

All concur in the judgment as modified, except Maynard, J., not sitting.

Re ESTATE OF Edward D. G. PRIME, Deceased.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. The amendment of a statute "so as to read as follows" does not operate as a repeal of provisions which are not retained in the same precise words if they are substantially re-enacted in equivalent words.
2. The exemption of "any religious, educational . . . or charitable corporation or corporation organized for . . . other than business purposes" from the collateral inheritance tax by Laws 1890, chap. 553, extends only to domestic corporations.
3. A state statute granting powers and privileges to corporations must, in the absence of plain indications to the contrary, be held to apply only to corporations created by the state and over which it has the power of visitation and control.
4. A statute conferring upon a corporation a limited privilege of taking and holding property in the state does not relieve it from a legacy duty.

(January 17, 1898.)

APPPEAL by legatees under the will of Edward D. G. Prime, deceased, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of the surrogate for New York County fixing the amount of collateral inheritance tax to be paid upon their shares in the estate. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Ralph E. Prime, for appellants:

A statute which imposes a tax, or a penalty, or a forfeiture, but which is repealed before actual assessment or final recovery, does not authorize assessment of the tax, or the recovery of the penalty or the forfeiture.

Re Cayuga County Surrogate, 46 Hun, 659; Re Miller, 110 N. Y. 224.

The provisions of a statute are not saved from repeal, by paraphrasing the words in an amendatory Act. The retaining of the same idea in a new statute, but expressed in different words, is not a retaining of the old statute. The change of the words is a doing away with the old words, and with them all their force and virtue, and you must start again with the new words as the new creation of the statute.

NOTE.—On the subject of the above case, see also the preceding case, Re Swift (N. Y.) ante, 700, and the note thereto.

Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 598; Re Miller, 110 N. Y. 216; Re Arnett, 49 Hun, 603.

The change of a single word will operate to repeal an entire statute.

Nash v. White's Bank of Buffalo, 105 N. Y. 245.

Mr. Austin Abbott, with Mr. James McG. Smith, for appellant, American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions:

The tax imposed by the Collateral Inheritance Act is special and not general, and must be strictly construed against the state.

Re Vassar, 127 N. Y. 1.

The provisions of the Act of 1890, exempting bequests to missionary societies from the legacy tax, apply in favor of this appellant.

The Act of 1890 exempts foreign and domestic corporations alike.

Effect must be given if possible to all the language employed.

People v. Matsell, 94 N. Y. 179; Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9; People v. Purdy, 2 Hill, 81, 4 Hill, 884.

No consideration of policy exists for limiting this benefit to domestic corporations, and especially in a case like this of a society existing solely for the propagation of the work of foreign missions in heathen lands.

Foreign corporations are to be deemed "persons" or "associations" within the meaning of a statute relating to taxation unless a different intent is indicated in the statute.

British Commercial L. Ins. Co. v. Taxes & Assessments Comrs. 1 Abb. App. Dec. 199; People v. Horn Silver Min. Co. 105 N. Y. 76.

The same strictness of construction will not be indulged, where an exemption from taxation is to religious, scientific, literary and educational institutions that would be applied in considering exemptions to corporations created and operated for private gain or profit.

State v. Fisk University, 87 Tenn. 233.

The rule of construction here claimed has been applied in analogous cases, arising in connection with wills.

Hollis v. Drew Theological Seminary, 95 N. Y. 166; Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 43 N. Y. 424, 3 Lans. 848.

It has been held that the provisions of the Amendment of 1887, exempting legacies to children "adopted as such in conformity with the laws of the state of New York," operated in favor of a child adopted in the state of Massachusetts, under the provisions of its laws which were substantially similar to our own.

Re Butler, 58 Hun, 400.

This particular corporation is entitled to exemption by reason of the effect of Laws 1877, chap. 376.

A grant of lands to individuals by the sovereign authority to be possessed and enjoyed by them in a corporate character in itself confers capacity to take and hold in a corporate character.

North Hempstead v. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 109.

A grant of power to perform corporate acts implies a grant of corporate power.

Com. v. West Chester R. Co. 3 Grant, Cas. 200. See McIntyre Poor School Trustees v. Zanesville 18 L. R. A.

Canal Co. 9 Ohio, 203; Walsh v. New York & Brooklyn Bridge Trustees, 96 N. Y. 427.

Legislative recognition of a corporation as existing dispenses with further proof of incorporation.

People v. Farnham, 35 Ill. 562.

Messrs. Louis H. Bristol and Henry Stoddard, with Mr. Haley Fiske, filed a brief on behalf of Yale University.

Messrs. Arnoux, Ritch & Woodford, filed a brief on behalf of parties interested in provisions contained in the will of Daniel B. Fayerweather, deceased:

Only those are taxable who are included in both the letter and spirit of the Act.

There are in every civilized community at least two methods of raising the revenues.

1. There are the general laws that are intended to affect every individual, the burden of which ought to be borne by every individual according to the test laid down in such law. In these laws it has been said that the exceptions shall be strictly construed because there can be no intent against the plain meaning of the statute of any exception not expressly declared.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 364; Hubbard v. Brainard, 35 Conn. 563; McQuakey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 601; People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 574; People v. New York City Comrs. 95 N. Y. 555; Hollis v. Drew Theological Seminary, 95 N. Y. 166.

To this general class of taxation the Collateral Inheritance Law does not belong.

Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181.

2. There is another class of laws for raising revenue which have a different construction. Where special burdens are imposed or special sources of revenue are affected, the uniform and unfailing principle of law is that no construction shall enlarge their operation.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 273; United States v. Wigglesworth, 2 Story, 269; United States v. Watts, 1 Bond, C. C. 590; Partington v. Atty. Gen. L. R. 4 H. L. Cas. 100; Potter's Dwar. Stat. 742, 749; Warrington v. Furber, 8 East, 242; Gurr v. Scudde, 11 Exch. 190.

In the Revenue Laws where clauses inflicting pains and penalties are ambiguously or obscurely worded, the interpretation is ever in favor of the subject.

Potter's Dwar. Stat. 641; Hubbard v. Johnstone, 8 Taunt. 177; Powers v. Barney, 5 Blatchf. 202; Green v. Holway, 101 Mass. 243, 8 Am. Rep. 339.

The mischief of a strict construction is easily obviated by the Legislature; but the mischief of a liberal construction may be irremediable before it can be reached.

Stetson v. Kempton, 13 Mass. 272, 7 Am. Dec. 145; Alley v. Edgecomb, 53 Me. 446.

3. Not only is this foregoing principle of construction recognized in every case of special legislation, but there is the further generous principle that where any exception to a general law is enacted, such exception shall likewise have a liberal construction.

Temple Grove Seminary v. Cramer, 98 N. Y. 121; People v. New York Tax Comrs. 6 Hun, 109, affirmed, 64 N. Y. 656; People v. New York Tax Comrs. 10 Hun, 246; State v. Ross, 24 N.

J. L. 497; Griswold College Trustees v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 188; Wesleyan Academy Trustees v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599; Monticello Seminary v. People, 106 Ill. 399, 46 Am. Rep. 702; Northwestern University v. People, 90 Ill. 833, 23 Am. Rep. 187.

4. On the other hand special authority to tax must be strictly construed.

Vanover v. The Justices, 27 Ga. 354; Johnson v. Lexington, 14 B. Mon. 648.

By a proper interpretation of the Act of 1890, chap. 558, p. 977, every non-business corporation is included in its operation both to hold and enjoy property, and to be exempt from the collateral inheritance tax, whether such corporation is domestic or foreign.

It is conceded that "the grammatical construction of chapter 558, Laws of 1890, is clear and unambiguous."

The duty of the court in such a case is simply to interpret the law and give it effect.

Stewart v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 88 N. J. L. 505.

By a proper construction of the word "such" in the exempting clause, and of the proviso therein following, the Law of 1890 exempts the corporations therein referred to from the collateral inheritance tax.

1. The word "such" as therein contained is in effect the repetition of the specific corporations previously enumerated.

2. The proviso annexed to the exemption proves that foreign corporations were included therein.

The Act of 1889, as amended in 1890, is in its general effect a negative statute, and is therefore of universal application.

The Collateral Inheritance Tax Law is to be construed as if so much of the Act of 1890 as relates to corporate exemption therefrom had been embodied therein, and by such construction foreign non-business corporations are exempt from such tax.

The words in the body of the Act itself show that it was a statute of restricted application.

Re Stewart's Estate, 14 L. R. A. 836, 181 N. Y. 280; Re Enston, 3 L. R. A. 464, 113 N. Y. 174; Re Stewart's Estate, 14 L. R. A. 836, 181 N. Y. 274.

Upon broad principles of public policy these corporations should be held to be on an equal footing with domestic corporations of like character and to be exempt from such special taxation.

Mr. Frank L. Hall, with Messrs. De Forest & Weeks, filed a brief on behalf of the executors of the will of Mary Stuart, deceased.

Messrs. David B. Hill and Edgar J. Levey, with Mr. Emmet R. Olcott, for respondents:

The Amendatory Law (Laws 1891, chap. 215) did not repeal by implication the provisions of Laws 1887, chap. 713.

The tax imposed by this Act (Laws 1885, chap. 433) is a permanent one.

Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 319, 58 Am. Rep. 502.

The fact that it has become a fixed and important feature of the system of taxation in this state is not without value in determining the intention of the Legislature in passing Laws 1891, chap. 215.

18 L. R. A.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 405, and cases cited.

The Statute of 1887 amended the Act of 1885 "so as to read as follows," and it was held that, "upon a state of facts arising between the passage of the two Acts, 1885 and 1887, the law continues in force as though the Act of 1887 had never been enacted."

Warrimer v. People, 6 Dem. 216; Re Arnett, 49 Hun, 599.

In construing any statute the intention of the law-makers must be sought for—that is the grand, central light in which all statutes must be read.

Where a section is amended "so as to read as follows," there must be something in the nature of the new legislation to show an intent with reasonable clearness before an implied repeal can be recognized.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 170, and cases cited.

It has been frequently held that the amendment of a statute by declaring that the same shall read as prescribed by the Amendatory Act is not a repeal of the original statute.

Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 595; Moore v. Mousert, 49 N. Y. 332; People v. Montgomery County Supra, 67 N. Y. 118, 23 Am. Rep. 94.

Laws 1891, chap. 215, if passed as an independent statute, would not have repealed Laws 1887, chap. 713, § 1, by implication.

The changes in phraseology are simply those common to any revision, and, "in a revision of the laws a reform of the language is not necessarily an alteration of the law. The intention of the Legislature to alter the law must be evident."

Crowell v. Crane, 7 Barb. 195; Potter's Dwarr. Stat. 154, note 4, and cases cited; People v. Harris, 123 N. Y. 73; Roberts v. Fahn, 36 Ill. 268; Keeler v. Smith, 66 N. C. 154; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 197; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 336; Yates Case, 4 Johns. 359; Taylor v. Delancy, 2 Cal. Cas. 143; Theriat v. Hart, 2 Hill, 380; Burnham v. Stevens, 33 N. H. 247; Sheffield v. Lovering, 12 Mass. 492.

Especially where the statute has been well settled by judicial construction.

Crowell v. Crane, supra; Douglas v. Douglas, 5 Hun, 140; Conger v. Barker, 11 Ohio St. 1.

Even under the assumption that Laws 1891, chap. 215, § 1, did not operate as a repealing section, the vested right of the state to a tax once accrued would not have been lost.

Re Kemeys, 56 Hun, 119; Sherrill v. Christ Church, 121 N. Y. 701.

(a) The tax accrues and becomes due to the state immediately upon the death of the testator.

Laws 1887, chap. 713, § 4; Warrimer v. People, 6 Dem. 214; Mellon's App. 114 Pa. 570; Re Vassar, 127 N. Y. 8.

And no assessment or judicial decree is a necessary prerequisite to make the right of the state to the tax a vested right.

Laws 1889, chap. 479, explained in Re Hughes, N. Y. Law Jour. July 27, 1889; Re Kemeys, supra; Re Ryan, 18 N. Y. S. R. 992.

(b) Where the revision of a law expressly repeals existing statutes a re-enactment neutralizes the repeal so far as the old law is continued in force; and such provisions of the old law as are re enacted operate without interruption as continuations.

Wright v. Oakley, 5 Met. 406; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 458, 17 L. ed. 807; Middleton v. New Jersey W. L. R. Co. 26 N. J. Eq. 269; Mitchell v. Halsey, 15 Wend. 241; Douglas v. Douglas, supra.

And even inchoate statutory rights are not lost or defeated by the repeal.

Moore v. Kenockee, 75 Mich. 832.

When the state itself prescribed the amount to be paid, no assessment is required, and the tax can be recovered by suit.

United States v. Hallovay, 14 Blatchf. 1; Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 227, 22 L. ed. 80; King v. United States, 99 U. S. 239, 25 L. ed. 873; United States v. Pacific R. Co. 1 McCrary, 1.

It is not a property tax, but a tax on a privilege,—that of devolution.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 80, and cases cited; Dos Passos, Law of Collateral Inheritance Tax, 2d ed. and cases cited; Re Twigg's Estate, 15 N. Y. Supp. 548; Re Howard, 5 Dem. 483; Wallace v. Myers, 88 Fed. Rep. 184; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181.

Therefore at the moment of a decedent's death, such a percentage of his property as is fixed by statute vests in the state as absolutely as though the whole had actually passed through the hands of the sovereign power.

Arnaud v. His Executors, 8 La. 836.

Foreign, charitable, and religious corporations are not exempt from the collateral inheritance tax.

Any such general exemption must presumably be claimed under Laws 1890, chap. 558, since it is now conclusively settled that under the Law of 1887 they were not so exempt.

Catlin v. Trinity College Trustees, 8 L. R. A. 206, 118 N. Y. 142; Re McCoskey's Estate, 22 Abb. N. C. 20; Re Kavanagh's Estate, 6 N. Y. Supp. 669.

The Act of 1890 must be strictly construed against the exemption claimed.

Re Stewart's Estate, 14 L. R. A. 836, 181 N. Y. 232; People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 586; People v. New York City Comrs. 95 N. Y. 554; Buffalo City Cemetery v. Buffalo, 46 N. Y. 506; Chegaray v. New York, 18 N. Y. 220; Roosevelt Hospital v. New York, 84 N. Y. 115; People v. New York City and County Comrs. 82 N. Y. 465; Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 561, 7 L. ed. 955.

General words should always be restricted to the subject-matter of the Act.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 286; London Tobacco Pipe Makers v. Woodroffe, 7 Barn. & C. 838; People v. Potter, 47 N. Y. 875; Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 830; Delafield v. Brady, 108 N. Y. 568; People v. New York City Comrs. 95 N. Y. 554; Re Ticknor's Estate, 18 Mich. 44.

That the "subject-matter" of Laws 1890, chap. 558, can only be domestic corporations and not foreign, is shown by the limitation in the value of property which the classes of corporations named are permitted to take and hold.

Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 340.

When language is employed which, if construed liberally, might be broad enough to sustain a claim of exemption, but if construed in connection with the other portions of the 18 L. R. A.

same section and Act, as well as of other statutes in pari materia, would imply an intention on the part of the Legislature to restrict the operations of the general words of the statute, it is the duty of the court to give effect to such intent.

People v. Davenport, supra.

And the general terms of a later statute will be restricted where by prior laws in pari materia subjects naturally falling within such general terms have been excluded, the latter law not showing an intention to abolish the distinction.

People v. Molyneux, 40 N. Y. 118; Bishop v. Barton, 2 Hun. 486.

Apart from the language of the statute and the strict rules of construction which must be applied to it, every presumption to be gathered from state or public policy makes against appellant's claim.

Exemption from taxation is conferred upon charitable and educational institutions by the state which creates them, under an implied contract on the part of the organizations exempted, that, in consideration thereof, they will aid the state conferring the exemption in the administration of its duties and obligations to its citizens, in respect to matters in charge of such institutions.

Horne of the Friendless v. Rouse, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 436, 19 L. ed. 497, citing Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Re Vassar, 127 N. Y. 16.

Another high authority bases it "upon the ground that they perform a service for the public and to some extent, at least, relieve the state from expense."

Cooley, Taxn. 202.

Such a policy is grounded in justice and common sense when applied to domestic corporations; but it fails entirely if the attempt is made to extend it to foreign institutions. Special exemption from a general rule of taxation is a bounty; and it is no part of the state policy to bestow its bounty regardless of benefit to be received in return simply for the encouragement of benevolence in the abstract.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 152; Re McCoskey, 6 Dem. 488.

No special exemption can be claimed in behalf of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions by reason of the provisions of Laws 1877, chap. 376.

Merrick v. Van Santvoord, 34 N. Y. 218; Stevens v. Phinizy Ins. Co. of Hartford, 41 N. Y. 152; Green v. Van Buskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 150, 19 L. ed. 118.

Andrews, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Edward D. G. Prime, a resident of this state, died in the city of New York on the 7th day of April, 1891, leaving a will of real and personal property. By his will he gave certain legacies to collateral relatives and to three sisters of his wife, and also to two foreign corporations, the Presbyterian Board of Relief for Disabled Ministers, and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; the former a Pennsylvania, and the latter a Massachusetts, corporation. His residuary estate, consisting of personal property and of real property within this state, was given to collateral relatives. Under proceedings instituted in the surrogate's court of the city of New York, June 5, 1891, an appraiser was appointed under the Act, chapter 488 of the Laws of 1885, as amended by chapter 718 of the Laws of 1887, and chapter 215 of the Laws of 1891; and such proceedings were had that on the 12th day of October, 1891, an order of the surrogate was made, assessing and fixing a tax upon the several legacies, and upon the interest of the residuary legatees and devisees under the will, at the rate of 5 per cent on the amount of the legacies and the value of the residuary estate. This appeal is taken by the individual legatees and devisees, and by the corporations named, from the order of the general term affirming the order of the surrogate.

There are two questions in the case, one of which is common to all the appellants, and one which pertains to the two corporations alone. The general question is presented by the claim on the part of the appellants that the only statute in force at the time of the institution of proceedings for assessing the tax, in June, 1891, imposing a legacy tax, was the Act, chapter 215 of the Laws of 1891, which amended the first section of the Act of 1885, as amended by the Act of 1887, by declaring that said first section was amended "to read as follows," and then proceeded to recite the first section as amended. The Act of 1891 did not, in terms, repeal the corresponding section in the former Acts. The section, as amended, embodied the same principle in respect to the taxation of what, for brevity, may be called "collateral inheritances," as did the corresponding section in the former Acts, and made no change in the rate; but in prescribing the rate it does not follow the exact language of the prior Acts. The claim, as we understand it, is that a statute which amends a prior statute in some particulars, under the formula, "so as to read as follows," operates as a repeal of the whole statute amended, unless provisions intended to be retained are incorporated in the amended statute in the same precise words of the former statute, without change of phraseology, and that it makes no difference although the same provision, in substance, is contained in the amending as in the original statute, nor although the transposition and collocation of words in the amending Act were for the purpose of adjusting the new features brought in by the amendment so as to make the new and the old provisions harmonious in their relation and expression. Starting with this premise, it is then claimed that the first section of the Act of 1887 having been repealed by implication, without saving to the state the right to proceed under the prior law to assess and collect the tax on estates of decedents who died prior to the passage of the Act of 1891, there was no law, when the assessment in this case was made, authorizing such assessment. No assessment, it is insisted, could be made at that date under the Law of 1887, because the first section of that Act (the one imposing a tax) had been repealed by the Act of 1891 before any fixed right of the state to assess and tax the estate in question had accrued, and no assessment could be made under the Act of 1891, because that Act was prospective, and applies only to cases where death occurred subsequent to its passage. By this process of reasoning it is sought to establish that the tax in this case was unauthorized; and although it is admitted that if the Act of 1885 had remained in force, or if the decedent had died after the passage of the Act of 1891, or if the language of the first section of the Act of 1887, as to the taxation of collateral inheritances, had been incorporated, ipsisimis verbis, in the Act of 1891, the interests in question would have been taxable, yet it is insisted that the right to tax has been lost by the lack of verbal identity between the two sections.

We think the contention upon this point has no support in authority or reason. The appellants rely upon the language of Denio, J., in Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 595, in which case there was under consideration an amendment to one of the sections of the Code, which re-enacted the original section "to read as follows," but added a new provision, giving a right of appeal where none existed before, which new right was invoked by a party whose rights had been concluded before the amendment, according to the prior law. It was held that a party so situated was not entitled to the new privilege. Judge Denio, in the course of his opinion, speaking of the effect of such amendatory statutes said: "The portions of the amended sections which are merely copied without change are not to be considered as repealed, and again enacted, but to have been the law all along; and the new parts, or the changed portions, are not to be taken to have been the law at any time prior to the passage of the amended Act." The language, "copied without change," is relied upon as indicating that it is only where there is verbal identity between the language in the first Act and that of the second Act that the amended Act will be deemed a continuation of the former Act, and that it is not sufficient, to prevent a repeal by implication, that the provisions are identical in substance. The learned judge used language appropriate to the case before the court, but the general provision enforced by the decision cannot have so narrow and confined an application as is now claimed. It is very plain that the Legislature, which had established a new policy in the taxation of the right of devolution or succession, and was year by year perfecting the system, and enlarging its scope and efficiency, by new legislation, never intended to repeal the prior Acts in these respects in which the new enactment corresponded in meaning with the prior law. It is obvious that the main purpose of the Act of 1891 was to add a new class of taxable estates exempted by the former law, and to this extent there was a repeal of the inconsistent provision of the former Acts. In recasting the section much of the language of the Act of 1887 is repeated, sections are transposed, and in respect to the tax on collateral interests the rule is expressed in slightly different language, but with no change in substance. The distinction sought to be made between this case and the principle decided in Ely v. Holton, supra, is narrow, technical, and illogical. The appellants refer in support of this contention to the case of Nash v. White's Bank of Buffalo, 105 N. Y. 245. In that case the subsequent Act, which was held to be a repeal of the former one, changed and increased the penalty prescribed by the first Act for taking unlawful interest, and expressly repealed "all Acts and parts of Acts inconsistent therewith," and it was properly held that this terminated proceedings under the prior law. The case of Com. v. Herrick, 6 Cush. 465, resembles much more nearly the case before us. The defendant had been convicted of selling spirituous liquors contrary to law, and a motion was made in arrest of judgment on the ground that the statute under which the defendant had been convicted had been since repealed. The repeal was claimed to have been effected by the Statute of 1850, which amended the former law by inserting the word "intoxicating" in place of the word "spirituous." The court, (Shaw, Ch. J.), after noting the fact that the penalty had not been changed, proceeded to inquire as to the intent of the Legislature, and said: "It is very manifest that it was not the intention to put an end to the operation of the former Act. On the contrary, they intended that it should continue in operation under a modification. Their intention, manifestly, was not to take away, diminish, or alter the penalties in existing cases, but to bring another class of cases within the operation of the Act, not included before. So far as this did include new cases, it was a new law." He then proceeded to show that the word "intoxicating" included "spirituous" liquors, and therefore that there had been no moment from the time the offense was committed that the law was not in force, punishing the offense of retailing spirituous liquors; and the motion was denied. We conceive the general rule to be that, when a statute amends a former statute "so as to read as follows," it operates as a repeal, by implication, of inconsistent provisions in the former law, and of provisions omitted in the amended law. Where the amended Act reenacts provisions in the former law, either ipsis verbis or by the use of equivalent, though different, words, the law will be regarded as having been continuous; and the new enactment, as to such parts, will not operate as a repeal, so as to affect a duty accrued under the prior law, although as to all new transactions the later law will be referred to as the ground of obligation. See Moord v. Mausert, 49 N. Y. 332; People v. Montgomery County Suprs. 67 N. Y. 109, 23 Am. Rep. 94. The conclusion we have reached makes it unnecessary to consider the point whether, if the Act of 1891 repealed the first section of the Act of 1887, the repeal operated to prevent the subsequent assessment and collection of a tax on the estates of decedents who died intermediate the Act of 1887 and the Act of 1891.

The more interesting question, and the one of greater importance, from the larger interests involved in its determination, arises on the appeal of the charitable corporations. It is claimed that they are exempted from a legacy tax under the Law of 1891 by the Act, chapter 553 of the Laws of 1890. Under the Act of 1887, legacies to charitable and religious corporations, whether domestic or foreign, were not exempt from the collateral inheritance tax. This was adjudged in the case of Catlin v. Trinity College Trustees, 118 N. Y. 183, 3 L. R. A. 206. In that case two legacies were in question,—one to a church in Poughkeepsie, and one to Trinity College, Hartford, Conn. The Act of 1887 limited the general words in the first section of the Act, subjecting "all property" passing by will or upon intestacy to the tax, by exempting property so passing to certain near relatives and property passing to "societies, corporations, and institutions now exempted by law from taxation." It was claimed in the Catlin Case that the legacies there in question were within the exemption of the Act of 1887, for the reason that the personal property of a college or religious corporation was exempt from taxation under the provision of the Revised Statutes (1 Rev. Stat. 388, § 4, subdiv. 7) exempting from taxation "the personal property of every incorporated company not made liable to taxation on its capital in the fourth title of this chapter." It was held that religious or charitable corporations were not exempted from general taxation under this provision of the Revised Statutes; and, there being no other statute under which exemption from general taxation was claimed, the court affirmed the judgment sustaining the tax. The provision in the Act of 1891 as to exemptions of corporations from the collateral inheritance tax is the same as in the Act of 1887, except that the words "or from collateral inheritance tax," were added. It is obvious that the corporations now claiming exemption from the legacy tax must be able to point to some statute of this state antedating the assessment of the legacy duty, which exempts foreign religious and charitable corporations from taxation generally, or specially from taxation under the inheritance tax law. There was no such statute in existence when the Catlin Case was decided; and, if it is to be found, it must have been enacted between 1887 and the time of the assessment of the taxes in question, in 1891.

It is conceded by the appellants that no exemption from a legacy duty upon legacies to foreign religious and charitable corporations exists unless given by the Act, chapter 553 of the Laws of 1890; but it is claimed, and the claim has been enforced by most elaborate argument of counsel, that that Act does exempt from the operation of the Inheritance Tax Law all charitable and religious corporations, foreign or domestic, whether created by the laws of this state, or the laws of any other state or government. The respondents contend that the Act of 1890 applies to domestic corporations only, and that foreign corporations of the class mentioned in the Act are not entitled to the benefit of its provisions. The decision of the question as to the validity of the legacy tax imposed on the legacies to the foreign corporations turns upon this controversy. The Act, chapter 553 of the Laws of 1890 is entitled "An Act to amend chapter one hundred and ninety-one of the laws of eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, entitled 'An Act to limit the amount of property to be held by corporations organized for other than business purposes, and relating to such corporations.'" It amends the several sections of the former Act "so as to read as follows," and the Act is as follows: "Section 1. Any religious, educational, bible, missionary, tract, literary, scientific, benevolent, or charitable corporation, or corporation organized for the enforcement of laws relating to children or animals, or for hospital, infirm, or other than business purposes, may take and hold in its own right, or in trust for any purpose comprised in the objects of its incorporation, property not exceeding in value three million dollars, or the yearly income derived from which shall not exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, notwithstanding the provisions of any special or general Act, heretofore passed, or certificate of incorporation, affecting such corporations. In computing the value of such property, no increase in value arising otherwise than from improvements made thereon shall be taken into account. The personal estate of such corporations shall be exempt from taxation, and the provisions of chapter four hundred and eighty-three of the laws of eighteen hundred and eighty-five, entitled 'An Act to Tax Gifts, Legacies, and Collateral Inheritances in Certain Cases,' and the Acts amendatory thereof, shall not apply thereto, nor to any gifts to any such corporation by grant, bequest, or otherwise: provided, however, that this provision shall not apply to any moneyed or stock corporation deriving an income or profit from the capital or otherwise, or to any corporation which has the right to make dividends or to distribute profits or assets among its members. Sec. 2. This Act shall not affect the right of any such corporation to take and hold property exceeding in value the amount specified in section one of this Act, provided such right is conferred upon such corporation by special statute, nor affect any statute by which its real estate is exempt from taxation. Sec. 3. This Act shall take effect immediately." The Act of 1889, of which the Act above quoted is an amendment, contained no provision exempting the corporations named therein from taxation, either general or special. The sole purpose of the original enactment was, as the title indicates, to fix a limit within which corporations of the classes mentioned should be permitted to take and hold property. This legislation was the culmination of a policy, which had steadily been pursued through successive acts of legislation, to remove the close restrictions originally imposed upon the power of such corporations, as to the amount of property which they should be permitted to take and hold. The Act permitted such corporations to hold property not exceeding $3,000,000, or property, the yearly income from which shall not exceed $100,000. The changes effected by the Amendment of 1890 were (1) the inclusion of other corporations of a charitable character in the enumeration; (2) the extension of the limit of property from two to three million dollars, and of income from one hundred to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; (3) the exemption of the personal estate of the corporations named from general taxation and from collateral inheritance tax; (4) the exclusion of certain corporations which, although organized for quasi charitable purposes, derived an income or profit from capital or otherwise, and dividend paying corporations, from the benefit of the provision granting exemption from taxation. It seems very plain that the purpose of the original Act of 1889, and of the amending Act of 1890, was to regulate and define the corporate powers and privileges of the domestic corporations only. They are Acts conferring and regulating corporate capacity and privileges. The power of corporations to take and hold property is a corporate power, and depends upon their charters. The law of this state cannot enlarge or change the powers of a foreign corporation. They are solely those given by the law of the domicile. Foreign corporations are permitted, by comity, to exercise their powers within this state, when not in contravention of our statutes or public policy. Statutes have been framed, from time to time, permitting such corporations to hold property here. The Statute of 1887 (chap. 450), which authorizes corporations organized under the laws of other states, doing business in this state, to hold necessary real estate herein, is an example. But such enactments do not change, modify, or enlarge the powers of corporations given by the state which created them. They are simply enabling statutes authorizing such corporations to exercise their charter powers in this jurisdiction. The question now presented is the same as would have arisen under the original Statute of 1885, if a foreign corporation, while that statute was in force, had claimed the right to take and hold real property within this state of the value of $2,000,000. It is scarcely possible to conceive that there could have been in the case supposed a serious question that the statute applied to foreign corporations, or was intended to give to such corporations the powers claimed. Such legislation would be unprecedented. Under the Act of 1890, if foreign charitable corporations are within its purview, they may acquire and hold in this state real estate to the amount of $3,000,000, or property yielding an annual income of $250,000, and are placed on the same footing as domestic corporations of the same character.

One of the amendments made by the Act of 1890 to the Act of 1889 was the insertion after the words, "may take and hold" the words, "in its own right, or in trust for any purpose comprised in the object of its incorporation." So that as the Act now stands, giving it the construction claimed by the appellants, real property of a value or yielding the income specified in the Act may be acquired and held here by any foreign corporation of the class mentioned, upon any trust authorized by its charter, however much such trust might contravene the policy of this state, or our statutes regulating and defining trusts in real property. If the statute relates to domestic corporations only, there is no inconsistency. They derive their powers from this state, and it is to be assumed that corporate powers will be granted with reference to the general policy of our laws.

Some stress is laid by the learned counsel for the appellants upon the words in the Act of 1890, "nor to any gift to such corporation by grant, bequest, or otherwise," at the end of the clause of exemption. The exemption clause commences with the words, "The personal estate of such corporation shall be exempt from taxation," etc. The words "grant, bequest or otherwise" may have been inserted at the end to cover grants or devises of real property. It is not necessary to decide whether this object was effected by the words used.

But the emphasis is not, we think, to be found on the words "any such corporation," so as to strengthen the argument of the appellants that foreign corporations are comprehended in the statute.

In general we are of opinion that a statute of a state granting powers and privileges to corporations must, in the absence of plain indications to the contrary, be held to apply only to corporations created by the state, and over which it has the power of visitation and control. Such is the natural interpretation of such legislation, in the absence of contrary intention appearing on the face of the Act. The law, in such cases, is dealing with its own creations, whose rights and obligations it may limit, define, and control. In the case of White v. Howard, 46 N. Y. 144, a question arose as to the construction of section 8, 2 Rev. Stat. p. 57, which declared that "no devise to a corporation shall be valid unless such corporation be expressly authorized, either by its charter or by a statute, to take by devise," as applied by a devise to a foreign corporation authorized by its charter to take by devise. The devise was held to be invalid on the ground, among others, that the words, "by its charter or by statute," in the section quoted, referred to a charter or statute of this state. Grover, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Creating or chartering corporations involves an exercise of the legislative power. They may be created by a particular statute granting the charter, organized by virtue of general statutes prescribing the mode, specifying the powers and privileges to be enjoyed. In either mode the corporation is, in a legal sense, created by statute; and, where section 8 provides that no devise to a corporation shall be valid unless such corporation be expressly authorized by its charter or by statute to take by devise, it is equally clear that such charters were only intended as were granted by a statute of this state, or organized under a general statute of the state, as it is that by the words 'by statute' a statute of the state was intended. Any other construction would work a complete revolution of the policy of the state."

The claim that the test of liability of foreign corporations to a legacy tax is the liability of a domestic corporation of the same character to the payment of such a tax, and that if one is exempt the other is exempt also, has, we think, no foundation. In both cases the question is the same: Has the statute made the legacy taxable? In the Catlin Case exemption of both the domestic and foreign corporations was claimed under the Revised Statutes alone. If this statute did not exempt the domestic corporation, concededly it did not exempt the foreign one; and, for convenience in deciding the case, both were regarded as domestic corporations.

In Hollis v. Drew Theological Seminary, 95 N. Y. 166, the question was whether the two-months' limitation in the sixth section of chapter 819, Laws 1848, which section prohibited bequests to "any corporation formed under this Act," applied to a bequest to the defendant, a corporation of another state; and it was held that it did not (1) because the prohibition was confined to bequests to corporations organized under the Act of 1848; and (2) for the reason that no public policy existed which required its extension to bequests to foreign corporations. The absence of such a general policy was indicated by the numerous corporations in the state organized after the Act of 1848, as to which the power of testators to make bequests were not subject to the restriction in that Act.
18 L. R. A.

The argument that gifts for the promotion of charity, education, and religion should be encouraged, and should not be diminished by exactions of the state, presents a moral and political, rather than a judicial, question. It is the duty of courts, in the interpretation of statutes, to declare the law as it is; and the interests of society are best subserved by a close adherence by courts to what they find to be the plain meaning,—neither narrowing the application on the one hand, nor extending the meaning on the other, to meet cases, not specified, which may seem to be within the reason of the law. A general law of the state prohibiting corporations from exercising particular powers will operate upon foreign corporations, not because the Act binds such corporations ex proprio vigore, but for the reason that their exercise of such powers here would violate the public policy of the state, indicated by the general restraint imposed upon our own corporations. It is the policy of society to encourage benevolence and charity. But it is not the proper function of a state to go outside of its own limits, and devote its resources to support the cause of religion, education, or missions for the benefit of mankind at large. The argument may have force that the state might, consistently with its proper function, give immunity from taxation to some of the foreign corporations engaged in the work of education or charity. But, however this may be we are convinced that the Statute of 1890 has no application to foreign corporations; and, having reached that conclusion, our duty is ended.

Upon the view we have taken, the Act (chap. 876 of the Laws of 1877) conferring upon the defendant the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions a limited privilege of taking and holding real and personal property in this state does not relieve that corporation from a legacy duty. That was an enabling statute merely. The corporation remained a foreign corporation, as before, but possessing in this state a privilege granted by that statute. Our conclusion is that the judgment below should be affirmed.

All concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Florida, ex rel. John C. LAW,
v.
Frank E. SAXON.

(.....Fla.....)

*1. Statutes tending to limit the citizen in the exercise of the elective franchise are always construed liberally in his favor, and in restriction of the exceptions which exclude a ballot, rather than in extension of such exceptions, and so that a voter will not be deprived of his vote, or the public will, as expressed through the ballot box, defeated, except for causes which are plainly within the purview or clear expression of the law, or upon a plain and unambiguous provision of law.

2. Where a statute provides that a ballot shall be of plain, white paper, clear and even cut, without ornaments, designation, mutilation, symbol, or mark of any kind whatsoever, except the name or names of the person or persons voted for and the office to which such person or persons are intended to be chosen, the word "designation" is, on account of its associate words, to be construed to intend only designations in the nature of ornaments, mutilations, symbols, or marks, as distinguished from words or writings; and hence ballots having on them, in the body thereof, the words "National Republican Ticket," and "Free Suffrage Ticket," are not illegal, or contrary to the purpose of the statute.

(Taylor, J., dissents.)

(December 31, 1892.)

PROCEEDINGS in quo warranto to determine by what right the defendant held the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court of Hernando County. Judgment for defendant.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. W. B. Lamar, Atty. Gen., Wall & Wall and Shackelford & Palmer for plaintiff.

Messrs. E. W. Williams and T. P. Lloyd for defendant.

Raney, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Referring to the defendant's answer as amended, it appears that he claims to have received 808 votes, and that the relator received 297, although the original official canvass returned the vote as 290 for defendant, and 297 for relator.

The point to be decided is that of the legality or illegality of at least nine, if not eleven, ballots which were thrown out by the inspectors at precinct 5 in their canvass. The objection to the ballots is that they have on their face, or the side on which are the names of the persons and offices, the words: "National Republican Ticket," and "Free Suffrage Ticket," the former intervening the words: "For Electors of President and Vice-President," (the initial words of the ticket) and the names of the candidates for these offices; and the letter or words, "Free Suffrage Ticket" being about the middle of the ballot and intervening the names of the candidates for justices of the Supreme Court and the words: "For Senator from the Ninth Senatorial District, A. S. Mann." The offices preceding the expression "Free Suffrage Ticket," are electors of president and vice-president, representative in the 51st Congress and state offices, whereas, those following it are senator from the district indicated and member of the House of Representatives from the county, and the county officers.

The objection to these ballots is based upon the 23d section of the General Election Law of June 7, 1887, chapter 8704 of the statutes, which section is as follows: The voting shall be by ballot, which ballot shall be plain white paper, clear and even cut, without ornaments, designation, mutilation, symbol or mark of any kind whatsoever, except the name or names of the person or persons voted for and the office to which such person or persons are intended to be chosen, which name or names and office or offices shall be written or printed, or partly written and partly printed thereon in black ink, or with black pencil, and such ballot shall be so folded as to conceal the name or names thereon, and, so folded, shall be deposited in a box to be constructed, kept and disposed of as hereinafter provided, and no ballot of any other description found in any election box shall be counted.

A consideration of adjudications in other states on statutes of the same general character, and of other authorities, will aid us in reaching a correct understanding of the Statute of 1887, and in solving the question as to whether or not the ballots in controversy fall under its condemnation.

In Com. v. Woelper, 8 Serg. & R. 29, 8 Am. Dec. 628, a by-law of a Lutheran congregation, incorporated, provided that if "besides the names there are other things upon the tickets," they should not be counted, and tickets cast in favor of certain persons for vestrymen had an engraving of an eagle on them; and they were held to be illegal, the reason given by one of the judges being that the eagle might be seen by the inspectors even when the ballot was folded, and that it deprived voters who did not vote such tickets of the secrecy which the ballot was intended to secure.

The provision of an Indiana Act of 1867 is that all ballots shall be "written or printed on plain white paper without any distinguishing marks or other embellishments thereon except the name of the candidates and the office for which they are voted, and inspectors of election shall refuse all ballots offered of any other description; provided that nothing herein shall disqualify the voter from writing his name on the back thereof." In Druliner v. State, 29 Ind. 308, ninety-eight ballots were cast for Weaver, and forty-six for Druliner, and they were all printed on plain white paper; and with the exception that the words, "City Union Ticket," were printed on the face or inside of those cast for Weaver, there was nothing printed or written on any of them except the names of the candidates and the offices. It was held that the Act was intended to protect the elector from undue influence and control by others and to secure to him entire freedom of opinion in the exercise of the elective franchise, by enabling him to cast his vote in such a manner as would prevent others who from their peculiar relations to him might by intimidation or otherwise seek to control his vote, from being able to determine from the color of his ticket or some distinguishing mark thereon, the party or person for whom he voted; and that this purpose would seem to be secured, as far as legislative enactment could effect it, by requiring all ballots cast to be uniform in external appearance, and that therefore the act could not be construed to prohibit a distinguishing mark on the inside of the ballot. This conclusion was aided, as appears in the reasoning of the court, by the fact that the Act did not, (particularly when considered in connection with statutory provisions requiring that ballots when presented should be put "unopened" into the ballot box and not be opened or marked by the inspectors by "folding or otherwise,") authorize the inspector and judges to reject a ballot upon the discovery of such a mark or embellishment at the time of counting out the ballots as could not be seen by the inspector at the time the ballot was voted. The same conclusion was reached in Stanley v. Manly, 85 Ind. 275, and Miltholland v. Bryant, 39 Ind. 863, where the words: "Republican Ticket," or "Republican County Ticket," or "Republican Township Ticket," were printed at the head and on the inside of the ballot. In State v. Adams, 65 Ind. 393, the information showed that the relator received 12,251 votes, and the defendant 12,899, and that the ballots cast for relator were headed on the inside: "Democratic Ticket," and "National Ticket," and those voted for defendant: "Republican Ticket," and that five thousand of those cast, received, and counted for defendant were printed in such a manner that words: "Republican Ticket," could be seen on the outside and were seen by the inspectors, but that such was not the case as to the ballots cast for relator. The conclusion and reasoning of the court is embodied in the following language: "To push the meaning of the statute to the extreme of holding that the inspectors of elections shall refuse to receive ballots because the printing upon the inside, which is not unlawful, can be seen on the outside through the paper, we think would be a most unwarrantable construction of its language. The irregularity or mal-conduct in the inspectors in receiving such ballots cannot affect the case if the votes cast thereby are otherwise legal, for it is enacted that 'no irregularity or misconduct of any member or officer of a board of judges or canvassers shall set aside the election of any person unless such irregularity or misconduct was such as to cause the contestee to be declared elected, when he had not received the highest number of legal votes,'"—citing Dobyns v. Weadon, 50 Ind. 298; Allen v. Crow, 48 Ind. 301; Hadley v. Guttridge, 58 Ind. 302. In State v. Wasson, 99 Ind. 261, the decision was that the requirement as to plain white paper prescribes no grade, quality, or thickness of paper, nor absolute uniformity. The object of the statute, says the opinion, was undoubtedly to secure the privacy of the ballot, but if a voter uses a ballot which comes within the letter of the statute, his vote is not to be rejected because the quality or grade of the paper upon which it is printed differs from that of others which also comes within the letter of the statute, even though the difference be so perceptible as to partially destroy the privacy of the ballot.

*Headnotes by RANNEY, Ch. J.

NOTE.—On the subject of marks or devices to distinguish ballots, see Rutledge v. Crawford, 18 L. R. A. 761, and note, 91 Cal. 523, 25 Am. St. Rep. 212. See also the later cases, People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 14 L. R. A. 624, 129 N. Y. 895; 18 L. R. A.

Allen v. Glynn (Colo.) 15 L. R. A. 743; State v. Russell (Neb.) 15 L. R. A. 740; Parvins v. Wimborg, 15 L. R. A. 775, 130 Ind. 661; State v. Ellis (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 382; State v. Walsh (Conn.) 17 L. R. A. 364.

18 L. R. A.

In California the Statute (§ 1191 of the Political Code) provided that no ticket should be used at any election or circulated on the day of election unless written or printed on paper furnished by the secretary of state, or on paper in every respect like such paper; and is four inches in width and twelve inches in length, or within an eighth of an inch of such size; and, if printed, unless the names are in black ink and in long primer capitals—the name of the office in small capitals, and of the person in large capitals and both without spaces, except between the different words or initials in each line, and with specified margins; and, if printed, the lines are straight and the matter single leaded; and, if written, no sign appears when the paper is folded; and unless it is free from every mark, character, or device or thing that would enable any person to distinguish it by the back, or, when folded, from any other legal ticket or ballot. And section 1207 enacts that when a ballot found in any ballot box bears upon it any impression, device, color, or thing, or is folded in any manner intended to designate or impart knowledge of the person who voted such ballot, it must with all its contents be rejected; and, section 1208, that when a ballot found in any ballot box does not conform to the requirements of section 1191 it must with all its contents be rejected. In Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 399, ballots were objected to because they were not printed in long primer capitals and the lines were double leaded, and the conclusion of the court was that they should be counted; and the view expressed in the opinion is that a ballot should not be rejected simply because it differs from regulations prescribed in the Code over which the elector had no control, such as its size, the kind of paper on which it is printed, or the character of the type or leading used in printing; that it was clear from the testimony that none but an expert with his dividers in his hands could possibly tell whether or not a given ticket complied with the requirements of the law; and to reject such tickets cast in good faith by a qualified elector would be to destroy instead of protect, the freedom and purity of elections; that to defeat the will of the people in any election it would only be necessary to furnish the electors or a portion of them with tickets in which the printed lines were one sixty-fourth part of an inch—the difference in space occupied by double and single leaded lines—further apart than is required by the Code. There are, however, says the opinion, other requirements of the Code within the power of the elector to control, and these, if willfully disregarded, should cause his ballot to be rejected; he can see, for instance, that his ballot is “free from every mark, character, device, or thing, that would enable any one to distinguish it by the back,” and if in willful disregard of law he places a name, number, or other mark on it, he cannot complain if his ballot is rejected and he loses his vote. In Wyman v. Lemon, 51 Cal. 273, it was held that if an elector uses ink to scratch names from his ballot, and by that means the ballot becomes discolored, such discoloration is not a mark designed to distinguish the ballot from other legal ballots, and will not authorize its rejection. In Coffey v. Edmonds, 58 Cal. 521, a ballot had the words: “For President—Hancock and English,” written in pencil upon its face under the words at the top of the names, Eleventh Senatorial District. It had also on its face: “For Judge of the Superior Court, M. A. Edmonds,” and was counted for Edmonds, the candidate of the Republican party, and it was held that the words “For President—Hancock and English,” written on the ballots did not vitiate it, and that it had no “mark or thing thereon by or from which it could be ascertained what persons or what class of persons used or voted it.” Section 1197, Pol. Code. In Reynolds v. Snow, 67 Cal. 497, it was, however, decided that a ballot only eight inches and a half in length was properly rejected.

In Texas a Statute of 1879 enacted that all ballots shall be written or printed on plain white paper, “without any picture, sign, vignette, device or stamp mark, except the name of the political party whose candidates are on the ticket: provided, such ballots may be written or printed on plain white foolscap, legal-cap, or letter paper: provided, that all ballots containing the name of any candidate pasted over the name of any other candidate shall not be counted for such candidate whose name is so pasted, and any ticket not in conformity with the above shall not be counted in counting the votes, and no ticket not numbered as provided shall be counted.”

This statute has been before the supreme court of that state several times. In State v. Phillips, 63 Tex. 390, 51 Am. Rep. 646, ballots sufficient in number to control the result of the election were objected to as illegal on account of their being “diamond shaped.” This was urged to be a “device,” within the meaning of the Act, but it was held that the word “device,” as used, meant a figure, mark or ornament of a similar character with the “pictures, signs, etc.,” enumerated in the same connection and placed upon the ticket in a like manner; that the decisions tend rather to restrict the exceptions which exclude a ballot than to extend them, and to admit the ballot if the spirit and intention of the law is not violated, although a literal construction would vitiate it; citing Druliner v. State, 29 Ind. 308; Stanley v. Manly, 35 Ind. 275, and Kirk v. Rhoads, 48 Cal. 398. In reply to the argument that the purpose of the statute was to preserve the secrecy of the ballot and the independence of the voter, and that this would be defeated by such ballots as those in question, it is observed: “If this were the case we should not feel justified in extending the provisions of the statute beyond the legal import of its terms.”

The result as shown by the tickets deposited by legal electors must not be set aside except for causes plainly within the purview of the law.” It is further observed in substance that if the lawmaking power had supposed the same evil results as to destroying the secrecy and independence of the ballot, would follow from allowing tickets to be made in different shapes, as from color, and other prohibited features, it doubtless would have prescribed the form of tickets. The tickets are said to be somewhat in the shape of a rhomboid, and not only are they not illegal from being in this shape, as the statute does not prescribe any shape, but they are easily folded in such a manner as to render it impossible for the closest observer to tell of what shape the paper is when spread out to its full size, and the spirit and intention of the law are not violated by their use, or the secrecy of the ballot, or independence of the voter interfered with by their use. In Owens v. State, 64 Tex. 500, ballots were objected to because headed Election Ticket, and others because the names of the candidates for president and vice-president, and the counties where the presidential electors resided were printed on them. The ballots were declared legal, the court holding the statute to have been intended to secure the secrecy of the ballot, and to preserve the voter from undue influence or restraint in voting; and that all statutes tending to limit the citizen in his exercise of this right should be liberally construed in his favor; that by the word “device,” the statute meant some figure, mark, ornament, emblem, or cypher which would distinguish the ticket from others cast at the election; that the word “device,” which did not include “the residence of the candidates, for that may be stated for their better identification,” nor the names of the candidates for president and vice president, “for they are indirectly supported by voting for the electors,” and that the words “election ticket” printed on the inside, folded as the ballots usually are, furnished no means of distinguishing the ballots from others in the box, it being a mere description of what follows, and as it would be lawful under the strict letter of the statute to place the words “Republican Ticket,” or “Democratic Ticket,” on them it could not be seen how the spirit of the law could be violated by "the mere change of one word in the heading of the ballot." In Williams v. State, 69 Tex. 868, the words "Democratic Ticket" were printed at the head of the ballot, followed by the names of several candidates for state offices, while about its centre were the words "People's Ticket," followed by the names of the opposing or People's candidates for county offices, and it was held that the ticket came within the letter of the law allowing "the name of the political party whose candidates are on the ticket" to be placed on it.

The Mississippi Statute, § 187, Code of 1890, is that "all ballots shall be written or printed with black ink, with a space of not less than one fifth of an inch between each name, on plain white news printing paper, not more than two and one half, nor less than two and one fourth inches wide, without any device or mark by which one ticket may be known or distinguished from another except the words at the head of the tickets; but this shall not prohibit the erasure, correction, or insertion of any name by pencil mark or ink upon the face of the ballot; and a ticket different from that herein prescribed shall not be received or counted." In Oglesby v. Sigman, 58 Miss. 502, certain ballots had on their face and under the heading "Republican National Ticket," a printer's line or "dash-rule" of slightly ornamental character, and at three other distinct places under a name, a dash-rule, two of them being less fancy than the first mentioned, and the other being plain, and it was held that they vitiated the ballots, and that the effect of the statute was to condemn as illegal and not to be received or counted any ballot which has on its face or back any device or mark other than the names of the persons to be voted for, and "the words at the head of the ticket" by which one ticket may be distinguished from another. As to this case, see, however, Lynch v. Chalmers, 6 Cong. Elect. Cas. 888; 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 850, 419. In Steele v. Calhoun, 61 Miss. 556, a printer's dotted line between the last office named on it, and the preceding name, was held to invalidate the ballot, the court affirming that it was not permitted to distinguish between the different devices or marks which may be put on ballots. In the same state certain tickets were rejected in making the count because the names of candidates for the Legislature were found to be less than one fifth of an inch apart, and this action was affirmed in Perkins v. Carraway, 59 Miss. 222.

Section 5493 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1879, after stating that the ballot should be a white piece of paper on which shall be written or printed the names of the persons voted for, provides that such "ballot shall not bear upon it any device whatever, nor shall there be any writing or printing thereon except the names of persons and the designations of the offices to be filled, leaving a margin on either side of the printed matter for substituting names. Each ballot may bear a plain written or printed caption thereon expressing its political character, but on all such ballots the caption or headlines shall not in any manner be designed to mislead the voter as to the name or names thereunder. Any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent and the same shall not be counted." In Shields v. McGregor, 91 Mo. 534, a case in which the feature of headlines was involved, it is said that the statute was passed in view of the well-known fact that ballots are in general previously printed, and circulated on election day by committees of persons appointed by the respective political parties, or by those who advocate the election of certain parties, and it was held that the purpose of the law was to prohibit the use of a caption calculated to induce the elector to conclude, from an inspection of the caption or headlines only, that the persons thereunder named are of his political persuasion when they, or any of them, in fact, are not; that headlines were not prohibited by the statute, but were permitted by it, yet when used they must tell the truth; that the statute fixed an absolute rule of evidence, and declares the prohibited ballots fraudulent, without regard to the fact whether they did in reality deceive the elector or not. See also Turner v. Drake, 71 Mo. 285. In State v. Watson, 9 Mo. App. 593, a ballot having the words "and collector," after "sheriff," thus, "sheriff and collector," was held to be good, and counted, the sheriff being also ex officio collector of taxes.

An Ohio statute provided for a single ballot on plain white paper without any device or mark of any description to distinguish one ticket from another, or by which one ticket may be known from another by its appearance, except the words at the head of the ticket; "and whenever any ballot, with a certain designated heading, shall contain printed thereon, in place of another, any name not found on the regular ballot having such heading, such name so found shall be regarded by the judges of election as having been placed there for the purpose of fraud, and such ballot shall not count for the name so found" yet it was held in Roller v. Truesdale, 26 Ohio St. 586, that the provision quoted did not exclude from being counted names of candidates for county offices nominated by a local party organization and printed on a ticket properly designated as a county ticket, although such ticket was printed on and made part of a ballot which contains also the names of candidates nominated by another party for state and district offices with words at the head thereof intended to distinguish it from other tickets for state and district offices, the local organization having no state and district organization or candidates, but its members adhering, some to the Democratic and others to the Republican state and district organizations.

A Statute of Connecticut, enacted in 1889, provides: (sec. 1) that the ballots shall be printed on plain white paper furnished by the secretary of state, as therein provided, and that "such ballots shall be of uniform size, color, quality, and thickness, for each ballot of the same class, to be determined by the secretary. In addition to the official indorsement, the ballots shall contain only the names of the candidates, the office voted for, and the political party issuing the same. The name of the party issuing the ballot, the title of the office voted for, and the name of the candidates, shall be printed straight across the face of the ballot in black ink, and in type of uniform size, to be prescribed by the secretary of the state at least sixty days before any election held under this Act." And (sec. 9): " . . . If any envelope or ballot shall contain any mark or device so that the same may be identified in such manner as to indicate who might have cast the same, it shall not be counted, but shall be kept by the moderator and returned to the town clerk in a separate package from the ballots which are counted at such election." And (sec. 12) that, "all ballots cast in violation of the foregoing provisions, or which do not conform to the foregoing requirements shall be void and not counted; provided, however, that any voter may alter or change his ballot by erasing any name therefrom, or by inserting in place of any name thereon, in writing or by paster, the name of any person for any office to be voted for thereon other than the person thereon named for such office." At an election under this statute there were regular ballots provided which were prepared and issued by the Republican, the Democratic, and the Prohibition parties respectively, these parties being organized and known by the names stated, and each party placing its name at the head of the ballot issued by it. In addition to these ballots, a ballot was issued by the Republican party which had at its head the word "Citizens," in the place of "Republican," but was in all other respects the same as the Republican ballots mentioned above. In Talcott v. Philbrick, 59 Conn. 473, it is observed, upon the part of the majority of the court: "The question relates not to the paper, but to the printing or writing thereon. Four things only are allowable: the official indorsement, the names of the candidates, the office voted for, and the name of the political party issuing the ballot. . . . Does such ballot conform to the statute? The ballot does not speak the truth. It purports to have been issued by a Citizens' party, but it was in fact issued by the Republican party. It implies that there was a Citizens' party, but there was not. So if the argument that the name of the party issuing the ballot may be omitted altogether, is sound, it will hardly justify a misrepresentation. . . . The clause, 'the ballots shall contain only the names of the candidates, the office voted for, and the name of the political party issuing the same,' if construed by itself, might be regarded as permissive and not mandatory. What is the ballot? It consists, not merely of the paper of the prescribed size and quality, but also of the required printing thereon. No part may be omitted. If the name of the party may be omitted, so may the name of the candidate or office. If either of the last two is left out, its validity as a ballot is destroyed. . . . But this clause cannot be construed by itself; it must be taken in connection with other parts of the Act. The next sentence of the same section is mandatory in terms. . . . It will hardly do to say that the statute means that these three things" (those stated in such "next sentence") shall be printed, if printed at all. That is an interpolation inconsistent with the spirit and object of the Act. The proviso in the twelfth section is significant. No other erasure or writing is allowed. If any other writing is allowed, other provisions of the statute are rendered nugatory and meaningless. The ballots were held to be illegal (two of the five justices dissenting).

18 L. R. A.

In Fields v. Osborne, 60 Conn. 544, 12 L. R. A. 551, a Republican caucus adjourned for the purpose of forming a Citizens' caucus. Thereupon ten or fifteen Democrats who were present, but had not participated in the proceedings, came forward and acted with the Republicans, about fifty in number, who were present, in nominating a Citizens' ticket, the candidates upon which were taken from both parties. A collection was taken for the expense of printing the tickets. No steps were taken to effect a permanent organization of a citizens' party, or to provide for its further existence. The Republican party issued no tickets, and no ballots were used at the election except those headed "Democratic Ticket," and "Citizens' Ticket." The decision was that the Citizens' tickets were issued by a political party, within the meaning of the statute. In the same case the words "For Judge of Probate, Henry H. Stedman," appeared at the bottom of the Citizens' tickets in question, the selection of such officer at the election in question not being authorized, although the Citizens' caucus had made the nomination indicated by the ballot: and on the Democratic ballot after "For town clerk," an officer to be chosen at such election, the words "and ex officio registrar of births, marriages and deaths," appeared. The words on the Citizens' ticket and those italicized as being on the Democratic ballots were held to avoid the ballots. "If," says the court, "it was doubtful whether the Act applied to them, if their legality depended upon a construction of the meaning or the language of the Act, our duty might not be plain. If they could be held to fall within the prohibition of any mark or device contained in the ninth section, instead of within the express prohibition of the first section, then it would be our duty to inquire whether they constituted a mark or device by which the ballot might be identified in such manner as to indicate who might have cast the same. But no. A plain provision of the law is violated in a point concerning which the Act does not authorize us to inquire into the extent or the consequences of the violation. In short, the Legislature has seen fit to say that if a ballot contains the addition to its specified contents which these do, it shall be void. . . . In regard to provisions which are plain on their face which are not dependent upon the question of good faith or the actual or possible result of disregarding them, we can only say, as in Talcott v. Philbrick, the Legislature has spoken, and obedience is our first and only duty. It is at liberty to throw around the ballot box such safeguards and regulations as it may deem proper, and it is the duty of the citizen to conform thereto. Some inconvenience is not too great a price to pay for an honest and pure ballot."

In the same case, Fields v. Osborne, the Democratic ballots were also objected to because the word "For" was printed on each of them before the name of every office printed on them. "If it was plain and clear," says the court, "that the Act in limiting the contents of the ballot to the official indorsement, the names of the candidates, the name of the political party issuing the same, and the office voted for, prohibited the use of the word 'For' before the title of the office, we should be bound upon the principles herein already recognized as sound, to declare the ballots void for that reason. But that the statute so intended is not plain and clear. On the contrary, the language is ambiguous. There is room for honest and intelligent men to differ." Having referred to former instances in which the same word had been similarly used and to the fact that the Republican ballots in this very case contained it, and as confirmatory that the language of the Act was ambiguous it is said: "If ambiguous it is the proper subject of construction. In discharging the duty of construing it so that the voter shall not be deprived of his vote except upon a plain and unambiguous provision of the law, we feel bound to hold that the Act does not in terms and expressly, nor by necessary construction, prohibit the use of the word 'For' before the title to the office. It follows therefore that neither its use nor the failure to use it necessarily and of itself invalidates a ballot. The question of illegality is remitted to the ninth section of the Act. If the regular ballots issued by a political party contain the word 'For' before the title of the offices therein named, then it cannot be held to be a 'mark or device' so that the same may be identified in such manner as to indicate who might have cast the same, and therefore it is not obnoxious to that provision. If the regular ballots of a political party omit the word 'For,' in the connection stated, then the use of the word on some of the ballots cast, inasmuch as it would be a mark or device by which the same might be identified, would be illegal. Each case must be governed by its own circumstances and decided as a question of fact upon the principles herein stated. Upon the facts in this case we hold that the ballots in question were not illegal and void because of the use of the word 'For.'"

These decisions all recognize either expressly or by implication the right of the Legislature to make reasonable regulations as to ballots, to the end of preserving the purity of elections and the independence of the voter. In the Ohio case, Roller v. Truesdale, it is said: "The propriety of excluding from the count fraudulent votes is conceded by all. We also concede the power of the Legislature to declare a rule of evidence by which fraud in a particular case shall be conclusively established without inquiring into the fact whether it did or did not exist. Such rule is declared by this statute and must be enforced. . . . The purposes intended were: (1) the prevention of actual fraud in procuring an elector to vote unintentionally for a candidate whose name is not on the regular ballot of his party; and (2), to remove inducements for attempting such fraud, by declaring that a name so printed in a regular ballot, instead of the regular candidate shall not be counted. Such wrong and such remedy were the full measure of the legislative intention." See also Shields v. McGregor, supra, and State v. McKinnon, 8 Or. 499, 500.

It is always a question whether statutory provisions like the one in question are directory or mandatory. In State v. McKinnon, supra, where the statute provided that the ballot should be on plain white paper without any mark or designation, and a ballot on colored paper was rejected as illegal, it was said that although the authorities cited against the rejection of the ballot sufficiently illustrated the principle governing the construction of statutes defining the duties of public officers as to their being mandatory or directory and the reluctance of the courts to construe statutes providing the manner of elections so as to defeat the public will as expressed through the ballot box, they disclosed one instance where a voter had been accorded the privilege of disregarding a plain provision of law intended to promote the purity and secure the independence of elections, even in depositing his vote. And in McCrary on Elections, § 501, where the decision of People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 492, 60 Am. Dec. 769, holding, (under a statute enacting that the ballot should be on "white paper without any marks or figures thereon intended to distinguish one ballot from another,") that ballots printed on common ruled foolscap paper of a blueish tinge were legal; that the paper was white within the meaning of the statute, and was used accidentally and that the ruled lines were not placed there for the purpose of distinguishing the ballots, is referred to as having been decided upon the ground that the paper was not used with an intent to violate the statute, it is said: It is quite clear that where a statute distinctly declares that ballots having distinguishing marks upon them shall not be received, or shall be rejected, it should be construed as mandatory, and not simply directory. And in the next succeeding section the same author says that if a statute prohibits the marking of ballots so that they may be distinguished by others than the voter and declares such ballots void, there is good reason for construing it as mandatory.

In our judgment the statutory provision under discussion is mandatory. Its purpose was that any ballot having any feature clearly prohibited by it should be deemed illegal, and not be treated as the lawful expression of an elector's will. To the extent that the lawmakers have gone, it is a valid regulation of the right to exercise the elective franchise. Viewing it in the light of the practical working of elections in so far as the preparation and distribution of ballots go, we see in it nothing amounting to an unconstitutional restriction of the right to vote.

The object intended to be effected was the independence of the voter, and this was sought to be secured by prescribing to a certain extent the form of the ballot, and excluding from it whatever was within the prohibition of the provision, and thereby securing the secrecy of the ballot; inviolable secrecy as to the person for whom an elector may vote, being the material guarantee of the constitutional mandate that voting at popular elections shall be by ballot. State v. Anderson, 26 Fla. 240, 259. The nearer the lawful approach to a perfect uniformity of ballots, the more perfect is the secrecy of the ballot, and consequently the independence of the voter secured. The greater the uniformity, the less the possibility of distinguishing marks.

It is, however, not to be lost sight of that a ballot will never be vitiated by anything which is not clearly within the prohibiting words and meaning of the statute. The elector should not be deprived of his vote through mere inference, but only upon the clear expression of the law. In Com. v. Woolper, supra, it is said: "The case is certainly within the words of the law. The ticket had something more than names on them, but is it within the meaning of the law? I think so." In State v. Phillips, 68 Tex. 390, 51 Am. Rep. 646, it is said that the decisions rather tend to restrict the exceptions which exclude a ballot than to extend them, and to admit the ballots if the spirit and intention of the law is not violated, although a liberal construction would violate it. The result as shown by the tickets deposited by legal electors must not be set aside except for causes plainly within the purview of the law; and, in Owens v. State, 64 Tex. 500, the doctrine asserted is that all statutes tending to limit the citizen in the exercise of the right to vote should be liberally construed in his favor. This is the rule by which, in our judgment, the statutory provision before us is to be judged, and its meaning arrived at and enforced. It is illustrated by the foregoing decisions of the Supreme Court of Indiana. In these cases, though the language of the statute excluding "distinguishing marks or other embellishments," did not confine such exclusion to the back of the ballots, yet as the inspectors were not given power to reject or refuse to count any ballot which had found its way into the ballot box, but were authorized only to refuse all ballots offered of any other description, the statute was construed to have been intended only to protect the voter against having the nature of his vote detected, before his ballot went into the box, through its color, or some distinguishing mark thereon, by other persons who might be seeking to control him through intimidation, or otherwise, and that this purpose could be attained as effectually as was possible to legislative enactment by securing uniform external appearance, and hence that distinguishing marks on the inside or face of the ballot could not be held to be within the purpose or purview of the statute. And it was also held that the ballots were good, even where the printing of the words on the inside was such as to be visible on the outside, and were even actually seen by the inspectors, and that where a ballot was within the letter of the statute, it was not to be rejected, even though it had distinguishing marks.

And the rule stated above is perhaps more fully applied in the cases from Texas, referred to above. The effect of these Texas cases is that the word "device," associated as it is with the words "picture, sign, vignette, and stamp mark," is on account of such association, to be construed to have meant some "figure, mark, ornament, emblem or cypher," which would distinguish the ticket from others cast at the election, and not to include the shape of the ticket, the residence of candidates, nor the names of candidates for president and vice-president, nor the words, "Election ticket," nor the words, "People's ticket," printed about the middle of a ticket. There cannot be any doubt that the rhomboid shape or any of these words was equally as efficient an agent for identifying a ballot as an eagle, a crescent, a flag, a square, or compass, flowers, leaves and tendrils, or enigmatical characters would have been. The question, What is within the prohibition? necessarily includes that of, "What is the prohibition?" and to answer the question whether or not the ballots assailed in this action are within the prohibition of the Act of 1897, we must determine what is its prohibition. There is no question as to the paper being white or clear and even cut. We have seen what the rule is as to what may be called the different shades of white. This case turns upon the words "without ornament, designation, mutilation, symbol or mark of any kind whatever, except the name or names of the person or persons voted for, and the office to which such person or persons are intended to be chosen." It is entirely clear that the words "National Republican Ticket," and those of "Free Suffrage Ticket," printed as they are in type of the same size as the names or style of the offices voted for, and in the same plain Roman letters, are not ornaments, nor mutilations, nor a symbol. Are they designations or marks? The term "designation," if it stood alone, might necessarily mean any designation of a ballot, as Democratic, Republican, Prohibition, or by other appellation. The meaning of designation, as found in the dictionaries, includes appellation; it, according to Webster, is: "that which designates; distinctive title; appellation." According to Worcester its meaning is: "that which serves to distinguish;" but the distinctive title, or name, or appellation definition, as distinguished from the meaning of distinguishing by marks, is not within the meaning of the word as it is here used. This is shown by the use of the words "ornaments, mutilation, symbol," and particularly, in conjunction with them, those of "or mark of any kind whatsoever." Ornaments, mutilations, and symbols are marks as distinguished from words or sentences, or appellations, or distinctive titles, and not only do they indicate that it is in this character the term "designation" is used, but the terminal expression, "or mark of any kind whatsoever," shows both that the Legislature understood itself as meaning, by the associated use of each and all the preceding terms, including that of "designation," things in the nature of marks as distinguished from words or writings, and as intending by these terminal words to prohibit any other thing in the like nature of a mark. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to go beyond the distinctive character of the specific words, it would not have confined its concluding prohibiting words to marks, or any particular class of things, but would have used some general expression like "or anything whatsoever." As it is, the word "designation" is the only one in the group which is not confined in its meaning to the classification of marks, or that can include in its meaning words or appellations, and this being so, it must, unless there is something in the statute to prevent it, be construed to have been used as meaning only such designations as are in the nature of marks, which meaning is unquestionably included in the definition of the word.

Is there anything in the section, or in the statute, to preclude or defeat this construction? The first suggestion is, that the words, "except the name or names of the person or persons voted for, and the office to which such person or persons are intended to be chosen," have this effect. If so, it is because they are made an exception to what would be prohibited by the preceding words, but for such exception. Upon both reason and authority we do not think this position tenable. The names of the persons voted for, and of the offices which it is proposed they shall fill, are not within the prohibitory words, and would not be if the section contained nothing that follows the word "whatsoever," or, in other words, only contained what precedes the word "except." Though the provisions following the word "whatsoever," are in form of an exception seeming to exclude them from the effect of preceding words, they are in fact not within the meaning or purpose of these words. Not only was it not the purpose of these words to exclude from the ballot the names of the persons and offices, but as we have shown above, nothing is within their purpose or effect but things in the nature of marks, as distinguished from words or appellations. This same point was practically involved in the Texas cases. There the ballot was, under the statute, to be "without any picture, sign, vignette, device or stamp mark, except the name of the political party whose candidates are on the ticket." Still it was held that the prohibitory words preceding the word "except," meant only some figure, mark, ornament, emblem or cypher, and did not include the residence of candidates, nor the names of candidates for president and vice-president, nor even the words "People's Ticket," written about the middle of a ballot having the heading: "Democratic Ticket." The very same form of expression used in our statute is to be found in the Indiana statute, supra. In Missouri the statutory provision was that the ballot "shall not bear upon it any device whatever, nor shall there be any writing or printing thereon, except the names of persons, and the designation of the offices to be filled," yet allowed truthful captions; still when a sheriff was ex officio collector, a ballot having the words "sheriff and collector" on it, was held to violate the law.

Nor do we think there is in any other part of the statute anything that can be successfully invoked to overcome the views announced above as to the effect of the prohibitory clause. The only other feature that seems worthy of consideration in this connection is the concluding clause of the section under discussion, which clause is in these words: "and no ballot of any other description shall be counted." In the Texas statute it was provided that "any ticket not in conformity with the above shall not be counted in counting the votes;" while the Missouri statute enacted that "any ballot not conforming to the provisions of this chapter shall be considered fraudulent, and shall not be counted." These provisions merely announce the consequences to attend a ballot which is in violation of the statute; they do not add to, or take from, those provisions which prescribe or regulate the ballot; it is by the latter, and not the former, that we determine what can and cannot be on a ballot without violating the law.

We fail to find in the decisions falling under our observation, unless it be those in Connecticut, anything which conflicts with the conclusion indicated above. There is certainly nothing in the Pennsylvania and California cases; on the contrary, that of Coffey v. Edmonds, 58 Cal. 521, might be cited as affirmatively supporting our views. In the two Mississippi cases involving the statutory provision as to "any device or mark," the printer's dash-line, on account of which the ballots were held illegal, were clearly "marks." We are not called upon to decide between the conclusion of that court in the third case, Perkins v. Carraway, 59 Miss. 222, and the views of the California court in Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 898, as to the very slight departure from the prescribed space between names on a ballot. In the Connecticut case, the court puts the rejection of the ballot which contained the name of a candidate and office not the subject of choice at the election in question, and the one which had on it the ex officio duty of the town clerk, on the plain prohibition of the statute, that "in addition to the official indorsement, the ballot shall contain only the names of the candidates, the office voted for, and the political party issuing the same, as to which, in the opinion of the court, there was no room for construction, or judicial power to inquire into the extent or consequences of a violation. We do not say that this conclusion, at least in so far as the "ex officio" feature of one of the ballots, is not in conflict with the Missouri case of State v. Watson, supra. In the case of Fields v. Osborne, supra, we find that the Connecticut court in deciding, under the same provision of the statute, a question as to the effect of the use of the word "For," before the name of the office, admits that the statute was not plain and clear, but that its language was ambiguous, and recognizing the rule upon which we stand and have asserted above—that in such cases the duty is to construe “so that the voter will not be deprived of his vote except upon a plain and unambiguous provision of the law—” and it held that the provision referred to did not either in terms and expressly, or by necessary construction prohibit such use of the stated word. It further held, however, that the word used as it was in all the tickets of the same class was not within the “mark or device” provision of the Act, yet expressed the opinion that it would have been if some of them had had it, and others had not. In this last expression of opinion as to what might or would be the law under certain facts alone, and not in anything decided as to a case actually before it, is there even any seeming conflict between our own conclusion and that of the Connecticut court. It is apparent that the statute of that state goes much further than ours, and that in ours there is much more room for construction, and we find in the expression of that court: nothing in view of our statute and the authorities upon which we rest, to shake the conclusion we have reached.

Our conclusion is that the ballots assailed are legal, and that it is the respondent, and not the relator, who was duly chosen to the office in question at the election in 1888; and further, as held in a former opinion in this cause, that though the respondent did not, for the reasons there indicated, qualify and receive his commission under that election, he has, in the absence of an appointment by the governor since the commencement of the new term, continued to be clerk of the circuit court of Hernando county by virtue of his former commission, under section 14 of article 16 of the Constitution. State v. Sazon, 25 Fla. 792.

Judgment will be entered for the respondent. Mr. Justice Taylor dissents.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

CLEVELAND, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO
& ST. LOUIS R. CO., Appt.,

v.

Victor M. BACKUS, Treasurer of Marion County.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Railway companies are persons within the provisions of the 14th Amendment of U. S. Const., § 1, relating to due process of law, and the equal protection of the laws.
2. The Indiana state board of tax commissioners for the assessment of railroad property has the same power in relation to the property and assessment over which it has jurisdiction that is possessed by county boards as to hearing grievances and making corrections.
3. Courts will look to all parts of a statute to determine the legislative purpose and intent.
4. Courts will presume the Legislature intended a statute to be reasonable, constitutional, and just.
5. A statute which will admit of two interpretations, one valid and the other invalid, will receive the interpretation sustaining its validity.
6. An entire statute must be construed together and effect given to every part of it, if this can be done without manifestly violating the intent of the Legislature.
7. A railroad company is not denied the equal protection of the laws in the assessment of its property because original jurisdiction of the assessment and valuation is given to a state board of tax commissioners, which has power to hear grievances and make corrections, instead of being given in the first instance to a county board, as in the case of other property, with the right of appeal to the state board.

8. A law which applies alike to all persons under like circumstances and conditions does not deny to any the equal protection of the laws.

9. Due process of law in the assessment of railroad property is not denied to railway companies by a law making the assessment of a state board of tax commissioners final where it allows after assessment a correction in assessments and valuation on the showing of a railroad company, or on motion of the board itself.

10. A constitutional provision for uniform and equal taxation is complied with in respect to railroad property when the same basis of assessment is fixed for all such property and the same rate fixed for all property in any district subject to taxation.

11. Providing for the assessment of railroad property by a state board while other property is assessed by local boards does not violate a constitutional provision giving the Legislature power to “prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation.”

12. Sufficient notice of the assessment of railroad property is given by the law regulating the assessment where the statute itself fixes the time of the meeting for grievances and corrections and also requires each company to furnish a schedule of its property for use in the assessment.

13. Courts have no power to give any relief against erroneous assessments of boards whose assessments for taxation are made final by statute.

14. A statute providing that the rolling stock of a railroad company shall be listed and taxed in the several counties, etc., in the proportion that the main track in such county bears to the total length of the main track does not impose double taxation on the ground that values of rolling stock taxable in a notable one in respect to the number and importance of the questions decided by it on this subject.

NOTE.—The assessment and taxation of railroads was treated in a note to Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 2 L. R. A. 188. The above case is 18 L. R. A.

other states are imported into the state for the purpose of taxation.

15. The cost of the construction of a railroad and the equipment thereof, the market value of its stocks and bonds, and its gross and net earnings, with all other matters appertaining thereto that will assist in arriving at a true cash value of the property, are proper for consideration in determining the value of the railroad property for taxation.
16. Interstate commerce is not taxed by a state tax on the track of a railroad company within the state and a proportionate part of its rolling stock.
17. Members of a state board of taxation are not judicial officers within a constitutional provision requiring judicial officers to be elected by the people.

(February 3, 1893.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County refusing to enjoin the collection of certain taxes which had been assessed against the plaintiff company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Baker & Daniels, with Mr. John T. Dye, for appellant:

I. The Act of March 6, 1891, is a violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to one class the equal protection of the laws granted to all other persons against erroneous, unjust, and illegal assessments of the value of property upon which taxes are to be laid, in that it grants to all persons the right or privilege to be heard before some tribunal authorized to correct errors or give appropriate relief concerning the correctness or legality of assessments or inequalities in the same, or mistakes of fact or law, or illegal conduct of those charged with the duty of making the same, after the original assessments have been made, and before they become final and conclusive, as a protection against burdens imposed by such mistakes and errors; but as to railway companies the Act utterly denies all protection whatever against the same burdens against which others are protected.

Railroad corporations are persons within the intent of the clause in section 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which forbids a state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 118 U. S. 896, 80 L. ed. 118, 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 182; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 27, 32 L. ed. 585; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650.

The 14th Amendment of the Constitution in declaring that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the "equal protection of the laws," imposes a limitation upon the exercise of all the powers of the state which can touch the individual or his property, including among them that of taxation.

San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 7 Sawy. 517, 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 1; Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. supra.

The constitutional guaranty of equal protection 18 L. R. A.

tion under the laws not only extends to taxation, but embraces the entire process, and includes the assessment of the valuation of property, as well as the rate of percentage charged thereon.

Ibid.; Scott v. Toledo, 86 Fed. Rep. 397; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, supra.

The 14th Amendment means that no person, or class of persons, shall be denied the same protection of the laws that is enjoyed by other persons or classes in the same place under like circumstances.

Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 31, 25 L. ed. 992; Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 28 L. ed. 543; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 28 L. ed. 550; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 357, 30 L. ed. 225.

The denial to one class of the right to resort to any tribunal to correct mistakes of law or fact, or of judgment in the assessment of values for taxation, after the original assessment has been made, when such right is by law granted to all other classes, is a denial of the equal protection of the law.

San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. and Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. supra; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 816, 35 L. ed. 419; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, and Scott v. Toledo, supra.

Citizens cannot be classified so as to be denied equal protection of the law.

Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511.

In Indiana, under a law providing for the levy of taxes upon property according to its assessed value, there can be no classification subjecting certain classes of property directly or indirectly to a higher rate of assessment than other property.

Ind. Const. art. 10, § 1.

The question as to unequal protection in denying to a class an opportunity to question the correctness of an assessment after it is made, and before it becomes final and conclusive, cannot arise in states where a mode is secured of confirming or contesting the charge imposed in ordinary courts of justice, before it becomes final.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97-104, 24 L. ed. 616-619; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414; Scott v. Toledo, supra; Garvin v. Dausman, 114 Ind. 429; Lent v. Tillson, supra.

Any proceeding, the result of which is to deprive the owner of his property, or to impose upon or create a charge against it, and which is carried on under a law which makes no provision for notice, and offers the owner no opportunity to be heard concerning the correctness of the assessment, whether the amount charged against him or his property was ascertained and apportioned in good faith, and in the manner provided by law, is a contravention of the Constitution, and lacks the essential elements of due process of law.

Garvin v. Dausman, and Lent v. Tillson, supra.

II. The board considered and estimated, and included and blended, in the valuation of appellant's property returned by it, values not within its jurisdiction.

Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394, 80 L. ed. 118; California v. Central Pac. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1, 83 L. ed. 150.

This board "fixed the values of the respective railroads and parts of roads" within the state of Indiana for taxation.

a. The board certifies: "Making liberal allowances for all proper deductions, the state board of tax commissioners has fixed the values of the respective railroads and parts of roads within the state of Indiana for taxation on the first day of April, 1891, as hereinbefore set forth. In arriving at the basis for the estimate of said values, the board has considered the cost of the construction and equipment of said roads, the market value of the stocks and bonds, and the gross and net earnings of each of said roads, and all other matters appertaining thereto that would assist the board in arriving at a true cash value of the same,"—that is, "railroads and parts of roads."

b. This certificate is conclusive that the value which the board agreed upon and returned was the value of the respective "railroads and parts of roads," and includes other property besides "railroad track" and "rolling stock."

Cooley, Taxn. 418; Van Rensselaer v. Witbeck, 7 N. Y. 517; Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 Mich. 422; Clark v. Orans, 5 Mich. 151, 71 Am. Dec. 776; Colby v. Russell, 8 Me. 227; Foxcroft v. Nevins, 4 Me. 72; Johnson v. Goodridge, 15 Me. 29; Kellar v. Savage, 20 Me. 199; Hinckley v. Cooper, 23 Hun, 253; Westfall v. Preston, 49 N. Y. 849; State Auditor v. Jackson County, 65 Ala. 142; Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 Mich. 158.

"Words are to be taken according to their customary, not their original or classical signification."

Lieber, Hermeneutics, p. 144; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. pp. 198, 220, 224, 247; Evansville, I. & C. S. L. R. Co. v. Meeds, 11 Ind. 274; Plumer v. Marathon County Supra, 46 Wis. 163; Scheiber v. Kaehler, 49 Wis. 291.

c. It is also conclusive that they did not assess "railroad track" and "rolling stock" at its true cash value, but assessed railroads and parts of roads for purposes of taxation.

As to the meaning of the word "railroad," see also—

Dunn's Science of Taxation, 19; Wood, Railway Law, pp. 815, 770, 955, 1618, 1640, 1641, 1634; Jones, Railroad Securities, §§ 124, 125, 131; Illinois M. R. Co. v. Barnett, 85 Ill. 318; Coe v. McBrown, 22 Ind. 255; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Lesueur (Ariz.), 1 L. R. A. 244, 87 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 370; Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 89 Ky. 184, 37 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 419; South Nashville St. R. Co. v. Morrow, 3 L. R. A. 853, 87 Tenn. 406, 39 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 521; State Railroad Tax Case, 92 U. S. 586, 605, 23 L. ed. 663, 670; Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 8987, 3938, 3941, 3953; Act of March 6, 1861, § 81; Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Kliner, 69 Ind. 71; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Lafayette, 22 Ind. 269.

III. The state board of tax commissioners—acting by and in virtue of their public position under the state government, in the name of and for the state, and clothed with the state's power, in making the valuation of appellant's property upon which taxes were to be laid—denied to appellant due process of law.

Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 847, 25 L. ed. 679; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 378, 80 L. ed. 237, and cases cited.

What the law denounces when done by a body whose errors and mistakes can be corrected, becomes more odious, as it is more dangerous, when done by a tribunal whose errors cannot be questioned except for fraud or want of jurisdiction.

Lewis, Em. Dom. 420; Peasey v. Wolfborough, 87 N. H. 286; Patten's Petition, 16 N. H. 277; Harris v. Woodstock, 27 Conn. 567; Lennox v. Knox & L. R. Co. 62 Me. 322; Moshier v. Shear, 102 Ill. 169, 40 Am. Rep. 578; Johnson v. Holyoke Water Power Co. 107 Mass. 478.

To sustain such action would be to sanction and justify the means by which the whole system of making final and conclusive assessments of railroad property would be perverted and corrupted.

Moshier v. Shear, supra.

IV. The Act of March 6, 1891, denies due process of law to railroad companies in the assessment of railroad property in this, that it denies them:

1. An opportunity to be heard.

2. In an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case.

3. In which they can defend, enforce, and protect their rights.

4. And in which they can prove any fact according to the usages of the common law which would be a protection to their property, before the change is made final and conclusive.

Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 709, 28 L. ed. 572; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 188, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Campbell v. Dwiggins, 83 Ind. 481; Garvin v. Dausman, 114 Ind. 429; State v. Dodge County, 20 Neb. 595; People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 111; Patten v. Green, 18 Cal. 829; Darling v. Gunn, 50 Ill. 424; Cleghorn v. Postlewaite, 48 Ill. 428; Griffin v. Mizon, 38 Miss. 424; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 628; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 80 L. ed. 230; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 184 U. S. 418, 38 L. ed. 970; San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 7 Sawy. 517, 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 87; Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394, 30 L. ed. 118, 13 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 182; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 773; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 816, 35 L. ed. 419.

The court erred in excluding evidence as to value of appellant's "railroad track."

Cummings v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 155, 156, 25 L. ed. 904; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cole, 75 Ill. 594.

Messrs. A. G. Smith, Atty-Gen., John W. Kern, Albert J. Beveridge, W. A. Ketcham and A. C. Ayres, with Messrs. Clappool & Clappool, for appellee:

The provisions of the Tax Law of 1891, now questioned for the first time, have been in force from thirty-four to forty years. This ought to be conclusive as to their constitution-ality, certainly so far as alleged to be against our state Constitution.

State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 276; Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 188; Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 277; Briccos v. Bank of Kentucky, 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 257, 9 L. ed. 709; People v. Marshall, 6 Ill. 672.

County district and state boards of equalization have in this state always been created by acts making certain officers ex officio members of such board—the boards at different times being created by making different officers members of the board. These boards have often been vested with original and final jurisdiction.

Tax Law of June 21, 1852, 1 Gavin & Hord, 85, § 58; Act of May 23, 1852, 1 Gavin & Hord, 830, §§ 2, 5, 7; Tax Law of December 21, 1872, Acts p. 67, §§ 150, 284; Tax Law of March 29, 1881, Rev. Stat. § 6402.

The present mode of assessing and apportioning "railroad track" and "rolling stock" among counties, and the same difference in the mode of assessing such property and other property, had its inception, in this state, under Act of December 21, 1852, and has continued ever since under the provision of every tax law.

Acts 1852, § 6, pt. 2, 1 Gavin & Hord, 85; Act 1872, p. 57, Returns, §§ 71-77, 79, 81; Act 1872, Assessment, §§ 284, 291; Act 1881, Rev. Stat. 1881, Returns, §§ 6360-6369, 6371; Act 1881, Rev. Stat. 1881, Assessments, §§ 6402, 6410; Act 1891, p. 199, Returns, §§ 76-85, 87; Acts 1891, Assessment, §§ 129, 187.

And the law of Illinois, a similar law, has been decided constitutional.

State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. ed. 663.

The Indiana and Illinois statutes each name the time and place of the meeting of the state boards and no provision is made for the giving of other notice. This is all the notice "that due process of law" requires.

Cooley, Taxation, pp. 861, 865; State Railroad Tax Cases, supra; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 519; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414; Smith v. Rude Bros. Mfg. Co. (Ind.) April 8, 1892; Louisville & N. A. R. Co. v. State, 25 Ind. 177, 87 Am. Dec. 358.

The Act of March 6, 1891, respecting taxation, does not, as a matter of law, require any interstate railway corporation to be charged with and pay taxes in Indiana upon the entire "rolling stock" and equipment of their entire interstate lines of railway upon the mileage basis. Even if it did, this would not be taxation of property out of the state. A correct construction of sections 80, 88, and 85 of the Act, by themselves, demonstrates this, and when construed with the remainder of the law, as they must be, leaves no room for controversy.

Act March 6, 1891, §§ 78-80, 83, 85, 120; Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 561; State Railroad Tax Cases, supra; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Surrill, 88 Ill. 535; Potter's Dwart. Stat. pp. 128, 678; Stout v. Grant County Comrs. 107 Ind. 343.

Said Act does not, as a matter of law, require or permit the importation of any value situated in other states for taxation here; its purpose is merely to provide for taxation of certain railroad property within the state, and, to that end, provide means of ascertaining "the true cash value" thereof.

Act March 6, 1891, §§ 78, 83, 85, 120; Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. supra; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Riley County Comrs. 30 Kan. 141; State Railroad Tax Cases and St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Surrill, supra.

Nor, as a matter of fact, did the state board of tax commissioners value and assess any property whatever beyond its jurisdiction. It assessed "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of appellant within the state of Indiana only.

Rapalje & Lawrence, Law Dict.; Anderson, Law Dict.; Black, Law Dict.; Bouvier, Law Dict.; Abbott, Law Dict.; Winfield, Adjudged Words and Phrases.

It is an elementary rule of statutory construction that an evil to be removed and the remedy provided shall be considered.

Miller, Const. p. 82.

The interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution was not intended to prevent the taxation by a state of property within its borders merely because such property was used in interstate commerce.

So that even if it were true that the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of appellants within the state were used in interstate commerce, they would still be liable to taxation by the state.

Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 618; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Hayward, 141 U. S. 86, 35 L. ed. 621.

The Tax Law of the state of Kansas, upheld by above decision.

Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 365, 27 L. ed. 419; Marye v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 127 U. S. 117, 32 L. ed. 94; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 284, 21 L. ed. 164; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Atty-Gen. of Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 580, 31 L. ed. 790; Atty-Gen. of Massachusetts v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 141 U. S. 40, 35 L. ed. 628; Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 143 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 143 U. S. 886, 35 L. ed. 1051; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. ed. 311.

The duties required of and powers conferred upon the board by the Act are not judicial. The board is not a court.

State Tax-Law Cases, 54 Mich. 393; Lygon County Comrs. v. Sergeant, 24 Kan. 572; Wilson v. Price-Raid Auditing Commission of State, 31 Kan. 257; Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 6 Kan. 500; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 64 Mo. 294; Hardenburgh v. Kidd, 10 Cal. 402; State v. Wood, 110 Ind. 82; Langenberg v. Decker (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 108.

The tax commissioners whom the law provides shall be appointed by the governor are properly so appointed.

Ind. Const. art. 5, §§ 16, 18; Ind. Const. art. 15, § 1; State v. Hyde, 18 L. R. A. 79, 129 Ind. 296.

If, however, the Constitution requires said tax commissioners to be elected by the people, as appellant contends, still they would hold their office legally by appointment from the governor until the people elect them.

Ind. Const. art. 5, § 18; Ind. Rev. Stat.

§ 4648; State v. Peelle, 8 L. R. A. 238, 121 Ind. 495; State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 20; State v. Gorby, 122 Ind. 17.

Even if all this were not true, and they were de facto officers and not officers de jure, still, as to third parties and the public, their acts as such officers de facto are valid and binding.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 828 et seq.; Blackman v. State, 12 Ind. 556; Bansomer v. Mace, 18 Ind. 27; Gumberts v. Adams Exp. Co. 28 Ind. 181.

The duties and powers conferred upon the governor, auditor and secretary of state, by said law, are properly so conferred.

State Tax-Law Cases, 54 Mich. 893; Lyon County Comrs. v. Sergeant, 24 Kan. 512; Wilson v. Price-Raid Auditing Commission of State, Auditor of State v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, Hardenburgh v. Kidd, State v. Wood, and Langenberg v. Decker, supra.

Practical construction of similar statutes under our Constitution prove that such powers as are conferred by the tax laws upon the governor, auditor, and secretary of state are properly so conferred.

Hovey v. State, 119 Ind. 886; Bruce v. Schuyler, 9 Ill. 221, 46 Am. Dec. 447; Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 475; Franklin County Comrs. v. Bunting, 111 Ind. 143; Weaver v. Tomplin, 113 Ind. 298, 301; Stuart v. Laird, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 299, 2 L. ed. 115; Martin v. Hunter, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 304, 4 L. ed. 97; Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 213, 290, 6 L. ed. 606, 632; Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 162, 23 L. ed. 627; State v. Parkinson, 5 Nev. 15; Pike v. Megoun, 44 Mo. 491; People v. La Salle County Suprs. 100 Ill. 495; State v. French, 2 Pinn. 181.

The Act of March 6, 1891, is in accord with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States in that:

(1) (a) It does not deprive or permit the deprivation from the owners of railroad property—

1. Without notice, but to the contrary, prescribes and provides for a good and sufficient notice.

2. Without a hearing, but on the contrary, provides a proper and sufficient opportunity to be heard.

Cooley, Const. Lim. chap. 11, p. 480; 2 Hare, Am. Const. Law, p. 836; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623; Martin v. Mott, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 19, 6 L. ed. 537; Ex parte Milligan, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281; Cunningham v. Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 55; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 457, 33 L. ed. 980; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 733, 24 L. ed. 572; Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co. 128 Ind. 835; Hyland v. Central Iron & Steel Co. 13 L. R. A. 515, 129 Ind. 63; Smith v. Rude Bros. Mfg. Co. (Ind.) Apr. 8, 1892; Kuntz v. Sumption, 2 L. R. A. 655, 117 Ind. 1; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 188, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Cooley, Taxn. 364, 365; 1 Desty, Taxn. 599, 600; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Worthen, 7 L. R. A. 374, 52 Ark. 529; Adair v. Lieb, 76 Ill. 198; Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 561; Pacific Hotel Co. v. Lieb, 83 Ill. 608; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Com. 81 Ky. 511; State v.

Bunyon, 41 N. J. L. 104; New York v. Dannenport, 92 N. Y. 610; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. ed. 663; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 381, 29 L. ed. 416; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Boney, 8 L. R. A. 435, 117 Ind. 501; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 64 Mo. 294; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Riley County Comrs. 20 Kan. 141; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Surrell, 88 Ill. 535; Republic L. Ins. Co. v. Pollak, 75 Ill. 298; Oase v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12; Sterling Gas Co. v. Higby, 134 Ill. 563; Illinois & St. L. R. & C. Co. v. Stookey, 122 Ill. 358; Lowell v. Middlesex County Comrs. 9 L. R. A. 356, 152 Mass. 380.

(b.) That it does not deny to the owners of railroad property the equal protection of the laws, but on the contrary sufficiently and amply provides by law for their protection.

State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co. 43 N. J. L. 276; Hovey v. State, 119 Ind. 886; Hovey v. State, Id. 895; Missouri River, S. F. & G. R. Co. v. Morris, 7 Kan. 210; Francis v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 19 Kan. 303; Dubugue v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 196; Louisville & N. A. R. Co. v. State, 25 Ind. 180, 87 Am. Dec. 858; Homes Ins. Co. v. New York, 184 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 184 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 893; State v. Haworth, 7 L. R. A. 240, 123 Ind. 423; Upshur County of W. Va. v. Rich, 185 U. S. 467, 34 L. ed. 196; Low v. Lincoln County Ct. 27 W. Va. 785; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118, 24 L. ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 548; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 23 L. ed. 1145; Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 27, 23 L. ed. 923; Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 329; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 119 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 477; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 33 L. ed. 253; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107; Walston v. Nemin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585; Louisville N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 134 U. S. 614, 33 L. ed. 1032; Natal v. Louisiana, 139 U. S. 621, 35 L. ed. 288; Charlotte, O. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 143 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 36 L. ed. 164.

Assuming that the law is constitutional and the board of state tax commissioners legally constituted, then its record kept in pursuance of the requirements of the statute is conclusive as against collateral attack.

Million v. Carroll County Comrs. 89 Ind. 5; McEnaney v. Sullivan, 125 Ind. 407; Ryan v. Varga & B. M. R. Co. 37 Iowa, 78; Olay County Comrs. v. Markle, 46 Ind. 96; Cooper v. Sunderland, 8 Iowa, 114; United States v. Arredondo, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 691, 8 L. ed. 547; Evansville, I. & O. S. L. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 895; Weir v. State, 96 Ind. 811; Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 363; Sykes v. Keating, 118 Mass. 517; Halleck v. Boylston, 117 Mass. 469;

Stoughton Third School Dist. v. Atherton, 12 Met. 105; Bradbury v. Benton, 69 Me. 194; Mayhew v. Gay Head Dist. 13 Allen, 184; Cameron v. School Dist. in North Hero, 42 Vt. 509; Beebe v. Scheidt, 18 Ohio St. 406; Pierce v. Wright, 45 How. Pr. 1; Howland v. Eldredge 48 N. Y. 457; People v. Zeyst, 28 N. Y. 145, Steenenson v. Bay City, 26 Mich. 44; Hall v. People, 21 Mich. 456; People v. Madison County Supra. 125 Ill. 334, 28 Ill. App. 386; Andrews v. Boylston, 110 Mass. 214.

The state board of tax commissioners, in assessing values upon railroad property, may act upon their own knowledge and judgment, without evidence other than the returns made by the railroad companies, and for the enlightenment of their judgment may seek information whence and in what manner they deem best.

Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Riley County Comrs. 20 Kan. 141; Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Surrall, 88 Ill. 535; Pacific Hotel Co. v. Lieb, 83 Ill. 602; Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 561; Lowell v. Middlesex County Comrs. 9 L. R. A. 856, 152 Mass. 380; Sterling Gas Co. v. Higby, 184 Ill. 568; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 610, 23 L. ed. 672.

Courts cannot inquire into the mental processes of the assessing officers, for the purpose of determining as to whether their assessment was or was not made upon a proper basis, and evidence addressed to such purpose is incompetent.

Republic L. Ins. Co. v. Pollak, 75 Ill. 298; People v. Barker, 48 N. Y. 70; Case v. Dean, 16 Miss. 12.

In assessing railroad track, the state board should take into consideration the whole road or system, within and without the state, its earning capacity, termini, and all other circumstances and facts connected therewith, which to them seem necessary, to enable them to fix the value of the property within their jurisdiction.

People v. Barker, State Railroad Tax Cases, and Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. supra, and cases cited.

Olds, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit brought by the appellant against the appellee to enjoin the collection of taxes assessed against the appellant railway company by the state board of tax commissioners of Indiana.

The plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio and Indiana, and is and has been for several years engaged in the business of a common carrier of freight and passengers, and in operating a system of railroads in the states of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, having various lines of railroads in Indiana and its railroad track and rolling stock was assessed for taxation by the said state board of tax commissioners, under the Act of the Legislature of Indiana, approved March 8, 1891.

The principal question involved in this case relates to the constitutionality and validity of the law under which the appellant's property was assessed, though around this question cluster some others which we will consider later on.

The Act makes provision for the assessment 18 L. R. A.

of real and personal property by township and county assessors, creates a county board of equalization in each county in the state, and section 114 gives to such county boards "power to hear complaints of any owner of personal property except railroad tracks and rolling stock of railroads, to equalize the valuation of property and taxables," and provides that "it shall pass upon each valuation, and may, on sufficient cause being shown, or on its own motion, correct the assessment or valuation of any property in such manner as will in its judgment make the valuation thereof just and equal," and provides that "appeals shall lie from the decision of any county board of review to the state board of tax commissioners, which shall hear and determine the same in such manner as it may by its rules prescribe, and certify its decisions, which shall be final, to the proper county auditor."

In relation to the assessment of railway property the Act provides, sec. 77: "Between the first day of April and the first day of June of the year eighteen ninety-one, and at the same time in each year thereafter, when required by the county auditor, any person, company or corporation so owning, managing operating or constructing a railroad shall make and file with the county auditor of the respective counties in which the railroad may be located, a statement, or schedule, verified by the oath of such person, or the president and secretary of such corporation, showing the property held for right of way, and the length of the main and all side or second tracks and terminals in such county, and in each city or town through or into which the road may run, and describe such tract of land other than a city or town lot through which the road may run, in accordance with the United States or other surveys, giving the width and length of the strip of land held in each tract and the number of acres thereof. They shall also state the value of improvements and stations located on the right of way. New companies shall make such statements in April next after the location of their roads. When such statements shall have been once made, it shall not be necessary to repeat the description as hereinbefore required, unless directed so to do by the county auditor; but the company shall during the month of April annually report the value of such property, by the description set forth in the next section of this Act, and note all additions or changes in such right of way as shall have occurred."

Sec. 78. "Such right of way including the superstructures main, side or second track and terminals, turntable, telegraph poles, wires, instruments, and other appliances and stations and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way, (excepting machinery, stationary engines, and other fixtures, which shall be considered personal property), shall be held to be real estates for the purpose of taxation, and denominated 'railroad track,' and shall be so listed and valued, and shall be described in the assessment thereof as a strip of land extending on each side of such railroad track and embracing the same, together with all the stations and improvements thereon, commencing at a point where such railroad track crosses a boundary line in entering the county, township, city or town, extending to the point where such track crosses the boundary line leaving such county, township, city or town to the point of termination in the same as the case may be, containing — acres more or less, (inserting name of county, township, city or town or boundary line of the same, and number of acres and length in feet) and when advertised or sold for taxes, no other description shall be necessary to convey a good title to the purchaser."

Section 79 declares that the railroad track shall be listed and taxed in the several counties, etc.

Section 80 declares that "the movable property belonging to a railroad company shall be held to be personal property and denominated for the purpose of taxation 'rolling stock'; such rolling stock shall be listed and taxed in the several counties, townships, cities, and towns in the proportion that the main track used or operated in such county, township, city or town bears to the length of the main track used or operated by such person, company, or corporation, whether owned, operated or leased by him or them in whole or in part."

Section 81 provides for the taxation of tools, materials for repairs, etc., in the county, township, city or town where the same may be on the 1st day of April of each year, and section 82 provides for the taxation of all real estate of any railroad other than that denominated railroad track and improvements thereon as lands and lots in the county, township, city or town where situated.

Section 83 declares that between the first day of April and the first day of June of each year, "every person, company or corporation owning, constructing or operating a railroad in this state shall return to the county auditor a list or schedule, verified by the oath of such person so owning, constructing, or operating if an individual, or if a company or corporation, by the oath of the superintendent or secretary of such company or corporation, which shall contain:

"First. A full and correct detailed inventory of all the rolling stock belonging to or leased, hired, used, or operated by such company, and which shall distinctly set forth the number of locomotives and tenders of all classes, passenger cars of all classes, sleeping, chair and dining cars, express cars, baggage cars, horse cars, cattle cars, coal cars, platform cars, wrecking cars, freight cars, flat cars, pay cars, hand cars, tank or oil cars, and all other kinds of cars, and the true cash value thereof on the first day of April of the current year shall be set opposite each of them. Such list or schedule shall also set forth the number of miles of main track on which such rolling stock is used in the state of Indiana. For the purpose of taxation such rolling stock leased or hired from persons or corporations other than the railroad companies, shall be deemed the property of the railroad company leasing the same, and for that purpose shall be valued at such proportion of the full value thereof as the time during which the same is used on such railroad during the year bears to the whole year."

Second. Such list shall also contain a full and correct inventory of all other personal property of such railroad company not specifically taxed, including tools, etc., separated and classified into particular county, township, etc., where the same may be on the first day of April.

The third subdivision provides for an inventory of real estate other than that denominated "railroad track."

Section 84 makes it the duty of county auditors to return to the proper assessors a copy of the lists as contained in the second and third specifications to be assessed by such assessors, the same to be treated in all respects in regard to assessments and equalization as other similar property belonging to individuals.

Section 85 reads as follows: "At the same time that the lists or schedules as hereinbefore required to be returned to the county auditor, the person, company, or corporation running, operating, or constructing any railroad in this state shall, under the oath of such person, or the secretary or superintendent of such company or corporation, return to the auditor of state sworn statements or schedules, first, of the property denominated 'railroad track,' giving the length of the main and side or second tracks and turnouts, and showing the proportions in each county and township and the total in the state. Second, the rolling stock, whether owned or hired, giving the length of the main track in each county and the entire length of the road in this state. Third, showing the number of ties in track per mile, the weight of iron or steel per yard used in the main and side tracks, what joints or chains are used in the track, the ballasting of road, whether graveled, stone or dirt, the number and quality of buildings or other structures on 'railroad tracks,' the length of time iron or steel in track has been used and the length of time the road has been built. Fourth, a statement or schedule showing (1) the amount of capital stock authorized, and the number of shares into which such capital stock is divided; (2) the amount of capital stock paid up; (3) the market value, or if no market value, then the actual value of the shares of stock; (4) the total amounts of all indebtedness except for current expenses for operating the road; (5) the total listed valuation of all its tangible property in this state. Such schedule shall be made in conformity to such instructions and forms as may be prescribed by the auditor of state."

Section 86 subjects the persons, companies, and corporations to a penalty for failure to file such reports.

Section 87 reads as follows: "The auditor of state shall annually, on the meeting of the state board of tax commissioners, lay before said board the statements and schedules herein required to be returned to him, and said board shall assess such property in the manner hereinafter provided."

Section 117 creates the state board of tax commissioners. It provides that, "immediately upon the taking effect of this Act, the governor shall appoint two skilled and competent persons, not more than one of whom shall be of the same political party, who together with the secretary of state, auditor of state and governor, the last three of whom shall ex officio be members, and the governor, chairman thereof, shall constitute and be a board to be denominated the state board of tax commissioners, who shall perform the duties and have the powers hereinafter specified.

Section 118 requires the governor to commission the persons so appointed and that they shall each give bond, with sureties, in the sum of $10,000, and section 119, fixes the term of office of such commission. Of the members first appointed one shall hold for two and the other for four years, and thereafter they shall hold their offices for four years.

Section 120 and some of the sections next following prescribe the duties and powers of the board. The ninth subdivision of section 120 authorizes the board "to make such rules and regulations as the board shall deem proper to effectually carry out the purposes for which the board is constituted and to make all necessary rules and regulations not inconsistent with law, as the board may deem necessary with respect to its own meetings and procedure."

Section 129 fixes the time and place of the meeting of such state board at the office of the auditor of state on the first Monday of August each year, "for the purpose of assessing railroad property and equalizing the assessment of real estate as provided in this Act," and this section further provides that, "the state board of tax commissioners is hereby given all the powers given to county boards of review."

Two of the principal reasons on which it is contended this Act is void are first, that it denies due process of law to railway corporations touching the assessment and valuation of their property, denominated by the Act "railroad track" and "rolling stock," and is therefore repugnant to and in conflict with section 1, article 14, of the Constitution of the United States, declaring: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," and section 12, article 1, of the Constitution of Indiana providing that "every man, for injury done to him in his person, property, or reputation shall have remedy by due course of law." Second, that the Act is void for the reason that it denies to railway companies the equal protection of the laws granted to all other persons against erroneous, unjust, and illegal assessments of the value of property upon which taxes are assessed to be levied, in that it grants to all persons the right or privilege to be heard before some tribunal authorized to correct errors or give appropriate relief concerning the correctness or equality of assessment or inequalities in the same, or mistakes of fact or law, or illegal conduct of those charged with the duty of making the same after the original assessments have been made and before they become final and conclusive, as a protection against burdens imposed by such mistakes and errors; but as to railway companies the Act utterly denies all protection whatever against the same boards against which others are protected, and therefore the Act is in conflict with that part of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States which provides, that no state "shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U. S. Const. art. 14, § 1.

We will consider these two objections to the validity of the statute in the inverse order from 18 L. R. A.

which they are stated. It is contended that railway companies are persons within the meaning of these provisions of the Constitution, and this contention must be conceded to be correct.

To determine whether or not railway companies are denied equal protection of the laws given by the Act to all other persons, we must first interpret the law, and see what rights and privileges are given to them and to others, and what burdens are likewise imposed on each, and see wherein the rights given to, and burdens imposed upon others differ from those given to and imposed upon railway companies, for if no real discrepancy, within the meaning of the Constitution in fact exists between the rights of railway companies and other persons, then the objection that the railway companies are denied equal protection of the law must fail. The fact that a wrong was committed in the execution of the law or that an error was committed and not corrected is no objection to the validity of the law.

As to property other than that denominated by the law as "railroad track" and "rolling stock" including all property, real and personal, of individuals, the law provides for its assessment by assessors and it creates county boards of review in the several counties of the state, and by section 114, from which we have hereinbefore quoted, it is provided that such county boards "shall pass upon each valuation and may, on sufficient cause being shown, or on its own motion, correct the assessment or valuation of any property in such manner as will, in its judgment, make the valuation thereof just and equal." This section while it may not give to the county boards the right to change individual assessments of parties not legally before the board, evidently contemplates and gives the right to parties whose property has been wrongfully or erroneously assessed to voluntarily appear before such county board and show that the assessment made against any property is erroneous, and have it corrected, and it vests in such county boards the power on such showing being made, or on their own motion, to make corrections and change the valuation, and from a decision made against a party who is before such county boards it gives an appeal to the state board of tax commissioners, whose decision upon the question shall be final.

By section 129 of the Statute from which we have heretofore quoted, this same right to be heard given to all property owners and the power vested in the county boards of review to correct and change assessments by section 114, is engrafted into and made a part of the law governing the proceedings before the state board, as to valuations and assessments over which such state board has jurisdiction and control, for by section 129, supra, it is declared that the state board is hereby given all the powers given to county boards of review. The right of parties to be heard and the right of the county boards to have showings as to assessments and to correct and change assessments and valuations are a part of the powers vested in the county boards, and all their power is transferred and vested in the state board, so that if there is any power in the county boards to hear grievances and make corrections in relation to property and assessment over which they have jurisdiction, then the state board has the same power in relation to property and assessment over which it has jurisdiction. Counsel claim and argue that this right of hearing and to make corrections exists before the county boards, and we think it does, but they insist that this right does not exist before the state board, but with this latter contention we cannot agree, for certainly by the words of the statute we have quoted the same power in this respect is vested in the state board as is vested in county boards in relation to property and assessments over which it has jurisdiction, and if the state board has jurisdiction over the property and assessments of railway companies denominated "railroad track" and "rolling stock," then railway companies have the right to be heard and the state board has the right to correct any assessment and valuation made in relation to such property. That the state board has such jurisdiction and right we think there can be no doubt. By section 87 it is made the duty of the state board to assess such property in the manner afterwards in the Act provided. Section 129 provides, among other things, for the meeting of the state board and fixes the time and place of meeting for the purpose, as stated, "of assessing railroad property."

By the 9th subdivision of section 120 it is made the duty of the state board to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as it may deem necessary with respect to its meetings and procedure.

We think the interpretation we have placed upon the statute the fair and reasonable interpretation to be given to it.

It is well settled by the rules for the construction of statutes that in construing statutes the prime object is to ascertain and carry out the purpose and intent of the Legislature; that in construing statutes courts will look to all parts of the same statute, to other statutes and to the general principles of law, and assign such meaning to the words of the statute construed as will make them all effective. Storrs v. Stevens, 104 Ind. 46; Crawfordsville & S. W. Turnp. Co. v. Fletcher, 104 Ind. 97; Hunt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Ind. 69.

In Lute v. Crawfordsville, 109 Ind. 466, it is said: "If the Legislature manifests an intention to create a system for the government of any subject, it is the duty of the court to effectuate that intention by such a construction as will make the system consistent in all its parts and uniform in its operation."

Bishop on the Written Laws, states the rule of the court in relation to statutes to be that the courts will presume the Legislature intended its acts to be reasonable, constitutional, and just; and, when possible consistently with any fair rendering of the words, will so construe them as not to make them otherwise."

A statute which will admit of two interpretations, one valid and the other invalid, will receive the interpretations sustaining its validity. Ferguson v. Stamford, 60 Conn. 432.

In the case last cited the supreme court of Connecticut said: "A statute which will admit of two interpretations, one just and valid, the other unjust and invalid, will ordinarily receive the former. It is no part of the duty of the court to be astute in order to invalidate a statute. It will rather strive to so interpret it as to sustain its validity and give effect to the intention of the Legislature." Boisdere v. Citizens Bank, 9 La. 506, 29 Am. Dec. 453; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 165, 63 Am. Dec. 487.

Any other construction than that which we have given to the words of section 129 of this Act, providing that, "the state board of tax commissioners is hereby given all the powers given to county boards of review," would render the words meaningless, and this is never to be done if it can be avoided. It is a well-recognized rule that the entire statute must be construed together and that effect must be given to every part of a statute, if it can be done without manifestly violating the intention of the Legislature. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47, 65 Am. Dec. 475; Belleville & I. R. Co. v. Gregory, 15 Ill. 20, 58 Am. Dec. 589; Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 184, 74 Am. Dec. 522; Montesquieu v. Heil, 4 La. 51, 23 Am. Dec. 471; Gales v. Salmon, 35 Cal. 576, 95 Am. Dec. 189.

The question as to whether any of the other powers attempted to be conferred by section 114 on county boards are by section 129 vested in the state board, which would authorize the state board to serve notice and change or increase valuations and assessments on property valued and assessed by assessors or county boards, is in no way involved in this case, and hence we indicate no opinion in relation thereto.

The statute, when viewed in the light of the construction we have placed upon it and to which it is clearly entitled, provides for the assessment of property other than "railroad track" and "rolling stock" by assessors and county boards of review, and provides that persons aggrieved may appear before county boards of review and make a showing, and vests in such county boards the power, either on such showing, or on their own motion, to correct errors made in any assessment, and further provides for appeals from the decisions of the county boards by parties aggrieved and a hearing by the state board on appeal, which is final. In relation to property denominated "railroad track" and "rolling stock" it provides for the filing by railroad companies of a complete statement in relation to such property and its value, with the auditor of state, which shall by such auditor be laid before the state board. It further authorizes the state board and the members thereof to gain further information concerning such property and its value, and to assess it at its true cash value, and that in making such assessment such state board shall not be bound by any reports or estimates of value of railroad property, real estate or other property as returned to the county auditors or auditor of state, and that such state board shall have power to correct any assessment of "railroad track" or "rolling stock" on showing or on its own motion. The difference existing in relation to the assessments of the various classes of property under the law is that the assessment of some classes of property commences with the value being first fixed by the assessor, with authority vested in the county board to hear the complaints of aggrieved parties and correct the assessment, and a right on the part of the property owner to take an appeal to the state board. In the case of railroad companies, as respects their property denominated "railroad track" and "rolling stock," the schedule is filed with the auditor of state and the assessment is made in the first instance by the state board and their right to make a showing and to have any errors made against them corrected is to the same board that made the assessment, and that board is vested with power to correct errors and change assessments and valuation of such property in such manner as will in their judgment make the valuation thereof just and equal. Acts 1891, §§ 114, pp. 246-248.

When stripped of all verbiage, the gist of the objection to the law on account of its not affording to railway companies, in the assessment of the property denominated "railroad tracks" and "rolling stock," equal protection of the law, is that the state board of tax commissioners, the highest body or board in the state, having jurisdiction or which is given authority to either assess or correct assessments of property, is given original jurisdiction in the assessment and valuation of this class of property, while it acquires jurisdiction in other classes of property by appeal. Under the Act, the assessment and valuation fixed upon property is not necessarily final until passed upon by the state board. If parties are content with an assessment upon their property by the assessor or county board, it may rest at that point, but an appeal may be taken to the state board.

It seems to us that the claim that the statute denies to railway companies the equal protection of the law is based on an erroneous construction of the statute, for with the view we take of the statute and the rights of railway companies under it, the claim that it denies equal protection has no substantial foundation to rest upon. Equal protection of the law does not require that all persons shall have the right of a hearing or trial before the same tribunal and in all the same tribunals, and have the same right of appeal from one to another. If it has any such interpretation, then the theory upon which our courts are constructed and given jurisdiction in various causes of action, the right of appeal given in some cases, in others not, and the jurisdiction of some courts made final in one class of cases and in others not, is all wrong and our system of jurisprudence must fall; but that such is not the theory or interpretation to be given to section 1, article 14, of the Constitution of the United States, is too clear to admit of argument or the citation of authority. In our system of jurisprudence courts of different grades and jurisdictions are established and an appeal is allowed from one to another only when the right of appeal is given by statutory enactment.

In United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 42, 28 L. ed. 688, Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion in discussing the provisions of the 14th Amendment says that it "prohibits a state from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, but this adds nothing to the rights of one citizen against another. It simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the states upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society." Following this he says: "The 14th Amendment prohibits a state from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; but this provision does not, any more than the one which precedes it, and which we have just considered, add anything to the rights which one citizen has under the Constitution against another. The quality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the states and it still remains there."

From this it would seem that this phrase in the amendment added but little to what had theretofore been assumed by the states and embodied in the words "due process of law," and in the case of Caldwell v. Texas, 187 U. S. 692, 84 L. ed. 816, Chief Justice Fuller, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "By the 14th Amendment the powers of the states in dealing with crime within their borders are not limited, but no state can deprive particular persons or classes of persons of equal and impartial justice under the law. . . . And due process is so secured by laws operating on all alike, and not subjecting the individual to the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private right and distributive justice."

It must follow that a law which operates alike upon all persons under like circumstances is not obnoxious to the provision in the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution, that no person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws, for such a law operates alike upon every person under like circumstances. If this were not true, then a large portion of the legislation of the various states universally held valid would be obnoxious to this provision of the Federal Constitution. Laws providing for the assessment of certain property for public improvements only affect such property as designated and persons owning no such property are unaffected by the law; but all who are in like circumstances may be affected by it, and therefore the law affects all equally, under like conditions and circumstances.

The statute in question provides a general system for taxation and assessment and valuation of property and the method of ascertaining the valuation and assessing each class and kind of property applies alike to all persons holding and owning the same class of property, and it applies alike to all persons under like circumstances and conditions, and we do not think it denies railway companies the equal protection of the laws, and it is not in conflict with this provision of the Federal Constitution.

Is the Act objectionable on the ground that it denies to railway companies due process of law? If this Act is repugnant to either the Constitution of this state or the Constitution of the United States for this reason, it would seem that almost any law for the assessment and taxation of property which stopped short of resorting to a court of justice and permitting an issue to be joined and tried as to the value of the property, would be likewise objectionable. This Act requires railway companies to first file verified inventories of their property and of its value, to be submitted to the assessing board. Then it allows, after assessment, a correction in assessments and valuation on the showing of the company or on the motion of the board itself.

Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation, 2d ed. 432, says: "Very summary remedies have been allowed in every age and country for the collection by the government of its revenues. They have been considered a matter of state necessity. Without them it might be possible for a party which had been defeated in its efforts to obtain possession of the government in the constitutional way to cripple the government for the time being, and possibly break it up altogether. If the state might be deprived of the resources for continuing its existence and performing its regular functions until a revenue could be collected by the process provided for the enforcement of debts owing to individuals, it would be continually at the mercy of factions and discontented parties. Obviously this could not be tolerated."

At page 47 the author says: "This is a constitutional guaranty which has come to us from Magna Charta, which declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land. The alternative provisions of this guaranty have sometimes been supposed to mean the same thing, and the guaranty itself to entitle every person to have any demand made upon him submitted to the determination of a jury of the vicinage. Such a construction applied in tax cases would work a thorough and radical change in the principles on which taxation is now supposed to rest.

Such a construction of a clause agreed upon as an important provision in a charter of government can never have been intended. The words, the 'law of the land' and 'due process of law' mean one and the same thing, and mean that one shall hold his life, liberty, and property under the protection of the general rules which govern society, and therefore the learned author from which we have quoted on page 48, in speaking of words 'the law of the land,' well says: 'The clause recited from Magna Charta does not imply the necessity for judicial action in every case in which the property of the citizen may be taken for the public use. On the contrary, a legislative Act for that purpose, when clearly within the limits of legislative authority, is of itself the law of the land.'

This is true not only of an Act levying taxes, but in everything which pertains to the assessment and collection of taxes.

Judge Cooley in his work recognizes the right of a party to a hearing before his rights are finally precluded, and it is only necessary to determine what constitutes a hearing, so as that the individual will not be deprived of his property without due process of law, or what is the character of the hearing contemplated in the assessment and collection of taxes so as to constitute due process of law. Certainly it is not a judicial procedure, a trial by jury, but a summary hearing that is contemplated in such proceedings. Judge Cooley, p. 747, Cooley on 18 L. R. A.

Taxation, supra, says that the assessor while he still has the list or roll in his hands uncompleted may correct any assessment on his own motion or on application when satisfied that it is either wholly or in part illegal and that no statute could be necessary to give him such power. By this rule the state board who assess "railroad track" and "rolling stock" while in session and having control of the assessment could remit any illegal or unjust assessment made against any railway company, in the absence of any express statutory authority giving them the right to do so, but he says taxing officers and boards of review, in the absence of special authority, are to accept the assessment as legal and just, and levy and collect the taxes accordingly. The taxing officers and boards are such as have no power to assess, and he states the remedy usually given by statute for the correction of errors is by review, either by the assessor himself, or in some form of appellate proceedings. The rule as recognized by Dr. Cooley is that if the individual have the right of a hearing either before the assessor himself or some reviewing board having the right to correct the assessment, the requirement of the Constitution is complied with, and the individual is not denied due process of law.

In Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 64 Mo. 224, it was held that the state board having power to assess railway property, the assessment would be valid even though their record showed that the board heard no evidence. In the same case it was held that, under the laws of that state every person had an appeal from the assessment of his property for taxation, and that railroad companies should have the same right, and that great injustice might be done by the board, for which they would be remediless until the Legislature had provided for an appeal in their favor, and that the courts cannot interpose between the board and the companies.

In Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 561, speaking of the assessment of the property of railway companies by the state board of equalization under a law very similar to the statute under consideration, the court says: "Whether property is assessed by local assessors or by the state board of equalization, it is, in the language of the Constitution, assessed by some person or persons elected or appointed in the manner the General Assembly has directed, and not otherwise. No attempt is made by this clause of the Constitution to limit the number of those who shall be elected or appointed for this purpose, or to prohibit or in any manner to prescribe how the value of property shall be ascertained by them. Admitting that the chief end had in view was to secure uniformity in valuation, it would seem that the present system by which some property is assessed by local assessors and other property is assessed by the board of equalization, would tend as much toward accomplishing that result as would a system by which all the property in the state should be assessed in the town in which it is located, by the local assessors. . . . We cannot believe that a board of equalization, having the assessed values of all other taxable property in the state before them for the purpose of equalization, has less facility for fixing a fair proportionate value upon corporate property than the local assessors have.

"There is, moreover, an almost insuperable difficulty which must attend all attempts by local assessors to assess the capital stock, franchise, roadway, and rolling stock of most railroad companies. Such roads are usually located through several counties. The costs of construction in a particular town or county affords no criterion of the value of that portion of the road, for every mile of the road is equally indispensable to its existence as a whole, and contributes proportionally to its principal earnings. Local improvements may indeed vary, and they are required to be assessed by the local assessors; but the road and its equipments constitute a single entire property. In determining the value of such property, the question is neither one of original cost nor of the intrinsic value of the various items of which the road and its equipment are composed, taken separately, but what is it worth with all its capabilities and facilities as a railroad. The franchise extends to the entire corporate property, and it is not possible that it can be divided. It must, if assessed at all, be assessed as an entirety, and this, as we have already shown, may be in connection with the property to which it is attached."

Section 1, art. 10, of the Constitution of this state vests the power of taxation in the General Assembly. It provides that "the General Assembly shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, excepting," etc.

The first clause of this section is certainly complied with when the same basis of assessment is fixed for all property and the same rate of taxation is fixed within the district subject to taxation; that is to say there is uniformity and equality of assessment and taxation when all the property is to be assessed at its true cash value, and the same rate is fixed on all property subject to assessment for the tax. If it be a tax for state purposes the rate must be the same throughout the state; if for county purposes or township purposes the same rule would apply. The law under consideration is not subject to objection on account of inequality in rate of assessment or taxation, for it provides that all property shall be assessed at its true cash value and the rates are the same within the respective taxing districts and no objection is urged to the law on this account. Gilson v. Rush County Comrs. 128 Ind. 65, 11 L. R. A. 835.

As to the latter clause of the section of the Constitution providing that the General Assembly "shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation," it leaves it to the Legislature to prescribe the mode by which the valuation of all property shall be ascertained, enjoining upon them the one obligation to provide such regulations as shall secure a just valuation, leaving to the Legislature the mode of ascertaining the value. There is certainly no reason why the Legislature may not, under the Constitution of the state, provide for fixing the value of "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of railway companies by the state board of tax commissioners, while other property is assessed by local boards. The value is ascertained according to the regulations prescribed by the Legislature, and we are unable to see any reason why a valuation secured in that way should not be a just valuation. The Legislature by the Act in question has prescribed regulations for the purpose of securing the valuation of all property for taxation. The method prescribed would seem to have in view the fixing of the value on property by persons and boards best calculated to know the value of the property required to be valued by them, and with a view of arriving at a just and equal valuation of all the property within the state subject to taxation, providing county boards of review to correct errors of local assessors, and then a state board to fix the value of the property of railroad companies extending through the state, and to equalize the valuations and assessments of property throughout the state. That the method prescribed in the Act is one calculated to secure a just and equal valuation and assessment of property throughout the state, cannot be reasonably questioned, and is one which the Legislature had the right to adopt. Lowell v. Middlesex County Comrs. 152 Mass. 380, 9 L. R. A. 356; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Surratt, 88 Ill. 535; Republic L. Ins. Co. v. Pollak, 75 Ill. 298; Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 28 L. ed. 668.

No notice other than that contained in the law itself is necessary to the validity of the assessment. The railroad companies are bound by the law and must take notice of its provisions. They submit a schedule to the state board through the auditor of state, for the very purpose of having the valuation fixed upon the property and the assessment thereof by such board. They, through their written schedule and statement of values are heard by the board. The board has under its control the assessment roll of railroad companies' property, and by the terms of the statute the board is given power to correct any errors in assessments and to change valuations on showing or on its own motion. Railway companies have the same right of a hearing before the state board that any other property owner has before the county board for the same powers to correct errors in assessments of property over which the respective boards have jurisdiction which are given to the county boards by the Act are given to the state board. The state board is required to make rules governing their meetings and procedure.

In Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 128 Ind. 335, it is held that when the time for the meeting of a county board of equalization is fixed by law and the duties of the board also fixed by law, and notice of the time of meeting of the county board as required by law has been given, and when the law required that corporations should make out and deliver to the assessor schedules of their property, to be delivered to such county board, and the law made it the duty of such board to value and assess the property of such corporations, that no notice to the individual corporation was necessary to make the appraisal and assessment of the property of the corporation valid, the law having fixed the time of the meeting of board, and required corporations to file schedules with the assessor to be presented to the board, and made it the duty of the board to appraise and assess the same. Corporations were bound to take notice of the time of the meeting of the board that these schedules would be presented to the board and such board would appraise and assess the same as required by the law, and no other notice is necessary. There can be no difference in this respect as to the validity of a law, or the rights of the parties under it, between a statute which fixed the time for the meeting of the board and one which fixed the time and also required the auditor or some other officer to give notice of the time of the meeting in advance, for if the law fixed the time of the meeting, all persons are bound to take notice that it will meet, and when it requires a party to file a schedule of his property, and makes it the duty of the board to appraise and assess it, he is likewise bound to take notice of such facts also, and if he desires to be heard in relation to such matters as the board are charged with the duty of performing, he must appear and make his wishes known in relation thereto. As well said in Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co., supra: "The case is entirely unlike that of an individual taxpayer, for he cannot know that the board will take any action upon his list, whereas the corporation knows, as matter of law, that the board will act upon its statement, since that is the principal purpose for which the sworn statement is required. It is manifest that neither the principle decided in Kuntz v. Sumption, 117 Ind. 1, 2 L. R. A. 655, nor the line of reasoning there pursued, is relevant to the question here presented."

The statute under consideration fixes the time for the meeting of the state board. It requires railway companies to file schedules and inventories with the auditor of state, to be presented by him to the state board, and makes it the duty of the state board to appraise and assess the property denominated by the Act as "railroad track" and "rolling stock" belonging to railroad companies at its true cash value, and further provides that the board shall not be bound by estimates of the value of such property as returned to the auditor of state. Of all of these provisions the railway companies are bound to take notice, and if they desire to make any further showing, it is the duty of such companies to appear before the board and make their showing.

In Cooley on Taxation, pp. 364, 365, it is said: "It is not customary to provide that the taxpayer shall be heard before the assessment is made, except when a list is called for from him; but a hearing is given afterwards, either before the assessors themselves or before some court or board of review."

That is just what is provided for by the Act of 1891. The companies are required by the law to submit a schedule through the auditor of state to the state board, and the Act authorizes a hearing before the state board. As regards notice of the meeting of the board before a hearing may be had, the author in the same section, continuing, says: "And of the meeting of that court or board the taxpayer must in some manner be informed, either by personal notice or by some general notice which is reasonably certain to reach him, or, which is equivalent, by some general law which fixes the time and place of meeting, and of which he must take notice. The last is a common method of bringing the assessment to the notice of the taxpayer, and it is perhaps the best of all, because it comes to be generally understood and is remembered."

This principle is common in its application. When a party brings an action in court the defendant is notified to appear on a certain day of a particular term of court. If the term at which the summons is returnable, or for which the notice is given, terminates without a disposition of the cause, the cause is still pending in court, to be heard at a subsequent term of court. All parties are bound to take notice of the time fixed by the law for the holding of subsequent terms of court. The matter of appraisal and assessment of the property of railroad companies is pending before the state board, and parties are bound to take notice of the time fixed by law for the meeting of the board, and is in harmony with the theory that all persons are presumed to know the law.

Deady, on Taxation, vol. 1, pp. 599, 600, says: "All parties are bound to take notice of the day of the meeting of the commissioners when the day is appointed by law, and under the general notice parties must attend the meetings as they would the sessions of a court until their assessment is passed upon, and when once this is done no change can afterwards be made without special notice."

The whole body of taxpayers are not required to attend a sitting of a county or state board of review, for the value is fixed upon most by the assessor, but such as are required to file with such boards, or either of them, a schedule of property, which property so scheduled is to be appraised and assessed by such board. As to such parties the matter of appraisal and assessment is pending before such board, the knowledge of which is conveyed to them by the law itself, and if they desire to be heard further, or to have errors corrected, they must appear before such board. Smith v. Rude Bros. Mfg. Co. (Ind.) 30 N. E. Rep. 947.

The conclusion we reach is that the statute under consideration is a valid enactment, and not in conflict with any provisions of the Constitution, either of this state or the United States, and the state board of tax commissioners had full power to assess the property of railway companies denominated "railroad track" and "rolling stock;" that the railway companies were properly before that board, and were entitled to a hearing, and were not denied due process of law or equal protection of the laws, within the meaning of the Constitution of this state or the United States; and this conclusion we think is in harmony with the almost universal line of authorities, and we deem it unnecessary to take up and discuss in detail the numerous authorities cited in this case, as it would extend the decision to an immeasurable length, and we content ourselves by adhering to what we regard the correct principles deducible from the authorities.

The state board having fixed the valuation and assessed the property, their action in this behalf is final and cannot be avoided or set aside, except for fraud on the part of the state board of tax commissioners, which would render the assessment void. Fraud vitiates even the most solemn judicial proceedings, and would likewise vitiate the proceedings of any tribunal created for the purpose of determining the rights of parties, but we do not think it can be seriously contended that the proceedings in this case seek to attack or avoid the valuation or assessment made by the state board of appellant's property on the ground that the state board was guilty of fraud, or acted corruptly in the discharge of its duties in the appraisal and assessment of the property of railway companies, and if it were so contended, the averments of the complaint fall far short of being sufficient to present such a question.

What we have said disposes of the major portions of the questions presented in the case. The court having no power to review the proceedings, the action of the state board being final, no right of action existed to set it aside except for fraud, and it not being attacked on that ground, no evidence was admissible, for it is a well-settled rule that the courts have no power to give any relief against erroneous assessments of such boards except they are given such power by statute, and no such power is given in this state. Cooley, Taxo, p. 748, and authorities there cited; Bass v. Fort Wayne, 121 Ind. 889; Sims v. Hines, 121 Ind. 534; McCollum v. Uhl, 128 Ind. 304; Center & W. G. R. Co. v. Black, 83 Ind. 468.

The court cannot inquire what evidence the board made its assessment upon and determine as to whether such board arrived at just valuation or not. The board has passed upon that question, and with its adjudication the matter ends.

The decision of the state board being final, the record of that board required to be kept by the law, section 121 of the Act 1891, is conclusive.

It is contended by counsel for appellant that the law authorizes, and the state board did import values to the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" taxable in Indiana values belonging wholly to corporate property situate in other states and taxable in other states, thus imposing double taxation on railway companies owning or operating interstate lines of railways. This is based upon the provision of the statute, section 80 of the Act providing that the "rolling stock" shall be listed and taxed in the several counties, etc., in proportion that the main track used or operated in such county, etc., bears to the length of the main track used or operated by such person, and the schedules required to be filed by sections 83 and 85. These schedules are required to be filed for the purpose of giving a description to the property and as a source of information as to value, but, as expressly provided by the Act, such values are not conclusive. The board may act on other information and the personal knowledge of values, and the Act expressly provides that the assessment shall be made of this class of property at its true cash value, the same as all other property.

Section 79 provides that railroad "track" 18 L. R. A shall be listed and taxed in counties, etc., in proportion that the length of main track in such county, etc., bears to whole length of the road in the state. It is so apparent and we think so well settled by authority that the value of a railroad or "railroad track" and "rolling stock" is so completely dependent on its length of line, connections, beginning, and terminus and the character of the country through which it runs in relation to its products and the character and extent of its population so as that it cannot be separated from these and many other surroundings and elements of value which necessarily must enter into its appraisal and assessment at its fair cash value for taxation, as that it can hardly be a controverted proposition.

It is evident that no fair or equitable value could be placed on a "railroad track" by severing it into parts extending from one township or county line to another, or even from one state line to another, and estimating only the portion lying within the borders of a single township, county, or state independently of its connection beyond such lines, or by considering the costs of constructing any such division. Nor could the value of an engine or car or other property coming within the class of property denominated in the Act under consideration as rolling stock, be determined by considering the purpose for which it was used in any state or subdivision of a state, or the costs of construction of the same, and to limit the right of the state to tax "rolling stock" which might at the date of assessment be found within the state or subdivision of the state, would be in effect to release such property from taxation.

A railroad is valuable as a whole, and every section of the line going to make up the whole is essential. The portion of a track crossing unclaimed land of practically no value is as valuable as that portion which runs through a populous city, in so far as its purpose and use is that of an interstate line, for without either the connection would be broken and its use destroyed for that purpose. The value of such portion is increased by reason of its connection.

In the State Railroad Tax Cases, 93 U. S. 575, 23 L. ed. 663, the court says: "This court has expressly held, in two cases, where the road of a corporation ran through different states, that the tax upon the income or franchise of the road was properly apportioned by taking the whole income or value of the franchise and the length of the road within each state, as the basis of taxation."

In speaking of the rate of taxation, the court in the same case says: "But the contention is that the rule of treating the road, its rolling stock and franchises as a unit, and assessing it as a whole, on which each municipality levies its taxes according to the length of the road within its limits violates the principle of this section. We have already discussed this question and are of the opinion that taxes assessed by that rule on the railroad property by the municipality are uniform where the rate of taxation is the same on the assessment thus ascertained that it is on other property."

The court in the case last cited expressly recognizes the legality of an assessment on rolling stock valued in accordance with the rule of treating the road as a unit, and taking such a proportion of its value as the length of the road lying within the state bears to the whole road, for if an appraisement and assessment of a railroad including in such valuation its rolling stock and franchises can be assessed, certainly its rolling stock can be valued and assessed separately in the same manner for values would not be imported in the one method more than the other. The court in the same case discusses and sustains the same method of assessing the railroad track, and says: It may well be doubted whether any better mode of determining the value has been devised.

The decision in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 580, 81 L. ed. 790, is in harmony with this theory.

Presumptively the line of railroad track and rolling stock is of no greater value per mile beyond the borders of the state than within the borders of the state and we do not think the law necessarily requires a construction by which, if the line of the railroad track or rolling stock situate outside the state was of greater value per mile than that inside the state that the board should by equalizing the value import values and tax property situate and taxable without the limits of the state and taxable in another state. When the whole Act is read together it purports to be only an Act to tax such property as is subject to taxation within the state. Section 80 declares that the movable property belonging to a railroad company shall be held to be personal property and denominated personal property; while section 3 provides that "all property within the jurisdiction of this state not expressly exempted, shall be subject to taxation." Section 4 provides that for the purpose of taxation real property shall include all lands within the state, etc. Personal property shall include all goods and chattels within the state, all ships, boats, whether at home or abroad, and their appurtenances; all goods, chattels and effects belonging to inhabitants of this state, situate without this state, except the property actually and permanently invested in business in another state.

The record of the state board which, as we have said, is conclusive, affirmatively shows that the valuation of "railroad track" and rolling stock was fixed upon such property within this state. The record affirmatively shows that, "the state board of tax commissioners having had under consideration the assessment of the several railroads in the state, the following valuation per mile of the various roads within this state:" then follows the schedule and valuation. Following such schedules and valuation it is stated that "making liberal allowance for all proper deductions" they "fix the values" as hereinbefore set forth.

Objection is made to a recital in the record of the board which it is contended shows affirmatively that the board fixed the value of the roads upon a wrong basis. We think there is nothing in this objection. It is a mere statement that "in arriving at the basis for the estimate of said values the board considered the costs of the construction and the equipment of said roads, the market value of the stocks and bonds and the gross and net earnings of each of said roads, and all other matters appertaining thereto that would assist the board in arriving at a true cash value of the same." They considered all matters appertaining to the road that would assist them in arriving at a true cash value. The things they specifically enumerate were proper to consider. The board was not limited to the schedules of the railway companies and rates fixed by them, but had the right to such other information which would enable them to arrive at a just valuation. But this court cannot consider or review the question as to what evidence the board acted upon in arriving at the value assessed.

It is further urged that the method of assessment taxes interstate commerce, but we do not think so. Taxing the property of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce is not taxing interstate commerce; but what we have heretofore said disposes of this question, for in holding the method by which the valuation and assessments were made valid relieves it from this objection.

As it cannot be and is not contended that the property is not subject to taxation, but only contended that it cannot be assessed in the manner prescribed in this Act, which it is claimed imports values into this state from other states for taxation, thereby imposing unauthorized burdens on interstate commerce.

It is finally contended that the Act creating the state board and defining its powers and duties is unconstitutional and void, for the reasons in brief that judicial powers are granted to such board, and because two state executive and administrative officers are created and made continuously appointed by the governor and not elected by the people; that executive and administrative officers cannot exercise judicial powers, and judicial officers must by the Constitution be elected. The members of the state board are not judicial officers, nor are judicial powers conferred upon them by the Act under consideration, within the meaning of the Constitution. Langenberg v. Decker (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 108.

It is very common, if not an almost universal custom in this and other states, to make, by statutory enactment, certain of the state officers ex officio members of the state boards of equalization. Such we think has been the almost if not the entirely unbroken practice in this state since the adoption of the present Constitution, and if, as held in Langenberg v. Decker, supra, they are not vested with such judicial powers as to constitute them a court, but only exercised such quasi-judicial functions as does every public officer vested with discretionary power, they are certainly eligible to become members of such a board. Nor do we think the other members of the board whom the law provides shall be appointed by the governor are administrative state officers charged with such duties as that by the Constitution they are required to be elected by the people. They are not administrative officers in charge of any separate department of the state government. The same rule must govern in relation to their selection as the selection of members of the local and county boards of equalization, and any persons or boards for the appraisement and assessment of values and benefits and injuries to property, and the practice of appointing such persons and members of boards has always existed. If they may be appointed for one sitting of a board, or to make appraisement of specific property, the value of which is to be ascertained, then certainly the law may authorize their appointment for a longer term, and that such appointment may be authorized by statute we have no doubt and this conclusion is in harmony with the decisions of this court in State v. Gorby, 122 Ind. 17, and State v. Hyde, 129 Ind. 296, 18 L. R. A. 79.

We have considered and decided all of the questions material to the determination of the cause. We find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Mark PATTY, Resp't.,

v.
E. P. COLGAN, State Comptroller, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

A legislative appropriation for the benefit of sufferers from a flood is in violation of Const., art. 4, § 81, prohibiting the gift of any public money or thing of value to any individual.

(January 23, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for San Diego County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to draw a warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the board of supervisors of San Diego County for the benefit of sufferers from the Tia Juana floods. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Barham & Bolton, for appellant:

To raise the money sought to be appropriated under the provisions of this Act, there must be a tax levied upon the people, and taxation can only be for a public use.

Cal. Const. art. 4, §§ 80, 82.

The Legislature shall have no power to pay, or authorize the payment of, any claim hereafter created against the state, under agreement or contract made, without express authority of law.

The provisions of our Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory.

Whether the statute is constitutional or not is always a question of power.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 186.

Nothing in the distribution of powers places either department above the law. Where discretion in terms is vested or implied from the nature of the duties to be performed, they are independent of each other, but in no other case.

People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 89.

There is no pretense upon the face of the Act, or otherwise, that the Tia Juana sufferers had any claim against the state.

To lay with one hand the power of the government on the property of the citizens, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals, to aid private enterprises, and build up interests, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation.

Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. of Cleveland v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 664, 22 L. ed. 461.

It is not competent for the Legislature to authorize the levying of a public tax or the taking of private property for the encouragement of a purely private industry.

Consolidated Channel Co. v. Central Pac. R. Co. 51 Cal. 271; People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 639;

Re Townsend, 89 N. Y. 174; Re Deansville Cemetery Assn. 66 N. Y. 571, 23 Am. Rep. 86;

Allen v. Jay, 16 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185.

A private use cannot be transformed into a public one by a mere legislative declaration.

Logan v. Stogdale, 8 L. R. A. 58, 123 Ind. 372.

The expenditure authorized by this statute being for a private and not a public object, in a legal sense, it exceeds the constitutional power of the Legislature, and the city cannot lawfully issue the bonds for the purposes of the Act.

Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 89.

The right to take, which depends upon whether it is to be taken for a public or private use, is a judicial question.

Pittsburg, W. & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron Works, 2 L. R. A. 680, 31 W. Va. 710.

If the Legislature had the power to make the appropriation for the purposes named in this Act, then it should have determined the amount to which every sufferer was entitled, and should not have delegated that power to the board of supervisors.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 117.

Mr. Johnston Jones for respondent.

Paterson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by Hon. E. P. Colgan, state comptroller, from a judgment of the superior court of San Diego county, directing the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate requiring him to draw a warrant in favor of the board of supervisors of San Diego county in the sum of $5,000, for the benefit of the sufferers from the Tia Juana floods of February 22, 1891. The application of the plaintiff and the judgment of the court were based upon the provisions of an NOTE.—As to the validity of appropriations of public money as dependent upon the public character of the use, see Daggett v. Colgan, 14 L. R. A. 474, and note, 33 Cal. 58; also the later cases, Bourn 18 L. R. A.

v. Hart, 15 L. R. A. 431, 33 Cal. 321; Cutting v. Taylor (S. Dak.) 15 L. R. A. 691; Wasson v. Wayne County Comrs. (Ohio) 17 L. R. A. 796; Mute & Blind Inst. for Education v. Henderson (Colo.) 18 L. R. A. 908.

See also 21 L. R. A. 474; 25 L. R. A. 770; 28 L. R. A. 187; 32 L. R. A. 344; 33 L. R. A. 752; 45 L. R. A. 788; 46 L. R. A. 381.

Act entitled "An Act to appropriate the sum of five thousand dollars for the benefit of the sufferers from the Tia Juana floods of the twenty-second of February, 1891, and to provide for the payment to the board of supervisors of San Diego county and its distribution to the sufferers." Section 1 of this Act reads as follows: "Section 1. There is appropriated the sum of five thousand dollars out of any moneys in the general fund not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the board of supervisors of San Diego county, to be by said board held in trust and paid out for the benefit of the sufferers from the Tia Juana floods, occurring on the twenty-second day of February, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, in San Diego county." The Act is clearly in violation of the provisions of section 31, art. 4, of the Constitution, which provides that the Legislature shall have no power "to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value, to any individual." The object of this provision is well stated in Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 651, 14 L. R. A. 459. An Act directing the comptroller to draw his warrant in favor of an individual cannot be impeached by evidence aliunde. Rankin v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 606. But here the facts which show the invalidity of the appropriation appear upon the face of the Act, and the application ought to have been denied. Bourn v. Hart, 93 Cal. 321, 15 L. R. A. 431.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to dismiss the proceeding, and enter judgment in favor of defendant for costs.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Ophelia J. CUTHBERT, Resp't.,

v.

Cordella D. CHAUVET et al., Respts., and
NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE & TRUST CO., Appt.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. No court possesses the power to compel a trustee to consent to a destruction of a real estate trust which the statutes prohibit him from doing any act to contravene.

2. Express trusts of realty which are valid in their creation are made indestructible by the New York Statute of Uses and Trusts, §§ 63, 65, 4 Rev. Stat. 8th ed. 2433, 2439, which declare that the beneficiary cannot assign or in any manner dispose of his interest and that every sale, conveyance, or other act of the trustee in contravention of his trust shall be absolutely void.

3. A trustee's offer of judgment or fail-

NOTE.—Power of court to dissolve trust.

The above case is clearly the most important one on the subject of the power of the court to dissolve a trust that has ever been decided.

In the language of the opinion "we have failed to find a case where it was ever attempted, as it is here, to strangle a trust in its infancy by judicial coercion." The cases most nearly approaching this are earlier cases in the same state referred to in the opinion.

Of these Douglas v. Cruger, 80 N. Y. 12, decided that an order of court could not make valid a conveyance by a trustee to a woman during her husband's life where the trust was for the payment to her of the rents and profits during the life of the husband. The declaration of the court was that "the supreme court has not the power to destroy a valid trust."

In Cruger v. Jones, 18 Barb. 467, it was held that an order of court could not make valid a mortgage of the trust estate by a trustee under a trust to receive and pay over rents and profits.

Somewhat approaching these cases but involving the additional element of fraud or imposition upon one of the beneficiaries was the decision in Walker v. Sharpe, 68 N. C. 303, in which an application for an order that a trustee should pay over the whole trust fund to those entitled to it after the death of their mother, who was entitled to the income during her life, was refused although she united in it and the trustee did not oppose it. The court characterized it as an "unblushing attempt on the part of the children and sons-in-law of a weak old woman to get the sanction of the court to a surrender of all her estate and her only means of maintenance."

General language used by the courts in respect to their power over trustees must of course be construed with reference to the question before the court. Thus in Brooke v. Mostyn, 3 DeG. J. & S. 373, it was said that in the exercise of its jurisdiction over trustees "the court may in general order the trustees to deal with the trust property in whatever mode it may consider to be for the benefit of the cestui que trust who are infants or under disabilities." But this was not a case in which the dissolution of a trust was attempted as in the main case, but merely a case of an attempt to impeach on the ground of fraud a compromise of a suit for a legacy made under order of court. The decree of the compromise was set aside but this decision was reversed on the facts in Mostyn v. Brooke, L. R. 4 Eng. & Ir. App. 304.

Cases in which a trust has been terminated by order of the court have all been those in which the purpose of the trust had been already accomplished or could not be accomplished.

In Hawthorn v. Root; 6 Bush, 501, where the legal title to land was conveyed to a party as trustee to be conveyed to others and this could not be done because the trustee was a minor, the conveyance was set aside although the minor objected. The reason of this is clear as the retention of title by the trustee would have been a palpable fraud.

So where a trust under a will failed by a contingency not provided for and the entire beneficial interest had vested in a certain person, the court held that it had power to order payment to be made directly to the person entitled. Taylor v. Huber, 13 Ohio St. 238.

Where the whole objects and purposes of a trust have been accomplished, and the interests created under it have all vested, the court, with the consent of the trustee and of the persons interested, may decree a determination of the trust. Smith v. Harrington, 4 Allen, 560; Bowditch v. Andrew, 8 ure to answer in a suit attacking the trust is within the prohibition of a statute declaring that any act in contravention of the trust shall be void.

(January 17, 1893.)

APPEAL by the New York Life Insurance & Trust Company as trustee under the will of Francis W. Lasak, deceased, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for Westchester County directing defendant to join in a compromise which had been effected between the parties to a partition suit in which the validity of the Lasak will was attacked. Reversed.

Francis W. Lasak died seised of a quantity of real estate leaving a will by which he gave a portion of it to the New York Life Insurance & Trust Company in trust for certain specified objects including certain charities. The partially disinherited heirs instituted a number of suits for the purpose of defeating the will. Finally the adults interested in the estate reached a compromise and this action having been instituted for a partition of certain of the real estate, Victoria A. McKenzie, one of the interested parties, filed a petition by which she showed to the court:

That the said action was brought and is now pending for the partition of real estate in the city of New York and in the county of Westchester, belonging to the estate of Francis W. Lasak, late of Westchester county. That the said Francis W. Lasak left a last will and testament, and which said will was duly admitted to probate before the surrogate of the county of Westchester, and on appeal to the court of appeals the decree of said probate was affirmed. That various litigations are now pending with reference to the validity of the said will as a will of real estate—there being so pending ten actions of ejectment, the present action for partition and an action for the establishment of the will. That in one of the actions of ejectment, tried in the county of Westchester, the trial occupied eight days and terminated in a disagreement of the jury.

That all the parties interested in the said estate as devisees or heirs-at-law have agreed, so far as they could so do, to compromise the said litigation and to allow the said will to stand as a will of personal estate, but to be declared void as a will of real estate, and for the purpose of carrying out the said settlement and compromise, have executed an agreement. That the New York Life Insurance & Trust Company, who by the said will was appointed trustee of the trusts therein contained, and among others, trustee of the trust under which your petitioner is the beneficiary during her life, has declined to become a party to the said compromise or to any compromise without the leave and direction of the court first had and obtained, and also for the reason that certain provisions of the said compromise agreement require modification and alteration, as follows:

Allen, 341; Inches v. Hill, 106 Mass. 577; Re Stone, 133 Mass. 470; Nichols v. Rogers, 133 Mass. 146; Sears v. Choate, 146 Mass. 305; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345.

Thus where executors are to hold any residue in trust for the relief of heirs "if they at any time shall need pecuniary assistance," and the entire beneficial interest has vested in the heirs and they all desire it, and the executors consent, the trust may be annulled and the property distributed among them on their executing releases. Smith v. Harrington, 4 Allen, 566.

And where a trust to pay a widow such portions of income of the property as may seem to her and the trustee necessary for the maintenance of her family and the support and education of children, was held to have become inoperative by the death of the children, the breaking up of the family and the widow's ceasing to keep house, a decree was made terminating the trust and distributing the property to those equitably entitled thereto. Bowditch v. Andrew, supra.

And a trust under a marriage settlement to secure income to the wife for her life and then to the husband with remainder to their children in fee was terminated by decree of the court as to one half of the estate the whole interest in which had fully vested in one of the children after the death of the wife and a transfer by the father of his interest which had become vested in that child who thereupon became entitled to the whole of the income for the father's life and the remainder in one half of the property. Inches v. Hill, 106 Mass. 575.

And under a trust for two daughters of the trustee which expressly provided that he should convey "as they or the survivor and myself (the trustee) may deem expedient," after the death of one daughter followed by his death the other daughter was held entitled to have the trust terminated. Re Stone, supra.

But under a trust to pay income to a widow during her life and after her death to distribute among nephews and nieces "then surviving" the share of any deceased to go to his or her issue, the nephews and nieces cannot have a termination of a trust during her lifetime as they do not represent all the interests. Brandenburg v. Thorndike, 133 Mass. 102.

The absolute owner of a fund and of the income held under a simple trust to pay it over to him which is alienable by him and subject to his creditors can have the trust terminated. Sears v. Choate, supra.

The fact that a trustee objects to the termination of the trust will not prevent its dissolution where persons entitled to the whole beneficial interest desire it, at least where the founder of the trust has not shown an intention to continue it for the trustee's benefit. Slater v. Hurlbut, 146 Mass. 306.

Where a trustee, whose right is at most a dry trust, brings an action for a bank deposit, the admission of the beneficiary's administrator as a claimant makes any special proceeding to terminate the trust unnecessary as the termination is a matter of strict legal right. Underwood v. Boston Five Cent Sav. Bank, 141 Mass. 305.

Somewhat in line with cases as to the entire dissolution of a trust is a New York decision in which a trustee who held property in trust to apply the income to the use of himself, his wife, and children, was held not to have an uncontrolled discretion as to the application of the income where his wife and only child were living separate from him and not in amicable relations with him. The court in this case required him to pay each of them one third of the net income. Ireland v. Ireland, 84 N. Y. 321.

This, case however, belongs more properly to that class which relates to the control of the discretion of trustees which is a matter not within the scope of this note.

B. A. R.

First. That all the provisions of the will relating to personality shall stand. That a proper provision should be made for a person as yet unborn who may possibly under the said will be entitled in remainder to the principal of the share devised to the said trustee for the benefit of your petitioner for her life. That provisions should be made for the commissions of said trustee of all the trusts contained in the will. That your petitioner, and as she is informed and believes all the other parties to the said compromise will agree to such modifications as to this court shall seem just and proper. And she prays that the said New York Life Insurance & Trust Company as trustee as aforesaid by authority and order of this court, to become a party to the said agreement modified and altered as this court may direct, to the end that a final settlement and compromise of the said litigation may be attained, and the court may make such other order in the premises as to it may seem just.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Emmet & Robinson, for appellant:

The Revised Statutes expressly forbid and prohibit the acts and results which this proposed compromise is intended to bring about and effectuate.

N. Y. Rev. Stat. chap. 1, tit. 2, part 2.

The supreme court succeeded to the power and jurisdiction of the late court of chancery, which power and jurisdiction are co-extensive with those of the court of chancery of England, with the exceptions, additions, and limitations created by the Constitution and laws of this state.

N. Y. Rev. Stat. chap. 1, tit. 2, part 3, art. 2, § 86.

Trusts have always been within this jurisdiction so far as regards their construction and definition, the manner of their execution, the investment and charge of the trust estate, the acts of the trustee, and most particularly the protection and the rights of beneficiaries; but when a rule either of the common law or statute law is direct and governs the case with all its circumstances a court of equity is as much bound by it as a court of law and can as little justify a departure from it.

Story, Eq. Jur. § 64.

There is abundant authority against such a power as is claimed by this order.

Wood v. Wood, 5 Paige, 596, 3 L. ed. 844, 28 Am. Dec. 451; Douglas v. Cruger, 80 N. Y. 15; Lent v. Howard, 89 N. Y. 169; Cruger v. Jones, 18 Barb. 467.

Messrs. Edgar M. Johnson and F. R. Minrath, for respondent Cuthbert:

The trustee has power to enter into a reasonable compromise of any contested claim.

People v. Pleas, 2 Johns. Cas. 376; Murray v. Blatchford, 1 Wend. 583, 19 Am. Dec. 537; Leland v. Manning, 4 Hun, 7; Gilman v. Gilman, 6 Thomp. & C. 211; Re Berrien's Estate, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. 23.

Should the trustee refuse to enter into a reasonable compromise agreement, it is within the general jurisdiction of the court to direct the trustee to do so.

Ireland v. Ireland, 84 N. Y. 321; Bryan v. Knickerbocker, 1 Barb. Ch. 409, 5 L. ed. 435. See also Re Youngs, 5 Abb. N. C. 353, note; 18 L. R. A.

Davey v. Ward, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 754; Luther v. Bianconi, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 194; Milington v. Mulgrave, 3 Madd. 491; Mortimer v. Watts, 14 Beav. 616; Wood v. Wood, supra; Leitch v. Wells, 48 N. Y. 599; Walker v. Walker, 5 Madd. 424; Cafe v. Bent, 3 Hare, 245.

Mr. Charles F. McLean for Margaret S. Ives; Messrs. Aaron Kahn, Christopher Fine, and Robert Sewell for defendant Schermerhorn; Messrs. C. G. Reynolds and F. Reynolds for defendant McKenzie et al.; Mr. F. A. Ward, Guardian ad litem; Mr. Frederick B. Van Vorst for the Children's Aid Society; Mr. Charles Donohue for defendants Cordelia D. and Albert Chauvet;

The only question properly arising on this appeal is as to the legal right of the appellant to commissions on the real estate.

The question as to the equitable right to compensation was considered, and the amount fixed by the court below, and that finding is conclusive. There remains, therefore, only the question of strict legal right.

Re Allen, 96 N. Y. 327.

The appellant cannot raise any other question.

1. It will not be allowed to litigate unnecessarily.

Re Brewer, 48 Hun, 597.

2. It is not interested in any other question, and therefore not aggrieved by a decision of any other.

Bryant v. Thompson, 18 L. R. A. 745, 128 N. Y. 426.

3. It is protected by the order and has no occasion to question any other decision.

Bryant v. Thompson, supra.

The appellant has no legal right to commissions.

Perry, Trusts, p. 817, § 904, p. 825, § 916.

1. A trust will not be preserved merely that the trustee may earn commissions.

Slater v. Hurlbut, 146 Mass. 808.

2. There is no right to commissions until they are earned.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2503.

If the appellant has no legal right to commissions the order does not affect a substantial right.

De Barante v. Deyermant, 41 N. Y. 355.

Persons of full age and sound mind can do what they will as to their own.

Slater v. Hurlbut, supra; Sears v. Choate, 146 Mass. 395; Smith v. Harrington, 86 Mass. 566.

All persons having any interest have been equitably provided for.

The possible party, as yet unborn, is represented by the infant Clarence McKenzie.

Moore v. Littell, 41 N. Y. 66; Mead v. Mitchell, 17 N. Y. 210, 72 Am. Dec. 455; Lawrence v. Bayard, 7 Paige, 75, 4 L. ed. 66.

The supreme court having the power to protect infants, the form adopted in exercising the power is immaterial.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 7, subsec. 3, § 2348, subsec. 2; McCoun v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 176; Arthur v. Griswold, 60 N. Y. 143; Whitney v. Townsend, 67 N. Y. 40.

Mr. Calvin Frost in person and for petitioner; Messrs. Bartlett Wilson & Hayden for the American Female Guardian Society, etc.

This is a family arrangement to save their peace and honor and avoid litigation, such as have always been favored by the courts.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. 132, and cases cited; Stapleton v. Stapleton, 1 Atk. 10; Hibbard v. Kent, 15 N. H. 516; Cruger v. Douglas, 4 Edw. Ch. 447, 6 L. ed. 935, aff'd, 5 Barb. 225.

The court had the power to make the order in question.

Douglas v. Cruger, 80 N. Y. 15.

If the trustee had chosen to exercise its discretion by refusing to become a party to the agreement, unless the provision for the infant should be increased in amount, can there be any doubt that the court has ample power to control this discretion?

It has never been denied by any court that it had such power, but it has been exerted and exercised in innumerable cases, a few of which will be cited here.

Dacey v. Ward, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 754; Constabadié v. Constabadié, 6 Hare, (Eng. Ch.) 410; Re Roper's Trust, 40 L. T. N. S. 97; Bryan v. Knickerbacker, 1 Barb. Ch. 409, 5 L. ed. 435; Ireland v. Ireland, 84 N. Y. 321.

Must the court remove the trustee and appoint another, at the risk of it, or his, proving unreasonable, or will the court exercise its power of control—a power which has been exercised without question since the earliest assertion of the doctrine of the guardianship of infants by the court.

Brooke v. Mostyn, 2 De G. J. & S. 378; Mostyn v. Brooke, L. R. 4 Eng. & Ir. App. 804; Wall v. Rogers, L. R. 9 Eq. 88.

The power of the court to control the discretion of the trust company is ample.

Dacey v. Ward, supra; Constabadié v. Constabadié, 5 Hare (Eng. Ch.) 410; Re Roper's Trust, Bryan v. Knickerbacker, and Ireland v. Ireland, supra; Re Brewer, 43 Hun. 597.

Such compromises, fairly and reasonably made, to save the honor of a family, to prevent family disputes and family forfeitures have been constantly upheld by courts of equity in America as well as England.

1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 132, and cases cited; Stapleton v. Stapleton, supra; Jourdan v. Jourdan, 9 Serg. & R. 268; Hibbard v. Kent, 15 N. H. 516; Cruger v. Douglas, 4 Edw. Ch. 447, 6 L. ed. 935, aff'd, 5 Barb. 225.

And this rule has been applied as well to those acting in a fiduciary capacity as to those under disability and coverture, where the chancellor is satisfied that the compromise was conducive to the best interests of the parties.

2 White & T. Lead. Cases Eq. p. 1725, pt. 2, and cases cited.

It has been applied to trustees of charities.

Atty-Gen. v. Boucherett, 25 Beav. 116.

To the case of guardian and ward.

Cowan's App. 74 Pa. 829.

To the case of trustee and cestui que trust.

Wall v. Rogers, L. R. 9 Eq. 53; Lewin Trusts, 924 et seq., and cases cited.

Maynard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, which is the trustee of certain express trusts of real property, under the will of Francis W. Lasak, deceased, has been authorized and directed by the order of the supreme court to enter into a stipulation, 18 L. R. A.

which provides that a judgment shall be entered adjudging the will void as a will of real property, and thus annihilating the real-estate trusts created by it. We know of no power possessed by any court to compel a trustee to consent to a destruction of the trust, and the statutes of this state have denied to a trustee the power to do any act of his own volition which will accomplish such a result. The will of Lasak was admitted to probate by the surrogate of Westchester county after a prolonged contest, having for its foundation an alleged want of testamentary capacity, and his decree has been affirmed by this court. Re Lasak, 131 N. Y. 624. The trustee has thus become vested with a title to the trust property which is presumptively valid, and which cannot be impeached except for the incapacity of the testator, or for fraud or undue influence in the execution of the will. The burden of establishing its invalidity is cast by law upon the party assailing it, and the situation of the trustee in this respect is not different from that of the grantee of real estate under any other mode of conveyance. The grant may always be avoided by showing the incompetency of the grantor, or that its execution was procured by fraud or duress. By the sixtieth section of the Law of Uses and Trusts (4 Rev. Stat. [8th ed.] p. 2435) the whole estate in the lands embraced in the trust provisions of the will is for the time being vested in the trustee, both in law and in equity, subject only to the execution of the trust. A judgment of the court which compels him to part with his title to this property without a trial, without the submission of competent proofs, and without the application of the well-established principles of law regulating the determination of such questions is in direct violation of the fundamental law of the state and of society. It is true that courts of chancery and other equity tribunals have always exercised a supervisory power over the management of trust estates and the conduct of trustees, but they have never, save in exceptional cases, asserted the power to dissolve a trust before the expiration of the term for which it was created. The exceptions have been rare, and have always belonged to a well-defined class, where the interference of the court did not disturb or destroy the trust scheme, but was rendered necessary in order to prevent its entire failure. Trusts which have become impossible of performance because of the existence of conditions not anticipated or foreseen when they were created, are of this character; also marriage settlements, where the marital relation has been annulled; and other kindred cases. There was also a larger class, where the court would decree dissolution of the trust upon the application of all the interested parties, but this was strictly limited to cases where the whole design and object of the trust scheme had been practically accomplished, and all the interests created by it had become vested. 2 Perry, Trusts, 8d ed. § 920; Bowditch v. Andrew, 8 Allen. 341. Even then the assent of the trustee was essential to the exercise of jurisdiction. In none of these cases could it be said that the plan of the trust had been defeated, or the trust funds diverted from their original purpose. In all of them the trust had become moribund, and its life had practically terminated by the force of events not within the control of the trustee, and for which provision had not been made in the trust deed, and a final distribution of the trust estate could properly be decreed; but we have failed to find a case where it was ever attempted, as it is here, to strangle a trust in its infancy by judicial coercion. It is unnecessary to inquire whether, since the adoption of the Revised Statutes, even this limited power of a court of equity to abridge the trust term still survives, for none of the facts have been shown to exist in the present case which are necessary to call for the exercise of its jurisdiction. The design of the trust has not been accomplished, for its execution has scarcely yet been undertaken by the trustee; the trustee refuses to consent to its extinguishment; and there is no insuperable obstacle in the way of its complete performance according to the intent of the settlor. The only obstruction which it is claimed stands in the way of the consummation of the trust project, is the opposition of the heirs-at-law of the testator and of the beneficiaries of the trust, who, it seems, are not disposed to acquiesce in the decree of the surrogate as a final adjudication upon the mental capacity of their ancestor, and who have brought ten actions in ejectment to recover possession of the lands devised in trust, which have been defended by the trustee, and one of which has been tried, and resulted in a disagreement of the jury. An action of partition is also pending, in which this appeal is entitled, brought by one of the heirs, who is also a devisee. What the pleadings are we are not informed, but it is evident that under proper issues, framed according to the provisions of section 1537 of the Code, the validity of the real estate trusts can be litigated, and finally and conclusively determined in this suit. An action has also been commenced for the establishment of the will, but whether brought under section 1866 or 2653a, passed May 14, 1892, does not appear; probably under the former, as the latter is declared not to be retroactive. It must be admitted that this array of litigation is not likely to be productive of great profit to the trust estate, and may possibly tend to its depletion, but it furnishes no sufficient reason why its extinction should be abruptly and summarily decreed by the court. The trustee makes no complaint that, in consequence of it, he finds the execution of his trust duties difficult or impossible, and the parties who have initiated the litigation will hardly be permitted to make use of it as a plea for the abandonment of the trust provisions in the will. Trusts are usually created for the purpose of withholding from the beneficiaries or other interested parties the control and disposition of the principal of the trust fund for reasons which appear sufficient to the settlor, and they are not, as a general rule, regarded with satisfaction by the persons who are thus deprived of the possession of the trust estate; and, if the precedent here sought to be established should prevail, it would be easy for the parties who would profit by a dissolution of the trust to create a condition which would render such a result attainable.

We also think that this order is expressly inhibited by the provisions of sections 63 and 18 L. R. A.

65 of the Statute of Uses and Trusts, (4 Rev. Stat. [8th ed.] p. 2439,) which declare that in a trust of this character the beneficiary cannot assign or in any manner dispose of his interest, and that every sale, conveyance, or other act of the trustee in contravention of the trust shall be absolutely void. The Revised Statutes effected great changes in the Law of Trusts. Secret, passive, formal, and resulting trusts, with some exceptions, were abolished, and express trusts authorized, but limited to a few designated objects, and their creation in perpetuity prohibited. At the same time the power of the beneficiary and of the trustee to alienate the trust property, even with the approval of the court, was taken away. The statute plainly endows all express trusts of realty which are valid in their creation with the attribute of indestructibility. This statute received a construction very soon after its adoption by the chancellor in Wood v. Wood, 5 Paige, 596, 8 L. ed. 844, 28 Am. Dec. 451, where it was held that the trustee could not, even at the request of the beneficiary, and with the direction of the court of chancery, do any act, or consent to a different disposition of the estate which would be equivalent to a virtual alienation of the property devised to him in trust. In Cruger v. Jones, 18 Barb. 467, the only alienation proposed was a mortgage of the trust estate to provide funds for the erection of buildings and the making of other permanent improvements upon it for the purpose of enhancing its productiveness, and the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court declared with great earnestness: "Large as its jurisdiction is, both in law and equity, I know of no such power, even in the supreme court, to dispense with the enactment of the Legislature, and make that valid which the lawgiver has declared shall be void. The parties interested sanction, it is said, the act, and desire that it may be done. But the law says, in such a trust, the parties beneficially interested cannot assign, or in any manner dispose of, their interest. How, then, can their consenting to or joining in the mortgage improve its efficiency? It is void as the act of the trustee, and void as the act of the beneficiary, and must, therefore, in this view, be void in toto." This language was quoted with approval by Judge Earl in Douglas v. Cruger, 80 N. Y. 19, where it is said: "The supreme court has not the power to destroy a valid trust. The purpose of the statute was to make these trust estates and trust interests indestructible, and absolutely inalienable during the existence of the trust, and if they could be rendered alienable by order of the court, the whole scheme of the statute would be greatly impaired, and its purpose thwarted. The statute does not confer upon the supreme court power to authorize such conveyances." The same doctrine was reiterated by Chief Justice Andrews in Lent v. Howard, 89 N. Y. 169.

The authorities to which our attention has been called by the respondent's counsel, all relate to matters resting in the discretion of the trustee. If he has been invested with a discretionary power in the trust deed, the court will closely scrutinize his acts, and interfere to control his conduct whenever necessary to prevent him from so exercising his discretion as to oppress the beneficiary, or cause loss to the trust property. In other words, the jurisdiction of the court can always be invoked for the conservation of the trust, but never for its destruction. In the present case the trustee has no discretion to exercise. It has been suggested that he might allow judgment to be taken in this action adjudging the trust provisions of the will to be void, either by the service of an offer, or by a failure to answer. We cannot approve of this view of his powers. The absolute and positive duty is imposed upon him to defend the life of the trust whenever it is assailed, if the means of defense are known to him, or can with diligence be discovered. The statute above referred to, which enjoins upon him to refrain from doing any act which will defeat the trust, embraces defaults and other omissions of duty as well as open and avowed acts of hostility. If a stipulation which permits a judgment to be entered rendering void the trust conveyance is not an act "which contravenes the trust," it will be difficult to conceive of any action on the part of the trustee which could produce such a result. It is urged that, inasmuch as one of the beneficiaries of these trusts is an infant, and his estate is endangered by the litigation, the court had power to intervene and compel the trustee to enter into a compromise which secures a fund for the benefit of the infant, which may otherwise be lost. Where only the rights of the infant are involved, a court of equity undoubtedly possesses large discretionary power, which it may exercise for the protection of the property of those who are in law deemed to be its wards, and which may be exerted to control the action of the custodian of the minor or of his estate. But this jurisdiction cannot be employed to deprive others of the title to property which they have lawfully acquired, and the trustee holds the estate committed to him for the benefit of all the parties who are presently or will be eventually entitled to share in its enjoyment.

The orders of the general and special terms must be reversed, and the petition dismissed, with costs out of the estate.

All concur, except Earl, J., not voting.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

City of JOLIET, Appt.,

v.

Mary A. SHUFELT.

(.....Ill.....)

1. The negligence of a city in leaving a street in unsafe condition is legally the proximate cause of an injury which results therefrom to a traveler although it would not have occurred except for the running away of a horse which became frightened and unmanageable because the bit of the bridle became loosened, if there was no negligence on the part of traveler.
2. That the breaking of bridles and harness are of frequent occurrence and that horses otherwise tractable and gentle are liable to run away when thus freed from restraint is a matter of common knowledge which the court may assume as a fact.

(January 19, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Second District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Will County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Shope, J.:

Exchange street, in the city of Joliet, runs west from Bluff street, which extends north and south along the base of a bluff or hill. Exchange street was laid out 86 feet wide, and originally extended up the hill, on quite a steep grade, to an intersection with Broadway, at the top of a hill, about 248 feet west of Bluff street. Broadway runs north and south, and extends from its intersection with Exchange in a course up a hill to Oneida street. About the year 1886 the city of Joliet cut down about two thirds of Exchange street, for the purpose of making a more level and convenient route from Bluff street west to regions lying west of Broadway, and thereby entirely severed the former connection of most of Exchange street with Broadway, and carried Broadway over the part so cut down by means of a viaduct. About one third of Exchange street was left substantially at the original grade connecting Broadway with Bluff street as before. The roadways were of stone, and were separated by a stone wall. There was a sidewalk on the north side of the upper roadway, and a carriage way next south, with a cobblestone gutter next the stone wall. The carriage way declined towards the wall, the decline from the middle being about 6 inches in 10 feet. The stone wall was made with benches or rises going up the hill, and finished with coping stones, laid level. The wall was about 4 feet higher than the carriage way proper, and from 4 to something over 5 feet higher than the gutter. A carriage could be driven in the gutter, and close to the wall. On the evening of June 2, 1889, at about 10 o'clock, Mary A. Shufelt was riding in a top-buggy, with the top partly down, drawn by a horse procured at a livery stable by a young man who was driving and managing the horse, down the hill on Broadway, from Oneida street towards the viaduct and the upper roadway on Exchange street. The horse started into a trot, and when the driver pulled the lines to check him it was found that the bit had parted at the connection of the mouthpiece with one ring, and the bridle was pulled back off from the horse's head upon his neck, and he was freed from any kind of restraint. The horse ran down Broadway, and turned into the upper roadway on Exchange street, towards the barn where he was kept. In making the turn the buggy struck the stone wall at a point where it was a little over 5 feet higher than the gutter, and between 16 and 17 feet higher than the lower roadway. The driver, who was nearer the wall, was thrown over it into the lower roadway, and Miss Shufelt was thrown upon the wall, and then fell from the wall into the lower roadway; the seat arm, to which she was clinging, was broken, and her hand lacerated, and she sustained injuries from which she was paralyzed, and became utterly helpless, with no prospect of recovery. The horse continued down the hill with the buggy, until it struck a telegraph pole, where the buggy was left with the right fore wheel disbed, and the thills and crossbar broken. Suit was instituted, and there was a verdict and judgment for $5,000.

NOTE.—The decision in the above case is in harmony with the majority of cases in other states, 18 L. R. A.

for which, see note to Bowes v. Boston (Mass.) 15 L. R. A. 365.

See also 19 L. R. A. 365; 20 L. R. A. 582; 21 L. R. A. 316, 721.

It should be added that in the direction in which appellee was going on Broadway there was a sharp descent to Exchange street, and continuing into Exchange street. The grade is sharp at this point, being about 9 feet in every 100 feet. The roadway around the curve from Broadway into Exchange street declines both ways,—towards the wall and south: that is, the outside of the curve made declines both ways. By reason of the sidewalk on the north side of Exchange street said street is reduced to about 12 feet in width. Before the accident the horse was kind and gentle, the harness practically new, and it does not appear, nor is it claimed, that appellee or the driver were guilty of any negligence or want of proper care. The charges of negligence laid in the declaration involved the construction of the street and wall; that the road was of insufficient width; that it was out of repair, and in bad and unsafe condition; and that the stone wall dividing the upper and lower roadways was insufficient in height, etc. On appeal to the appellate court the judgment was affirmed, and the city appeals.

Messrs. J. W. Downey and J. L. O'Donnell for appellant.

Messrs. George S. House and Shuman & Defrees for appellee.

Shope, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal point urged for reversal arises upon the second instruction given on behalf of plaintiff. Thereby the jury were, in effect, told that if the plaintiff, with a companion, who was driving, were riding in a buggy drawn by a horse along and upon one of the public streets of the city, and that without the fault of the plaintiff or her companion, they being in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, the bit of the bridle on the horse became loosened, so that the control of the horse was lost, and thereby the horse became and was unmanageable, and ran away, without negligence on the part of plaintiff or said driver, and turned from said street into another public street of said city, and the loosening of the bit and loss of control of the horse was a pure accident, which common prudence and sagacity could not have foreseen and provided against, and that said street into which the horse turned was so out of repair or defective that the same was not reasonably safe or secure to guard against ordinary accidents likely to occur thereon to persons using the same without fault, and in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, and that by reason of the unsafe and defective condition and repair of said street the said buggy was thrown against the wall there existing, with such force as to throw the plaintiff out of the buggy, and cause the injury complained of, and the city had actual notice of such defects in the street, etc., the city would be liable for the injuries thus sustained. It is insisted with great force that, conceding the negligence of the defendant, such negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury; and that, in any event, the running away of the horse concurring in producing the injury, the defendant is, therefore, not liable.

We are referred to a number of Massachusetts cases, and some others may be found, which sustain the views of counsel. In this state, however, these cases have not been followed. In Joliet v. Verley, 85 Ill. 58, 85 Am. Dec. 842, we held that if a plaintiff, while observing due care for his personal safety, was injured by the combined result of an accident and the negligence of a city or village, and without such negligence the injury would not have occurred, the city or village will be held liable, although the accident be the primary cause of the injury, if the consequences could, with common prudence and sagacity, have been foreseen, and provided against. This doctrine has received express approval in many subsequent cases, among which may be mentioned Bloomington v. Bay, 42 Ill. 508; Lacon v. Page, 48 Ill. 499; Cartier v. Cook, 129 Ill. 152. And in Lacon v. Page, supra, the doctrine was applied to a case like the present, where the accident concurring with negligence of the city in producing the injury was the running away of the plaintiff's horses without fault on his part. There the city, having constructed a drain under one of its streets, allowed it to so get out of repair that a hole a foot wide, two feet long, and eight inches deep had been made in the street. The plaintiff was driving his horses to a lumber wagon, when they ran away. One wheel of the wagon going into this hole, in the rebound plaintiff was violently thrown to the ground, and injured. We then said, after approving the rule in the Verley Case, supra, and holding it applicable: "One great reason for requiring a corporation to keep its streets in repair is to reduce, as far as possible, the injuries that may result from the accidents so liable to occur in crowded thoroughfares. If the accident would not have caused the injury but for the defect in the street, and that defect is the result of carelessness on the part of the city, and the plaintiff has used ordinary care, the city must be held liable." The same doctrine has been announced in many decided cases elsewhere. See Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N.Y. 88, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Baldwin v. Greenwood's Turnp. Co. 40 Conn. 288, 16 Am. Rep. 83; Hull v. Kansas City, 54 Mo. 601; Hunt v. Pownall, 9 Vt. 411; Winship v. Enfield, 42 N. H. 197; Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am.

Rep. 738; Sherwood v. Hamilton, 87 U. C. Q. B. 410; Palmer v. Andover, 2 Cush. 600; Kelsey v. Glover, 15 Vt. 708.

In Baldwin v. Greenwoods Turnp. Co., supra, it is said: "If the plaintiff is in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, and the injury is attributable to the negligence of the defendants, combined with some accidental cause, to which the plaintiff has not negligently contributed, the defendants are liable. Nor will the fact that the horse of the plaintiff was uncontrollable for some distance before the injury occurred in any way affect the liability of the defendants." And the court held the loss should be charged upon the party guilty of the first and only negligence. In King v. Cohoes, supra, after reviewing the authorities upon this subject, it is said: "When, without any fault of the driver, a horse becomes uncontrollable, or runs away, it is regarded as an incidental occurrence, for which the driver is not responsible; and the rule, as laid down in the cases cited, may be formulated thus: When two causes combine to produce an injury upon a traveler upon a highway, both of which are in their nature proximate, the one being a culpable defect in the highway, and the other some occurrence for which neither party is responsible, the municipality is liable, provided the injury would not have been sustained but for such defect. This appears to us to be the reasonable rule." And, after noting the care and diligence required of municipalities, the court adds: "They are not bound to furnish roads upon which it will be safe for horses to run away, but they are bound to furnish reasonably safe roads, and if they do not, and a traveler is injured by culpable defects in the roads, it is no defense that his horse was, at the time, running away, or was beyond his control."

We are aware that the courts of Massachusetts, Maine, Wisconsin, and perhaps other states, have adopted the contrary rule, but we are as already seen committed to the doctrine already announced; and, independently of that, it seems to us to be the better and more reasonable rule. It imposes no additional duty or obligation upon the municipality, but requires only that it use reasonable skill and diligence in making its streets reasonably safe for travel, and to provide for such use of them as may reasonably be expected, and foreseen by the exercise of reasonable foresight and judgment. The general doctrine is that it is no defense, in actions for negligent injuries, that the negligence of third persons, or an inevitable accident, or an inanimate thing, contributed to cause the injury of the plaintiff, if the negligence of the defendant was an efficient cause, without which the injury would not have occurred. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Shacklet, 105 Ill. 384; Union R. & Transit Co. v. Shacklet, 119 Ill. 282; Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Keifer, 184 Ill. 481, 10 L. R. A. 696; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 82 N. E. Rep. 285 (not yet officially reported); Peoria v. Simpson, 110 Ill. 801, 51 Am. Rep. 683. See 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 440-448, and notes; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1085.

This being the general rule, we are unable to perceive in what way the intervention of the mere brute force or will of the horse at liberty without fault or negligence of the plaintiff, 18 L. R. A.

and for which neither party is responsible, can be different in its effects or consequences from the intervention of the act of a third person, or of an accident having a like effect, provided the injury would not have occurred but for the negligence of the defendant. In such case, neither the running away of the horse nor the defects in the street are alone sufficient to produce the injury, but it is produced by the combination of both, and they become, therefore, in combination, the efficient and proximate cause. The causal relation is direct between the defective street, occasioned by the negligence or omission of duty by the defendant, and the injury to the plaintiff, and without any intervening efficient cause.

The verdict of the jury in this case was general, and might have been predicated on either of the charges contained in the declaration. They may have found that the negligence consisted in not raising the wall a sufficient height to prevent the plaintiff from being precipitated 17 feet upon the stones at the bottom of the cut; or that the road was left too narrow; or because of its sloping towards the wall. The horse had already run down the declivity upon Broadway, and, upon reaching the intersection with Exchange street, made the turn into this narrow, 12-foot street, with a descent of about 9 feet in 100 to the east or lengthwise of the street, and descending also to the south, or towards the wall separating this roadway from the other cut by the city; and the natural result, the road, as stated by counsel for appellant, being smooth, would be to give the buggy a violent lateral motion in the direction of the wall, which would be accelerated by the declivity of the road, and which might have been avoided had the road been level, or the outer edge of the segment of the circle described by the horse in turning been higher than the inner, or had the road sloped from, instead of to, the wall. The evidence shows that the horse did not come in contact with the wall, and the jury would be justified in finding that, if the street had been of reasonable width, or had been so constructed that the buggy would not have been thrown against the wall, the injury would not have occurred. If they found that the injury resulted from either of said causes, and that the city was negligent therein, they would also be justified in finding that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

It is, however, urged that the court in this instruction assumed that the accident by which the horse became uncontrollable was an ordinary accident, likely to occur, and, that being a question of fact, proper to be passed upon by the jury, it was error. Without pausing to discuss or determine whether the instruction is susceptible of that interpretation, if the point be conceded, it is not prejudicial error. The requirement of the instruction before the jury could find the defendant guilty was that they should believe from the evidence "that said Exchange street was so out of repair or defective that the same was not reasonably safe or secure to guard against ordinary accidents likely to occur thereon to persons using the same" in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. By another instruction, given by the court at its own instance, the jury were told that the defendant was not liable for the injury if they believed from the evidence that the wall in question was of sufficient height to be safe for persons exercising reasonable care, etc., and sufficiently high to prevent horses, carriages, and persons from tipping or falling over the same "in case of accidents ordinarily likely to occur while driving on said street at that point, and that the street at said point was otherwise, as to its condition of repair, in a reasonably safe condition for persons driving thereon," etc. Taking these instructions together, it seems impossible that the jury could have understood the court as assuming the fact stated. But if this was otherwise, it would form no just ground for reversal. The breaking of bridles and harness and of vehicles are of constant occurrence. That horses, although otherwise tractable and gentle, are liable to and do run away when thus freed from restraint, is a common and ordinary experience, against which every reasonable and prudent man takes precaution. There was nothing extraordinary in this horse running away, and it might reasonably have been anticipated. No one would think it necessary to prove that it was an accident likely to occur; it is a matter of common knowledge and experience. And if the case were sent back for another trial, and the question submitted as one of fact, the finding could by no possibility be different as to the accident being one ordinarily likely to occur. Other objections were interposed, which we have carefully examined, but deem without merit.

Finding no prejudicial error, the judgment of the Appellate Court will be affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Emil MALMGREN et al., Respts.,

v.

Albert S. PHINNEY et al., and Charles J. BERRYHILL et al., Appts.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. Steinmets v. St. Paul Trust Co. (filed July 12.) followed as to the time and manner of commencing actions to enforce mechanics' liens.
2. The service of a summons by publication is valid, although one of the publications is made on May 30, (Memorial day.)
3. The vendor and vendee in an executory contract for the sale of real estate cannot, by any stipulation between themselves, deprive third persons (not parties to the contract) of their statutory rights to liens for material or labor subsequently furnished to the vendee for the construction of buildings on the premises.
4. B. contracted to sell P. certain real estate for a consideration to be partly paid in cash on delivery of the deed, and the balance to be secured by mortgage on the premises. The contract provided that P. might execute a mortgage to a third person, which should be superior to the purchase-money mortgage to be executed to B. P. went into possession, and commenced the erection of a building on the premises, and for labor and material furnished therefor mechanics' liens attached to his interest in the property. Subsequently, in pursuance of their contract, B. conveyed to P., who thereupon executed a first mortgage to H., and a second mortgage for purchase money to B. Held, that, in an action to enforce the mechanics' liens, upon a sale of the property there should be paid out of the proceeds (1) H's mortgage to the extent of the amount due on B's mortgage; (2) the mechanics' liens; (3) the balance of H's mortgage; and (4) B's mortgage.

(July 14, 1892.)

* Headnotes by MITCHELL, J.

NOTE.—A peculiar case is presented above and an equitable result is reached in an ingenious way.

A purchase-money mortgage which would otherwise have been prior to mechanics' liens was by agreement postponed to another mortgage to a third person which would otherwise have been inferior to such liens. The court transfers the priority of the purchase-money mortgage pro tanto to the other mortgage and then holds the balance of such other mortgage and the purchase-money mortgage to be inferior to the mechanics' liens.

A PPEAL by defendants Berryhill et al., from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce a mechanics' lien. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. F. Stevens and Charles J. Berryhill, for appellants:

If the basis of the right to enforce a claim as a lien against property is the consent of the owner—"by virtue of any contract with, or at the instance of the owner,"—what legal objection can be urged to the landowner insisting that the claimant look only to the personal responsibility of the contractor? And is not this in effect the change made by section 4 of the Statute of 1889 from the rule of Hill against Gill?

In this instance the limitation qualifies the power and not the exercise of the authority conferred by the contract between vendors and vendees as in Paine v. Tillinghast, 53 Conn. 532.

The New Jersey Lien Law required the consent of the owner of the fee to be in writing. Certain materials were furnished and labor done for the tenant where written permission of the landlord had been given, "all at their cost and expense." The court holds: "The written consent which, under the lien law, will bind the land of the owner for repairs contracted for by the tenant, must be absolute in its terms. Before giving credit, inquiry can be made if the owner of the premises had given such written consent to repair as the law contemplates, and if not, the work need not be done nor the materials furnished, unless willing to trust the tenant for payment."

Hervey v. Gay, 43 N. J. L. 176.

A Pennsylvania statute required "written consent of the owner" as a prerequisite of a lien right. Such consent was given by landlord to tenants to make repairs "at their own cost." The court holds: "As between the parties to the covenant, this was a consent on the part of the lessor that the lessees might make the improvement. But was not such a consent as is required by the Act in order to entitle the plaintiff to a lien for the work which he did, and the materials which he furnished at their instance in making the improvement."

McClintock v. Criswell, 67 Pa. 188; Nolander v. Burns (Minn.) Jan. 6, 1892; Shaver v. Murdock, 36 Cal. 298; Henley v. Wadsworth, 38 Cal. 861; Bruen v. Aubrey, 23 Cal. 571; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 272, p. 589; Long v. Caffrey, 93 Pa. 528; Macintosh v. Thurston, 25 N. J. Eq. 242; Moroney's App. 24 Pa. 872; Shaw v. First Baptist Church of Winona, 44 Minn. 22; St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. v. Bradbury, 42 Minn. 226; Johnson v. Howard, 20 Minn. 322; Barter v. Hutchings, 49 Ill. 116; Kneeland, Mechanics' Liens, § 137; Schmale v. Mead, 125 N. Y. 188.

A summons by which a suit is commenced in the district court is designated process though it does not issue out of the court, but it serves the purpose and is in the nature of process and therefore may with propriety be so called.

Dorman v. Bayley, 10 Minn. 384.

The plain intent of the statute was to make the three days dis non except in cases of public necessity of which the officer was to judge at the time.

Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 119, 20 Am. Rep. 518; McLaughlin v. Wheeler (S. Dak.) Dec. 22, 1891; Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 678.

Messrs. Humphrey Barton, Howard L. Smith, William H. Yardley, Williams & Schoonmaker, John B. Sanborn, W. H. Sanborn and H. G. Otis for respondents.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

April 8, 1890, defendants, Berryhill and Davison, being the owners of a certain lot in St. Paul (164 feet in length from north to south), contracted to sell it to one Wick for $2,500, of which $1,500 was to be paid in cash on delivery of the deed, and the remaining $1,000 to be secured by mortgage on the lot. This contract also provided "that, if Wick shall erect, or cause to be erected, a dwelling-house on said lot, he may incumber said lot by a mortgage in an amount not exceeding $3,000, which said mortgage said Berryhill and Davison agree may be superior and paramount to the mortgage to be executed to them, as hereinbefore described, provided said house so to be erected upon said lot shall cost at least as much as the amount of said first mortgage. Said Wick is to, and hereby agrees to, protect said premises from all claims and liens of laborers or materialmen, and to pay the same; and it is expressly agreed that the title and lien of the said second mortgagees in and to said lots shall not be affected by any claims or liens of material men or laborers for material or labor furnished or performed for and in the erection of said house." May 1, 1890, defendant Phinney, who succeeded to Wicks' interests in this contract, took possession of the lot, and commenced the erection of a dwelling-house, and also a barn, thereon; the house being located on the north 104 feet of the lot, and the barn on the 20 feet immediately south of the 104 feet. The following parties furnished Phinney labor and material for the construction of the dwelling-house, except that that furnished by plaintiff was for the barn. The dates show when each party furnished the first item of labor or material: Burns & Shaw, May 19, 1890; Anderson & Plaster, June 8, 1890; Shandrew & Scheible, June 11, 1890; St. Paul Glass Co., July 29, 1890; Knauff, October 2, 1890; Malmgren & Hokanson (plaintiffs), November 1, 1890. July 3, 1890, Berryhill and Davison conveyed the lot to Phinney, who on the same day executed a first mortgage to defendant Huntsaker for $3,250, and a second mortgage, subject to the Huntsaker mortgage, to Berryhill and Davison for $1,100, the balance of purchase money due them. This second mortgage was subsequently assigned to defendant Resser. The deed and the two mortgages were all promptly recorded. When Huntsaker took his mortgage he had actual notice that the house was being constructed and was uncompleted. July 7, Phinney conveyed the south 40 feet of the lot to Wigus, who afterwards conveyed it to defendant Konantz. August 28, Phinney conveyed the north 104 feet to defendant Mahan. November 1, Phinney conveyed the remaining 20 feet to defendant Peterson. These deeds were recorded July 8, September 1, and November 11, respectively. The trial court held that defendants Burns and Shaw were entitled to a lien on the whole lot, and that the other lien claimants, including plaintiffs, were entitled to liens on the whole lot, except the south 40 feet; also that the liens of the Huntsaker and Resser mortgages were both subject and subordinate to the liens of Burns and Shaw, Anderson & Plaster, and Shandrew & Scheible. The court also directed the sale of the south 40 feet and the remainder of the lot to be sold separately. Berryhill and Davison, Huntsaker, Resser, and Konantz, alone appeal, and hence only the alleged errors of which they complain can be considered.

1. The court held that the lien claimants, other than Burns and Shaw, were not entitled to liens on the south 40 feet, because the action was not commenced as against Konantz, the owner, within one year from the time of furnishing the last items of labor and material by the claimants. This is fully sustained by Steinmetz v. St. Paul Trust Co. (Minn.) 52 N. W. Rep. 915 (just decided).

2. The court erred in holding plaintiffs entitled to a lien on the north 104 feet of the lot. This had been conveyed by Phinney long before they furnished any labor or material. They should have been given a lien only on the 20 feet conveyed to Peterson. This error was doubtless a mere oversight or inadvertence on part of the learned trial judge.

3. It is urged that Peterson, the owner of 20 feet of the lot, and consequently a necessary party, was never served with the summons in this action. He was a nonresident, and service was had upon him by publication for six successive weeks once in each week; and, as one of the publications was made on May 30

(Memorial day), it is claimed that the publication was invalid, because the statute provides that "no civil process shall be served" on that day. Laws 1891, chap. 123. We have not overlooked the case of Sevall v. St. Paul, 20 Minn. 511 (Gil. 459), in which it was held that a notice published six days, one of which was Sunday, was invalid, although there is respectable authority holding the contrary. See Saving & Loan Soc. v. Thompson, 82 Cal. 347. But we think there is a clear distinction between a publication on Sunday, and one on what we may term a "secular holiday." The Sunday issue is commonly considered as really a distinct paper from the issue on week days, and to a considerable extent circulates among a different class of subscribers. A large and respectable portion of the community who take the week-day issues do not take the Sunday issue. Hence a publication on Sunday would not be so likely to come to the attention of the parties for whom it is intended. It would not be so likely to serve the purpose for which it was designed, to wit, notice. Not so with papers issued on such holidays as Memorial day, the Fourth of July, and the like, which are part of the regular issue, and are distributed among the same subscribers. Again, the publication of a notice does not come within the spirit of the statute. The object of the prohibition against serving process on these holidays is to prevent any interference with their quiet enjoyment or observance, either by the intrusion of officers to serve process, or by the parties being compelled to obey them on those days. This reason applies to personal service, but not to service by publication. Our conclusion is that the service on Peterson was valid.

4. Counsel for appellants contend that both the mortgages are entitled to preference over all the mechanics' liens, because of the provision in the contract between Berryhill and Davison and Wick (Phinney's assignor) that the latter was to protect the property from all such liens, and that the title and lien of these mortgages (which were provided for in the contract) should not be affected by any claims of materialmen or laborers for labor or material for the erection of the house. It is claimed that the authority of the vendee in such a contract to charge the interest of the vendor rests upon the principle of agency, and that this provision is a limitation upon the agency, and that the rights of every one who furnishes labor or material are subject to this limitation. If this is so, it would be a very convenient way to repeal the provisions of the Lien Law. Such a stipulation cannot deprive of their rights under the statute persons not parties to it. It is the law which at once creates the authority to charge the land, and defines its extent. It is the statute, and not the stipulation of Berryhill, Davison, and Wick, which must determine the rights of third parties. Miller v. Mead, 127 N. Y. 544, 18 L. R. A. 701.

5. The only remaining question is whether the court was right in holding that the Resser mortgage, given to Berryhill & Davison for purchase money is subject and subordinate to the mechanics' liens. These liens attached while the legal title was still in Berryhill and

Davison, and consequently attached only to the equitable interest of Phinney, the vendee. Hence, if the Huntsaker mortgage was entirely out of the case, and Berryhill and Davison had simply conveyed to Phinney, and taken back a mortgage for the purchase money, this mortgage would unquestionably have taken precedence of all the mechanics' liens, being merely a continuation in changed form of the vendor's lien. But, doubtless, the trial judge followed the case of Reilly v. Williams, 47 Minn. 590, in which we held that, where the vendor accepts from the vendee as security for part of the purchase money a mortgage subject to a prior mortgage by the vendee to a third party, he holds it also subject to a mechanics' lien which attached prior to the lien of the first mortgage. The result arrived at in that case was clearly right, because the vendor conveyed in April, while the mortgages were not executed until August, and in the meantime (July 1st) the mechanics' lien had attached, while the unincumbered title, both in fact and of record, was in the vendee. On this state of facts the result arrived at was undoubtedly correct; but, on further consideration, we are satisfied that the ground upon which the decision was placed, although plausible, was unsound. The controlling principles underlying the whole doctrine of marshaling funds are equality and equity; and it is not apparent why a vendor, by subordinating his lien for purchase money to another mortgage, necessarily subordinates it also to all liens having priority over the other mortgage, thus placing them in a better position than they would otherwise have occupied. Take the present case for example. According to their original and equitable order, these mechanics' liens, although prior to the Huntsaker mortgage, were subject to Berryhill and Davison's lien for purchase money; but under the rule of Reilly v. Williams they are moved forward, and take precedence of both mortgages. Such a rule lacks equity, and ought not to be adopted unless unavoidable. There is no practical difficulty in the way of applying another rule that will work out exact justice, and give to each lien the place which it is entitled to equitably, and according to the agreement of the parties. In the present case, as between the Resser mortgage and the mechanics' lien, the former is entitled to priority, while by the convention of the parties the Huntsaker mortgage is entitled to priority over the Resser mortgage. Hence, when the land is sold, then, as between Resser and the respondents, the former is entitled to a preference to the amount of his mortgage, but as between the two mortgagees Huntsaker is entitled to a preference over Resser. The result is that out of the proceeds of sale there should be paid (1) the Huntsaker mortgage to the extent of the amount of the Resser mortgage (this not because of any priority of the Huntsaker mortgage over the mechanics' liens, but because of its priority over the Resser mortgage); (2) the mechanics' liens prior to the Huntsaker mortgage; (3) the balance of the Huntsaker mortgage; (4) the Resser mortgage; (5) mechanics' liens subsequent to both mortgages. We have not considered what changes, if any, in the manner of sale will be necessary, but have left that matter for the consideration of the trial court.

Cause remanded, with directions to modify the judgment in accordance with this opinion. Rehearing denied October 5, 1892.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

C. FOGARTY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
JUNCTION CITY PRESSED BRICK CO.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. When a company engaged in burning brick upon leased land uses a process in burning that generates noxious gases, that are wafted upon the adjacent lands of the lessor, injuring and destroying a growing crop of wheat, this is such a nuisance that the lessor may maintain an action to recover damages by reason thereof.

2. A landowner who leases land to a company for the manufacture of pressed brick, and the company uses a process in burning that generates noxious gases, that injure and destroy his growing crops, is not estopped from claiming damages for the injury occasioned by the nuisance because he leased the land for that purpose, as he had a right to presume that the process used would be a reasonable and lawful one.

(January 7, 1893.)

ERROR to the District Court for Geary County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a proceeding to enjoin if from using coal and other materials injurious to plaintiff's crops, in burning its brick kilns, and for damages. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Mr. John E. Hessin for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. R. McClure, for defendant in error:

If the brick plant had been erected upon the land of the company without the consent or acquiescence of the plaintiff and the method of making and burning brick prosecuted in a lawful manner and in the ordinary way, with the exercise of proper care, and some unforeseen and inevitable damage resulted to the property of another, under the authorities, at least in this county, the company would not be liable. "The exercise of ordinary rights for a lawful purpose and in a lawful manner is no wrong, even if it causes damage."

5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 68-75, and authorities cited in notes; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 700.

In the case of Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357, it is held "that a man may enjoy his land in the way such property is usually enjoyed, without being answerable for the indirect or consequential damages which may be sustained by an adjoining landowner."

Headnotes by SIMPSON, C.

He may set fire to his fallow-ground; and though the fire runs into and burn the woodland of his neighbor, no action will lie.

Clark v. Fouts, 8 Johns. 421.

He may open and work a coal mine in his own land, though it injure the house which another has built at the extremity of his land.

Partridge v. Scott, 8 Mees. & W. 220.

He may do the same thing, though it cut off an underground stream of water which before supplied his neighbor's well, and leave the well dry.

Acton v. Blundell, 13 Mees. & W. 324.

He may build on his own land though it stop the lights of his neighbor.

Parker v. Fouts, 19 Wend. 809.

And even though he build for the very purpose of stopping the lights.

Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. 261, 28 Am. Dec. 461.

He may pull down his own house, though the adjoining house fall for the want of the support which it before had; and he may do it without shoring up the adjoining house—that being the business of the owner.

Peyton v. London, 9 Barn. & C. 725.

He may pull down his own wall, though the vaults of his neighbor may be thereby destroyed.

Chadwick v. Trower, 6 Bing. N. O. 1.

He may build a house and make cellars upon his soil, whereby a house on the adjoining soil falls down.

Comyns' Dig. Action on the Case for Nuisance. See also Loose v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Thurston v. Hancock, 13 Mass. 220, 7 Am. Dec. 57.

No liability attaches in the use of one's own property unless damage was occasioned by some wrongful or negligent act.

Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Butts, 7 Kan. 303. See also Emerson v. Gardiner, 8 Kan. 452; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Davidson, 14 Kan. 849; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Brady, 17 Kan. 880; Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. Cook, 18 Kan. 261; Sweeney v. Merrill, 33 Kan. 216.

In Loose v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 484, 10 Am. Rep. 623, the court says: "We must have factories, machinery, dams, canals, and railroads. They are demanded by the manifold wants of mankind, and lay at the basis of all our civilization. If I have any of these upon my lands, and they are not a nuisance and are not so managed as to become such, I am not responsible for any damage they accidentally and unavoidably do my neighbor."

The lease of the property carried with it whatever was essential to its use for the purpose for which it was rented, and if the company has not violated any of the conditions of damage. On the subject of nuisances by lawful business, see also note to Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. (N. Y.) 9 L. R. A. 711.

NOTE.—In Robb v. Carnegie, 14 L. R. A. 320, 145 Pa. 324, injury to crops by gases from a manufacturing establishment was held to be an actionable 18 L. R. A.

the contract, it is clear under every principle of equity that the plaintiff has no remedy. In the absence of an express contract, if the works had been constructed with the implied consent of plaintiff, equity would not restrain their use, although they proved injurious.

Hulme v. Shreve, 4 N. J. Eq. 116; Bigelow, Estoppel, 688, and cases cited in notes.

No duty was imposed upon the company to inform the plaintiff upon any detail it intended to pursue in the manufacture of brick. If the plaintiff was ignorant of the methods required in making brick and desired information, it was his place to seek it. And the company can surely not be held responsible for his ignorance or negligence.

2 Pom. Eq. § 810.

Simpson, C., filed the following opinion:

The plaintiff in error filed his petition in the court below, and the material allegations are as follows: That the said defendant, the Junction City Press Brick Company, is a corporation created by, and existing under and by virtue of, the laws of the state of Kansas, and engaged in the business of burning brick at Junction City, in said county. That said plaintiff is now, and has been for a long period of time, the owner and in the possession of the following described real estate in the said county of Geary, and described as follows, to wit: Special section number nine, (9), and also lots numbered seven (7) and eight, (8), all in township number twelve (12) south, of range six (6) east. That, at the time and times hereafter mentioned, the said plaintiff was in possession of said real estate, except a small tract of about two acres leased to the said defendant company, as hereinafter stated. That said land has been cultivated in fall wheat for several years last past, and was sowed to fall wheat in the fall of 1888. That said plaintiff had growing upon said land, in the season of 1888 and 1889,—acres in fall wheat, which, in the spring of 1889, was growing and in good condition on said land owned and possessed by the said plaintiff. That on or about the 1st day of August, 1888, the said defendant brick company leased from the plaintiff about two acres of said land for the period of one year, with option to renew said lease from year to year for five years; said lease to commence on the 1st day of August, 1888. Said defendant company was to have the use of the water power owned by the said plaintiff, and known as "Fogarty's Mill," to run one Eureka brick press. The rental was $100 per month. Said lease was upon further condition that said defendant company was to carefully and properly manage and control the power so to be supplied, and in no way to interfere with or injure the property rights of the said plaintiff, and to commit no injury on the said premises of the said plaintiff, during the existence of said lease. A copy of said lease is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A." That at the time of making said lease the plaintiff was unacquainted with the methods to be used by the said defendant brick company in burning brick, and was not informed by the said defendant company whether it would use bituminous coal or wood in burning their kilns. That the said defendant company went into possession of said two acres of land, and erected kilns thereon, and during the season of 1889 burned several kilns of brick thereon. That in burning said kilns of brick said defendant company, by its employes and agents, used bituminous coal in considerable quantities, placed in spaces left in the kilns among the unburned brick, and also in the flues left in said kilns, for the purpose of burning said kilns. That by the methods used by the said defendant company, and by the fuel used, to wit, bituminous coal, during the burning of said kilns a very considerable quantity of corrosive gas, called "sulphuric acid gas," was generated, and, having been compressed to a certain degree, when allowed to escape from and above said kilns was carried up by draught, and disseminated above the kilns of the said defendant company, and in the direction of the wind, for quite a distance, and over and upon the growing wheat of the plaintiff. That said sulphuric acid gas so generated in the burning of said brick kilns by the use of bituminous coal was and is injurious to vegetation of all kinds, and particularly growing wheat. That this poisonous gas, when carried upon the wind, falls upon plants in minute amounts, and when the blades and leaves are damp, the gas is absorbed, and vegetation blighted. That during the months of April, May, and June, A. D. 1889, the smoke and poisonous gas from the kilns of the said defendant company, impregnated with sulphuric acid gas produced by the use of bituminous coal, was carried from the said kilns of the defendant company, and settled over and upon the growing wheat of the said plaintiff upon the above described premises, and thereby destroyed and injured the grain then forming on the stems of said wheat, and so blighting said wheat, by said poisonous gas settling upon said crop, thereby destroying 40 acres of said wheat, of the value of $770. That, in addition to said 40 acres being destroyed so that it was a total loss, 60 acres of said wheat was greatly damaged and injured by said smoke and gas from said kilns, so that it was almost worthless, to the damage of the said plaintiff in the sum of $1,280,—in the aggregate, damages to plaintiff in the sum of $2,000 by means of and from the effects of the said poisonous gases generated in and coming from the said defendant's brick kiln. That by reason of such acts of the defendant company in the use of bituminous coal in burning its said brick kilns the plaintiff had suffered great damage in the loss of his crop of wheat. That if the said defendant company continues the use of bituminous coal in burning its said kilns, as it threatens to do, it will work great and irreparable loss and damage to the said plaintiff, and to the nuisance of the said premises of the said plaintiff. That on or about the 16th day of July, A. D. 1889, the plaintiff requested the said defendant company to remove said brick kilns from said premises, and to abate said nuisance, but it has not done so. That said defendant company still maintains said brick kilns, and is still engaged in burning brick by the use of bituminous coal as fuel, which, if continued, will kill vegetation, and the crop which plaintiff is desirous of sowing upon said premises. That, if said defendant company continues the use of bituminous coal as fuel in burning its said kilns, the plaintiff will be unable to cultivate said premises, or derive any benefit therefrom. That if said nuisance is continued the plaintiff must inevitably suffer great and irreparable damages, and his property thereby be greatly depreciated in value. The plaintiff therefore prays for a judgment against the said defendant company for the sum of $2,000, his damages so as aforesaid sustained, and for a decree, upon the final hearing of this case, perpetually enjoining the said defendant company from using bituminous coal or other combustible material which will generate poisonous gas injurious to vegetation and crops growing upon the plaintiff's premises while burning its said brick kilns, and for such other and further relief as in equity he may be entitled to, and for the costs of suit.

EXHIBIT A.

"I, C. Fogarty, of Junction City, Kansas, hereby lease to the Junction City Press Brick Company of the same place, for the term of one year, with the option on the part of said company to renew said lease from year to year for five years, said lease to commence on the 1st day of August, 1888, the following described premises and right of water power, to wit: Two acres of land on the north side of the public road leading from Sixth street, Junction City, to the bridge over the Smoky Hill river, and on the west side of said river, near the banks thereof, as the same has been selected and staked off by said company; also the right of attachment to and use of the water power now owned by said C. Fogarty, as that is known as 'Fogarty's Mill,' on said Smoky Hill river, for running one Eureka brick press, the amount of power to run said press and machinery being estimated at thirty horse power, all expenses and costs of making such attachment to be paid by said company. And the said C. Fogarty further agrees to give the right of way for a railroad switch on and over any land owned by him, from the line of the Union Pacific or Missouri Pacific Railroads, between Junction City and the plant of said company near his mill, as aforesaid. The said Junction City Press Brick Company agrees to pay to the said C. Fogarty for the rental of said premises and water power, as aforesaid, at the rate of $100 per month for each and every month or part of month said water power is used; said rental to be paid on the first of each and every month, the first payment to commence on the 1st of September, 1888. It is expressly agreed and understood by the parties hereto that if, for any reason not the fault of the said C. Fogarty, the said water power should fail or become insufficient to supply the amount of power required by said company, that no claims for damages shall be incurred or maintained against the said C. Fogarty by said company. It is further agreed that said company shall carefully and properly manage and control the power supplied as aforesaid, so as to in no way interfere with or injure the property or rights of said C. Fogarty, and to commit no injury or waste on his lands during the time of the existence of this lease. It is further expressly understood and agreed that, at any time it is so determined by said company, it shall have the right to remove off said leased premises all the property and improvements placed thereon, and to leave the said premises and water power in the same condition as when it took possession thereof, usual wear and tear alone excepted. In witness whereof the said parties hereunto set their hands and seal this 30th day of July, 1888. C. Fogarty. Jno. K. Wright, Pres. P. B. C."

Afterwards the defendant in error filed a demurrer to the petition for the reason that said petition does not contain sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against said defendant. Upon argument thereof in the court below the demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff not desiring to amend his petition, but being willing to stand upon the same, the court rendered a judgment in favor of the defendant for costs and against the plaintiff, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff at that time excepted.

The question here is, Does the petition state a cause of action? Every allegation contained therein is admitted by the demurrer. The improper use of a certain kind of coal, that produced the destroying gas; that the business could be just as successfully carried on by the use of wood, or another kind of coal, that would not produce the noxious gas; the deadly effect of this peculiar gas on the growing wheat crop of the plaintiff; the ignorance of the plaintiff of the manner of conducting the business and the agencies to be employed; the destruction of the growing wheat by this gas generated in the burning kilns of the brickyard; and every other material fact necessary to constitute a cause of action, if one can legally exist,—are all to be accepted as established facts for the purposes of this inquiry. There is a line of decisions of courts of last resort in this country, and elsewhere, that hold that an action for damages can be maintained under the facts set forth in this petition. Many of the cases so holding are cited in Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 563, 20 Am. Rep. 587. The essence of the decision in that case is that "where one manufacturing brick upon his lands uses a process in burning by which noxious gases are generated, which are borne by the winds upon the adjacent land of his neighbor, injuring and destroying trees and vegetation, this is a nuisance, and the party injured may maintain an action to recover damages, and to restrain the use of the process complained of." Early and modern English decisions are cited; the case of Huckensline's App., 70 Pa. 102, 10 Am. Rep. 669, is noticed; and the following cases, in which useful industries which produce smoke or noxious gases or vapors or odors were declared nuisances, are relied upon as being analogous; Catlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige, 575, 4 L. ed. 82, 38 Am. Dec. 567; Peck v. Elder, 8 Sandf. 129; Taylor v. People, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 352; Davis v. Lamberton, 56 Barb. 490; Hutchins v. Smith, 63 Barb. 251; Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 218; Cooper v. Randall, 53 Ill. 24; Rez v. White, 1 Burr. 337; Cooks v. Forbes, L. R. 5 Eq. 166; Sampson v. Smith, 8 Sim. 272; Typing v. St. Helens Smelt. Co. 4 Best & S. 608.

The theory of all these decisions is that every one is bound to make such a reasonable use of his own property as to not occasion unnecessary annoyance or damage to his neighbor. If he makes an unreasonable or unlawful use of it, so as to produce material injury or great annoyance to his neighbor, he will be guilty of a nuisance to his neighbor, and the law will hold him responsible for the consequent damage. Of course, all we now say is upon the assumption that the petition alleges the facts as they will appear at the trial. A different state of facts may call for the application of another and totally distinct rule of action.

2. The second contention in support of the ruling below is that the plaintiff in error is estopped by the terms of his lease, and by his conduct, from maintaining this action, the line of argument being that the lease carried with it whatever was essential to its use for the purpose for which it was rented; and this is true to the extent of its reasonable and lawful use, consistent with the rights of the neighborhood. But the gist of the complaint is that, while burning brick is a lawful business, the burning is not being done in a reasonable manner, with reference to the rights of adjacent landowners. If, at the time he made the lease, the plaintiff in error knew the process of burning that would be employed, he would not be heard to complain of it; but he alleges in his petition that at the time he made the lease he was unacquainted with the methods to be used. He had a right to presume that these would be reasonable and lawful. See, generally, upon this branch of the inquiry, the cases of Sturges v. Bridgman, 11 Ch. Div. 885; Smith v. Phillips, 8 Phila. 10; and Central R. Co. v. English, 73 Ga. 366.

We recommend that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the petition.

Per Curiam:

It is so ordered.

All the Justices concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

John N. KOELSCH et al.
v.
PHILADELPHIA CO., Appt.

(.....Pa.....)

1. A higher degree of care and vigilance is required in dealing with a dangerous agency than in the ordinary affairs of life or business which involve little or no risk of injury to persons or property.
2. A gas company is required not only to have pipes and fittings of such material and workmanship and laid with such skill and care as to provide against the escape of gas therefrom when new, but also to have such system of inspection as will insure reasonable promptness in the detection of all leaks that may occur from deterioration of the material of the pipes or from any other cause within the circumspection of men of ordinary skill in the business.
3. If injury to a gas main is a natural and probable consequence of the construction of a sewer in close proximity to it, it is the duty of the gas company which has or ought to have knowledge of the sewer to guard against the damage likely to be sustained.
4. It is for the jury to determine whether from the notoriety attending the construction of a sewer, a gas company having a proper system of inspection would or ought to have knowledge of a leak in its pipe caused by construction of the sewer sooner than the leak was in fact discovered.

5. The fact that an explosion of gas which has accumulated in a cellar by negligence of a gas company was caused by the act of a third person in lighting a match will not relieve the gas company from liability.

(January 3, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Allegheny County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover for injuries caused by an explosion of gas which was alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Dalzell, Scott & Gordon for appellant.

Messrs. Josiah Cohen and A. Israel for appellees.

Heydrick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

That the plaintiff's house was supplied by the defendant with natural gas for fuel through a service pipe connected with a main pipe in the adjacent street, and that it was wrecked, nerus v. North Park Street R. Co. (Mich.) 17 L. R. A. 728 (roller coaster); Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney, 14 L. R. A. 677, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 623 (naphtha).

NOTE.—See, as to various things held or claimed to belong to the class of dangerous agencies, Chaddock v. Plummer, 14 L. R. A. 675, and note, 88 Mich. 225 (guns, etc.); Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Robertson (Tex.) 14 L. R. A. 781, and note (railroad turntables); Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. (Minn.) 15 L. R. A. 818, and note; also Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. (Mo.) 15 L. R. A. 821 (manufacturer's liability); Scanlon v. Wedger (Mass.) 18 L. R. A. 886, and note (fireworks); Southwestern Tele. & Teleph. Co. v. Robinson, 18 L. R. A. 545, 50 Fed. Rep. 810, 3 U. S. App. 205 (telephone wire); Knott 18 L. R. A.

See also, as somewhat akin to this subject, notes on the subject of blasting, as follows: liability for negligence of independent contractor,—note to Hawver v. Wharton (Ohio) 14 L. R. A. beginning on page 690; injuries to land and buildings, note to Benner v. Atlantic Dredging Co. (N. Y.) 17 L. R. A. 220; injury to persons,—note to Blackwell v. Moorman (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 723.

and the plaintiff and several members of his family seriously injured, one of them fatally, by an explosion of such gas, which had accumulated in the cellar of the house, are undisputed facts. It is alleged by the plaintiff that the gas which had so accumulated in his cellar, and there exploded, was negligently permitted by the defendant to escape through a leak in its main pipe near to his house, and found its way thence through the loose shale and broken rock of which the street at that point was formed, and a rudely constructed sewer or drain, to the place of the explosion. The defendant denies that the gas escaped from its main, and did or could find its way through the material of which the street was composed, in the manner described, but alleges that it escaped through a leak in the plaintiff's own pipe, for the existence of which he alone was responsible. It further denies that, if the gas did escape through a leak in its main, it is chargeable with negligence in respect to the existence of that leak; and contends earnestly that no such evidence was produced by the plaintiff upon the points in controversy as ought to have been submitted to the jury. The testimony of George Walters, if believed, would warrant a finding that the gas did not escape from the plaintiff's service pipe. According to his statement he tested that pipe, between the time of a slight explosion in the kitchen in the morning, and the greater explosion in the cellar by which the house was wrecked at 10 o'clock the same forenoon, by "lighting a match, and running it along the pipe," and found no leak. If he was entitled to belief, his test was made in the same manner that the defendant's experienced servant made his most crucial test of the pipes in the kitchen and upper rooms immediately before the explosion, and it would seem improbable that, if a leak in the pipe in the cellar existed, it could have escaped detection. Whether the testimony of the defendant's witnesses, to the effect that the service pipe was found after the explosion to be broken off, and that part of the break appeared old, and part new or fresh, indicating that there had been an old crack through which gas might have escaped, followed by an entire severance by the force of the explosion, ought to have overborne Walters' testimony by casting discredit upon either his truthfulness or the thoroughness of his test, was a question wholly for the jury. If the gas which exploded in the cellar did not escape from the plaintiff's supply pipe, whence did it come? That was a question to be answered by the plaintiff, and he seems to have answered it conclusively, if the testimony of his witnesses can be relied upon. He adduced testimony to the effect that on the day after the explosion, and the following day, the defendant uncovered its main pipe in the vicinity of his premises; that before it was fully uncovered, but after the digging had commenced, gas was seen to escape from the trench. To use the language of an intelligent witness: "There was some evidence of trouble of that kind before the ground was entirely uncovered, from the fact that there was something like a mist or haze arising from the ground before they reached the pipe, something like vapor;" and that when the pipe was reached at a point about 86 feet distant from the house, two or more holes or cracks were found in it, one of them having "the appearance of being rusted,—worn out,"—through which the gas poured in such dense volume that it could be seen, and with such force that it could be heard at the distance of from 50 to 75 feet. He further showed that the street, from the point where the leaks were found, to a point opposite his house, was "made ground,"—that is to say, that a depression in the natural surface had been filled with loose shale and broken rock, over which clay had been spread and compacted by the travel upon it,—and that he had constructed an underground drain from his cellar to a point in the street near the gas main, where it discharged its drainage in the loose material beneath the surface. His evidence further tended to show that the shale and rock filling of the street was so porous that gas could pass through it from the leaks in the defendant's main to the end of his drain, and that there was nothing to obstruct its passage thence to the place of the explosion, which was somewhat higher than the street. Assuming that George Walters' testimony, that there was no leak in the plaintiff's supply pipe, was true, and in the absence of evidence or allegation that there was any other source from which the gas could have reached the plaintiff's cellar, the inference from the facts proved is irresistible that it came from the leaks in the defendant's main. If the plaintiff's testimony be believed, the loose shale and broken rock of the street, covered with clay, and that compacted by the travel upon it, formed the equivalent of a pipe connecting the leaks in the gas main with the underground drain from the cellar, through which the gas might, and, as the cellar was higher than the street, naturally would, pass. There was, therefore, sufficient evidence to justify the jury in finding that the gas which exploded had escaped from the defendant's main.

The next question is, Was there sufficient evidence to charge the defendant with negligence with respect to the leaks in its pipe? The definitions of negligence which have been attempted imply that a higher degree of care and vigilance is required in dealing with a dangerous agency than in the ordinary affairs of life or business, which involve little or no risk of injury to persons or property. While no absolute standard of duty in dealing with such agencies can be prescribed, it is safe to say, in general terms, that every reasonable precaution suggested by experience and the known dangers of the subject ought to be taken. This would require, in the case of a gas company, not only that its pipes and fittings should be of such material and workmanship, and laid in the ground with such skill and care, as to provide against the escape of gas therefrom when new, but that such system of inspection should be maintained as would insure reasonable promptness in the detection of all leaks that might occur from the deterioration of the material of the pipes, or from any other cause within the circumspection of men of ordinary skill in the business. Something like this was said in Kibele v. Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 41; and in Bolly v. Boston Gas-light Co., 8 Gray, 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233, and Smith v. Boston Gaslight Co., 129 Mass. 818; and the principle is recognized in many kindred cases. It requires nothing unreasonable,—it does not require that the company shall keep up a constant inspection all along its lines, without reference to the existence or non-existence of probable cause for the occurrence of leaks or escape of gas,—and is not in conflict with Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co., 123 Mass. 219, relied upon by the defendant. There the escape of gas complained of was the result of an overwhelming calamity that laid a great part of the city of Boston in ashes, and fractured and severed the company's pipes in so many places that all the force it could employ could not guard against all possible consequences of the escape of gas immediately without shutting off the supply from the whole city, and this it was excused from doing on the ground that more mischief would result therefrom than was likely to result from the neglect so to do. The escape of gas from the defendant's main was, in the absence of any exculpatory explanation, some evidence of neglect, (Smith v. Boston Gaslight Co., supra;) and when to this was added the testimony, already quoted, of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, in respect to the appearance of the aperture through which it escaped, a prima facie case was made out against the defendant. The jury would have been justified in finding, either that the pipe was defective when put in place, or that it had been in use so long that the defendant ought to have known that it was unsafe to use it longer, if no explanation of its condition, actual or apparent, had been given. The defendant's witnesses described an opening in the pipe different from that described by at least one of the plaintiff's witnesses, and said it was caused by the pulling of the pipe out of joint, and undertook to account for the separation of the joints by the fact that a sewer had recently been constructed in the street in close proximity to the pipe, and inferred that the ground had settled and allowed the pipe to sink in places, thereby putting a strain upon it. Their inference was valueless, unless the fact inferred was the natural and probable consequence of the construction of the sewer. If such injury to a gas main be a natural and probable consequence of the construction of a sewer in close proximity to it, and the defendant had knowledge, or ought to have had knowledge, of the construction of this particular sewer, it was its duty to efficiently guard against the damage that was likely to be sustained. Kibele v. Philadelphia, supra. It could not shift the responsibility upon the municipality or its contractor. Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1. And it was for the jury to determine whether, from the notoriety attending the construction of a sewer, a gas company having a proper system of inspection would, or ought to, have knowledge within a shorter time than elapsed between the commencement of the work upon the sewer in question and the discovery of the leak.

It is further contended that, although the defendant may have negligently permitted the gas to escape from its main into the plaintiff's cellar, that negligence was not the proximate cause of the explosion, and that if George Walters, and not its servant sent to examine the premises, lighted the match, it is not responsible. Under the facts of this case it is immaterial whether Walters or Householder, the defendant's servant, struck the match. The concurrence of the presence of the gas and the lighting of the match, the negligence of the defendant with that of Walters, was necessary to and did cause the explosion. In such cases the injured party has his redress against either of the wrong-doers, or both, at his election, except where goods or passengers are injured through the concurrent negligence of a common carrier and a third person. Carlisle v. Brisbane, 118 Pa. 544, 57 Am. Rep. 483.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania

v.

Thomas MATTHEWS, App't.

(.....Pa.....)

Selling 'Sunday newspapers is not a work of necessity or charity within a proviso excepting such works from the operation of a statute imposing a penalty for doing and performing worldly employment on Sunday.

(January 3, 1893.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions for Allegheny County convicting him for violating the Sunday Law by selling Sunday newspapers. Affirmed.

The section of the law under which this conviction was had is as follows:

"If any person shall do or perform any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday (works of necessity and charity only excepted), and shall use or practice any unlawful game, hunting, shooting, sport or diversion whatsoever on the same day, and be convicted thereof, every such person so offending shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay four dollars, to be levied by distress; or in case he or she shall refuse or neglect to pay the said sum, or goods or chattels cannot be found, whereof to levy the same by distress, he or she shall suffer six days' imprisonment in the house of correction of the proper county; provided, always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the dressing of victuals in private families, bakehouse, lodging-houses, inns and other houses of entertainment for the use of sojourners, travelers, or strangers, or to hinder watermen from landing their passengers, or ferrymen from carrying over the water travelers, or persons removing with their families on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, nor to the delivery of milk or the necessities of life, before nine o'clock in the forenoon, nor after five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day."

The facts of the case sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Supreme Court and in that of the court below, which was as follows:

NOTE.—For an exhaustive note on Sunday labor, see Quarles v. Stato (Ark.) 14 L. R. A. 122.

"It is established by the evidence in this case, that the defendant kept open his place of business on Sunday, December 27, 1891, and that Sunday papers of that date were upon that day sold therein, and that he received and caused to be delivered to the customers upon his route as a carrier, upon that day, the newspapers which had that day been published.

"This prosecution was instituted under the Act of April 22, 1794, and the Amendment thereto, approved April 26, 1855; the latter Act increasing the penalties as to Allegheny county. These Acts, like all others, are to be construed solely with the view of ascertaining and enforcing the purposes set forth in, and sought to be accomplished by the legislation. The evidence clearly establishes that the defendant did "perform worldly employment or business upon the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday." We have no power to repeal the Act of 1794, nor to make its exemption of works of charity and necessity include works of mere convenience. That carrying on any business on Sunday may be profitable to the persons engaged in it; that it may serve the convenience, or tastes, or wishes of the public generally, is not the test which the statute applies. The words of the exemption are works of necessity and charity only excepted.

"It cannot be contended under the evidence that the object of the defendant was to do charity or supply a necessity; on the contrary, it is quite clear that he was influenced by the usual motives which govern men when following their worldly avocations, the securing of trade, gathering in of compensation and laying away of profit. If we decide that necessity and charity mean convenience, and all things which contribute to satisfy individual taste, we emasculate the statute and sweep away the guards which the Legislature threw around not only the morals of society, but the physical health and well-being of its members. To do this would be for the court to assume legislative functions. Our duty requires us to construe the statute so as to accomplish its purpose, which was to enforce an observance of Sunday. In the case of Sparhawk v. Union Pass. R. Co., 54 Pa. 408, Judge Strong said: 'It is not for me, called as I am to administer the law as it is, rather than as the defendants may think it ought to be, to decide that what is but affording a facility amounts to a necessity. The Legislature has not exempted from the prohibition acts which may conduce to the convenience of individuals, or even large portions of the people. It must be presumed they considered what inconveniences would follow a prohibition of worldly labor on the Lord's day. In view of them, as well as of the evils flowing from the absence of a prohibition of such labor, they enacted the Statute of 1794. Their controlling object was to protect the community against vice and immorality. This they attempted to do by declaring illegal all worldly labor and business, except works of necessity and charity. But they did not overlook public and individual convenience. In the proviso of the Act they declared how far worldly labor might be done, not necessary to the agent, but contributing to the necessity of others. The enumeration in the proviso of things allowed to be done, shows what was intended by accepting works of necessity from the prohibitory clause.'

18 L. R. A.

"Without disregarding every principle established for the interpretation of statutes, as well as the uniform decisions of the courts of the commonwealth upon the statute in question, we cannot hold the defendant exempt from the operation of the Act of 1794. He is therefore adjudged guilty."

Messrs. William B. Rodgers and A. M. Brown, for appellant:

The law does not condemn those employments which society regards as necessary, even when they encroach on the Lord's day, if, according to the ordinary skill of the business, it be necessary to do so.

Com. v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. 398.

The Act of 1794 is not to be interpreted literally. The courts have construed it in the light of circumstances and conditions, illustrated by the habits, usage, and needs of the people.

Accordingly it has been held that the hire of carriage on Sunday by a son to visit his father creates a legal contract.

Logan v. Matthews, 6 Pa. 417.

A subscription towards the building of a church is within the exception.

Dale v. Knepp, 98 Pa. 389, 43 Am. Rep. 634.

A verdict may be taken on Sunday.

Huidekoper v. Cotton, 8 Watts, 56; Com. v. Marra, 8 Phila. 440.

And a will may be executed on that day.

Beitenman's App. 55 Pa. 183.

In defining worldly business or employment, necessity itself can be only approximately defined. The law regards that as necessary which the common sense of the country, in its ordinary mode of doing its business, regards as necessary.

Com. v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. 398.

Sunday being a day of rest, millions of people find both pleasure and profit from their Sunday newspaper.

The latest definition of the terms used in the exception contained in the Act of 1794 is found in the Century Dictionary, vol. 4, p. 3952, and is as follows: "Works of necessity, in the Sunday laws, any labors which are necessary to be done on Sunday for life, health, comfort, general welfare and reasonable convenience for enjoying the leisure and the privileges of the day, such as the running of cars, ferries and, within reasonable limits, railroad trains, and such labors as are requisite for maintaining in their necessary continuity those manufactures incidental to civilization."

Mr. William Yost, for appellee:

In a suit upon a contract for the publication of an advertisement in a Sunday newspaper it was said by the Court of Appeals of New York "The publication of the advertisement was to be and was by a public sale of the newspaper in which it was printed on Sunday. The opening of a place for the sale and the actual selling of newspapers is within the mischiefs which the Act for the observance of Sunday was designed to remedy."

Smith v. Wilcox, 24 N. Y. 353, 83 Am. Dec. 303.

In a suit in which the validity of the publication of a legal notice in a Sunday newspaper was questioned, the Supreme Court of Illinois said: "The notice stands in place of process and it must be given on those days of the week which the law recognizes as appropriate to business of this character. To permit it to be given on Sunday is against the spirit and policy of our law."

Scammon v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 146.

The owner of a Sunday paper is pursuing his ordinary vocation when he is engaged in circulating his paper, and he who engages in his ordinary vocation on that day transgresses the law.

Shaw v. Williams, 87 Ind. 158, 44 Am. Rep. 756.

Unless the issuing and circulating of a newspaper on Sunday is, within the meaning of the statute, a work of necessity, it is prohibited by it as much as any other business or work. The newspaper is a necessity of modern life and business, but it does not follow that to issue and circulate it on Sunday is a necessity. There are a great many other kinds of business just as necessary; many, indeed most, kinds of manufactures and mercantile business are indispensable to the present needs of men, but no one would say that, because necessary generally, the prosecution of such business on Sunday is a work of necessity. That carrying on any business on Sunday may be profitable to persons engaged in it; that it may serve the convenience or tastes or wishes of the public generally, is not the test the statute applies.

Handy v. St. Paul Globe Pub. Co. 41 Minn. 188.

The sale of Sunday newspapers on Sunday, while not a breach of the peace is a violation of the Act of 1794.

Com. v. Teamann, 1 Phila. 460.

And a conviction was had for the same offense and sustained by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in 1887.

Com. v. Osgood, 144 Mass. 362. See also Com. v. Dextra, 143 Mass. 28; Sawyer v. Car-gile, 72 Ga. 290.

As these violations of the Act of 1794 have been instigated and defended by the Union News Company, a foreign corporation (McMullen v. Union News Co. 144 Pa. 332), and by the large corporations owning and publishing the Sunday newspapers of the city of Pittsburgh, the language of this court in the case of Friedeborn v. Com., decided in 1886, 113 Pa. 244, is particularly appropriate: "There are but few of our statutes which, in principle, are of more importance than the Act of the 22d of April, 1794, commonly called the Sunday Act, in that it recognizes the first day of the week as a Sabbath of rest for the well disposed and religious people of our commonwealth, and we can entertain but little respect for those who willfully and persistently violate its proscriptions. Against all such its penalty should be enforced until they are taught that a respect for its provisions may at least be profitable from a pecuniary point of view."

Per Curiam:

This was an appeal in the court below from the judgment of Alderman Robe of Pittsburgh, convicting the defendant (appellant) of doing and performing worldly employment on December 27, 1891, commonly called "Sunday," contrary to the Act of Assembly of April 22, 1794, and the supplemental Acts of February 26, 1855. The charge, as shown by the record, was "selling a paper known as 'The Pittsburgh Sunday Leader,' exposing the same for sale, and keeping his place open for business at No. 13 Frankstown avenue, Pittsburgh." It was established by the evidence in the case, to the satisfaction of the learned judge below, that the defendant kept open his place of business on Sunday, December 27, 1891, and that Sunday papers of that date were upon that day sold therein, and that he received and caused to be delivered to his customers upon his route as a carrier, upon that day, the newspapers which had that day been published. There is no dispute about the facts. The defendant kept open his place of business on the day referred to, and sold and delivered Sunday papers on that day, in the regular course of business. This brings the case directly within the Act of 1794, and the Supplemental Act of 1855, which increases the penalty. Unless, therefore, the case comes within the exceptions of the Act of 1794, the judgment must stand.

The Act of 1794, while prohibiting the performance of any worldly employment or business on the Lord's day, commonly called "Sunday," excepts "works of necessity and charity" from the penalty of the Act. The proviso, however, recognizes, to some extent, the wants and convenience of the people, where it provides "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the dressing of victuals in private families, bake houses, lodging houses, inns, and other houses of entertainment, for the use of sojourners, travelers, or strangers, or to hinder watermen from landing their passengers, or ferrymen from carrying over the water travelers, or persons removing with their families on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, nor to the delivery of milk or the necessities of life, before nine o'clock in the forenoon nor after five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day." It is now almost 100 years since the passage of the Act of 1794. It is hardly likely the framers of the Act contemplated the possibility of Sunday newspapers. There were but few newspapers in existence at that time, and, with perhaps one or two exceptions, those were weekly papers, of limited circulation. Since then, there has been a vast development in the business of newspaper publishing, as well as in other departments of trade and business. The development of the resources of the commonwealth has been phenomenal, as well as its growth in population. This growth has developed new wants, and to some extent changed the habits of the people. Among the changes which it has caused is the Sunday newspaper. Its circulation has become very extensive, and it is read by a large portion of our citizens. It has become a part of the ordinary life of the people, and it will require far more stringent legislation than the Act of 1794 to uproot it. It is not our province to approve or condemn Sunday newspapers, but it is worse than useless to ignore their existence, or the favor with which they have been regarded by a large portion of the community. The framers of the Act of 1794, could they have seen the development of the next hundred years, and the change in the habits and wants of the people, might or might not have included the traffic in Sunday newspapers among the exceptions in the Act. It is sufficient for us that they have not done so. The defendant must not expect us to administer the law to suit his case, or as he thinks it ought to be administered. There are many persons who have no higher opinion of judicial duties than to think that the law should be administered according to their caprice, or their notion of what the law ought to be. It is our plain duty to enforce the Act of 1794 as we find it upon the statute book. While the Sunday newspaper may be a great convenience to a large portion, perhaps a large majority, of the people, it does not, in our opinion, come within the exceptions of the Act of 1794. No one pretends that it is a charity, and we cannot say, as a matter of law, that it is a necessity. It is a convenience; nothing more. We are of opinion the defendant was properly convicted. The Act of 1794 is a wise and beneficial statute, and we would regret to see it interfered with. We must, however, be allowed to express the fear that too literal an interpretation and enforcement of it may create an antagonism that may lead to its repeal, or at least serious modification. There may be such a thing as excessive zeal in invoking its penalties in extreme cases. The Act is in more danger from its friends than from its enemies.

Judgment affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Mary BIRMINGHAM, by Guardian, Respt.,
v.
ROCHESTER CITY & BRIGHTON R.
CO., Appt.

(.....N. Y.)

1. A street railway company is not liable for injury to a passenger caused by iron falling from a canal bridge belonging to the state and over which the railroad company has no control but which it is necessary to cross on its route, if the company has not been guilty of negligence in failing to discover the defect.
2. The failure of a street railway company to discover a defective welding in an iron on a canal bridge belonging to the state which the street railway was obliged to cross is not evidence of negligence sufficient to go to the jury where there was nothing to suggest to the general traveler or to the company the presence of any such defect and it was not discoverable by one using the bridge merely for the purpose of crossing.

(January 17, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming a judgment of the Monroe County Circuit in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Theodore Bacon, for appellant:

Carriers of passengers for hire are not responsible in all particulars like common carriers of goods. They are not insurers of personal safety against all contingencies except those arising from the acts of God and the public enemy. For an injury happening to the person of a passenger by mere accident, without fault on their part, they are not responsible, but are liable only for want of due care, diligence or skill.

NOTE.—The peculiar situation is presented in the above case of a carrier's use of a bridge belonging to the state and which the carrier was under the circumstances obliged to use although it had no 13 L. R. A.

Bennett v. Dutton, 10 N. H. 481; Angell, Carr. § 521.

The measure of such "care, diligence, or skill," is undoubtedly severe. It has been said to extend "as far as human care and foresight will go, that is, the utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons."

Story, Bailm. §§ 590, 601, 602; Christie v. Griggs, 2 Campb. 79; Atton v. Heaven, 2 Esp. 533.

Where the accident arises from a hidden and internal defect, which a careful and thorough examination would not disclose, and which could not be guarded against by the exercise of a sound judgment and the most vigilant oversight, then the proprietor is not liable for the injury, but the misfortune must be borne by the sufferer, as one of that class of injuries for which the law can afford no redress in the form of a pecuniary recompense.

Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 1, 43 Am. Dec. 846; McPadden v. New York Cent. R. Co. 44 N. Y. 478, 4 Am. Rep. 705; Cherroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 126, 17 Am. Rep. 231.

The trial court overlooked the broad distinction between the transportation of passengers in the streets of a city in omnibuses which simply use a flat iron surface let into the pavement for the diminution of friction, and the transportation of passengers and freight through the country upon structures, which, while they have in common with the street railroads the iron surface for their car wheels are operated upon property which is absolutely private, upon which no stranger may enter, except by trespass, and which is completely controlled, inspected, and regulated by the carrier company itself without other interference.

New York v. Third Ave. R. Co. 117 N. Y. 404; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. 15 L. R. A. 838, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 52.

Messrs. John Van Voorhis and Quincy Van Voorhis, for respondent:

The contract of a carrier of passengers with authority whatever in respect to the condition or management of the bridge. The decision constitutes an interesting instance of applying old principles to a new state of facts.

the passenger is to use the utmost care and skill to secure the safety of the passenger during the act of transportation.

Palmer v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 120 N. Y. 170; Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 126; Hegeman v. Western R. Corp. 18 N. Y. 9, 64 Am. Dec. 517.

A carrier of passengers by railroad is under the same obligation as to the safe condition of the roadway that it is in respect to the carriages.

Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 258; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 499.

It is negligence for a railroad company to leave trees standing in a position where they are liable to fall upon a railroad track if blown over by the wind (Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Vallie, 60 Tex. 481), or a poll erected by a telegraph company which is liable to fall.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 406; Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Russell, 91 Ill. 298, 33 Am. Rep. 54.

The defendant is responsible for any negligence in the construction of the bridge in question by which its passengers were put in jeopardy.

Hegeman v. Western R. Corp. and Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. supra; Caldwell v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 47 N. Y. 282; Thomp. Carr. p. 221.

Railroad companies have been held liable repeatedly for the negligence of sleeping and palace car companies.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Walrath, 38 Ohio St. 486; Thorpe v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 76 N. Y. 402, 32 Am. Rep. 825.

Where one railroad company leases a road of another, it is liable for the negligence of the lessor.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 94 Pa. 351, 39 Am. Rep. 787; Murch v. Concord R. Corp. 29 N. H. 9, 61 Am. Dec. 681; Seymour v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 3 Blas. 43; John v. Bacon, L. R. 5 C. P. 487.

A railroad company owes the same duty to inspect the cars of another company as its own.

Goodrich v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 750, 116 N. Y. 898; Gotlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 462; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575.

Railroad companies are liable for the negligence of connecting lines.

McElroy v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794. See also Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Barron, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 104, 18 L. ed. 594; Peters v. Rylands, 20 Pa. 497, 59 Am. Dec. 746; McLean v. Burbank, 11 Minn. 277; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, §§ 129-139; Thomp. Carr. p. 413; Maverick v. Eighth Ave. R. Co. 36 N. Y. 373.

The fact that this defendant had laid its tracks across this bridge, carried with it an obligation to keep the bridge in repair. And no notice to it of the defect was necessary.

Worster v. Forty-Second St. & G. S. T. F. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 208; Francis v. Erie R. Co. 2 Hun, 518.

The happening of the accident made out a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant, and placed upon the defendant the burden of proving that it was not responsible for injury.

Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 258; Angell, Carriers, § 509; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 59; Livery v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 158, 52 Am. Rep. 12; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Breen v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 109 N. Y. 297; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 46; Bowen v. New York Cent. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 408, 72 Am. Dec. 529.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant owns and operates a street railroad in the city of Rochester. The Erie canal intersects West Main street, in that city, and at the intersection the canal is crossed by a bridge built, owned, and maintained by the state, and in effect the bridge forms a continuation of the highway of West Main street. It was built under the authority of the Act, chapter 851 of the Laws of 1888, and under the direction of the superintendent of public works, upon plans and specifications drawn up and prepared by the state engineer and surveyor. Its character as a lift bridge was determined by the statute cited, and the above-named state officers had respectively the exclusive control of the plans and construction of the bridge. When boats were to pass under the bridge it was so constructed as to be lifted vertically by hydraulic power. In order to act as a counterbalance, and thus to reduce the amount of power necessary to lift the bridge, heavy weights made of iron troughs filled with pig iron were suspended in the upper part of the framework of the bridge. They were suspended by cables fastened to the floor of the bridge, and passing over pulleys in the upper framework. The troughs were fastened by means of stirrups which were made of iron. The plaintiff was a passenger on one of the defendant's cars on the 4th of October, 1889, and while the car was slowly crossing the bridge in question one of the stirrups gave way, and let one end of the troughs drop so that the pieces of pig iron placed in the troughs slid out, and some of them fell upon the car beneath and broke through, and one of them struck and severely injured the plaintiff. This action was brought to recover of the defendant the damages thus sustained.

The proof showed there was a defect in the welding of the stirrup, which defect was discoverable by the maker in the process of manufacture; but the imperfection was probably not discoverable from an inspection of the stirrup after it was placed in position in the bridge, and it certainly could not be discovered by any means that a person who had used the bridge for the purpose of crossing it, either in a wagon or car, because, when the bridge was in condition for a car to cross, the stirrups would be eleven or twelve feet above the floor of the bridge. They were movable, and raised as the bridge came down to the grade for crossing it. It was claimed that this plan or mode of construction was manifestly dangerous, and that the danger was so apparent as to be open to ordinary observation; and again "the dangers incident to such defective mode the defendant was bound by its contract to protect its passengers. The defect in the plan or method was alleged to consist in the suspension of the iron in the troughs over the heads of people using the bridge, as such troughs were liable to be precipitated upon them whenever a defect should develop itself in the means of suspension.

The evidence as to the defect in the welding of the stirrup and how it was discoverable, and the plan and method of construction of the bridge itself, as above detailed, was uncontradicted. Upon such evidence the trial judge refused to submit the question of defendant's negligence to the jury, but held that the defendant was liable, and only the question of damages was left to the jury. This liability had been in substance announced by the general term, upon a former appeal to that court from a judgment of nonsuit in the case. The court accordingly charged the jury that, although the bridge was built by the state, yet the defendant had laid its track thereon, and used it as the bed of its road, and had thereby adopted it as part of its track and roadway; and, although the state built the bridge, and the defendant neither built it, nor had any control over it, such fact was wholly immaterial, and the defendant was bound to precisely the same liability with regard to any defect in the bridge as though it had built the bridge originally to serve as a part of its railroad, and it was bound by the same rules which the law applies to every other common carrier of passengers with reference to the means it adopts as a part of its roadway, and part of the appliances which it may have occasion to use in the transaction of its business as a common carrier; that if by any known test the carrier could ascertain that the thing adopted as part of the appliance of its roadbed or car was or was not fit for the purpose to which it was to be applied, if the carrier failed to apply such test, and as a result of that failure an accident happened to its passenger and he was thereby injured, the carrier failed to perform its duty, and was liable for such injury. The court further charged that the undisputed evidence showed that a stirrup with a defective welding was placed upon the bridge, and that it might have been discovered had an effort been made so to do before it was put there, and as a result of such defect the stirrup gave way at the welding, and the trough tipped, and the iron fell upon the plaintiff; and, applying the law as laid down by the general term, the learned trial judge said these undisputed facts showed necessarily that the defendant was liable, and so he left to the jury only the question of damages. The defendant moved for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence, and renewed the motion at the close of its own evidence. The court denied the motion in each case, and the defendant duly excepted.

In refusing to nonsuit the plaintiff, and in directing the jury as he did upon the question of defendant's liability, the learned judge erred. We think the error consisted in applying to their full extent, and to the facts of this case, the well-known general rules as to the liability of common carriers, for the absence of that extreme care and caution which the law exacts from them in relation to the condition both of their roadbed and of the appliances employed by them in operating their roads. We do not think the defendant rested under any such extreme liability upon the undisputed facts in this case. It may be assumed that defendant is a corporation organized under the General Railroad Act for the purpose of building a street railroad through certain streets in the city of Rochester. Under that Act it acquired no right to cross the canal on any bridge it might build. It acquired no right to build any bridge, and although it might possibly have the power of eminent domain to acquire land for some purposes, it could acquire none in order to build a bridge over the canal. Further legislation for that purpose would have been necessary. And its organization under the General Railroad Act for the purpose of a street railroad required it to keep to the public streets or highways, and gave it no right to lay its tracks elsewhere. In the treatment of the question of supplying bridges over the canals, the Legislature at an early day provided that bridges should be built by the town in which they should be situated, and that they should be maintained at the expense of such town, but that no bridge should be constructed across any canal without the permission in writing of one of the canal commissioners, under penalties as provided in the Act. Laws 1820, chap. 202, 1 Rev. Stat. 2d ed. *248, §§ 191-193. In 1839, by chapter 207, the Legislature directed the canal commissioners to construct and thereafter maintain, at the public expense, road and street bridges over the canal in all places where such bridges had been theretofore constructed, if in their opinion the public convenience required it. In 1854, by chapter 332, § 9, the Legislature prohibited the building of any street or road bridge over any canal, except upon such streets or roads as were laid out, worked, and used previous to the construction of the canals by which the streets were obstructed; and the Legislature by special enactment provided for the construction of this particular bridge. It would seem from this brief reference to legislative action that the canal bridges, while under the care, custody, and control of the state, have always been substantially regarded as a part of the street which is obstructed by the canal.

In substance and effect the bridge mentioned in this case was nothing more than a continuation of the city street which it connected, and although it might have been necessary for the defendant to have obtained permission of the state authorities before laying its rails and running its cars over the bridge, yet we are of the opinion that in crossing such bridge it did not thereby make an appliance of its own to the extent stated in the charge of the court below. We think there is a great difference in the position occupied by this defendant in crossing this canal bridge, from that taken by a steam railroad crossing a piece of water or a ravine by means of a bridge of its own building on its own land, and for the purpose of operating its own railroad along its own private roadway. We think there is the same difference, although the steam railroad company uses the track of another road or the bridge of another company, which it in neither case owns or controls, but which it simply leases or otherwise legally obtains the right to use. The steam railroad company which owns its roadbed, and builds and controls the bridge on its own property, is without doubt within the strict liability of the common carrier to its passengers. The same may be said of the company which by contract obtains the right to use the track or the bridge of another road. In doing so it makes the roadway or bridge, which it in some way obtains the right to use, its own, and is under the same liability by virtue of its own act as if it had itself built, equipped, and operated the roadbed or bridge. Where, however, the space to be crossed is a canal belonging to the state, and it is necessary to cross it in order to carry out the purpose of the company to lay railroad tracks in the public streets of a city, and the bridge forms, in substance, a continuation and a part of one of the public streets of the city, the mere use of such bridge by the company with the consent or license of the state for the one purpose of continuing its route along such public highway does not render such bridge an appliance of the street railroad company. We think its liability while on the bridge is none other or different from its liability while traversing the rest of the public street. To negligently drive along the street so as to fall, or precipitate the stage or car, into an open hole in the street, would render the person or company guilty of such negligence liable for the injury to a passenger. To drive upon a bridge which was manifestly unsafe, or not strong enough to bear the proposed weight, might be negligence which the company would be responsible for if any injury happened therefrom to the passenger.

We do not criticise the rule, or assume here to question it, as to the extent of liability ordinarily attaching to a carrier of passengers, including the liability for a perfect roadbed and all proper appliances. We simply say that this case is not one in which to make the application of such extreme liability. We say the bridge was not such an appliance as is contemplated by the rule alluded to, and that the liability of the defendant was no greater while on the bridge than while pursuing its route along the public street in the city. The defendant had no control over or voice in the plan to be adopted, or in the selection of the materials for the structure. It had no right of superintendence in the process of manufacture, or of inspection of the thing manufactured. It was without power to change the method adopted to adjust these counterbalancing weights, or to maintain the slightest control over the manner in which the structure was to be operated. The defendant had no right to itself build a bridge over this canal, and it was not occupying the position of exercising a choice between building a bridge of its own or using one furnished by the state. There was no choice about it. That bridge must be used, or the canal could not be crossed. Where a steam railroad has the right to build a bridge, and, instead of building, leases the right to cross the bridge of another, the reason for holding that such bridge is thereby adopted as its own by the company using it is obvious. It is a voluntary matter on the part of the company whether to build its own or to lease the bridge of another, and if it choose the latter mode of crossing the obstruction it is but another way of obtaining a bridge of its own, and, when it thus contracts for its use, it of course adopts it as its own structure. The position of a street railroad in attempting to carry on its business of running cars through the public streets of a city has nothing in common with that occupied by a steam railroad under the circumstances mentioned; and where the street railroad is confronted by one of the canals of the state, over which it has no right to build a bridge, but when it is necessary to cross in order to carry out the purpose of its organization, the company may cross such bridge with the permission of the state authorities, without thereby making it a part of its appliance, for a latent defect in which it must be held responsible if discoverable in the process of manufacture. The contract to carry safely does not, and ought not to, extend that length.

Nor was the evidence in this case sufficient, in our judgment, to submit to the jury the question of negligence on the part of the defendant in driving on this bridge while the weights were suspended in the manner described. The plan and method had received the approval of the state engineer and surveyor, and the bridge had been built under the direction and supervision of another state officer, the superintendent of public works. It had been in position for over a year, and subjected daily to the strain arising from the traffic over it of all sorts of vehicles; and, so far as the evidence shows, there had not been a doubt expressed or felt as to its entire safety, both of plan, material, and workmanship. There was nothing to suggest to the general traveler or to the defendant the presence of any defective welding of any of the stirrups which supported the weights of iron, and nothing to cause any action on its part in relation thereto, even if any action were possible. If a defect in the welding were dangerous, and if any such defect might be discovered by proper inspection in the course of manufacture, it might justly be supposed by the defendant that all such precautions had been taken by the authorities of the state before the stirrups were placed in their position, and that the opening of the bridge for travel was an assurance that no discoverable or preventable defects existed. Under these facts we think no case was made for the submission of any question of negligence to the jury.

The plaintiff should have been nonsuited, and the judgment in her favor must therefore be reversed, and a new trial granted with costs to abide the event.

All concur.

Louisa RAUENSTEIN, Resp't.,
v.
NEW YORK, LACKAWANNA & WEST-ERN R. CO., Appt.

(.....N. Y.)

The liability of a railroad company to abutting owners for constructing an embankment for its track in a street which practically closes the street to such abutters for ordinary street purposes does not extend to persons whose premises abut only on an intersecting street in which a corresponding embankment is made solely to change the grade so far as the railroad embankment at the intersection of the streets makes it necessary.

(January 17, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the General Term of the Superior Court of Buffalo reversing a judgment of nonsuit entered at the trial term in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful obstruction of the highway in front of plaintiff's property. Reversed.

Statement by Gray, J.:

This action was brought to recover damages of the defendant for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the elevation of a part of the roadway of Commercial street, in the city of Buffalo, in front of her premises, which she alleges to be an unlawful encroachment upon the street, an obstruction to her lawful rights in it, and a nuisance. The facts are that the defendant railroad was laid through Water street, and where it intersected Commercial street, was constructed upon an embankment about five feet and nine inches above the former grade of Water street, made necessary in order to cross Commercial slip. In order to permit of travel upon Commercial street over the railroad at this intersection of the streets, it was necessary to raise the grade of Commercial street on either side of Water street; and this elevation of the grade of the street extended in front of, and nearly the whole length of, the street line of the plaintiff's premises. The embankment was within about a foot of plaintiff's sidewalk, and was some 20 feet in width. The plaintiff did not abut upon Water street, and her title to her lands was bounded upon Commercial street by the line of the street. As an abutting owner upon Commercial street, she bases the right to recover damages for the obstruction of the roadway in front of her premises, practically, upon the ground that if the construction by defendant of its embankment in Water street was illegal, as to abutting owners there, the illegality of its act extended to the grading up of Commercial street, and in such degree as to subject it to liability to injured property owners in that street. An appeal from judgments recovered by her in the superior court of Buffalo was heard by this court in its second division, (Rauenstein v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 661,) and the judgments were reversed, expressly, upon the authority of our decision in the Case of Ottenot against this same company, (Ottenot v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 119 N. Y. 603,) and a new trial was ordered. Upon the new trial the jury rendered a verdict for the defendant, by the direction of the trial judge. The defendant appealing to the general term of that court, the judgment was reversed, and it now appeals to this court from the general term order of reversal.

Mr. John G. Milburn, for appellant:

The case of Ottenot v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 119 N. Y. 603, is decisive of this.

To sustain the plaintiff's position in this case the case of Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 107, must be overruled as well as the Ottenot Case.

Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 183, 128 N. Y. 169, did not overrule the Conklin Case.

The distinction which the general term failed to seize is that between a structure in a street being totally unauthorized, and therefore illegal as to everybody and a nuisance, and its being legal as to the public and city and an invasion only of private property rights. Its decision is based on the assumption that the Reining Case held that the structure in Water street was illegal as to all the world, and therefore a nuisance, whereas, what the court held was, that though existing by lawful authority as to the public and the city, it was an invasion of the private property rights of the owners of the property abutting on Water street. That distinction runs through all the cases on this subject and is clearly pointed out in People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188, and Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 123, 43 Am. Rep. 146.

The railroad in Water street was built with legal authority, as also the crossing in Commercial street, and this court has held over and over again that what exists by legal authority, and within the scope of that authority, is not a nuisance though it be the cause of consequential damages to property owners.

Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 857; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701; Bellinger v. New York Cent. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42, London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 1: App. Cas. 45; Hammersmith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 71.

If the embankment in Water street involved a change of the grade of any portion of Commercial street for street purposes there was due authority for it in the charter without conferring any right to compensation upon an adjoining owner excepting that provided by the charter, and that remedy is exclusive.

Heiser v. New York, 104 N. Y. 68.

Mr. George W. Cothran, with Mr. O. C. DeWitt, for respondent:

It has been determined finally by this court that the action of the common council, under

NOTE.—The opinion in the above case is valuable for its discussion of the limits of the rule as to compensation to abutting owners for erecting an embankment in the street and construing it in connection with the rule which denies compensation for mere change of grade. See, in connection with 18 L. R. A.

this case, the notes to Selden v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 14 L. R. A. 370, and Egerer v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 381. See also Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 183, 128 N. Y. 167; People v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. (Mich.) 16 L. R. A. 752; Brown v. Seattle (Wash.) 18 L. R. A. 161.

See also 22 L. R. A. 668; 24 L. R. A. 392, 516.

which the placing of this embankment in Commercial street is sought to be justified, did not amount to a change of grade, as applied to Water street.

Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 133, 128 N. Y. 157.

As the action taken by defendant in Water street, and also in Commercial street, was based upon identically the same proceedings of the common council, it follows that, if the action of the common council did not authorize a change of grade in Water street it did not in Commercial street; hence the plaintiff was not entitled to the remedy provided in the charter of the city for the recovery of damages in case of a change of grade of a street.

2 N. Y. Laws 1887, chap. 519, title 9, §§ 1, 2, 6; title 8, § 19.

The superior court of Buffalo in other cases has held substantially that the action taken by defendant in Water and Commercial streets was illegal, and consequently a nuisance.

Jeauime v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 623.

As no change of grade was authorized or provided for, or established, by the common council, in the action taken by it, and under which defendant acted, it follows that the erection of the embankment in Commercial street and Water street was an illegal structure (Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. supra.) and it makes no difference as matter of law that the embankment in Commercial street is but an approach to the embankment in Water street.

The rule that, where there has been a change of grade in a public street or highway, under competent legal authority, the owner of property on a cross street or highway has no remedy for any injury resulting to his abutting property from the elevation or depression of the street in front of his property to correspond with the change of grade in the other street, — Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 107; Heiser v. New York, 104 N. Y. 68; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gas Light Co. 9 L. R. A. 711, 123 N. Y. 18; Rudcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 58 Am. Dec. 357, — has no application to this case.

Those, and kindred cases that might be cited, all proceed upon the ground that there was a change of grade effected, by virtue of lawful authority.

Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 111.

The authority vested in the common council to "permit the track of a railroad to be laid in, along, or across any street or public ground," (2 N. Y. Laws 1870, chap. 519, title 8, § 19,) and also the authority conferred by the General Railroad Law (N. Y. Laws 1850, chap. 140, § 24), has reference to placing tracks on grade, or in such manner as that no private rights are invaded thereby.

Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. supra.; Fobes v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 8 L. R. A. 453, 121 N. Y. 505.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only difference between the facts of this case and that of the Ottenot Case, 119 N. Y. 608, but fully reported in 23 N. E. Rep. 169, is that Ottenot's premises were on the 18 L. R. A.

opposite side of Commercial street, and the embankment in the street did not extend so as to entirely cover his side of the street; a fact, however, which can have no bearing upon the legal aspect of the question presented. Though the members of this court did not all concur with the opinion which was delivered in the Ottenot Case, they concurred in the result reached, on the ground of there being another remedy, as also because of error in the admission of evidence as to damages. That other remedy was referred to in the opinion as being given by a certain provision of the city charter, providing for compensation to abutting owners under certain conditions, where damaged by alterations in the grade of a street. Therefore, while the members of the court failed to concur with the opinion in the general discussion of the question of the defendant's liability to plaintiff, all did agree that the defendant was not liable in damages, inasmuch as the construction in Commercial street was a change in the grade of the street, for any injury from which a remedy was given under the provisions of the city's charter. The position, then, is this: the concurrence of views in the Ottenot Case being that there was a change in grade of the street, and hence no liability on the part of the company, can we now sustain this reversal by the general term without overruling the Ottenot decision, and likewise the decision of the second division of this court, which held the present case disposed of by the Ottenot Case? If we are prepared to do this, we must still go further and hold that the rule laid down in Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 107, is no longer authoritative.

The general term opinion holds what seems to me a rather strange view of our recent decision in the case of Reining against this same defendant (128 N. Y. 157, 14 L. R. A. 133). It was supposed by that court that its effect was to so far modify previous views with respect to the legality of the structures in Water and Commercial streets as to leave the general question open to further examination, notwithstanding the Ottenot Case. Proceeding, thereupon, to consider the decisions in the Conklin Case, supra, and the Uline Case, 101 N. Y. 98, 54 Am. Rep. 661, a distinction was deemed to exist between them and the Buffalo cases, in that the railroad, in the former cases, was a lawful structure, whereas, in these cases, on the strength of the view taken of the opinion in the Reining Case, the construction in Water street was such an illegal appropriation of the street, and so unauthorized an act, as to constitute the structure a nuisance, not only as to property owners upon the street, but as to those upon Commercial street who were injuriously affected by the raising of the grade of the street to meet the railroad grade. The Reining Case has been quite misapprehended by the court below. That case is no more controlling upon the disposition of the present one than was the Ottenot Case upon the Reining Case, as was remarked by Judge Andrews, who wrote in the Reining Case. The plaintiffs in that case were property owners upon Water street; and their right to recover compensation was placed upon the ground that the railroad company had practically excluded them from the use of the street by the presence of the railroad upon the embankment, and had thus invaded a legal right belonging to the abutting property owner. The reasoning of the decision was that, while it was quite probable that the general interests of Buffalo and of the public were promoted by the appropriation of the street, it by no means followed that a lotowner whose property is injured should bear the loss for the public benefit. The learned judge said that the public cannot "justify such an appropriation of a street by a municipality in aid of a railroad enterprise," and that "the Legislature cannot legally authorize structures for railroad purposes to be erected [in streets] . . . which practically exclude the abutting owners, . . . without compensating them for the injury suffered." Again, referring to the power conferred in the city charter with respect to streets, he held that the city "cannot, under guise of exercising this power, appropriate a part of a street to the exclusive, or practically to the exclusive, use of a railroad company, or so as to cut off abutting owners, . . . without making compensation," etc. The opinion pointed out clearly the distinction between the case of a change of grade in the street, merely, and the case then at bar, where the object of the elevation of an embankment in the street was to subserve the railroad use, which was practically, if not wholly, exclusive. It was because of that distinction that I concurred with Judge Andrews in his opinion; conceiving that a property owner not abutting upon Water street had no right to complain of a change of the grade in his side street, which a new and lawfully authorized use of Water street had rendered necessary in the interests of the general public. The Reining Case has not modified any existing rule of law, as laid down in the Uline, Conklin, and Ottenot Cases. It did not hold that the embankment in Water street for the railroad accommodation was illegal, or that it constituted an invasion of the rights of any one, save as to those of property owners abutting on Water street. It distinctly recognized the existence of the railroad and of this embankment as being under lawful authority; but for injuries occasioned to the property rights, within the principle of the decision in the Story Case, 90 N. Y. 123, 43 Am. Rep. 146, an abutting owner could not legally be deprived of his right to compensation by the Legislature.

As the Reining Case in no sense overruled the Ottenot Case, the question is to-day the same as it was when we had decided the Ottenot Case; and I do not believe we could, with any appearance of consistency, sustain this plaintiff's right to recover compensation from the railroad company, when we denied it in the other case. Nor do I think we can overlook the fact that the Conklin Case is a controlling authority upon the case before us. The opinion in the Conklin Case was concurred in by all the members of the court. There the railroad company, in crossing a highway, constructed its road through a deep cutting, over which it built a bridge, to which, by embankments on either side of the cutting, the highway was graded up, so as to permit the continuance of the public travel as before. The plaintiff's property abutted on one of the embankments, and he also owned the fee to the center of the highway so changed, but his right to compensation was, nevertheless, denied; the grounds for the decision, in substance, being that a change of grade invades no private right, and, whatever the inconvenience to the abutting owner, it takes from him no property right for which he has not been compensated. Judge Finch, who delivered the opinion, remarked that, if the highway "became such by dedication, compensation for the easement was expressly waived. If taken by eminent domain, the compensation paid covered all the damages sustained, among which were necessarily embraced such as might flow from a change of grade required for the public use or convenience." "The right of the Legislature," he said, "to permit a railroad company to cross a public highway, and either upon the same or a different grade, is, of course, conceded. In the latter case a corresponding change in the grade of the highway becomes necessary." The opinion proceeds to hold that the duty of making that change being imposed by statute upon the railroad company, instead of being left to the commissioners of highways, the company, in the work of restoration, stands in the place of the highway commissioners, without any responsibility to abutters, and having all the official rights of highway commissioners. The logical sequence of the opinion of the court in the Conklin Case is, obviously, to exempt a railroad company from liability for the consequences of a change of grade in city streets which is rendered necessary where intersected by the railroad structure, however great may be the inconvenience resulting to abutting property owners. The source of the authority of the railroad company in the Conklin Case was the same as that under which the company has acted in this case. In either case, under the provisions of the General Railroad Act, the power is conferred to construct the railroad across any street or highway "which the route of its road shall intersect, or touch; but the company shall restore the street or highway," etc., "thus intersected or touched, to its former state, or to such state as not unnecessarily to have impaired its usefulness." In the case of highways the consent of the commissioners, or an order of the supreme court, is required, while in cities the assent of the municipal authorities is to be had, and in the present case the giving of such assent was provided for in the city charter. It is thus evident that the source of the power to change the grade of the street, to permit of carrying it over the railroad crossing, is in the general or public law, which creates a duty in that respect which is transferred from the local authorities to the shoulders of the railroad company, in the performance of which it stands in the place of the local authorities, with all their immunity from responsibility for any consequential damages, not attributable, of course, to negligence in the manner of performance. If, however, in performing this work of restoring the intersected street to its former state of public usefulness, the company is invested with the immunity conferred upon the local authorities, how can the abutting owner have a legal cause of action for an alleged injury resulting from the change in grade? In reference to the restriction upon the absolute nature of the right of abutting owners, in the case of a municipal control of streets in the public interest, even when privileges and benefits previously enjoyed from the original condition of the streets are curtailed or impaired by the changes, Judge Andrews cites (Reining Case, supra) "the cases of change of grade" as furnishing "apposite illustrations." In Uline v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 101 N. Y. 98, 54 Am. Rep. 661, where the street and sidewalk in front of the plaintiff's premises were raised by the company so as to conform to the grade of the street to the grade of the railroad, it was said in the opinion: "So much it [the defendant] was bound by law to do under the General Railroad Act. If [the street] was not, in front of plaintiff's premises, by the act of the defendant, devoted to anything but street purposes, and, as the city could have raised the grade of the street without liability to abutting owners, so it could authorize the defendant to do so without such liability." It is apparent that the general term below, in the discussion as to the lawfulness of the defendant's railroad construction in Water street, failed to consider the distinction between a case where a statute confers authority upon a corporation to take the property of individuals for some public purpose without making a provision for compensation, and a case where the Legislature, exercising an undoubted right, subjects the public property to some new public use, by some extraordinary features of which, however, natural rights, or easements appurtenant to abutting property owners and constituting property rights, are interfered with, and consequential injuries ensue. In the first case the statute would be unconstitutional and void, and could confer no rights upon the legislative grantee, while in the latter case there could be no question as to the constitutionality of the Act, and as to the legality of an occupation in pursuance of the Act by the grantee; but for the damages which could be proved as directly consequential to the use, in its peculiar features, an injured abutting landowner could recover. That, I think, was the theory of the decision of the Story Case, 90 N. Y. 122, 48 Am. Rep. 146.

The two guiding principles to be deduced from the authorities are that the defendant, being lawfully in Water street, by authority of the public law, and with the assent of the municipality, was not a nuisance, and, except as to abutters, invaded no legal rights; and that, in building the embankment in Commercial street, to permit of unimpeded travel upon that street over the railroad in Water street, the defendant was performing a duty imposed by the public law, and prescribed by municipal ordinance, and hence could come under no responsibility to adjoining landowners. In this connection I may say that for such consequential damages as are sought to be recovered here from a railroad company which is lawfully in the occupation and use of a street, but which, incidentally, is the occasion of injury to property owners in an adjoining street, by reason of its performance of the statutory duty to conform its grade to the new use, the Legislature might very properly, under limitations, grant a remedy. Without such remedial legislation, however, the case is one of damnum absque injuria. Nothing in the Reining Case is in contradiction of the views expressed; and in support of them we have much authority, running back from the Uline Case, supra, to that of Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 857. This construction in Commercial street was a change of grade made by the defendant under legal compulsion, and individual interests are as much subordinate to the requirements of public interests in such a case as, concededly, they would be if, as matter of fact, the city authorities had done the work themselves. As matter of law, its performance by the defendant was a performance by a constituted public authority. In the opinion in the Reining Case Judge Andrews defined the line of the limitation to public powers in the control over city streets to be reached when they invaded an abutter's rights. But, outside of that line, "provided that the change be made under lawful authority," the owner "has no legal redress for any injury to his property, however serious, caused by a change of grade." Bronson, Ch. J., in Radcliff v. Brooklyn, supra, in illustrating the extent to which acts may go without rendering persons answerable for the consequences to others, speaks of those cases "which hold that persons acting under an authority conferred by the Legislature to grade, level, and improve streets and highways, if they exercise proper care and skill, are not answerable for the consequential damages which may be sustained by those who own lands bounded by the street or highway. And this is so," he adds, "whether the damage results from cutting down or raising the street, and although the grade of the street had been before established, and the adjoining landowners had erected buildings with reference to such grade." The principle seems applicable to this case, where the defendant, acting under the authority of the Legislature, has changed the grade of Commercial street. I am quite unable to see how we can sustain the order appealed from, whether we consider what was decided with respect to the question of the defendant's liability in the Ottenot Case, or whether we consider the rule laid down in the Conklin Case, and in prior decisions. I think the order of the general term, appealed from, should be reversed, and the judgment of nonsuit should be affirmed, with costs in both courts.

All concur, except O'Brien and Maynard, JJ., dissenting, and Andrews, Ch. J., not voting.

Josephine VANDEWATER, Admx., etc., of William P. Vandewater, Deceased, Respt.,

NEW YORK & NEW ENGLAND R.
CO., Appt.

(.....N. Y.)

1. The failure of an engineer to give signals required by statute at a highway cross-

NOTE.—The above case construes a peculiar statute on the subject of signals by trains at highway ing does not as matter of law make the railroad company liable for neglect of duty where the provisions of the statute impose the duty upon the engineer and make him liable for a misdemeanor if he fails to comply therewith.

2. No statute is necessary to make a railroad company liable for failure to run trains with care and caution at a highway crossing and the duty of the company may require due warning of the approach of the train by whistle or bell or in some other way.

(Maynard, J., dissents.)

(November 29, 1832.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Dutchess County Circuit in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter C. Anthony, for appellant:

The learned justice erred in charging the jury that the provision of the Penal Code, § 421, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person acting as engineer on a locomotive to fail to ring the bell, or sound the whistle when approaching a highway crossing had the same effect, so far as the railway company is concerned, as the former statute.

N. Y. Laws 1854, chap. 283, § 7.

This would be making a master liable for the criminal nonfeasance of his servant, which is not the law.

14 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 826, § 13.

Even if the master was liable for the criminal omissions of his servants, such liability in a case like this would apply in favor of none but people on the highway at or near the crossing.

Harty v. Cent. R. Co. of N. J. 42 N. Y. 468;

Cordell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 535; Byrne v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 12; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 160.

Messrs. Wood & Morschauer, for respondent:

When the company by its own conduct and its published regulations has led the public to believe trains will not be run upon its tracks at specified times and places, persons having occasion to cross them have the right to rely upon these assurances, and are not necessarily guilty of negligence when injured by prohibited trains while doing so.

Parsons v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 3 L. R. A. 683, 118 N. Y. 855.

Irrespective of an ordinance or law regulating the speed of railroad trains at crossings, the running at an excessive rate of speed is negligence, and if a collision is caused thereby the company is liable. As to whether the rate of speed is excessive or dangerous in the locality, is a question of fact for the jury.

Massoth v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 64 N. Y. 524.

Where the public have for a long time notoriously and constantly been in the habit of crossing a railroad at a point not in a traveled public highway, with the acquiescence of the railroad company, such acquiescence amounts to a license and imposes a duty upon the company as to all persons so crossing to exercise reasonable care in the running of its trains so as to protect them from injury.

Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645; Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 377.

The mere fact of the existence of a farm crossing does not require a signal of the approach of a train or reduction of its speed; but the company owes to the public the duty, in running its trains, of continuous observance of the situation in advance, that no needless injury may be done.

Morris v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 24 N. Y. Week. Dig. 160; Byrne v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 28 Hun, 438, affirmed, 94 N. Y. 12.

The defendant, it was shown, had established a custom of sounding an alarm at the approach of an engine at the Fishkill depot. Where a railroad company has established the custom of sounding an alarm at certain places and it neglects to do it on any occasion, and such neglect causes an injury, it is negligence on the part of the company.

Sullivan v. Tioga R. Co. 44 Hun, 304; McGrath v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 522.

Where a private way crosses a railroad track and is used somewhat by the public and is near a public highway, such railroad, when approaching such private crossing, is bound to give the statutory signal.

Cranston v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 32 N. Y. S. R. 592, affirmed, 125 N. Y. 724.

And if a train runs through a crowded locality, where danger is to be apprehended, without ringing a bell or sounding a whistle, and does so at a high rate of speed, the latter fact is a proper circumstance bearing upon the question of negligence.

Salter v. Utica & B. R. Co. 14 N. Y. Week. Dig. 136.

Where a person is about to cross a farm crossing, and where the place is such that one lawfully using the crossing cannot see, or with ordinary care otherwise discover the approach of a train, the company is required to exercise such care as will be likely to warn of its approach, or to manage its trains so that it will not be likely to injure one so using the crossing.

Cordell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 119, 26 Am. Rep. 550; Remer v. Long Island R. Co. 43 Hun, 352, affirmed, 113 crossings. The interpretation of the usual statutes on the subject has been the subject of several notes in this series. Thus for statutory signals as the measure of trainmen's duty at such crossings, see note to New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Leamon (N. J.) 15 L. R. A. 423, 18 L. R. A.

As to what crossings require signals, see note to Sanborn v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. (Mich.) 16 L. R. A. 119.

For whose benefit such signals must be given, see note to Loneragan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 254.

N. Y. 669; Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 648; Chrystal v. Troy & B. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 523.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's intestate was killed at a farm crossing over the defendant's railroad near the village of Fishkill. He was in the act of driving across the track, when he was struck and instantly killed by one of the engines of the defendant, which was drawing its pay car. The general direction of defendant's road at this point is east and west. The engine attached to the pay car was coming from the east at the rate of 40 or 45 miles an hour, and at that speed passed a highway crossing called "Van Wyck's," and then, at a distance of a few hundred yards to the west of that crossing, it passed the Fishkill depot, and, continuing its very high speed, passed along, still towards the west, about 1,600 feet, when it reached the farm crossing in question, and where the engine came in collision with the horse and wagon belonging to the plaintiff's intestate, and threw him out of the wagon and killed him instantly. The plaintiff, upon the trial, gave evidence tending to show that no whistle was blown or bell sounded for the crossing of the highway east of the Fishkill depot or for the depot itself, and none for the farm crossing where the accident occurred. This highway crossing was somewhere in the neighborhood of 2,000 feet east of the farm crossing. Evidence was also given tending to show that it was customary for the engineers or firemen of the engines to blow the whistle or ring the bell when approaching the highway crossing, and also when coming to the depot of the defendant. The learned judge charged the jury that the company were bound to blow the whistle or sound the bell 80 rods before getting to the highway, and continue it at intervals until the crossing was passed. He also said the deceased had a right to assume the company would do its duty with respect to the highway crossing, and, if it did not sound the bell or blow the whistle at this crossing, and the accident at the farm crossing was occasioned by that omission, then the jury might find a verdict of negligence against the company. Proper exceptions to this charge were taken by counsel for defendant, who called the attention of the court to the fact that the statute imposing upon the company the duty of having the bell rung had been repealed. The court replied that it was in the Penal Code. Defendant's counsel said that the Penal Code did not apply in a civil action. The court then stated to the jury that it was just the same as if it were written in the law; that it was made a crime, instead of imposing a liability for damages; and that the jury might find a verdict just the same as they could before the repeal. To this direction the counsel for defendant took appropriate exception. The question of the omission to whistle or ring on approaching a highway crossing 2,000 feet east of the farm crossing at which the plaintiff's intestate was killed was thus made a most important factor in the case. The effect of this charge was to permit the jury to find negligence from the mere omission to ring a bell or sound a whistle at the highway crossing, and the charge was based upon the assumption that the statute made it the duty of the company to make these signals at such crossing. In this, we think, the learned judge erred.

The statute imposing any duty upon the company to cause a bell to be rung or a whistle sounded upon approaching a highway crossing has been, in terms, repealed, and the provision in the Penal Code does not leave the law the same as it was before the repeal. By section 89 of the General Railroad Act (Laws 1850, chap. 140) provision was made for placing a bell on each locomotive, and direction was given that it should be rung as therein stated, or a steam whistle was to be attached to each locomotive, and to be sounded, instead. Penalties upon the company neglecting were placed, which could be collected by the district attorney, and the company was made liable for all damages sustained by any person by reason of such neglect. By section 7 of chapter 282 of the Laws of 1854 some additions were made to the provisions under the Act of 1850, and it was provided that, in addition to the penalties imposed upon the company, every engineer in charge of an engine, who neglected to obey the statute, was to be subject to a fine and imprisonment in the county jail. Subsequently the Penal Code was adopted, and it went into operation on the 1st of December, 1882. Section 421 provided that the engineer of a locomotive, who failed to ring the bell or sound the whistle upon it 80 rods, etc., should be guilty of a misdemeanor. Then the Legislature, by the Act, chapter 593, Laws 1886, repealed, in so many words, all the provisions in the General Railroad Act of 1850 and of the Act of 1854, above cited, which made it the duty of the railroad company to cause the bell to be rung or the whistle to be sounded, or provided any penalties against the company for its neglect. The only statute upon the subject which remained at the time of the happening of the accident in question is to be found in section 421 of the Penal Code, already cited. Whether it was really intended to repeal all the sections of the law by which the duty was imposed upon the railroad company to cause these signals to be given may perhaps be doubted, but the repeal is in such plain and peremptory language that courts cannot disregard it without a clear violation of a legislative enactment. The duty of giving the signals is placed by the Penal Code upon the engineer, and his failure is made a crime, and in that way the giving of the signals is still provided for. The statute, however, does not impose the duty upon the company, and, unless such duty is imposed by statute, the failure to give such signals cannot, as matter of law, be regarded as a neglect of duty. Beinstegel v. New York Cent. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 9, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. 29; Weber v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 451-459; Briggs v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 72 N. Y. 26, 30.

Of course the companies still owe a duty to the public at such crossings as elsewhere. That duty is to run their trains with care and caution, and when they cross such roads it may well be that the failure to give due warning by whistle or bell, or in some other way, would be held, under all the circumstances, to be a failure to manage and run their train with proper care and caution, for which they would be liable to a party injured, if otherwise entitled to recover. Even when compelled by statute to make such signals, it is not necessarily a defense, in all cases, to prove that they were made. The making of the signals is the least the company can do, and in a given case it might not be enough. Harty v. Central R. Co. of N. J. 43 N. Y. 468; Thompson v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 636.

When the duty to give signals at highway crossings was by statute imposed upon the railroad company, it was held that it did not apply in favor of one who was walking upon the track, but that it was intended for the benefit of those who were traveling the highway. Harty v. Central R. Co. of N. J. supra. It may be that evidence of the omission to give any signals for the highway crossing would not be admissible as bearing upon the question of defendant's negligence in running its train at the farm crossing 2,000 feet distant. There are cases where evidence has been admitted showing the absence of customary signals at the places where usually they had been given, for the purpose of proving negligence on the part of the company. Whether this was a case where evidence of this nature should be admitted in favor of this plaintiff, and with regard to the highway crossing, is a question not now necessary to decide. If the defendant was guilty of negligence in the manner of running its train over the farm crossing, it would be liable to a plaintiff otherwise entitled to recover. Upon a new trial all the facts can be shown which would enable the court or the jury to determine the question.

The judgment should be reversed and a new trial granted, costs to abide the event.

All concur; Maynard, J., in result.

Maynard, J., dissents from that part of the prevailing opinion which holds that the duty of the engineer to give a signal when approaching a highway crossing is not the duty of the company whose agent he is in running the engine, but concurs in the result, upon the ground that, as matter of law, it is not negligence in passing a farm crossing to omit to give the required signal at the highway crossing 2,000 feet away. It was a circumstance which the jury might consider in determining the degree of care to be exercised by the defendant in approaching the farm crossing.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

France HOBBS et al., Appts.,
v.

STATE of Indiana.

(.....Ind.....)

1. An unnecessary recital by the clerk of a charge to the grand jury does not make it a part of the record.
2. A verified plea in abatement is the only mode of raising the question that an information cannot be filed while the grand jury is in session.
3. An indictment for conspiracy to do an unlawful act in the night-time and also for conspiracy to do an unlawful act while wearing white caps, masks, or other disguises, each of which acts is made unlawful by the same section of the statute, is not bad for duplicity.
4. Statements by a witness out of court are admissible to corroborate him where he has been impeached by proof of other statements out of court.
5. A witness who has been impeached by statements out of court is not incompetent to prove his own corroborating statements.
6. The constitutional provision against cruel and unusual punishments is not violated by a statute authorizing imprisonment from two to ten years and a fine not exceeding $2,000 for conspiracy to do an unlawful act in the night-time or to do such act while wearing white caps, masks, or other disguises.

(January 10, 1893.)

NOTE.—For note on prohibition of cruel and unusual punishments, see Re Birdsong (Ga.) 4 L. R. A. 828.

18 L. R. A.

See also 30 L. R. A. 734.

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dubois County convicting them of violating the provisions of the White Cap Act. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jerry L. Suddarth and Traylor & Hunter, for appellants:

It is provided by statute that if an indictment or information that cannot be amended without a new affidavit, be quashed, the defendant shall not be discharged, and the court is required to direct the case to be submitted to a grand jury; or may, in a proper case, direct the prosecuting attorney to prepare and file an information upon a proper affidavit against the defendant charging him with the offense in proper form.

Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1760.

But this section must be taken in connection with sections 1679 and 1761 which prescribe the contingencies under which one may be prosecuted by information, and with reference to other parts of the Criminal Code.

State v. Bonnell, 104 Ind. 541; Hoover v. State, 110 Ind. 849.

In State v. Bonnell, supra, the court said: "The provisions made by statute, authorizing prosecutions by information, were intended to secure speedy trials and prevent delays by enabling the prosecuting attorney to present charges upon which the grand jury had no opportunity to act, but they were not intended to permit the prosecuting attorney to proceed by information where there is ample opportunity to proceed by indictment."

It is expressly provided by statute: "In any case where the defendant is charged with a felony upon indictment and the indictment has been quashed and no grand jury in session, . . . he shall have the right to demand that he be prosecuted by affidavit and information without delay; and if the prosecuting attorney fail to so prosecute the defendant shall be discharged from custody," etc.

Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1761.

The express mention of this right to demand a prosecution by information and affidavit excludes the theory that the prosecuting attorney can so prosecute over the objections of the defendant.

Lindsey v. State, 72 Ind. 89; Hoover v. State, supra.

The information does not state the offense with sufficient certainty.

The gist of the offense defined by the Act under which this prosecution was instituted, is the uniting or combining together of three or more persons to do an unlawful act, but there are two distinct states of facts connected with this purpose, either of which constitutes an offense under the law, one, if the purpose be to do the unlawful act in the night-time, and the other, if the purpose be to do an unlawful act while wearing white caps, masks, or being otherwise disguised. Both of these states of facts are alleged in the first count of the amended information as constituting the offense with which the appellants are charged, thus charging them with two states of facts in the same count, either of which would constitute the crime of vicious conspiracy under said Act. This mode of alleging the offense is too uncertain.

Ind. Const. § 13, art. 1; Rev. Stat. 1881, § 58; Moore, Crim. Law, 1st ed. p. 243; Knopf v. State, 84 Ind. 816; State v. Weil, 89 Ind. 286; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 755, and note 3, and Indiana authorities therein cited.

The trial court below had no jurisdiction to try said cause for the reason, said enactment is void, being in violation of the constitutional provision of the state of Indiana, article 1, Rev. Stat. 1881, § 16, which is as follows:

"Excessive bail shall not be required."

"Excessive fines shall not be imposed."

"Cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted."

"All penalties shall be proportional to the nature of the offense."

Where a witness has been impeached by proof of his having made statements out of court, inconsistent with his testimony in court, the rule does not authorize recalling the impeached witness himself to detail in evidence what he had stated the facts to be on other occasions than those to which his attention has been called.

Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. 398; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 462, 467; McIntire v. Young, 6 Blackf. 496.

Even if it be assumed that he might, under the rule, prove that he had, on former occasions said to other persons that "he did not know who the parties were that had assaulted him," his testimony would be confined to that one point, and he would not be permitted to testify as to who he had stated they were. The question is, Did the prosecuting witness make the particular statement indicated in the interrogatory?

1 Greenl. Ev. § 467, 12th ed. p. 518, note 1; McIntire v. Young, supra.

48 L. R. A.

Messrs. Thomas H. Dillon, R. M. Milburn and William E. Cox, for appellee:

Appeals are heard and determined upon the record made by the trial court and nothing is a part of the record which is not incorporated in it according to law.

Elliott's Appellate Procedure, § 280.

The impaneling of the grand jury was no part of the record made by the trial court in this cause, hence it is improperly embraced in the transcript and the mere copying of it into the record by the clerk does not make it a part of the record.

State v. Cooper, 103 Ind. 75; Pattes v. State, 109 Ind. 546; Hollingsworth v. State, 111 Ind. 289; Brown v. State, 111 Ind. 441; Compton v. State, 89 Ind. 838; Pence v. State, 110 Ind. 95.

The grand jury not being in session when the affidavit and information in this cause were filed, the court below immediately acquired jurisdiction of the charges made by them against the appellants and became entitled to proceed to trial upon them regardless of any subsequent or intervening meeting of the grand jury of the county.

Elder v. State, 96 Ind. 162, 164.

When the first counts of original affidavit and information were quashed the court had the right to, and did grant leave to the state to amend, which was done.

Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 1735, 1760; Kennegar v. State, 120 Ind. 176.

The circuit court is a court of general jurisdiction and every presumption is in favor of its jurisdiction; the record is prima facie evidence of it and will be held conclusive until clearly disproved.

Pickering v. State, 106 Ind. 228; Nichols v. State, 127 Ind. 406, 413.

Whatever defeats or prevents a conviction on the indictment, but does not preclude the state from again indicting and convicting the defendant for the offense charged, should be pleaded in abatement.

Moore, Crim. Law, § 287; Mathis v. State, 94 Ind. 562; Pointer v. State, 89 Ind. 255; Henning v. State, 106 Ind. 887, 888, 55 Am. Rep. 756; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 788.

When the defendant pleads to the merits of the case the court will not inquire whether the defendant was properly or improperly brought within its jurisdiction.

Abbott's Trial Brief, §§ 96, 573; State v. Washington, 33 La. Ann. 896; State v. Hughes, 1 Ala. 635.

An indictment is not bad for duplicity in charging abortion and also involuntary manslaughter in the same count.

Traylor v. State, 101 Ind. 65.

It is common for a statute to declare, that if a person does this, or this, or this, he shall be punished in a way pointed out. Now, if, in a single transaction, he does all the things, he violates the statute but once, and incurs only one penalty. Yet he violates it equally by doing one of the things. Therefore an indictment upon a statute of this kind may allege in a single count that the defendant did as many of the forbidden things as the pleader chooses, employing the conjunction and where the statute has "or" and it will not be double and it will be established at the trial by proof of any one of them.

Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 436, and authorities therein cited; Clifford v. State, 29 Wis. 327; Davis v. State, 100 Ind. 154; Keefer v. State, 4 Ind. 246; Byrne v. State, 12 Wis. 519; 10 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 599c, 599, and authorities under note 6.

The punishment of death by electricity while unusual is not cruel within the meaning of the Constitution.

19 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 570, and authorities given in note 1.

Among crimes of different natures those should be most severely punished which are most destructive to public safety and happiness and the quantity of punishment must be such as is warranted by the laws of nature and society and such as appears to be best calculated to answer the ends of precaution against future offenses.

4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 722; 4 Bl. Com. 12, 13.

Fine and imprisonment are not cruel and unusual punishment.

Lipan v. State, 3 Heisk. 159; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 722.

If statements of a witness made out of court are introduced on the trial, which are in conflict with his testimony, to discredit him, he may prove his declarations made in harmony with his evidence.

Dailey v. State, 28 Ind. 285; Brookbank v. State, 55 Ind. 169; Carter v. Carter, 79 Ind. 466; Thompson v. State, 38 Ind. 39, 41; Moore, Crim. Law, § 864; Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. 808.

Hackney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the January term, 1892, of the Dubois circuit court the appellee charged, by information, the appellants, France Hobbs, Daniel King, Samuel Spragins, and Thomas Smith and five others with the offense of riotous conspiracy as defined by what is known as the "White Cap Act." On the 26th day of April, 1892, the court sustained a motion to quash the first count of the information and upon leave of the court the prosecutor filed an amended first count charging that at, etc., on, etc., the defendants did "unlawfully and feloniously unite and combine together for the purpose of unlawfully and feloniously, in a rude, insolent, and angry manner, striking, beating, and bruising one Henry G. Berger in the night-time, and for said unlawful purpose said defendants did then and there disguise themselves by wearing masks and being otherwise disguised."

A motion to quash the amended count was overruled the defendants were tried by the court and the appellants were convicted of riotous conspiracy and fined five dollars each and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the state's prison.

There are six assignments of error and they will be disposed of in their order. The first assignment seeks to present the question whether a prosecution may be maintained by information filed while the grand jury is in session. The transcript contains an order of court convening and charging the grand jury 18 L. R. A.

on the 26th day of April, 1892, and the contention is that the session of the grand jury must be presumed to have continued to include April 28, 1892, the day on which the motion to quash was sustained and the amended first count was filed. The action of the court in charging the grand jury was not in any manner connected with the action against the appellants and it finds way to this court only by an unnecessary recital of the clerk. It is not a part of the record of proceedings in this cause as made by the trial court and cannot be considered. Elliott's Appellate Procedure, § 280; Pattee v. State, 109 Ind. 546.

The question urged is not properly before us for another reason. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1733, provides that the question can be raised only upon a verified plea in abatement. See also Hoover v. State, 110 Ind. 349.

The second assignment and the argument of counsel upon it raise the question as to whether the amended count is bad for duplicity. The language of the statute, Elliott's Supp. 362, is as follows: "If three or more persons shall unite or combine together for the purpose of doing any unlawful act in the night-time, or for the purpose of doing any unlawful act while wearing white caps, masks, or being otherwise disguised, shall be deemed guilty of riotous conspiracy, and upon conviction therefor shall be imprisoned in the state prison not more than ten years nor less than two years, and fined in any sum not exceeding two thousand dollars."

It is insisted that the statute defines two crimes, namely, one a conspiracy to do an unlawful act in the night-time, and another a conspiracy to do an unlawful act while wearing white caps, masks, etc., and it is claimed that the information charges both these offenses in said amended count. We do not disagree with the proposition that an indictment or information may be had for duplicity, as is held in Knoff v. State, 84 Ind. 316, cited by the appellants, but we do disagree with the contention that this information is bad for such cause. Mr. Bishop, in his work on Criminal Procedure, § 436, vol. 1, speaking of statutes of the class under consideration here, says: "It is common for a statute to declare that if a person does this, or this, or this he shall be punished in a way pointed out. Now, if in a single transaction, he does all the things, he violates the statute but once and incurs only one penalty. Yet he violates it equally by doing one of the things. Therefore, an indictment upon a statute of this kind, may allege in a single count that the defendant did as many of the forbidden things as the pleader chooses, employing the conjunction 'and' where the statute has 'or' and it will not be double and it will be established at the trial by proof of any one of them." Davis v. State, 100 Ind. 154.

Fahnestock v. State, 103 Ind. 156, and Mergenthim v. State, 107 Ind. 568, follow the rule as announced by Mr. Bishop and its application to the statute under consideration and to the information in question is decisive of the point, and we must hold the count sufficient.

The third assignment of error and the argument of counsel under it raises the question of the correctness of the court's action in permitting the prosecuting witness and another to testify to statements of the prosecuting witness made out of court in corroboration of his testimony concerning the identity of the defendants. Witnesses for the defense had testified to statements of the prosecuting witness made out of court, to the effect that he had not recognized the defendants on the night of the acts charged, and the testimony to which objection is made was in the state's rebuttal evidence. Appellant's counsel seem to have confused the rule as to the character of a re-examination and that as to proper rebuttal testimony, if we may judge from the cases cited in support of their contention. Indeed, the case of Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. 398, cited by them, holds "that if a witness has not been impeached by proof of his previously made statements inconsistent with his testimony, there seems to be no sufficient reason for the introduction of corroborating evidence. But it is otherwise, if the witness has been thus impeached; it appears to be then proper to give the party who called the witness an opportunity to support him, by proving that the witness had on other occasions stated the facts to be as he represents them in his testimony. There are several cases directly in favor of the admission, under these circumstances, of this corroborating evidence. Cooke v. Curtis, 6 Harr. & J. 93; Packer v. Gonsalus, 1 Serg. & R. 536; Wright v. De-Klyne, 1 Pet. C. C. 208; People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78."

We may add to the citations of Mr. Justice Blackford the more recent cases of Dailey v. State, 28 Ind. 285; Brookbank v. State, 55 Ind. 169; Hodges v. Bates, 102 Ind. 494; Dodd v. Moore, 92 Ind. 397; Carter v. Carter, 79 Ind. 466.

Appellants further contend that if corroborative statements may be proven under such circumstances, the impeached witness should not be permitted to testify to such statements. We know of no statute or rule declaring such witness incompetent, and, under the practice prevailing, the trial court or jury being the judges of the credibility of the witnesses and being enabled to weigh his testimony, in the light of his impeachment, we can see no good reason for excluding him as a witness.

The fourth assignment of error is that the court erred in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment. Two questions are argued upon this assignment, first, that the charge was invalid in that it was by information filed when the grand jury was in session, and second, that the "White Cap" Act is unconstitutional as in violation of section 16, article 1, of the state Constitution. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 61.

The first point we have considered and passed upon in deciding upon the action of the court in overruling the motion to quash. The second point, that the Act is in violation of the Constitution that "cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted," has the merit of possessing some originality, but the position assumed seems to be without authority to support it.

We have been unable to find but a single instance in which this provision of the Constitution has been in question before this court, and then the question was regarded as possessing no merit, and it was disposed of without serious consideration. This provision of the Constitution is found also in the Constitution of the United States in the same words and Mr. Story in his work on the Constitution says it "is an exact transcript of a clause in the Bill of Rights framed at the Revolution of 1688." He says further that "the provision would seem to be wholly unnecessary in a free government, since it is scarcely possible that any department of such government should authorize or justify such atrocious conduct. It was, however, adopted as an admonition to all departments, . . . to warn them against such violent proceedings as had taken place in England in the arbitrary reigns of the Stuarts."

From this author we learn that the excesses forbidden were of a time far from which our civilization has grown.

Looking to an analysis of the provision in question with reference to the causes of its origin, the weakness of the contention of the appellants will be apparent. The word "cruel" when considered in relation to the time when it found place in the Bill of Rights meant, not a fine or imprisonment, or both, but such as that inflicted at the whipping post, in the pillory, burning at the stake, breaking on the wheel, etc. The word, according to modern interpretation, does not affect legislation providing imprisonment for life or for years, or the death penalty by hanging or electrocution. If it did, our laws for the punishment of crime would give no security to the citizen. Neither is punishment by fine or imprisonment "unusual." Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, says that the provision has application to that class of punishments which never existed in the state, or that class which the public sentiment must be regarded as having condemned as "cruel," and any punishment which, if ever employed at all, has become altogether obsolete as "unusual."

It may well be considered whether in this country, at the close of the nineteenth century, and in this state where there are no common-law crimes, and where the legislative department of the government is entrusted with the duty of defining crimes and prescribing punishments, this provision of the Constitution is not obsolete, except so far as it may admonish the courts against the infliction of punishments so severe as not to "fit the crime." The provision in question is that, "cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted." Our law-making power does not inflict punishment; it but prescribes the limits of punishment to be inflicted by other powers. We think the act is not unconstitutional, but that it is one supported by every principle underlying a free government. If complaint may be made against the degree of punishment inflicted by the court below, that complaint cannot, of right, be made by the appellants, for the punishment inflicted is not only the least provided by the law, but, for the outrage of which they were found guilty, it is highly tempered with mercy. The evidence for the state showed, and its sufficiency is not questioned in this court, that at the hour of midnight the appellants, while masked and otherwise disguised, violently broke into the residence of Berger, took him from his bed and in his night clothes bound him to a tree and with hickory switches one-half inch in diamcer, several twisted together, beat and lacerated his bare back and limbs. What more "cruel and unusual punishment?" As said by the court in Ligan v. State, 3 Heisk. 159, a case in many respects similar to this: "Every home in this state is entitled to be protected from intrusion and outrage, whether it be the mansion of the wealthy or the hovel of the poorest man in the land. It should be the pride and boast of every citizen to make the law so effective in its protective power, that we may be able to say of our country as Canning said of the peasant homes of England 'that the winds and rains enter them, but without the warrant of law the king dare not do it.' We gladly adopt this language and approve its force and wisdom as applied to the case in hand."

The fifth assignment is not argued and the sixth is the same as the first.

Having disposed of all of the questions involved, we affirm the judgment of the lower court.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Andrew J. FINNEGAN, Appt.,

v.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR BUILDING ASSOCIATION et al., and Frederick D. NOERENBERG, Resp.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. A de facto corporation exists where there is a law authorizing the creation of corporations, an attempt to organize a corporation pursuant to it, and user as a corporation under such attempted organization.
2. A substantial compliance with the law is not necessary to constitute the body a de facto corporation.
3. Chapter 29, Laws 1870, entitled "An Act in Relation to the Formation of Co-operative Associations," is not obnoxious to the objection that the title does not express its subject, as required by the Constitution.
4. Under that Act a corporation may be formed for the purpose of buying, owning, improving, selling and leasing of lands, tenements and hereditaments, real, personal and mixed estates and property, including the constructing and leasing of a building, etc.
5. The taking subscriptions to and issuing stock, electing managers and directors, adopting by-laws, buying a lot and constructing and leasing a building upon it, is a sufficient user to constitute a corporation attempted to be organized under that law a de facto one.

(January 13, 1893.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County in favor of defendant Noerenberg, in an action brought to enforce his personal liability for debts of the Building Association on the ground that the association had failed to become incorporated, and that therefore the promoters were liable as partners for its obligations. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Savage & Purdy, for appellant:

In the absence of legislation to the contrary, the members of a joint-stock company, like the members of a partnership, are liable for all the debts of the association.

*Headnotes by GILFILLAN, Ch. J.

11 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1038; Frost v. Walker, 60 Me. 468; Dennis v. Kennedy, 19 Barb. 517; Tappan v. Bailey, 4 Met. 529; Butterfield v. Beardley, 28 Mich. 412, and cases cited.

Officers are authorized to bind members, and the ownership of stock constitutes membership.

Tyrell v. Washburn, 6 Allen, 466.

It follows that there is in this case obviously an individual liability of all the stockholders unless facts are shown affirmatively which relieve them from such liability.

Kaiser v. Lawrence Sav. Bank, 56 Iowa, 104, 41 Am. Rep. 85; Abbott v. Omaha Smelt. & Ref. Co. 4 Neb. 416; Eaton v. Walker, 76 Mich. 579; Coleman v. Coleman, 78 Ind. 844; Richardson v. Pitts, 71 Mo. 128; Martin v. Powell, 79 Mo. 401; Fuller v. Rowe, 57 N. Y. 28; Garnett v. Richardson, 35 Ark. 144; Stafford Nat. Bank v. Palmer, 47 Conn. 448; Hill v. Beach, 12 N. J. Eq. 31; Hess v. Wertz, 4 Serg. & R. 356; Fild v. Cooke, 16 La. Ann. 158; Bigelow v. Gregory, 73 Ill. 197; Jessup v. Carnegie, 13 Jones & S. 280; Montgomery v. Forbes, 143 Mass. 249.

No contract can kindle even a spark of corporate vitality without the aid of the Legislature.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 746; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 8.

The sounder view is one of partnership liability.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 233, 234; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 12, 13, 16; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 200, note 1; Empire Mills v. Cooke, 16 La. Ann. 158; Bigelow v. Gregory, 73 Ill. 197; Jessup v. Carnegie, 13 Jones & S. 280; Montgomery v. Forbes, 143 Mass. 249.

There are only three ways in which respondent can escape individual liability: (1) by showing that the association was incorporated; (2) by showing that it was a corporation de facto; or (3) by establishing an estoppel on this point against the plaintiff. The Knights of Labor Building Association was never legally incorporated. The law under which its pretended incorporation was had is void under that provision of the Constitution which relates to the titles of bills.

Minn. Const. art. 4, § 27; Johnson v. Harri-

NOTE.—The above case supports the general doctrine followed in the majority of the cases as to partnership liability of stockholders in case of defective or illegal incorporation. See the note to Rutherford v. Hill (Or.) 17 L. R. A. 549, in which 18 L. R. A.

the subject is carefully examined and the great apparent conflict of courts and text-books in some degree explained by differences in the cases decided.

See also 26 L. R. A. 470; 39 L. R. A. 362.

son, 47 Minn. 575; Union Pass. R. Co's App. 81 Pa. 91; Meuchter v. Price, 11 Ind. 199; People v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 404; State v. Kinsella, 14 Minn. 524; People v. Mahaney, 18 Mich. 481; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 143, 144.

The association as organized is not within the scope of the statute.

The statute authorizes incorporation "for the purposes of trade, or for carrying on any lawful mechanical, manufacturing or agricultural business."

Minn. Gen. Laws 1870, chap. 29, § 1.

The purposes described in the articles of incorporation are neither of "trade" nor of "mechanical, manufacturing or agricultural business."

If the object for which this incorporation was made was only to erect and lease this one building, that is not a business authorized by the statute.

People v. Troy House Co. 44 Barb. 625.

The Knights of Labor Building Association was not a de facto corporation.

Two things are essential to the de facto existence of a corporation: (1) organization under color of law; and (2) user.

De Witt v. Hastings, 8 Jones & S. 463, affirmed 69 N. Y. 518; Eaton v. Walker, 76 Mich. 579; Humphreys v. Mooney, 5 Colo. 282; Williamson v. Kokomo Bldg. & Loan Fund Assn. 89 Ind. 389; Abbott v. Omaha Smelt. & Ref. Co. 4 Neb. 416.

If the Enabling Act is unconstitutional it is null and void; i. e., no law at all. In such case it can afford "color of law" for nothing.

Eaton v. Walker, supra; Henston v. Cincinnati & Ft. W. R. Co. 16 Ind. 275, 79 Am. Dec. 430.

In order that there may be "color of law," the articles of incorporation must show that the objects or business of the association came within the terms of the Enabling Act.

Bank of California v. Collins, 7 Hun, 836; Vredenburg v. Behan, 83 La. Ann. 627; Raccoon River Nav. Co. v. Eagle, 29 Ohio St. 238; West v. Bullsikin Prairie D. Co. 82 Ind. 188; O'Reiley v. Kankakee Valley Drain Co. 82 Ind. 169; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 236; Booth v. Wonderly, 86 N. J. L. 250; State v. Critchett, 87 Minn. 13.

When, as here, the statutes require the place of business to be stated, and there is a failure to comply with that requirement, the attempted organization is without color of law, and there can be no de facto corporate existence.

Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 125; Clegg v. Hamilton & Wright County Grange Co. 61 Iowa, 121.

The organization of a corporation under a general law must be scrutinized somewhat more closely than is necessary with a special charter, although after an organization has once been had in substantial compliance with the statute, the de facto corporation stands on the same footing as if it were specially chartered, and can no more be questioned collaterally than the one which has had the direct recognition of the sovereign power.

Mokelumne Hill Canal & Min. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 424, 78 Am. Dec. 658; Bigelow v. Gregory, 73 Ill. 197; De Witt v. Hastings, 8 Jones & S. 463, affirmed, 69 N. Y. 518; Jessup v. Carnegie, 12 Jones & S. 260; Field v. Cooks, 18 L. R. A.

16 La. Ann. 153; Eastern Ft. Road Co. v. Vaughan, 14 N. Y. 546; St. Paul Dio. No. 1 Sons of Temperance v. Brown, 9 Minn. 157.

The user must be in the exercise of such powers as the corporation could have lawfully exercised if it had been incorporated; i. e., must be within the scope of the Enabling Act. De Witt v. Hastings, supra; People v. Troy House Co. 44 Barb. 625.

There cannot be any estoppel unless as a precedent condition there is at least a de facto corporation.

Heaton v. Cincinnati & Ft. W. R. Co. 16 Ind. 275, 79 Am. Dec. 430; Swartwout v. Michigan A. L. R. Co. 24 Mich. 389.

The mere fact that one has dealt with an aggregation of individuals by a particular name, which may be either the title of a corporation or of a copartnership, cannot in any event constitute an estoppel.

Holloway v. Memphis, E. P. & P. R. Co. 23 Tex. 465, 76 Am. Dec. 68; Williams v. Bank of Michigan, 7 Wend. 540; Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. 481; United States Bank v. Stearns, 15 Wend. 814; Chaffe v. Ludeling, 27 La. Ann. 607; Holbrook v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 25 Minn. 229.

Messrs. Ankeny & Irwin, for respondent:

The matter of estoppel was fully considered by the court in Masonic Temple Assn. v. Channell, 43 Minn. 358. The court there said: "If the acts . . . are of such a character that either the corporation or subscribers may have been induced by them to act, and will be prejudiced . . . he shall be held to have waived or be estopped to assert the defense."

Applied to this case: If this corporation or any of its stockholders were induced to believe, or might have believed, as a result of plaintiff's contracting with the corporation, that the corporation only would be bound and not they as individuals, then plaintiff will be estopped from asserting the contrary.

Gartside Coal Co. v. Maxwell, 23 Fed. Rep. 197; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 1050; Snider's Sons Co. v. Troy, 11 L. R. A. 515, 91 Ala. 224; Columbia Electric Co. v. Dixon, 46 Minn. 463; Minnesota Gas-Light Economizer Co. v. Denslow, 46 Minn. 171; Masonic Temple Assn. v. Channell, 43 Minn. 358; East Norway Lake Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church Trustees v. Froislee, 37 Minn. 447; Foster v. Moulton, 35 Minn. 458; French v. Donohue, 29 Minn. 111; Holbrook v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 25 Minn. 229; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 751; Taylor, Priv. Corp. § 148.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, says: "The courts do not allow parties to suits on contracts to question the due incorporation of a company which it was possible to incorporate, which has attempted to incorporate and which has acted as a corporation."

See also 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 871; Fay v. Noble, 7 Cush. 188; Troubridge v. Seudder, 11 Cush. 83; Salem First Nat. Bank v. Almy, 117 Mass. 476; Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 599; Planters & Miners Bank v. Padgett, 69 Ga. 164; Thompson v. Candor, 60 Ill. 244.

The objection that the Law of 1870 is unconstitutional because the subject of the law is not expressed in the title as required by section 27, art. 4, is not tenable.

Johnson v. Harrison, 47 Minn. 575.

It is in any event a de facto corporation, for there is both a colorable compliance with law and a user.

4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 198.

Gillilan, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Eight persons signed, acknowledged, and caused to be filed and recorded in the office of the city clerk in Minneapolis, articles assuming and purporting to form, under Laws 1870, chap. 29, a corporation, for the purpose, as specified in them, of "buying, owning, improving, selling, and leasing of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, real, personal, and mixed estates and property, including the construction and leasing of a building in the city of Minneapolis, Minn., as a hall to aid and carry out the general purposes of the organization known as the 'Knights of Labor.'" The association received subscriptions to its capital stock, elected directors and a board of managers, adopted by-laws, bought a lot, erected a building on it, and, when completed, rented different parts of it to different parties. The plaintiff furnished plumbing for the building during its construction, amounting to $599.50, for which he brings this action against several subscribers to the stock, as copartners doing business under the firm name of the "K. of L. Building Association." The theory upon which the action is brought is that, the association having failed to become a corporation, it is in law a partnership, and the members liable as partners for the debts incurred by it.

It is claimed that the association was not an incorporation because—First, the Act under which it attempted to become incorporated, to wit, Laws 1870, chap. 29, is void, because its subject is not properly expressed in the title; second, the Act does not authorize the formation of corporations for the purpose or to transact the business stated in the articles; third, the place where the business was to be carried on was not distinctly stated in the articles, and they had, perhaps, some other minor defects.

It is unnecessary to consider whether this was a de jure corporation, so that it could defend against a quo warranto, or an action in the nature of quo warranto, in behalf of the state; for, although an association may not be able to justify itself when called on by the state to show by what authority it assumes to be, and act as, a corporation, it may be so far a corporation that, for reasons of public policy, no one but the state will be permitted to call in question the lawfulness of its organization. Such is what is termed a corporation de facto,—that is, a corporation from the fact of its acting as such, though not in law or of right a corporation. What is essential to constitute a body of men a de facto corporation is stated by Selden, J., in Methodist Episcopal U. Church v. Pickett, 19 N. Y. 482, as "(1) the existence of a charter or some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully be created; and (2) a user by the party to the suit of the rights claimed to be confirmed by such charter or law." This statement was apparently adopted by this court in East Norway 18 L. R. A.

Lake Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church Trustees v. Froislie, 87 Minn. 447, but, as it leaves out of account any attempt to organize under the charter or law, we think the statement of what is essential defective. The definition in Taylor on Private Corporations (page 145) is more nearly accurate: "When a body of men are acting as a corporation, under color of apparent organization, in pursuance of some charter or enabling Act, their authority to act as a corporation cannot be questioned collaterally." To give to a body of men assuming to act as a corporation, where there has been no attempt to comply with the provisions of any law authorizing them to become such, the status of a de facto corporation might open the door to frauds upon the public. It would certainly be impolitic to permit a number of men to have the status of a corporation to any extent merely because there is a law under which they might have become incorporated, and they have agreed among themselves to act, and they have acted, as a corporation. That was the condition in Johnson v. Corser, 84 Minn. 855, in which it was held that what had been done was ineffectual to limit the individual liability of the associates. They had not gone far enough to become a de facto corporation. They had merely signed articles, but had not attempted to give them publicity by filing for record, which the statute required. "Color of apparent organization under some charter or enabling Act" does not mean that there shall have been a full compliance with what the law requires to be done, nor a substantial compliance. A substantial compliance will make a corporation de jure. But there must be an apparent attempt to perfect an organization under the law. There being such apparent attempt to perfect an organization, the failure as to some substantial requirement will prevent the body being a corporation de jure; but if there be user pursuant to such attempted organization, it will not prevent it being a corporation de facto.

The title to chapter 29 is "An Act in Relation to the Formation of Co-operative Associations." Appellant's counsel argues that the body of the Act does not contain a single element of "co-operation," as that term is generally understood. But how it is generally understood he does not inform us. In a broad sense, all associations, whether corporations or partnerships, are co-operative, for all the members, either by their labor or capital, or both, co-operate to a common purpose. There is undoubtedly, in popular use of the terms, a more limited sense, though the precise limits are not well defined. There is no legal, as distinguishable from their popular, signification. In the Century Dictionary the term "co-operative society" is defined, "A union of individuals, commonly laborers or small capitalists, formed . . . for the prosecution in common of a productive enterprise, the profits being shared in accordance with the amount of capital or labor contributed by each member." Taking the distinctive feature of a co-operative society to be that it is made up of laborers or small capitalists, it is manifest that the chapter intends to deal with just that sort of associations. Not only does it contemplate that the operations of the corporations shall be local, but the capital stock is limited to $50,000, the stock which one member may hold to $1,000. No one can become a shareholder without the consent of the managers, and no one is entitled to more than one vote. The provisions in the body of the Act are in accord with the title, and it is therefore not open to the objection made against it. The purposes for which, under the Act, corporations may be formed, are "of trade, or of carrying on any lawful mechanical, manufacturing, or agricultural business." The main purpose of the Act being to enable men of small capital, or of no capital but their labor and their skill in trades, to form corporations, for the purpose of giving employment to such capital or labor and skill, the language expressing the purposes for which such corporations may be formed ought not to be narrowly construed. Giving a reasonably liberal meaning to the word "trade" in the Act, it would include the buying and selling of real estate, and, upon a similar construction, the word "mechanical" would include the erection of buildings. The doing of the mason, or brick, or carpenter or any other, work upon a building is certainly mechanical. There can be little question that corporations might be formed to do either of those kinds of work on buildings, and, that being so, there is no reason why they may not be formed to do all of them. There is no reason to claim that such a corporation must do its work as a contractor for some other person. It may do it for itself, and, as the Act authorizes the corporation to "take, hold, and convey such real and personal estate as is necessary for the purposes of its organization," it may, instead of working for others as a contractor, make its profit by buying real estate, erecting buildings on it, and either selling or holding them for leasing. The omission to state distinctly in the articles the place within which the business is to be carried on, though that might be essential to make it a de jure corporation, would not prevent it becoming one de facto. The foundation for a de facto corporation having been laid by the attempt to organize under the law, the user shown was sufficient.

Judgment affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

George W. HANCOCK, Appt.,

v.

Thomas B. McAVOY.

(.....Pa.....)

An interest in land which will support an action of ejectment is not created by a deed conveying "the exclusive and entire right of interment or sepulture in" certain burial lots to be held "for the uses and purposes of sepulture only and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever."

(October 3, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Common Pleas, No. 4, for Philadelphia

NOTE.—What title or interest will support an action of ejectment.

1. Plaintiff must prove title.

In ejectment the plaintiff must recover, if at all, on the strength of his own title. Mather v. Walsh, 107 Mo. 121; Gregory v. Kenyon (Neb.) May 13, 1892; Coffin v. Freeman, 82 Me. 577; Buras v. O'Brien, 42 La. Ann. 527; Bonds v. Smith, 106 N. C. 553; Buck v. Gage, 27 Neb. 303; Weaver v. Whilden, 33 S. C. 190; Johnson v. Johnson, 27 S. C. 309; Sebastian v. Martin Brown Co. 75 Tex. 291; Low v. Little, 39 W. Va. 400; Nelson v. Triplett, 81 Va. 238; Walker v. Hill, 111 Ind. 223; Agnew v. Perry, 120 Ill. 655; Mitchell v. Lines, 36 Kan. 373; Riggs v. Riley, 113 Ind. 208; England v. Hatch, 80 Ala. 247; Stafford v. Cronkhite, 114 Ind. 220; Kelley v. McKeon, 67 Wis. 551; Apel v. Kelsey, 47 Ark. 413; Dawson v. Parham, Id. 215; Hawes v. Rucker (Ala.) Nov. 3, 1891; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 153, 60 Am. Dec. 407; McNitt v. Turner, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 352, 21 L. ed. 341; Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522; Watts v. Lindsey, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 153, 5 L. ed. 423; Huntington v. Jewett, 25 Iowa, 249; Marsh v. Brooks, 49 U. S. 8 How. 223, 12 L. ed. 1056; Wolfe v. Doe, 13 Smedes & M. 103, 51 Am. Dec. 147; Fussell v. Gregg, 113 U. S. 550, 28 L. ed. 993; Greve v. Coffin, 14 Minn. 345; Fussell v. Hughes, 113 U. S. 553, 28 L. ed. 998; Smith v. Hunt, 13 Ohio, 260, 42 Am. Dec. 201; Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co. 62 Mich. 623.

Plaintiff in ejectment must recover on the strength of his own title, either as being good against all the world or as good against the defendant by estoppel. Duncan v. Duncan, 25 N. C. 317; Clarke v. Diggs, 28 N. C. 159, 44 Am. Dec. 73; Taylor v. Gooch, 48 N. C. 433, 43 L. R. A.

This rule must be limited and explained by the nature of each case as it arises. Love v. Simms, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 515, 6 L. ed. 149.

In Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 597, Field, Ch. J., delivering the opinion, said: "It is undoubtedly true, as a general rule, that the claimant in ejectment must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's. . . . But this general rule has in this state, from the anomalous condition of things arising from the peculiar character of the mining and landed interests of the country, been, to a certain extent, limited and qualified. . . . And with the public lands which are not mineral lands, the title as between citizens of the state, where neither connects himself with the government, is considered as vested in the first possessor."

2. Will equitable title support the action?

And the legal title only is recognized as the ground of the action. Smith v. Hunt, supra; Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill, 430, 39 Am. Dec. 858; Leonard v. Diamond, 31 Md. 541; Gillett v. Treganza, 13 Wis. 472; Eaton v. Smith, 19 Wis. 537.

To authorize a recovery in ejectment, where the defendant is in possession the plaintiff must show a valid legal title. Morehouse v. Phelps, 63 U. S. 21 How. 294, 16 L. ed. 140.

In Federal courts recovery can be had only upon strict legal title. Langdon v. Sherwood, 124 U. S. 74, 31 L. ed. 344.

Ejectment cannot be maintained in a court of the United States upon an incipient equity but only upon a legal title even though the former would sustain an action under statutes of the state County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain burial lots situated in the cemetery of the Philadelphia Cemetery Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry J. Hancock and John G. Johnson, for appellant:

The interest conveyed under the original deed of Tilford to Lisle is such an interest in land as will support an action of ejectment.

Ejectment is in its nature a possessory action and it was originally limited to that purpose.

Tyler, Ejectment, p. 33; Cooper v. Smith, 9 Serg. & R. 26, 11 Am. Dec. 658.

Ejectment will lie for a coal mine.

Comyn v. Kyneto, Cro. Jac. 150. See Comyn

v. Wheatly, Noy, 121; Caldwell v. Fulton, 81 Pa. 475, 72 Am. Dec. 760; Scranton v. Phillips, 94 Pa. 20; Fairchild v. Dunbar Furnace Co. 128 Pa. 497; Thompson v. Matlern, 115 Pa. 501; Grotz v. Coal Company, 1 Luzerne Legal Reg. (Kulp) 57; Weakland v. Cunningham (Pa.) Nov. 1, 1896.

In Whittingham v. Andrews, Salk, 255, ejectment was also maintained de minimis car bonum.

In Cottingham v. King, 1 Burr. 629, an ejectment was sustained for a quarter of land in T., with the town and tenements of B., a large deer park, and the parsonage of S.

So ejectment lies for a beast gate or a cattle gate.

in which the Federal court is sitting. Swayze v. Burke, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 11, 9 L. ed. 980; Sheirburn v. De Cordova, 65 U. S. 24 How. 423, 16 L. ed. 741; Fenn v. Holme, 62 U. S. 21 How. 431, 16 L. ed. 198; Hooper v. Scheimer, 64 U. S. 23 How. 235, 16 L. ed. 452; Smith v. McCann, 65 U. S. 24 How. 398, 16 L. ed. 714; Claggett v. Kilbourne, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 344, 17 L. ed. 213; Oaksmith v. Johnston, 92 U. S. 343, 23 L. ed. 682.

The same rule prevails in a petitory action which is, in Louisiana an action in the nature of ejectment. Gilmer v. Poindexter, 51 U. S. 10 How. 257, 13 L. ed. 411.

If there are equities showing the right to be in another than the party having the strict legal title, these can be considered only on the equity side of the federal courts. Foster v. Mora, 98 U. S. 425, 25 L. ed. 191.

An equitable title will not support an action in ejectment. Ruffners v. Lewis, 7 Leigh, 720, 30 Am. Dec. 513.

In ejectment neither equitable titles nor equitable defenses can avail either as a basis of recovery or of defense. McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547.

A party claiming under a Mexican grant of an imperfect or equitable title cannot maintain ejectment against another party claiming under the same grant by adverse derivative title, who has presented his claim and had it confirmed, whether he acted fraudulently or otherwise. Bouldin v. Phelps, 30 Fed. Rep. 547.

One who takes an assignment of a contract of sale as security for a debt cannot maintain ejectment against his assignor, since he has no legal title. Campbell v. Swan, 43 Barb. 114.

In Dummer v. Den, 20 N. J. L. 36, an action to recover the possession of land dedicated to the public use, it was said: "Ejectment is a possessory action, and if the lessors of the plaintiff are entitled to the possession,—and they must be if they are entitled to the use, for they are inseparable,—it is a legal and not a mere equitable right, and they may recover it against the legal owner of the fee.

Recovery cannot be had in ejectment upon a chain of title, a link of which consists of a deed from husband to wife, since in Wisconsin the effect of such deed on conveyances subsequent thereto is to convey only the equitable title leaving the legal title essential to the maintenance of ejectment in the husband and his subsequent grantees. Kinney v. Dexter, 81 Wis. 80.

But under the Codes the defendant may set forth as many defenses as he has, whether before the Code they were denominated legal or equitable. Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 63 Am. Dec. 158; McBurney v. Wellman, 42 Barb. 401; Garrity v. Haynes, 53 Barb. 599; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 275; Cummings v. Morris, 25 N. Y. 628; Savage v. Allen, 54 N. Y. 463; Stevens v. New York, 84 N. Y. 305; Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 46; Rogers v. Gwinn, 21 Iowa, 64; Shawhan v. Long, 26 Iowa, 428, 96 Am. 18 L. R. A.

Dec. 164; Rosiers v. Van Dam, 16 Iowa, 175; Kramer v. Conger, 16 Iowa, 434; Penny v. Cook, 19 Iowa, 588; Meeker v. Dalton, 76 Cal. 154; Hurd v. Harvey County Comrs. 40 Kan. 92; Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 476; Clay County Land & Cattle Co. v. Wood, 71 Tex. 460; Clayton v. School Dist. No. 1, 20 Kan. 256; Hall v. Dodge, 18 Kan. 277; Wicks v. Smith, 18 Kan. 508.

The proposition that in an action of ejectment the legal title must control is not the law of California. Willis v. Wozencraft, 22 Cal. 615; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Mudd, 59 Cal. 583; Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 17, 49 Am. Rep. 679.

There being no court of chancery in Pennsylvania, an action of ejectment is sustained on an equitable title in that state. Swayze v. Burke, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 11, 9 L. ed. 980.

The holder of a legal title to land in Pennsylvania cannot maintain ejectment against the holder of an equitable title thereto. Wind v. Hass, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 645.

Under the statutes of Missouri ejectment may be maintained in land warrants and other titles not complete or legal in their character. Strother v. Lucas, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 763, 8 L. ed. 573; Fenn v. Holme, 62 U. S. 21 How. 431, 16 L. ed. 198.

And in Georgia ejectment may be maintained in an equitable title when the same is perfect equity. Dodge v. Spiers, 35 Ga. 536.

Legal title cannot prevail until the equities interposed by the answer are determined unfavorably to the defense. Allen v. Logan, 96 Mo. 591.

The holders of the legal title to land may recover in trespass to try title against strangers who fail to show that they are holding under an equitable title. Goode v. Jasper, 71 Tex. 43.

Under Kan. Civ. Code, § 595, before plaintiff in ejectment can recover, he must show that he has a legal or equitable estate in the land and the right of possession thereof. Hurd v. Harvey County Comrs. 40 Kan. 92.

The equitable owner of land in Minnesota may maintain ejectment against the owner of the naked legal title or a stranger. Merrill v. Dearing, 47 Minn. 187.

However, to entitle one to recover under the Nebraska Code he must possess a legal title, and state in his petition that he is entitled to the possession. Dale v. Hunneman, 12 Neb. 221.

a. Patent confers a legal title.

In ejectment the legal title must prevail; but the patent of the United States confers a legal title (Singleton v. Touchard, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 342, 17 L. ed. 50; Steel v. St. Louis Smelt. & Ref. Co. 106 U. S. 447, 27 L. ed. 228; Gibson v. Chouteau, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 634); and when regular on its face is conclusive. Gibson v. Chouteau, supra.

A grant by Congress to a railroad company for railroad purposes, of a strip of public lands on each Millington v. Goodtitle, 1 Andr. 107.

For titles.
Camell v. Clavering, 2 Ld. Raym. 789.
A common of pasture.
Newman v. Holdmyst, 1 Strange, 54.
For the first crop of hay or primam tonsuram.
Ward v. Petifer, Cro. Car. 362.
For herbage.
Wheeler v. Toulson, Hardres, 830.
A fishery may be recovered in ejectment.
King v. Alresford, 1 T. R. 361.
Ejectment will lie for the right to take hay, grass, and aftermath of the meadow.
King v. Stoke, 2 T. R. 452.
For a stable.

Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. 484.
For the soil of a road or highway.
Adams v. Emerson, 6 Pick. 57.
For a boiler, engine, and stack.
Hill v. Hill, 48 Pa. 521.
For a rent reserved with a clause of re-entry
Kenege v. Elliott, 9 Watts, 258; Newman v. Rutter, 8 Watts, 51.
Money charged upon land.
Gabraith v. Fenton, 8 Serg. & R. 859.
An exclusive grant of oil rights.
Brown v. Lane, 91 Pa. 153; Brown v. Devitt, 181 Pa. 455; Buchanan v. Hazzard, 95 Pa. 246.
For an undivided interest in land.
McMahan v. McMahan, 18 Pa. 376.
For a portion of space occupied by the over-side of its road, entitles the company to maintain ejectment against one who for a long period before the grant had occupied the lands without title. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Burr, 86 Cal. 279; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Meyer (Cal.) Nov. 4, 1890; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Benity, 5 Sawy. 118.

A grant from the state will in general support an action of ejectment. Blakalee Mfg. Co. v. Blakalee Iron Works, 59 Hun, 200.

By the statute of Arkansas ejectment may be maintained by one claiming possession by virtue of an entry made with the register and receiver of the proper land office of the United States. Ark. Dig. 454.

A certificate of entry issued under the United States Homestead Law vests in the holder a sufficient title to support a petitory action to recover the land. Broussard v. Broussard, 43 La. Ann. 921; Simien v. Perrodin, 35 La. Ann. 981.

Ejectment may be maintained by the holder of a patent certificate or final cash entry receipt for pre-empted lands, so long as it remains unannounced, before he has received a patent for the lands. Pierce v. Frazer, 2 Wash. 81; Orchard v. Alexander, 2 Wash. 106.

But an entry under an application for pre-emption without a compliance with the law in respect to occupation of the land or payment of the purchase money, will not sustain an action of trespass to try title. Conn v. Franklin (Tex.) March 1, 1892.

And a purchaser from a pre-emptor who has obtained a final certificate has no legal estate upon which to maintain ejectment apart from possession. American Mortg. Co. v. Hopper, 48 Fed. Rep. 47.

No recovery can be had in ejectment upon a duplicate receipt of a receiver of a land office, under Neb. Code Civ. Proc., § 411, as in force in Oklahoma, providing that the usual duplicate of such receiver is proof of title equivalent to a patent against all but the holder of an actual title. Adams v. Couch (Oklahoma) April 4, 1891.

Under Acts of Congress confirming claims to lands under Spanish grants after a survey is duly made, approved and recorded at the surveyor general's office, an action of ejectment may be maintained. Stoddard v. Chambers, 43 U. S. 2 How. 284, 11 L. ed. 229; Le Bois v. Bramell, 45 U. S. 4 How. 442, 11 L. ed. 106; Bissell v. Penrose, 49 U. S. 8 How. 317, 12 L. ed. 1006; McCall v. Carpenter, 59 U. S. 13 How. 397, 15 L. ed. 899.

By the Act of 1807 Congress did not intend to give a final legal title to lands held under Spanish and French grants until the bounds were defined by survey; and until such survey, the holders of such lands have no title which will support ejectment. West v. Cochran, 58 U. S. 17 How. 408, 15 L. ed. 110.

Where plaintiff claimed title under a United States patent, granted under a survey where the commissioner of the general land office had no authority to order the survey he cannot recover. Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co. 62 Mich. 626.

3. Right of possession and interest in the land are necessary to recovery.

A present right of possession is necessary to a recovery in ejectment. Barco v. Fennell, 24 Fla. 373.

Without it recovery cannot be had though the plaintiff may show title or right of property. Jones v. Lofton, 13 Fla. 189; Asia v. Hiser, 22 Fla. 378.

Every plaintiff in ejectment must show a right of possession as well as of property. Taylor v. Horde, 1 Burr. 112; Love v. Simms, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 515, 6 L. ed. 149; Cincinnati v. White, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed. 452; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 573, 25 L. ed. 618; Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 63, 26 L. ed. 79.

By How. Stat., § 7790, it is provided that no person can recover in ejectment unless he has, at the time of commencing the action, a valid, subsisting interest in the premises claimed, and a right to recover the possession thereof, or of some share, interest, or portion thereof, to be proved and established at the trial.

Similar statutes are in force in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Where an action of ejectment is brought by the vendor of land against the vendee, who has failed to meet the payments called for by the contract under which he has gone into possession, the plaintiff must at the commencement of the suit have both the legal and possessory right in himself. Fears v. Merrill, 9 Ark. 569.

In an action under Gen. Stat. 1873, chap. 78, § 2, to determine an adverse claim to vacant or unoccupied land, the plaintiff must show some title in the land. Herrick v. Churchill, 35 Minn. 318; Myrick v. Coursaille, 38 Minn. 153.

To maintain the action of ejectment a perfect legal title in the claimant is necessary, wherever the action depends upon the title and not upon some relation or agreement between the parties, affecting the right of possession. Rogers v. Caewood, 1 Swan, 142, 55 Am. Dec. 729; Jackson v. Demont, 9 Johns. 60, 6 Am. Dec. 259.

A deed which by reason of an imperfect description does not pass the title to land, will not sustain ejectment. Prentice v. Stearns, 113 U. S. 423, 28 L. ed. 1059.

In Bonaffon v. Peters, 184 Pa. 180, the plaintiff offered in evidence a deed to himself made by a third person who was not shown to have been in possession or to have had title; this was held insufficient to maintain the action.

A partition deed of all the right, title, and interest,—estimated at a certain number of acres—of heirs in a tract of land of which certain unidentified lots had been conveyed by their ancestor, confers a prima facie title upon the grantees sufficient hanging of a wall over land belonging to the plaintiff.

Sherry v. Frecking, 4 Duer, 452.

The grantee of a right to herbage, although he has not the grant of the soil, has a sufficient interest to maintain ejectment.

Wheeler v. Toulson, Hardres, 880.

Ejectment has been repeatedly sustained against parties using the surface of a piece of ground.

Etz v. Daily, 20 Barb. 82; Wheeling, P. & B. R. Co. v. Warrell, 122 Pa. 618.

So ejectment may be maintained for an easement.

Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. v. Bruce, 102 Pa.

23; Oliver v. Pittsburgh, V. & C. R. Co. 131 Pa. 408; Carpenter v. Onwego & S. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 655; Jackson v. May, 16 Johns. 184; Lozier v. New York Cent. R. Co. 42 Barb. 405; Sharpe v. St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. 49 Ind. 296; Wager v. Troy Union R. Co. 25 N. Y. 526; Wright v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 76.

In Pennsylvania ejectment is an equitable remedy.

Peebles v. Reading, 8 Serg. & R. 484.

This is not the case of a church corporation or a body with limited powers granting a right of burial as in Kincaid's App., 86 Pa. 411.

See Craig v. First Presby. Church of Pittsburgh, 88 Pa. 42.

to support an action of trespass to try title for all the tract except such as can be shown to have been legally conveyed by the ancestor. Hitchler v. Scanlan (Tex.) March 1, 1892.

An action of ejectment can be maintained on a title by estoppel. Stoddard v. Chambers, 48 U. S. 2 How. 284, 11 L. ed. 209; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 25 L. ed. 618; Kirk v. Hamilton, 108 U. S. 68, 25 L. ed. 79.

The holder of the legal title to land, although a trustee for a third person, is the real party in interest, and may sue in his own name to recover possession. Anson v. Townsend, 78 Cal. 415.

One who has conveyed land which is in the adverse possession of a third party under a claim of right, may after such conveyance maintain ejectment in his own name, the recovery inuring to the benefit of the grantee. Davis v. Curry, 85 Ala. 183; Scranton v. Ballard, 64 Ala. 402; Bounson v. Morgan, 86 Ala. 818.

Plaintiff in ejectment may recover if he shows that he has a claim to the property by color of title as against a defendant who claims only by his possession, unless at the time defendant entered into possession the plaintiff had abandoned his possession or right of property. Douglass v. Ruffin, 38 Kan. 530; Gilmore v. Norton, 10 Kan. 491; Duffey v. Rafferty, 15 Kan. 1; Mooney v. Olsen, 21 Kan. 697; Hollenback v. Ess, 31 Kan. 88.

But a person in whom the equitable title and the right of possession conjoin will not be denied relief at law merely because the naked legal title is held by a person not a party. Bartlett v. Borden, 18 Bush, 44.

One having a mere naked legal title to land in which he has no beneficial interest, and in respect to which he has no duty to perform, cannot maintain ejectment against the equitable owner, or any one having an equitable interest therein with a present right of possession. Bassett v. Hinckley, 124 Ill. 82.

To maintain ejectment or the statutory substitute for it in Alabama the plaintiff must have title and right of possession at the commencement of the suit, and that title must continue to the trial. This is the rule so far as the recovery of possession is concerned. Scranton v. Ballard, 64 Ala. 402; Hairston v. Dobbs, 80 Ala. 589; Goodman v. Winter, 64 Ala. 411; Pollard v. Hanrick, 74 Ala. 384; Green v. Jordan, 85 Ala. 230.

A plaintiff although having title at the commencement of the action, cannot recover if the title is terminated pending the action, either by voluntary conveyance or otherwise. Brunson v. Morgan, 86 Ala. 818.

And one who has only an equitable title at the time of bringing his action cannot maintain the action by acquiring the legal title. Green v. Jordan, supra; Collins v. Ballow, 72 Tex. 330.

In Laurisini v. Doe, 25 Miss. 177, it was held that in order to sustain an action of ejectment the plaintiff's lessor must have had legal title at time 18 L. R. A.

of demise laid and at time of the commencement of the action. See also Adams, Ejectment, 32.

4. But as against an intruder possession will suffice.

Recovery may be had in some cases on bare possession only, as where there has been an actual ouster of tenants, or against a trespasser without color of title. Towke v. Darvall, 5 Litt. 317; Bagley v. Kennedy, 85 Ga. 708.

Possession is prima facie evidence of title, and sufficient to maintain ejectment against a mere naked trespasser. McLaurin v. Salmon, 11 B. Mon. 96; Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 94; Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. 83, 60 Am. Dec. 578; Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 70; Sacramento Valley R. Co. v. Moffatt, 7 Cal. 579; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 427.

Even where title may be shown to exist in another. Bequest v. Cauldfield, 4 Cal. 278; Turner v. Aldridge, McAll. 232.

Recovery can be had in ejectment on proof of prior possession against one not showing a better right, or an intruder. Dothard v. Denson, 72 Ala. 541; McCall v. Doe, 17 Ala. 538; Ashmead v. Wilson, 22 Fla. 259; Probst v. Domestic Missions Trustees, 8 N. M. 287.

One who has been expelled from a part of the public domain which he had enclosed, by threats of others having no better title, after a proper demand for restoration of the possession, can maintain ejectment, under N. M. Comp. Laws, § 1570, allowing the action for a mining claim or any other real estate from which a party has been wrongfully ousted. New Mexico, R. G. & P. R. Co. v. Crouch, 4 N. M. 141.

Though a purchaser from an executor at private sale, with bond for titles and part of the purchase money paid, may have acquired no title to or interest in the land, yet, being told by the executor to go and take possession, he has a right to the possession as against an intruder, and can sue out the statutory process to expel him. Bagley v. Stephens, 78 Ga. 304.

Possession at time of defendant's entry is sufficient on which to recover against one showing no title in himself. Sherin v. Brackett, 86 Minn. 152.

For against such an one possession is title. Wilder v. St. Paul, 12 Minn. 192; Hau v. Minnesota Valley R. Co. 18 Minn. 442.

The plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title. But actual prior possession is strong enough to enable recovery from a mere trespasser. A mere intruder cannot enter on a person actually seised and eject him and then question his title or set up an outstanding title in another. Christy v. Scott, 55 U. S. 14 How. 232, 14 L. ed. 422; Wilson v. Fine, 38 Fed. Rep. 739; American Mortg. Co. v. Hopper, 48 Fed. Rep. 47.

In Smith v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. 338, T. had entered into possession of land in New York in 1799 on which he had built a house, and continued in possession until his death in 1775. His family continued in possession until expelled by the British

Where a right is granted, such as the right here, a base fee is conveyed.

Mount Moriah Cemetery Assn. v. Com. 81 Pa. 235, 22 Am. Rep. 743.

In cases of church cemeteries or public burial grounds, the trustees or authorities have no power to sell the fee even if they attempt to do so.

Viele v. Osgood, 8 Barb. 180.

A different principle governs the case of independent cemeteries. Whether they be joint-stock companies or corporations, it seems that the holders of lots in them would possess fee-simple titles and could exercise rights of ownership and control over the same, consistent with the purpose for which the said lots were sold in as full a manner as over any other real property.

17 Am. L. Rev. 199; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 69; Re Brick Presby. Church, 3 Edw. Ch. 165, 6 L. ed. 611; Windt v. German Ref. Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 474, 7 L. ed. 1176.

In the case in hand the land was purchased for the purpose of creating a cemetery and selling the lots for private gain. Tilford owned the fee and had the unquestioned right to dispose of it. He granted certain lots for the entire and exclusive purpose of interment or in 1776; and no possession was thereafter taken of the premises until 1795 when L. entered as a bona fide purchaser, and continued in possession until 1810, when the heirs of T. brought action to recover in ejectment. It was held that the prior possession of T. was prima facie evidence of right, and that it was not necessary that the plaintiff should show either a possession of 20 years, or a paper title, Kent, Ch. J., said: "That the first possession should in such cases be the better evidence of right, seems to be the just and necessary inference of law. The ejectment is a possessory action, and possession is always presumption of right, and it stands good until other and stronger evidence destroys that presumption. This presumption of right every possessor of land has, in the first instance; and after a continued possession for twenty years, under a pretense or claim of right, the actual possession ripens into a right of possession which will toll an entry. But until the possession of the tenant has become so matured, it would seem to follow, that if the plaintiff shows a prior possession and upon which the defendant entered without its having been formally abandoned, as default, the presumption which arose from the tenant's possession is transferred to the prior possession of the plaintiff, and the tenant to recall that presumption must show a still prior possession, and so the presumption may be removed from one side to the other, toties quoties, until one party or the other has shown a possession which cannot be over-reached, or put an end to the doctrine of presumptions founded on mere possessions, by showing a regular legal title, or right of possession."

This doctrine is sustained by the following cases: Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192; Brooks v. Bruyn, 18 Ill. 541; Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 562; Hubbard v. Little, 9 Cush. 475; Jones v. Easley, 58 Ga. 454; Christy v. Scott, 55 U. S. 14 How. 232, 14 L. ed. 423; Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. 171; Thompson v. Burhans, 79 N. Y. 93; Kinney v. Harrett, 45 Mich. 87; Bates v. Campbell, 25 Wis. 613; Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 142; Findley v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 69; McWhorter v. Heltzell, 124 Ind. 129; Wilson v. Palmer, 18 Tex. 562; Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172; Bird v. Lisbroe, 9 Cal. 1; Den v. Morris, 7 N. J. L. 7, 11 Am. Dec. 503; Doe v. Cooke, 7 Bing. 346.

A person in possession of real property in Alaska may maintain ejectment therefor where ousted by a mere intruder. Campbell v. Silver Bow Basin Minn. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 47, 7 U. S. App. 71.

Though plaintiff in ejectment must in Oregon have a legal estate, actual possession at the time of the ouster is a sufficient estate against a mere intruder. American Mortg. Co. v. Hopper, 48 Fed. Rep. 47.

The possessory right to land on which an ice-house was standing at the time Alaska was ceded to the United States, although it had not been granted, is sufficient to sustain an action for possession against a mere intruder, under the statutes of Oregon, which are applicable to Alaska, giving any person who has a legal estate and a present right to possession the right to recover it. Halter v. Emmons, 46 Fed. Rep. 452.

As against a mere intruder, plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to recover on showing that his ancestor, under whom he claims as heir, died in possession. Mobley v. Bonner, 59 Pa. 481; West v. Pine, 4 Wash. C. C. 691.

Twelve or thirteen years' seisin of freehold and dying seized gives prima facie a right to maintain ejectment against a tortious holder. Den v. McCann, 8 N. J. L. 81, 4 Am. Dec. 334.

A possession of eight or ten years under claim and color of title is sufficient to entitle a plaintiff in ejectment to recover against a trespasser. Jackson v. Harder, 4 Johns. 202, 4 Am. Dec. 262.

Prior possession of unsurveyed government lands is sufficient to sustain ejectment against a mere trespasser although Act of Congress, Feb. 26, 1885, declares the inclosure of such lands to be unlawful. Gonder v. Miller (Nev.) July 27, 1891.

a. What constitutes possession.

On the subject of what constitutes actual possession, Field, Ch. J., in Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567, said: "By actual possession is meant a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant, and is usually evidenced by occupation, by a substantial inclosure, by cultivation, or by appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property."

Maintenance of fences around a vacant lot, and payment of taxes upon it, constitutes sufficient prior possession to sustain an action of ejectment. Baum v. Reay (Cal.) Feb. 6, 1892.

Mr. Justice Story in Ellcott v. Pearl, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 441, 9 L. ed. 487, said that no authority was needed for so plain a proposition as that "to constitute actual possession it is not necessary that there should be any fence or inclosure of the land."

In order to enable one to recover on possession alone in an action of trespass to try title, the possession should be actual and corporeal, and not constructive. Lea v. Hernandez, 10 Tex. 137; Conn. v. Franklin (Tex.) March 1, 1892.

The making of one crop of land is not sufficient possession. Conn. v. Franklin, supra.

To constitute possession, mere assertion of title and the exercise of casual acts of ownership, are not sufficient; there must be bona fide occupation, a possessio pedis, a subjection to the will and control. Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 94.

A trustee in whom the fee of land is vested as a perpetual right of way for all railway companies doing business within the city has not the possession necessary to maintain ejectment against one of the companies for a misuser. Elyton Land Co. v. South & North Ala. R. Co. (Ala.) Nov. 24, 1891.

One who, having a deed to land which he knows does not confer title, has entered on the land and begun the erection of a shanty on two different occasions, but is driven off each time, and the shanty torn down, after which nothing is done for three years, when he brings an action of ejectment, has sempulture. And the grant of the entire and exclusive use of anything is always held to be a grant of the thing itself.

Morris v. Phaler, 1 Watts, 389; Sill's App. 1 Grant, Cas. 285.

Trespass quare clausum fregit can also be maintained for burial lots by the heir, and possession is the gist of that action.

Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759.

It is difficult to conceive of any use of the surface of ground after that ground is granted for the entire and exclusive use of interment or sepulture.

Busard v. Capel, 8 Barn. & C. 150.

The devise of the rent, profit, and income of land is a devise of the land itself.

Anderson v. Greble, 1 Ashm. 138; Claremont Bridge Proprietors v. Royce, 42 Vt. 730; Heveline v. Shippam, 5 Barn. & C. 221; Rex v. Chelsea Water Works Co. 5 Barn. & Ad. 156.

In Bennett v. Culver, 27 Hun, 554, the plaintiff's father conveyed land to a cemetery association for burial purposes only. And it was provided that in case of the nonfulfillment of the contract by the cemetery company, the right to the soil in which no interments had been made, should revert to the grantor.

no such possession as will support the action. Reay v. Butler (Cal.) June 18, 1892.

Actual personal presence of defendants on the land at the time of the institution of the action is not necessary to the maintenance of ejectment, but any subjection of the property to their will and dominion is sufficient. Bell v. Foxen, 14 Sawy. 490, 42 Fed. Rep. 755; Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Hicks, 4 Sawy. 683; Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268.

It is sufficient if there is continuous dominion evidenced by continuous acts of ownership. Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 139.

A purchaser of land has, for the purposes of ejectment, constructive possession of all the land described in his deed, which is not interfered with by a subsequent deed by the vendor covering part of the same territory. White v. Ward, 35 W. Va. 418.

5. Title acquired by limitation is sufficient.

Ejectment may be maintained upon a title acquired solely by limitation. Roemer v. Meyer (Tex.) Oct. 20, 1891.

One who has been dispossessed in an action of forcible entry and detainer of land which he has held adversely and continuously for more than twenty years may maintain ejectment therefor. Murray v. Hoyle, 92 Ala. 559; Farmer v. Balava, 11 Ala. 1028; Barclay v. Smith, 68 Ala. 230; Wilson v. Glenn, 68 Ala. 393.

Plaintiff in ejectment claiming title by adverse possession need not trace title back to the Commonwealth. Taylor v. Arnold, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 516.

Possession of land by plaintiff and his grantors under color of title, for more than forty years, gives him sufficient title to maintain ejectment therefor. Spies v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 39 N. Y. S. R. 764.

Plaintiffs in an action of ejectment are entitled to recover where they had been in open, notorious, and adverse possession of the premises for ten years before the defendant entered thereon, though they show no paper title. Baker v. Ferguson (Mo.) May 17, 1896.

Under the organic Act of the territory of Alaska of May 17, 1884, providing that persons should not be disturbed in possession of any lands actually in their use or occupation, the possession founded on use and occupation is a sufficient legal estate and right to present possession to sustain ejectment for lands taken by a deputy collector of customs under claim that they are part of a military reservation. Miller v. Blackett, 47 Fed. Rep. 547.

Prior possession unaccompanied with any title or right will not entitle plaintiff to recover in ejectment against a defendant in actual possession of Indian land properly patented to a member of the Shawnee tribe, since deceased, claiming color of title and possession under a deed from the chiefs of the tribe, approved by the secretary of the interior. O'Brien v. Bugbee (Kan.) April 11, 1891.

6. Ejectment will not lie to recover an easement.

Ejectment cannot be maintained to recover a 18 L. R. A.

mere easement. Racine v. Crotzenberg, 61 Wis. 481.

Ejectment cannot be maintained to recover a private right of way across lands of another. Fritschle v. Fritschle, 77 Wis. 270.

Ejectment will not lie in favor of, or against, a party, to try his right to enjoy an easement in land. Childs v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 246; Wood v. Truckee Turnp. Co. 24 Cal. 488; San Francisco v. Calderwood, 81 Cal. 589, 91 Am. Dec. 542.

A corporation cannot recover in ejectment a right of way. Racine v. Crotzenberg, supra.

But Visalia v. Jacob, 65 Cal. 434, 52 Am. Rep. 308, was an action of ejectment to recover part of a public street. The court said: "An action of ejectment may be maintained by a municipal corporation for the recovery of the possession of a street wrongfully possessed by an individual, whether the corporation owns the fee, or the adjoining proprietor retains it."

Ejectment will not lie to recover the use of an alley. Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232.

Ejectment will not lie in favor of the public to keep a street clear of unauthorized impediments. Bay County v. Bradley, 39 Mich. 163.

But it has been held that ejectment would lie for titles. Dean & C. of Windsor v. Gover, 8 Wms. Saund. 304, note 12.

And for common appurtenant. Mellington v. Goodtitle, Andr. 106.

And by the grant of a bollery of salt the land passes. Co. Litt. 4 b.

And by the grant of growing trees. Ive v. Sama, 2 Cro. Eliz. 522.

A right reserved by the vendor of land to construct and use wharves extending from such land, is an incorporeal hereditament and cannot be recovered by an action in the nature of ejectment, since no possession can be given of such a species of property. Parker v. West Coast Pack. Co. 5 L. R. A. 61, 17 Or. 510.

a. Action by riparian owner.

In Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 143, where the plaintiff had built a wharf between high and low water mark it was held that he had such an interest in the soil as would sustain ejectment.

Ejectment is the proper form of remedy where the defendants have entered upon the land of a city, have put structures thereon, and are using the same mainly for their private purposes, and have erected a wharf and pier and are taking wharfage thereon. New York v. Law, 135 N. Y. 380.

The remedy, if any, in favor of a riparian owner against persons who have taken possession of and erected buildings on the shore land between high and low water mark, the title and right to dispose of which is vested in the state and reserved from sale by the Constitution, is in equity, and not by an action in the nature of ejectment. Pierce v. Kennedy, 2 Wash. 324.

The court held ejectment would lie to recover the land unsold against the purchaser of the rights of the cemetery association, on an execution against it, who had been put in possession of the cemetery by the sheriff.

In Seymour v. Page, 83 Conn. 61, the grant was for a burial place and no other purpose, and it was held the grantee took a qualified fee.

Where land has been devoted to burial purposes the city authorities cannot under a statutory authority devote the land to other purposes.

Stockton v. Newark, 42 N. J. Eq. 531; Roussau v. Troy, 49 How. Pr. 492; Chatham v.

Brainerd, 11 Conn. 66; Evergreen Cemetery Assn. v. New Haven, 43 Conn. 234, 21 Am. Rep. 643; Lake View v. Lets, 44 Ill. 81; Re Egypt Street, 2 Grant, Cas. 455; Gumbert's App. 110 Pa. 496; Moreland v. Richardson, 22 Beav. 596.

Messrs. John H. Read and Silas W. Pettit, for appellee:

The right to a lot of ground for burial purposes is a usufructory one only—a mere license—and not the subject of an action of ejectment.

Kincaid's App. 66 Pa. 411; affirmed in Oraig v. First Presby. Church of Pittsburgh, 88 Pa. 42.

Where the grant was of "the exclusive right and privilege of boring for salt, oil, or

b. Mining rights.

A privilege to dig, not amounting to an actual demise, is an incorporeal hereditament for which ejectment will not lie. Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 116, 85 Am. Dec. 546.

A lessee of mining interest until he has taken actual possession of some part of the land, has only a floating and indefinite right, for the recovery of which he cannot maintain ejectment. Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 36 Mich. 106.

Under a deed reserving mining rights, and providing that if the owner of the reserved rights permanently occupies the surface he shall compensate the owner of the fee, ejectment will not lie for those parts of land necessarily occupied by shafts, or other mining excavations or erections used solely for mining purposes; their use is in the nature of an easement appurtenant to the mine. Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co. 50 Mich. 610.

Where mines have not been opened and the lessee has never been in possession, there can be no recovery by ejectment of the interest acquired under a lease for ninety-nine years for a share of the profits, which obligates the lessee to test the lands. Petroleum Co. v. Coal, Coke & Mfg. Co. 89 Tenn. 381.

But a licensee who has taken possession of mining lands and expended money and labor, has such an interest in real estate as will enable him to maintain ejectment. Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 116, 85 Am. Dec. 546; Adams, Ejectment, 20.

The ownership of a coal bed is a corporeal interest in land to recover which ejectment will lie. Comyn v. Kyneto, Cro. Jac. 150; Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 433, 72 Am. Dec. 760.

In Fenner v. Reynolds, 23 Pa. 199, a plaintiff in ejectment was allowed to recover possession of a mine which he had described as land, though the conveyance to him was not of the tract of land, but of coal.

Possession taken under a lease of mineral rights for a specified period, is actual though qualified, and is essential to prosecute the purposes of the lease, and, though given to effectuate incorporeal rights, is still a substantial possession and the proper subject of ejectment. Karns v. Tanner, 66 Pa. 297.

The right to quarry and remove limestone is an incorporeal hereditament, and is an interest in, or a right arising out of, land, and as such constitutes, under the Virginia statute, a foundation for an action of ejectment. Reynolds v. Cook, 38 Va. 817.

7. Fixtures.

Where by agreement the right to occupy certain real estate for the purpose of erecting permanent fixtures is granted by the owner of the fee and likewise the right to use the fixtures in common, and one of the tenants is excluded from the possession, ejectment is his remedy. Hill v. Hill, 43 Pa. 521.

18 L. R. A.

See also 41 L. R. A. 335.

8. Action by owner of dominant estate.

The owner of the soil subject to an easement who has not only the freehold but the right to the possession as against a wrongdoer, may recover in ejectment subject to the easement. Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 21 Wis. 602; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 153, 60 Am. Dec. 407.

Ejectment can be maintained for premises which are subject to an easement of the defendant, where plaintiff's rights in the land are denied. The Edmondson Island Case, 42 Fed. Rep. 15.

The existence of an easement is no bar to the right of the owner of the fee to recover. Blake v. Ham, 53 Me. 423; Bradbury v. Cony, 59 Me. 499.

Ejectment will lie to recover possession of the soil subject either to a public or private easement over it. Tillmes v. Marsh, 67 Pa. 507; Cooper v. Smith, 9 Serg. & R. 23, 11 Am. Dec. 658.

The sheriff may give possession subject to the easement. Tillmes v. Marsh, supra.

a. Land subject to the easement of a highway.

An action in ejectment will lie in case of ouster, where lands are held in fee subject to the right of the public to use as a highway. Westlake v. Koch, 29 N. Y. S. R. 233; Wager v. Troy Union R. Co. 25 Y. 526; Reformed Church of Gallupville, 65 N. Y. 150.

It is the settled law that the owner of the soil may maintain ejectment for a part of the highway illegally appropriated by a third party. Wright v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 83.

In Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 143, Lord Mansfield, announced the doctrine that ejectment will lie by the owner of the soil for land which is subject to a passage over it as the king's highway.

But in Cincinnati v. White, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed. 453, this doctrine was disapproved. And in Connecticut the contrary doctrine has been asserted. Stiles v. Curtis, 4 Day, 323; Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 103, 6 Am. Dec. 216.

One may recover his land covered by a highway, in ejectment. Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 143; Alden v. Murdock, 13 Mass. 256; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 33, 8 Am. Dec. 121.

One who has the freehold of the land over which a highway runs may maintain ejectment for encroachments upon the highway. Etz v. Daily, 20 Barb. 32.

In this case the plaintiff had conveyed a farm to the defendant excepting therefrom land within its boundaries which was included in a highway. The defendant thereafter dug up the road and ran a water pipe across it; set out trees, and piled stone, etc., within its limits.

Up to the time of this case the question here presented had not been adjudged in New York although the doctrine laid down herein had been on several occasions asserted from the bench. Jackson v. Hathaway, 16 Johns. 453, 8 Am. Dec. 263; Saunders v. Wilson, 15 Wend. 839; Pearsall v. Post minerals," upon certain land, it was held that under the authority of Funk v. Haldeman, 58 Pa. 299, it was not a conveyance of the mineral, but only a right to sever and take it, and the only possession to which the grantee was entitled was such as was necessary to an exercise of that right, and therefore the remedy for the disturbance of the right was in case and that ejectment could not be maintained.

Union Pet. Co. v. Bliven Pet. Co. 72 Pa. 173.

In order to ascertain whether an instrument must be construed as a lease or a license, it is only necessary to determine whether the grantee had acquired by it any estate in the land, in respect of which he might bring ejectment.

If the land is still to be considered in the possession of the grantor the instrument will only amount to a license.

Funk v. Haldeman, supra.

Sterrett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As well stated by appellant in the opening sentence of his argument: "The question first presented for decision is whether the interest conveyed under the original deed of Tilford to Lisle is such an interest in land as will support an action of ejectment." The thing conveyed by the deed referred to, as the same is described therein, is "the exclusive and entire 20 Wend. 126; Benedict v. Goff, 3 Barb. 468; Northen Turnp. Road Co. v. Smith, 15 Barb. 355.

This doctrine was denied in the opinion delivered in Adams v. Saratoga & W. R. Co., 11 Barb. 414, following the opinion in Cincinnati v. White, supra.

The objection urged against the right to maintain an ejectment is that exclusive possession of the premises in dispute cannot be given. "But," says Gray, J., in Etz v. Daily, supra, "let this objection prevail and any erection short of a nuisance may be made on the roadside in front of the owner's domicile, and the owner would be without complete redress, and the lawless occupant would hold it until the use of the whole road as a highway should be discontinued, unless the public authorities should see fit to remove him."

But the action of ejectment can be maintained only to recover possession of land wrongfully withheld; and it will not lie against a railroad company in favor of an adjoining owner claiming the fee in the street subject to the public easement. Judge v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 56 Hun, 60.

Where a railroad is laid upon an established street within a city, in pursuance of power conferred upon the company by the city to occupy and use the street, and is constructed in a legal and proper manner, and the occupancy and use never abandoned, ejectment will not lie against the company in favor of a lotowner. Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Manley, 42 Kan. 577.

However an owner of land abutting on a public highway may recover against a railway company which without right, and without any legislative grant, either express or implied, has appropriated it to its own permanent use. Louisville, St. L. & T. R. Co. v. Liebfried, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 645, disapproving Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Allen, 118 Ind. 581; Carpenter v. Oswego & S. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 655; Wager v. Troy Union R. Co. 25 N. Y. 526; Lozier v. New York Cent. R. Co. 42 Barb. 469.

An adjoining owner may maintain ejectment against a railway which has laid its track in a street without tendering compensation. Terre Haute & S. R. Co. v. Rodel, 87 Ind. 128.

An unlawful entry on the street is an entry on the land of the lotowner. Ibid.

9. Interest of a mortgagee.

In England and in many of the states the fee is held to pass by a mortgage to the mortgagee. The mortgagee may, where this view is held, be ousted immediately on the execution and delivery of the mortgage without waiting for the period fixed for the performance of the condition. Carroll v. Ballance, 26 Ill. 9, 79 Am. Dec. 254; Blaney v. Pearce, 2 Me. 132; Brown v. Cram, 1 N. H. 169; Hobart v. Sanborn, 18 N. H. 226; Northampton Paper Mills Co. v. Ames, 8 Met. 1.

In England the mortgagee had the double remedy of ejectment and a bill to foreclose and 18 L. R. A.

might maintain both at the same time. Garforth v. Bradley, 2 Ves. Sr. 678.

But he could not have his money and the estate too. Booth v. Booth, 2 Atk. 843.

A mortgagee may maintain ejectment to recover possession of the mortgaged premises, where default has been made in the payments of the installments of the mortgage. Smith v. Shuler, 12 Serg. & R. 240; Simpson v. Ammons, 1 Binn. 175, 2 Am. Dec. 425.

And the granting of scire facias did not take away ejectment. Smith v. Shuler, supra.

The assignee of a mortgage may, if he owns the indebtedness, maintain ejectment in his own name for his own use; or he may bring the action for the use of the party owning the indebtedness. Kilgour v. Gookley, 83 Ill. 109.

The mortgagee is owner of the fee as against the mortgagor and all claiming under him. Oldham v. Pfeiffer, 84 Ill. 102.

In this case it was held that ejectment could not be maintained by the heirs of the mortgagor against the grantee of the mortgage.

As announcing the same doctrine, see Nelson v. Pinegar, 30 Ill. 451; Finlon v. Clark, 118 Ill. 32; Taylor v. Adams, 115 Ill. 574.

At law the mortgagee is the owner of the estate and until the mortgage is satisfied the mortgagor cannot maintain ejectment against the mortgagee. Hubbell v. Moulson, 53 N. Y. 225, 13 Am. Rep. 519.

A mortgagor cannot recover in ejectment against a mortgagee who is in adverse possession after the law day of the mortgage; nor can one who claims under the mortgagor recover against one holding by privity of title with the mortgagee, unless the conveyance is void. Jones v. Roper, 36 Ala. 210.

But it is now settled law that the mortgagor or his assignee is the legal owner of the mortgaged estate as against all persons but the mortgagee or his assigns. Hall v. Lance, 25 Ill. 277; Emory v. Keighan, 88 Ill. 452; Barrett v. Hinckley, 124 Ill. 32.

Under the Code it is held that a mortgagee cannot maintain ejectment against the owner of the equity of redemption. Murray v. Walker, 81 N. Y. 399.

The grantee under a deed which is in fact a mortgage, never having been in possession, cannot recover in ejectment. Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522.

A grantor in a deed absolute on its face, but intended as a mortgage, being entitled to the possession of the lands until foreclosure, may reassume possession, even though he has abandoned it with no intention of returning or further claiming the land; and hence he or those claiming under him can maintain ejectment against a mere intruder who does not show any legal title. McCormick v. Herndon, 73 Wis. 661.

In Delaware it is held that the mortgagee,—who acquires only a chattel interest in the land,—cannot maintain ejectment for possession thereof even right of interment or sepulture in all and every of those two hundred burial lots in the Philadelphia Cemetery, situate," etc., "marked in the map or plan of said cemetery with the numbers 5, 9," etc.; "together with all and singular the ways, avenues, passages, rights, liberties, privileges, improvements, hereditaments, and appurtenances whatsoever thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and the reversions and remainders thereof; to have and to hold the same, with the appurtenances, unto the said John M. Lisle, his heirs and assigns, to and for the only proper use and behoof of the said John M. Lisle, his heirs and assigns, forever, for the uses and purposes of sepulture only, and to and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever, subject to all the rules, regulations, conditions, and restrictions contained and set forth in the articles of association made and adopted, or which may hereafter be made and adopted, by the corporators or managers of said cemetery for the government of lotowners or visitors to the cemetery, and the burial of the dead, and in and by any by-laws made and adopted, or which may hereafter be made and adopted, in pursuance of the said articles of association, or of the Act of Assembly incorporating said company." It thus appears by the deed that all the vendee acquired thereunder after condition broken. Fox v. Wharton, 5 Del. Ch. 200; Doe v. Tunnell, 1 Houst. (Del.) 323.

A purchaser at a sale under foreclosure of a mortgage executed by a husband alone upon lands not allotted as a homestead at a time when he was not otherwise indebted, may sustain ejectment against the mortgagor. Scott v. Lane, 100 N. C. 154; Hughes v. Hodges, 102 N. C. 236.

The lienholder by purchase at a sale upon the bond secured by the mortgage acquired all the rights and estate of the mortgagor, and is entitled to recover in ejectment against mortgagor. Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 805; Young v. Algeo, 3 Watts, 223.

The vendor of lands by a title bond cannot maintain an action of ejectment against the purchaser, for default in payment of the purchase price, but his position is that of a mortgagee holding a lien only which he can enforce in equity. Morton v. Dickson, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 548.

One who is owner of the equitable estate of the obligee in a bond for title, and of a one fourth share of the legal title, can recover possession in an action of ejectment against persons claiming under such obligee. Grubb v. Lookabill, 100 N. C. 207.

In Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 14, a vendor was allowed to maintain ejectment, the vendee having refused to comply with his contract.

And so in Snodgrass v. Parks, 79 Cal. 55, where the vendee had not only ceased to pay but had expressly abandoned the contract.

10. Tenant in common may maintain the action.

A tenant in common claiming an undivided interest may recover the entire property against the wrongdoer or one without title. Telfener v. Dillard, 70 Tex. 139; Wheeling, P. & B. R. Co. v. Warrell, 123 Pa. 612; Sowers v. Peterson, 59 Tex. 217; Pilcher v. Kirk, 60 Tex. 162; Contreras v. Haynes, 61 Tex. 108.

One partner, whatever his rights against the other members of the firm, can maintain ejectment for the whole tract of land belonging to the partnership as against a mere intruder. Smith v. Smith, 80 Cal. 324.

A portion of the tenants in common may recover the entire tract of the land sued for in trespass to try title against mere trespassers. Harber v. Dyches (Tex.) Oct. 23, 1890.

One tenant in common may maintain an action of ejectment or trespass to try title against his co-tenant, when the latter has ousted him of possession of the property owned in common. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Prather, 75 Tex. 58; Moulton v. McDermott, 80 Cal. 629; Whiteman v. Hyland, 40 N. Y. S. R. 573.

Where one co-tenant in actual possession disseises another, thereby making his possession adverse, ejectment will lie to restore to the ousted party his joint possession. Jordan v. Surghor, 107 Mo. 520; Lambert v. Blumenthal, 26 Mo. 471; Wommack v. 18 L. R. A.

Whitmore, 58 Mo. 451; Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 273, 77 Am. Dec. 614.

One of several tenants in common may maintain ejectment for his undivided interest. Blanchard v. Floyd (Ala.) June 9, 1891.

One of several tenants in common in whose favor an award has been made, but not paid, for the value of lands appropriated by a railroad company without obtaining title or making compensation, who has subsequently purchased the interests of his co-tenants, may maintain ejectment for the land. Wheeling, P. & B. R. Co. v. Warrell, supra.

A plaintiff in ejectment cannot rely upon a parol partition to establish his title to the co-tenant's share of the premises. Sontag v. Bigelow (Ill.) 18 L. R. A. 323.

11. Executors, administrators, and guardians.

An executor who, under the will, is required to rent and let the real estate, have and receive the rents, and pay them over, is entitled to recover the property by action. McAlpine v. Daniel, 101 N. C. 550.

But ejectment cannot be maintained by executors invested only with the simple power to carry into effect the provisions of a will which directs the sale of testator's real estate. Reynolds v. Boyd (Ky.) Nov. 14, 1891.

In Reynolds v. Boyd, supra, Lewis, J., said that a distinction had been recognized in Kentucky "between the case where a testator not only authorized his executor to sell land but devised to him the land itself, giving to the devisee only the proceeds when sold, and the case of a mere naked power to sell. In the first the title vests in the executor, and he may maintain the action; in the second the action is in the heirs-at-law of the testator, and an action of ejectment cannot be maintained unless they are parties." See Jennings v. Monk, 4 Met. (Ky.) 108; Warfield v. English, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 268.

As against a trespasser, an administrator may maintain ejectment in his own name for real estate of his intestate. Black v. Story, 7 Mont. 233.

In Florida an administrator may sue in ejectment to recover possession of the real estate of his intestate. Sanchez v. Hart, 17 Fla. 507.

Under Neb. Comp. Stat., chap. 23, § 202, an administrator may maintain ejectment for the recovery and possession of real property for the necessary purposes of administration. Dundas v. Carson, 27 Neb. 634.

And in Michigan the statutory right of the administrator before final settlement to the possession and rents of the real property may be enforced by ejectment. Kline v. Moulton, 11 Mich. 370.

In Marvin v. Schilling, 12 Mich. 381, the court, commenting on section 2904 of Comp. Stat., which is similar in its provisions to Neb. Comp. Stat., chap. 23, § 202, supra, said, citing Streeter v. Payton, 7 Mich. 341, that the statute did not interfere with the descent of the real estate to the heir, and his right to take possession, or bring ejectment there-was "the right of interment or sepulture" in the lots described therein, and declared to be held "for the uses and purposes of sepulture only, and to and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever." The right thus sharply defined and limited is also subject to all the rules, regulations, conditions, and restrictions contained and set forth in the articles of association made and adopted, or which might thereafter be adopted, by the incorporators or managers of the incorporated cemetery company. The language of the deed evidently contemplates possession and general control of the cemetery grounds, etc., by the company. The grantee in the deed acquired no such interest in the lots, nor such right of possession, as will support an action of ejectment. That action will not lie for a mere for against any one, except the administrator or some one in possession under him, and that the object of the statute was to permit the personal representative of the deceased to take possession of the real estate and hold it until it should be sold by him under a license of the probate court, on the final settlement of the estate, if he thought proper to do so, unless ordered to deliver it over to the heir by the probate court."

In Campau v. Campau, 19 Mich. 116, it was said that this power given to the administrator was for the benefit of creditors only.

In Miller v. Hoberg, 22 Minn. 249, it was held that the plaintiff's capacity to sue depended on his character as administrator. "His right to the possession, if he has any, is sole, and exclusive of the right of the heirs, and is not a joint right. . . . The heirs have the right to the possession as against every one but the administrator or his tenants. He has the right to the possession as against the heirs or any other persons until the estate is settled, or until delivered over by order of the probate court, and the right to sue follows as a necessary consequence."

In Alabama the administrator has such a right to the possession of the land of his intestate that he may bring ejectment without reference to the solvency of the estate. McKee v. McDonald, 57 Ala. 423; Agee v. Williams, 30 Ala. 686.

In Wisconsin, under statute, it is held that an administrator may maintain ejectment for lands of the estate he represents. Edwards v. Evans, 16 Wis. 181; Jones v. Billstein, 28 Wis. 227.

Prior to the Code, it was not settled whether or not an administrator could recover in ejectment against an heir-at-law without first obtaining an order of sale from the court of ordinary. Caruthers v. Bailey, 3 Ga. 111; Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145; Bond v. Watson, 20 Ga. 141.

Under the Code it is the better practice, if not indispensable in most cases, to obtain such an order. Davis v. Howard, 56 Ga. 433; Head v. Driver, 79 Ga. 179.

Wash. Code of Proc., § 956, provides that "every executor or administrator shall, after having qualified, etc., have a right to the immediate possession of all the real as well as the personal estate of the deceased, and may receive the rents and profits of the real estate until the estate shall be settled or delivered over by order of the court to the heirs or devisees." In Duan v. Peterson (Wash.) April 18, 1892, it was held that, under this provision, a sole devisee under a foreign will not exempting the estate from the control of the probate court, could not maintain ejectment, there being no allegation that letters testamentary or of administration with will annexed were not issued.

In California, where the law is substantially the same on this subject, it has been uniformly held that, pending administration, the personal representatives alone could maintain ejectment. Meeks v. Hahn, 20 Cal. 621; Chapman v. Hollister, 42 Cal. 463; Meeks v. Kirby, 47 Cal. 168.

And during the administration of an estate, and until distribution, the executor or administrator is entitled to the possession of real property and may recover it from the heir or devisee. Page v. Tucker, 54 Cal. 121.

18 L. R. A.

Under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1452, the heirs or devisees may themselves, or jointly with the executor or administrator, maintain an action for the possession of the real estate, or to quiet title to the same. Miller v. Lucio, 80 Cal. 257.

A lessee's interest in land descends to his administrator; but is for that reason none the less a valid and subsisting interest in real property within the meaning of Ind. Rev. Stat., § 1050. The fact that the action for the recovery of the lessee's interest must be prosecuted after his death, by the administrator, does not change the character of the proceeding, which is an action in the nature of an action in ejectment.

The right to possession conferred by a lease is as effectual to support an action under section 1050, supra, as if conferred by title in fee simple. Campbell v. Hunt, 1104 Ind. 210; Butler University v. Conard, 94 Ind. 353.

An administrator may recover upon the possession of his intestate. Buckner v. Chambliss, 30 Ga. 652.

A general guardian can maintain ejectment to recover possession of his ward's lands. Re Hynes, 105 N. Y. 560; Jackson v. De Waits, 7 Johns. 158.

12. Widow may recover dower.

By statute in Michigan it is provided that a widow may bring ejectment to recover her dower of any lands after six months from the time when the right accrued. How. Stat. § 7739.

The authority to recover dower by ejectment rests entirely upon statute; and in Michigan dower can be recovered only by statutory ejectment. Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 Mich. 282.

By How. Stat., § 7845, a widow is authorized to bring ejectment before assignment of dower. And see Snyder v. Snyder, 6 Mich. 473; Burrall v. Bender, 61 Mich. 622.

But ejectment may not be brought by one purchasing the right of dower before assignment, either in the name of the purchaser or the widow. Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 413.

Ejectment will lie by a widow to recover one room in a house, the right of possession of which she has under her husband's will as part of the provision in lieu of dower. White v. White, 16 N. J. L. 214.

13. Remaindermen.

Remaindermen cannot maintain ejectment against the grantees of a life tenant who in his lifetime purchased the fee at a sale under a mortgage made by the common source of title which it was not his duty to pay, where they have made no offer to redeem from the mortgage. Allen v. De Groodt, 105 Mo. 442.

A remainderman cannot maintain trespass to try title during the life of the life tenant. Cook v. Caswell, 81 Tex. 673.

For the plaintiff must show that he had a possessory title at the time of the demise laid in the petition. 2 Greenl. Ev. 303.

In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 98, the owner of a life estate had been notified of the appointment of commissioners to assess damages, but the notice was not sufficient as to the remainderman, and it was held that the latter might, after license, an incorporeal hereditament, nor for a mere right of way, nor an easement. 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 282; Adams, Ejectment, 16. As was said in Black v. Hepburne, 2 Yeates, 338: "Ejectment will only lie for things whereof possession may be delivered by the sheriff." If a recovery in ejectment, founded on a mere right or license such as that acquired by the grantee in the deed above referred to, were permitted, how could the sheriff, under a writ of habere facias, put the plaintiff in possession, without interfering with the rights, powers, and duties of the cemetery corporation? In Kincaid's App., 66 Pa. 411, one of the plaintiffs held a paper certifying that he was "entitled to two lots in the burying ground, . . . to have and to hold the said lots for the use and purpose and subject to the conditions and regulations in the deed of trust to the trustees of said church." It was held that this was not a grant of any interest in the soil; that it was the grant of a the expiration of the life estate, and after notice given, maintain ejectment.

14. Miscellaneous instances.

The holder of a tax deed which, in an action of ejectment against him, has been declared void, may nevertheless maintain ejectment against his tenant holding over after expiration of the term, where possession has never been taken under the judgment against him, and a sum thereby directed to be paid him before possession could be taken has not been paid. Rose v. Newman, 47 Kan. 18.

A male fide trustee of the legal title cannot harass one who is in actual possession, by proceedings in ejectment. Loomis v. Roberts, 57 Mich. 234.

When the owner of an estate for life acquires by purchase the remainder or reversion, the less estate becomes merged in the greater, and his title is an absolute fee on which he may recover in ejectment, or the statutory action in the nature of ejectment commenced before he acquired the fee. Hairston v. Dobbs, 80 Ala. 589.

Trespass to try title is the proper remedy to recover from heirs a half interest in lands located by plaintiff under an agreement with defendant's deceased ancestor that plaintiff should receive half as compensation. Hardy v. Beatty (Tex.) May 10, 1892.

An action cannot be maintained to eject defendant from the land covered by a brick wall standing wholly on the plaintiff's land, where such wall had been made a party-wall by a written agreement unperformed and unrescinded between grantors of the parties under a mutual mistake of fact as to the true boundary. Houghton v. Mendenhall (Minn.) May 23, 1892.

A widow who is insane and incapable of making a selection of a homestead out of a tract which is in excess of the constitutional limit of a homestead has not such a homestead right as will sustain an action of ejectment for any part of the land. Clancy v. Stephens, 92 Ala. 577.

A married woman in Indiana may maintain an action of ejectment against her husband to recover the possession of her separate real estate. Crater v. Crater, 118 Ind. 521.

And so in New York. Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575, overruling Minier v. Minier, 4 Lans. 421; Gould v. Gould, 29 How. Pr. 461.

So in Pennsylvania under the Acts of 1848 and 1854. McKendry v. McKendry, 6 L. R. A. 500, 131 Pa. 24.

Also in Michigan where the husband after separation occupies the wife's homestead. Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89.

An equitable action of ejectment cannot be maintained on a covenant made by a vendee for the support of a third person wherever she saw fit to reside, as it creates no right in or charge upon the land. Harkins v. Doran (Pa.) Oct. 29, 1888.

A tenant cannot maintain ejectment for the recovery of the possession of premises from which he has been wrongfully ejected in landlord and tenant proceedings, where his suit is brought after the expiration of the term. Horner v. Marietta, 135 Pa. 418.

18 L. R. A.

The purchaser of attached property held by a third person under fraudulent conveyance from the debtor may recover it from him in ejectment. McClellan v. Solomon, 23 Fla. 437, 11 Am. St. Rep. 381.

Ejectment, and not an action to have the deed set aside as a cloud on their title, is the proper form of action in favor of disseised heirs against an heir taking exclusive possession of land claiming it under a deed from the ancestor, which deed the other heirs claim was never delivered. Lundy v. Lundy, 131 Ill. 128.

Tenants who are in possession under a lease sufficient, except for the omission of the name of one of the lessors in its granting clause and the want of acknowledgment, and who have paid the rent and complied with the agreement on their part and made valuable improvements upon the premises, cannot be ejected at the suit of a subsequent vendee of the lessors with knowledge of the facts. Schulte v. Schering, 3 Wash. 127; Schulte v. Littlejohn, Id. 129.

The purchaser of a contract for the sale of lands, which was assigned by the vendee solely as security for a debt, cannot maintain ejectment against such vendee, who were in possession when he bought the contract and are not in default, although he has paid the purchase money and received a deed for the land,—especially where the debt which the contract was assigned to secure was not assigned to him. Hyde v. Mangan, 88 Cal. 319.

Ejectment will lie at the suit of a judgment creditor who has bought in the land of his debtor at execution sale, to recover the land from a subsequent purchaser from the debtor. Dehart v. Lewis, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 473.

Where a wife owned property in her own right and signed a deed which purported to be the deed of her husband alone, conveying the land to a railroad company, she may after his death maintain ejectment. Bradley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 91 Mo. 498.

Ejectment does not lie in behalf of an heir against an administrator to recover possession of land to which the latter is entitled as assets of the estate. Barco v. Fennell, 24 Fla. 378.

A railroad company may maintain ejectment for lands condemned under the General Railroad Act. New York, S. & W. R. Co. v. Trimmer, 53 N. J. L. 1.

In Ezzard v. Findley Gold Min. Co., 74 Ga. 520, it was held that one owning a mining right could not maintain ejectment against an adjacent proprietor who had erected a dam which flooded the upper lands.

But in this case the question did not arise whether the owner of land covered with water or of the mineral interest in such land, when either is held adversely, may maintain ejectment for the recovery thereof.

On the question what disseisin will support ejectment, see note to Harrington v. Port Huron (Mich.) 13 L. R. A. 664.

A. P. W.

license or privilege to make interments in the lots described, exclusive of others, so long as the ground should remain the burying ground of the church; that while the license continued he could perhaps maintain trespass or case for any invasion or disturbance of it, whether by the grantors or by strangers, etc. That case was cited approvingly in Orwig v. First Presby. Church of Pittsburgh, 88 Pa. 42, in which it was also held that the right of sepulture in the burying ground of a church is not an absolute right in the soil, but a mere license or privilege. In Union Petroleum Co. v. Bliven Petroleum Co., 72 Pa. 178, the grant to the defendant was of the exclusive right and privilege of boring for oil, etc., upon a farm. Subsequently, by partition, the title became vested in another, who conveyed to plaintiff. It was held that the grant was a mere incorporeal hereditament, and consequently ejectment could not be maintained. Referring to the grant, which was of "the exclusive right and privilege of boring for salt, oil, or minerals" upon the McClintock farm, Mr. Justice Shars- wood says: "It was, therefore, as in Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229, the grant of a mere incorporeal hereditament. Indeed, we do not understand this to have been controverted in the court below, nor has it been made a question in this court. It follows that the only remedy which the plaintiffs had for the disturbance of their right was an action on the case. Ejectment they certainly could not have maintained." Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229, above cited, is substantially to the same effect. It follows from what has been said that the right of sepulture, etc., was not an interest in the land, such as will support an action of ejectment. It is therefore unnecessary to consider whether the court erred in directing a verdict for defendant, and in other respects, or not. If, on the case presented by the plaintiff, he had no right to recover in an action of ejectment, he was not injured by any of the alleged errors of which he complains.

Judgment affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

MISSOURI FELLOW SERVANT CASES.¹

Katie DIXON, Appt.,

v.

CHICAGO & ALTON R. CO., Resp.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A laborer, working in defendant's quarry, under direction of a foreman having no connection with the train service is not a fellow servant of employes operating a passenger train on defendant's line.

2. The rule of exemption on account of fellow service discussed.

3. Employees of independent contractors, engaged in separate branches of labor

*Headnotes by BAROLAY, J.,

upon a common enterprise, are not fellow servants.

4. Contributory negligence; question for jury. A quarry hand was working about a railway track, near a curve at which locomotives were required, by defendant's rules, to whistle. His duties compelled him to frequently stand on the track with his back towards the curve, and to attend to the movement of small cars carrying rock across the main track to an inclined plane leading to a rock crusher. He was hit and killed by an engine coming rapidly around the curve without the required signal. Held, in the circumstances stated in the opinion, that the question whether he used ordinary care to avoid danger was one of fact for the jury.

5. The omission of the warning signal was evidence of negligence in running the train.

6. The court is authorized to pronounce certain conduct negligent, only when no

¹These five Missouri cases have been grouped and annotated by one of the ablest and most prominent members of the legal profession in that state for the purpose of illustrating and aiding in unifying the modern law of fellow servants. [Ed.]

NOTE.—[On the general subject of this note, see also the four cases next following.

In the illustrations the party injured is usually indicated by italics.

With a few exceptions, these notes will embody the results of decisions in recent cases only. Earlier 18 L. R. A.

rulings can be readily found in McKinney's Fellow Servants, Whittaker's Smith's Negligence, 1st Am. ed. p. 139, note d; and Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, Fellow Servants, and in Beven, Wharton, Cooley, Addison, and other writers on Torts and Negligence generally.]

General principles.

It is now settled law that the negligence of a fellow servant is no bar to an action by another servant where negligence of the master has also contributed to the injury of the latter. Coppins v.

other construction may reasonably be placed upon it in the circumstances.

(Sherwood, Ch. J., and Gantt, J., dissent.)

(November 9, 1891.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lafayette County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by actionable negligence on the part of defendant's servants. Reversed.

Statement by Barclay, J.:

Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment for defendant in an action for the negligent killing of her husband. No point arises on the pleadings.

These are the main facts:

Defendant operated a quarry and a rock-crusher in Jackson county, Mo., for preparing rock to ballast its road. The quarry lay a short distance south, and extended 200 or 300 feet alongside of defendant's line. From different parts of the quarry narrow tracks ran, converging at a turntable, 7 or 8 feet in diameter, the north edge of which was 9 feet south of defendant's main track. The rock-crusher stood 40 or 50 feet north of the track.

From the turntable, a small track, called by witnesses a "strap track," crossed the main line at a right angle, and ran up an inclined plane to the crushing machine, 80 or 40 feet from the ground. Small cars carried the rock to the crusher. They were first drawn along the quarry tracks by a mule to the turntable, and shifted by it into position to strike the strap track. Then a wire cable (fastened at one end to a drum in the crushing machinery) was made fast to one car at a time, which was pulled across the railroad track, up the inclined plane, to the crusher, by means of the steam power used to operate that machine. The rock was unloaded, and the empty car let down to the turntable again by the same wire cable. The latter had a ring or clevis at the end, by which it was attached (as occasion required) to a large iron hook on each car.

A number of hands were engaged in operating this quarry under the superintendence of a foreman who had power to employ and discharge subordinates without consulting any one, but had no control whatever over trains or the trainmen.

Plaintiff's husband had been at work at the quarry a long time. About a month before his death he had been assigned the duty of attaching the cable to the little cars between the turntable and the crusher, and detaching it again when the cars returned, as has been

New York & H. R. R. Co. (1890), 122 N. Y. 557, 19 Am. St. Rep. 523; McMahon v. Henning (1890), 1 McCrary, 516; Sutton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892), 50 N. Y. S. R. 514.

The question of the liability of the master (a corporation) "to one of its servants for the act of another person in its employment is a question, not of local law, but of general jurisprudence, upon which this court, in the absence of express statute regulating the subject, will exercise its own judgment, uncontrolled by the decisions of the courts of the several states" (U. S. Sup. Ct. 1893), in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. ed. 97. To the same effect, Newport News & M. V. R. Co. v. Howe (1892), 52 Fed. Rep. 322, per Brown, Justice, Jackson and Taft, JJ.

It seems, however, that where a state court is called upon to deal with this subject in a case arising in another state, the general law of the latter will be applied. Hovis v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (Ga.) Oct. 17, 1892; Alexander v. Pennsylvania Co. (1891), 48 Ohio St. 623; Alabama & G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll (Ala.) 1892, 18 L. R. A. 433.

Where the employé is not a free agent the rule of exemption of the master from liability for the carelessness of his co-employés does not apply; so held where the employé was a slave. Scudder v. Woodbridge (1848), 1 Ga. 195.

In Anderson v. The Ashebrooke (1890), 44 Fed. Rep. 124, it is said by Judge Pardee that in admiralty the negligence of co-employés is no bar to a recovery where defendant is also guilty of actionable fault; but where both parties are negligent, the personal damages ensuing will be apportioned.

Though workmen may be engaged in the same general business, and at work upon the same premises, they are not fellow servants if employed by different masters, even though one of the latter may be acting as agent for the other. This was ruled by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, in a case where a brakeman on cars of a coal company was injured by the negligence 18 L. R. A.

of an engineer in suddenly starting a train of coal cars without notice to the brakeman, engaged at the time in coupling; the engineer was in the service of a railway company which was employed by the coal company for the delivery of its coal. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Stoermer (1892), 51 Fed. Rep. 518.

The same principle is applied to servants of different independent contractors at work upon the same general "job," but under separate directions. Johnson v. Lindsay, L. R. (1891), App. Cas. 571; Williams and Denniston, JJ., in Nystrom v. Cameron, 9 New Zeal. L. R. 413. Compare Spisak v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Pa.) Nov. 1, 1892.

So where certain sewer contractors sublet the brick work for the sewer, a bricklayer, employed by the sub-contractors was allowed to recover for injuries caused by negligence of employés of the chief contractors in excavating the trench for the sewer. Johnston v. Ott (Pa.) Jan. 3, 1893.

And where two companies were in joint use of certain tracks, a repairman of one company, injured in consequence of insufficient operating rules was held not a fellow servant with train men of the other company working upon the common premises. Vose v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. (1858), 27 L. J. Exch. 243, 2 Hurlst. & N. 723.

Even where the two servants were working together at the time, the same principle was applied in Sanford v. Standard Oil Co. (1890), 118 N. Y. 571, and in Johnson v. Netherlands A. Steam Nav. Co. (1892), 132 N. Y. 576 (Follett, Parker and Landon, dissenting). Feeney v. Minisicongo Tow Co. (1892), 50 N. Y. S. R. 222.

What constitutes "common employment."

L

In the following cases certain employés have been held not fellow servants:

A common laborer about a lumber yard, injured described. He was also required to assist in turning the table to get the cars into proper position.

Defendant's line approaches the crusher from the east for some 2,000 feet, on an ascending grade of about 48 feet to the mile. A short distance (variously stated at from 100 to 400 feet) east of the crusher a "forty minute" curve begins, and extends thence eastward about 1,900 feet, bearing towards the south. While plaintiff's husband had been there at work, about a dozen trains passed daily, including two regular passenger trains each morning, one about 8 o'clock and the other about 80 minutes later.

A rule of the company required a signal by sounding the whistle to be given at all obscure curves. An obscure curve is one in which a train at one end cannot be seen from the other end of the curve. It is conceded that the curve in question was an obscure one, and that it was usual for locomotive engines to whistle before reaching the quarry.

On the morning of December 20, 1886, about 8 o'clock, one of defendant's passenger trains from the east, within 2 or 8 minutes of its regular time, running at the rate of twenty-five or twenty-eight miles an hour, approached the crusher. Plaintiff's evidence strongly tends to prove that no whistle was sounded from it.

When the train reached the "strap track" by falling into an uncovered ditch, which had been excavated by other employes under direction of the superintendent, the court saying, "The relationship of fellow servants did not exist between the plaintiff, who was employed in handling lumber, and McGregor and his men, who were engaged in a distinct labor affecting the safety of the yard as a place to work in." Sadowski v. Michigan Car Co. (1890), 84 Mich. 100.

A transfer agent of a railway company and the operatives of a train on which he was riding. Mefford v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) Oct. 1, 1892.

Car inspector and a section hand, riding on a hand-car and hurt by a runaway freight car. Cowan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1891), 80 Wis. 284.

Brakeman and the conductor and engineer of the same train whose management thereof, in disregard of the train dispatcher's orders, caused the injury. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh (1892), 51 Fed. Rep. 517 (Caldwell, Sanborn, and Shiras, JJ.).

Car inspector and brakeman, injured by reason of a defective car wheel. Daniels v. Union Pac. R. Co. (1890), 6 Utah, 387.

A fireman belonging to the fire department, and the city's agents, having control of the department of street repairs, where the former was injured while on duty by reason of defects in the highway. Coots v. Detroit (1889), 75 Mich. 628.

The conductor of a freight train and the section men charged with the duty to clear away accumulated snow from the track (Fisher v. Oregon S. L. & N. R. Co. (1892), 16 L. R. A. 519, 22 Or. 539); but where, instead of snow, there was coal or coke upon the track, and it was the duty of the section men to remove it, and by neglect of that duty a yard switchman was injured, the court held those employes fellow servants. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Mealer (1892), 50 Fed. Rep. 725, 6 U. S. App. 86.

But precisely the contrary was held in Texas (before the Act of 1891), where a switchman was injured by stepping from an engine upon a pile of cinders, 13 L. R. A.

crossing it struck and killed Dixon, who was working there. Both wheels of the engine passed over the cable at that place.

There was proof of plaintiff's relationship to the deceased, and of all other formal matters; but the trial court declared the law to be that, on the facts above outlined, plaintiff could not recover "because the said engineer and Dixon were fellow servants." Accordingly the jury returned a verdict for defendant. After saving exceptions, and taking the usual steps for a review, plaintiff appealed.

All other necessary facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Graves & Aull, for appellant:

It is a settled fact that Dixon and the engineer were not fellow servants.

Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 97 Mo. 118, which decides that a track walker on a railroad is not a fellow servant with a locomotive engineer or fireman of a passenger train; Sobieski v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 41 Minn. 169; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 222, 25 L. ed. 616; Marshall v. Schricker, 68 Mo. 812; Hall v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 74 Mo. 293; Proctor v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 64 Mo. 112; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787.

The following authorities show who are fellow servants:

left near the track by negligence of the yard men, the court holding that these men were not fellow servants. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Bond (Tex. Civ. App.), Jan. 3, 1893.

Brakeman and employes who loaded a flat car with iron rails so that the latter projected over the end of the car, in consequence of which the brakeman was hurt. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Galvin (1892), 16 L. R. A. 387, 29 Fla. 636.

Railroad hand and bridge builders, where a defective bridge caused the injury. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Daniels (Tex. Civ. App.) Dec. 14, 1892.

A track repairer and employes in a steel mill, who placed a large iron mould, filled with steel, in an insecure position, from which it fell upon the plaintiff. Joliet Steel Co. v. Shields (1890), 134 Ill. 209.

It was held in Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Middleton (Ill. Sup.) Nov. 2, 1892, that whether an "hostler's assistant" (or "wiper"), employed about a roundhouse, whose duty was also to assist in making up trains in the depot yards, and the operatives of a freight train on the main line, were fellow servants, was a question of fact; and where the jury had found that they were not that finding was affirmed.

Car repairer belonging to the working force of the repair shop is not a fellow servant of a switchman, who, under orders of the yard master, directs the movement of cars in a railway yard. Pool v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1891), 7 Utah, 306 (Blackburn, J., dissenting).

Nor are—a yard switchman and locomotive engineer. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sheets (1890), (Ky.) 11 Ky. L. Rep. 751.

A car repairer and the employes who kept the tools in order for use by the former, although another car repairer selected the particular tool, which caused the injury, from a number of tools designed for the repair service. Williams v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892), 49 N. Y. S. R. 568.

Postal clerk in United States mail service, injured by negligence of train operatives of a railroad, carrying the mail under contract with the govern-

Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fort, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 789; Re Peeriess, 1 Q. B. 149; Lavler v. Androsceggin R. Co. 63 Me. 463, 16 Am. Rep. 492; Columbus & I. C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 81 Ind. 174; 23 Cent. L. J. 816, and cases cited; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Hoyt, 123 Ill. 369; North Chicago Roll. Mill Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ill. 57; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hawk, 10 West. Rep. 137, 121 Ill. 259; Krueger v. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. 9 West. Rep. 347, 111 Ind. 51; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. DeArmo, 86 Tenn. 78, 6 Am. St. Rep. 816, and cases cited; Van Winkle v. Manhattan R. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 278, and note; Palmer v. Utah & N. R. Co. (Idaho) Feb. 23, 1887; Slater v. Chapman, 12 West. Rep. 60, 87 Mich. 523; Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 11 West. Rep. 458, 93 Mo. 79; Reddon v. Union Pac. R. Co. 5 Utah, 344; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 648, 29 L. ed. 758; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 1 Wash. 599; Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Ackley, 87 Ky. 278, and cases cited; O'Hare v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 95 Mo. 662; Murray v. St. Louis, C. & W. R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 735, 98 Mo. 573; Ridings v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 38 Mo. App. 537; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 27 Neb. 673, and cases cited; Daniels v. Union Pac. R. Co. 6 Utah, 357; Ragsdale v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 338; Pike v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 95; Howard v. Delaware &

H. Canal Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 195; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sheets, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 781.

The court clearly erred in refusing to permit the jury to pass upon the question of fact as to the contributory negligence of Dixon.

Buesching v. St. Louis Gas Light Co. 78 Mo. 219, 39 Am. Rep. 503; Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 78 Mo. 195, 47 Am. Rep. 99; Fink v. Missouri Furnace Co. 82 Mo. 276, 52 Am. Rep. 876; Petty v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 297, 88 Mo. 306; O'Hare v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 95 Mo. 662; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 96 Mo. 213; Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 98 Mo. 62; Tetherow v. St. Joseph & D. M. R. Co. 98 Mo. 74; King v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 98 Mo. 235; Murray v. St. Louis, C. & W. R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 735, 98 Mo. 573.

As to the responsibility of the defendant for the failure of Hill to discharge his duty in sounding the whistle whereby Dixon came to his death,—

See Gormly v. Vulcan Iron Works, 61 Mo. 492; Whalen v. Centenary Church, 62 Mo. 826; Cook v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 68 Mo. 397; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 221; Orans v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 87 Mo. 588; Stoddard v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 514; Bromley v. Smith B. & R. Mach. Co. 12 Mo. App. 594; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 1 Wash. 599.

The evidence shows that Dixon must have seen. Mellor v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1891), 10 L. R. A. 36, 105 Mo. 455; Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ketcham (Ind. Sup.) Jan. 26, 1893.

Laborer in rolling-mill, unloading bricks from a car, and the yard master in charge of a train which negligently backed along the same track and hit the car. North Chicago Roll. Mill Co. v. Johnson (1885), 114 Ill. 57.

Car inspector and brakeman. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Keenan (1890), 9 L. R. A. 708, 78 Tex. 264, followed in St. Louis A. & T. R. Co. v. Putnam (Tex. App.) Oct. 25, 1892.

Workman, pushing ice into an ice house, and employes who constructed the slide along which the ice was moved. Fink v. Des Moines Ice Co. (Iowa) Jan. 26, 1892.

Brakeman and track-walker or inspector. Bean v. Western North Carolina R. Co. (1890), 107 N. C. 731.

All servants employed "to provide and to keep in repair the place, or to supply the machinery and tools, for labor, are engaged in a different employment from those who are to use the place or appliances when provided, and they are not, therefore, as to each other, fellow servants." So held where a mechanic employed about a "band-saw" in a mill was injured by negligence of the mill foreman in omitting to keep the machinery in reasonably safe condition. Roux v. Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. (Mich.) Feb. 17, 1893.

In O'Neill v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1881), 50 Fed. Rep. 180, it was assumed by Judge McCrary, without discussion, that a carpenter at work in repairing a car could sustain an action based on the negligence of a fireman of a locomotive engine that collided with the car being repaired.

In Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Pannill (1893), 17 Va. L. J. 99, a brakeman while uncoupling cars, lost his arm on account of a negligent movement of the locomotive of the same train; he was denied a recovery because of his own negligence, the question of fellow service not being alluded to.

Where a stableman was put in charge of a stationary engine, and a laborer, engaged in unloading a barge was injured by a wrong movement of 18 L. R. A.

the engine, it was held that the rule of exemption of the master did not apply. Moylan v. Davids (1892), 40 N. Y. S. R. 327.

2.

The following are instances of holdings that the employes were fellow servants:

Engineer of passenger train and switchman by whose negligence a switch was out of place and the locomotive derailed. Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1891), 20 Or. 285.

Car inspector and a brakeman under direction of a railroad yard master, in the New York yard. Potter v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 48 N. Y. S. R. 843.

Engineer of switch engine an car numberer (i. e., a man to take and record numbers, etc., of cars in depot yards). Beuhring v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) Dec. 22, 1892.

A section laborer while riding on a hand-car, injured by negligence of the "boss" of another section, operating another hand-car on the same track. Clarke v. Pennsylvania Co. (Ind. Sup.) Sept. 15, 1892.

Brakeman on coal train and other employes of the train in respect of discovering the dangerous condition of a bolt. Mensch v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1892), 150 Pa. 596.

Car repairer and train operatives, who moved other cars against the one he was repairing. Latreuille v. Bennington & R. R. Co. (1891), 63 Vt. 336.

Blacksmith injured by fragment of sledge hammer defective from long use in hands of another servant working on the same job. Rawley v. Colliou (1892), 90 Mich. 81.

Brakeman on logging-train and locomotive engineer of same train. McLaren v. Williston (1892), 43 Minn. 299. In this case it was not claimed that it was governed by the Minnesota Act of 1887 (Laws 1887, chap. 13) "to define the liabilities of railroad companies in relation to damages sustained by their employes."

Conductor of freight train and a section foreman.

relied upon the sounding of the whistle to notify him of the approach of the train. The railroad company therefore owed this duty to Dixon, and no negligence of a fellow servant would exempt the defendant from liability.

Hulehan v. Green Bay, W. & St. P. R. Co. 58 Wis. 319, and cases cited.

Employees are not fellow servants if engaged in distinct and independent departments of service.

Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 312; Vautrain v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 8 Mo. App. 538; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 93 Ill. 302, 84 Am. Rep. 168; Ryan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 60 Ill. 171, 14 Am. Rep. 82.

Meara, James G. Trimble, George Robertson (and, at the first hearing, George B. Macfarlane) for respondent:

If the deceased husband was a fellow servant with the engineer, then the exemption of defendant from liability to the plaintiff follows. All who are directly engaged in accomplishing the ultimate purpose in view, that is, the running of the road, must be regarded as engaged in the same general business within the meaning of the rule.

Hard v. Vermont & C. R. Co. 32 Vt. 478.

Neither is it necessary in order to bring a case within the general rule of exemption that the servants, the one that suffers and the one that causes the injury, should be at the time engaged in the same operation or particular work.

Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562.

The true rule for determining who are fellow servants is to be determined by the character of the act being performed by the offending servant. If it is an act that the law implies a contract duty upon the part of the employer to perform, then the offending employé is not a servant but an agent; but as to all other acts they are fellow servants.

7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 384.

The implied contract on the part of the master is that he will furnish proper and adequate machinery and appliances and will employ skillful and competent fellow servants.

Laning v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

The following have been held fellow servants:

Engineer and shoveler on gravel train.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 366, 74 Am. Dec. 259.

Engineer and section hand.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Rider, 63 Tex. 267.

Engineer and roadmaster.

Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 128 Mass. 8.

Engineer and laborers on gravel train.

Ryan v. Cumberland Valley R. Co. 23 Pa. 384.

injured by negligence of the former, in effecting a "flying switch." Elliott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1899), 5 Dak. 523, 38 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 62, with note.

Foreman of a bridge gang (while asleep in a car provided by his employer), and the operatives of a freight train which collided with the sleeping car; though these servants were in different departments of service. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Weloh (1888), 72 Tex. 293, and 38 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 61, with note.

Section laborer, handing poles upon an open car, and the engineer and fireman of locomotive backing against the car; all of these employes being, at the time, under directions of an assistant roadmaster, present. Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (1890), 7 L. R. A. 623, 79 Mich. 409.

Miner and blacksmith employed to sharpen tools for the miners, both at work in same mine operated by the mine owner. Snyder v. Viola Min. & Smelt. Co. (Idaho), Feb. Term, 1891.

Superintendent of an iron furnace, and locomotive engineer of a train hauling coal, etc., to be used at the furnace. Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co. (1889), 73 Mich. 271, 41 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 414, with note.

Worker at cutting machine in a factory and engineer, who negligently set the machinery in motion while former was oiling a cutter. Henshaw v. Pond's Extract Co. (1892), 50 N. Y. S. R. 293.

Two laborers engaged in removing slag pots from smelting furnace. Dunmead v. American Min. & Smelt. Co. (1892), 12 Fed. Rep. 847.

Two workers about a spinning machine. Sullivan v. Wamsutta Mills (Mass.) Jan. 6, 1892.

Laborers engaged in taking down a condenser by order of a foreman. Kiegl v. Weisel & V. Mfg. Co. (Wis.) Jun. 10, 1893.

Two laborers engaged with others in lifting a weight by means of a crane, one of whom was injured by negligence of the other in permitting the crane to slip from slow to fast gear. Barlow v. Standard Steel & Cast. Co. (1893) Pa.

Where a scaffold was constructed by the men who were to use it, one of whom was hurt because of negligent construction of it, but not because of defective material supplied, the court held all the employes who put it up and worked upon it fellow servants. Marsh v. Herman (1891), 47 Minn. 587.

A lumber piler and employes moving timber along rollers from a sawmill. Weeklund v. Southern Oregon Co. (1891), 20 Or. 591.

A longshoreman loading iron upon skids in the hold of a vessel discharging cargo, hurt by negligence of the guy-tender or of the engineer, both of whom were held his fellow servants. Miles v. The Servia (1891), 44 Fed. Rep. 943.

Ship carpenter and other members of boat crew. Baron v. Detroit & C. S. Nav. Co. (1892), 91 Mich. 555.

A group of workmen ("lumpers"), who erected a staging around a vessel in a dry dock to be used by another group ("caulkers"), are fellow servants with the latter, one of whom was injured by the breaking of a defective plank in the staging. Butler v. Townsend (1891), 126 N. Y. 105 (Ruger, Andrews, and O'Brien, dissenting).

Where a longshoreman was injured by reason of defective construction of a staging, erected by his collaborators for their own convenience, the court held they were all fellow servants. Hogan v. Henderson (N. Y.) Feb. 24, 1891.

A lumber measurer, engaged in assorting and scaling lumber, and other workmen employed in piling lumber, both "acting together under the same general control." Fraser v. Red River Lumber Co. (1891), 45 Minn. 235.

A man on duty at a hatchway to give warning of falling cotton bales while the latter were being loaded between decks of a ship, and a laborer in the hold engaged in stowing the bales away, where the latter was injured by failure to give the required warning. Ocean S. S. Co. v. Cheeney (1890), 86 Ga. 273. In Smith v. Baker, L. R. (1891), App. Cas. 825, a majority of the house of lords held that the absence of some person to give warning of the slinging of heavy stones over the head of plaintiff, who was a quarry laborer, was evidence of a defective system of conducting the business and Engineer and telegraph operator.

Stater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 637.

Engineer and switch tender.

Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 839; Slattery v. Morgan, 85 La. Ann. 1166.

Engineer and track repairer.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn, 78 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 184.

Engineer and station agent.

Brown v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 81 Minn. 553.

Engineer and brakeman working ground switch.

Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008, 15 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 243.

Engineer and employé in tunnel.

Capper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 1 West. Rep. 287, 103 Ind. 805, 21 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 525.

The following cases of this state are in harmony with the foregoing cases:

McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. 30 Mo. 115; Rohbach v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 192; Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 47 Mo. 576, 4 Am. Rep. 353; McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 61 Mo. 532; Williams Bros. v. Cartter, 53 Mo. 375, 14 Am. Rep. 424; Evans v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 52; Connor v. Chicago, R.

might form the basis for a recovery where injury resulted therefrom.

Servants not on duty.

Where a day laborer on a railroad has been out of service one day and is killed that night by negligence, he is not to be considered as a fellow servant with the employes in charge of a train on the same railroad. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Conley (Ky.) Dec. 17, 1892.

Some earlier cases are also to the effect that when the servant is entirely off duty, he is not to be regarded as a fellow of employes on duty at the time, irrespective of any question of departments of service. Baird v. Pettit (1872), 70 Pa. 477; State v. Western Maryland R. R. Co. (1886), 63 Md. 433; Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. Co. (1859), 3 Head, 688. But in Texas (before the Fellow Servant Act of 1891), a carpenter belonging to a building gang sitting in a car writing a letter after his day's work was done, was hurt by a collision with a switch engine by reason of negligence of the employé in charge, and was denied a recovery on the ground of the fellow service of the two men. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ryan (1891), 82 Tex. 565; and to same general effect, are Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co. (1899), 78 Mich. 271; and St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Welsh (1893), 72 Tex. 298; and in McGregor v. Auld (Wis.) Dec. 6, 1892, it was held that employes going to and from work are in service within the rule of exemption.

Legislation.

The law on this topic has undergone much change by statutes in recent years.

Some of these statutes, and a few cases under them will be noted:

England: Employer's Liability Act (1890), 43 & 44 Vict. chap. 42.

Under this Act it is held that the superior servant whose negligence will entitle an injured employé, under his orders, to recover, must be one whose sole or principal duty is superintendence, and not one ordinarily engaged in manual labor. Kellard v. Rooke (1888), L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 387.

18 L. R. A.

I. & P. R. Co. 59 Mo. 299; Blesing v. St. Louis, K. O. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 410; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Murray v. St. Louis, O. & W. R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 785, 98 Mo. 573; Higgins v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 104 Mo. 413.

It was the duty of the husband of plaintiff to keep the cable off the track. He had left it there and observing the approaching train undertook to remove it, and while so engaged was struck.

His effort to lift the cable from the track was done in the face of seen danger and was the immediate and proximate cause of his death.

Yancey v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 13 West. Rep. 250, 98 Mo. 483; Fletcher v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 64 Mo. 484.

If the undisputed facts show that notwithstanding the defendant's negligence the plaintiff would not have sustained the injuries complained of but for his own negligence directly tending to produce them, it is the duty of the court to direct the jury to find for the defendant.

Powell v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 76 Mo. 80; Leniz v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 76 Mo. 86; Taylor v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 86 Mo. 457; Cagney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 69 Mo. 416.

When the evidence fails to connect the neg-

Alabama: Acts, 1885, p. 115; same as §§ 2590-2592, Code of 1886, resembles the English Act. See Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones (1890), 92 Ala. 218; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hawkins (1890), 92 Ala. 241; Birmingham M. R. Co. v. Wilmer (Ala.) Nov. 23, 1892; Mary Lee C. & R. Co. v. Chambliss (1892), Ala. In Alabama & G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll, (Ala.) 1892, 18 L. R. A. 433, it was held that this legislation had no extraterritorial force to reach the case of a citizen of Alabama injured in Mississippi, though the contract of employment was made in Alabama between him and an Alabama company.

Arkansas: The substance of the Act of Feb. 28, 1893, is that those are not fellow servants who are in different departments of service of a railway corporation, or those who have superintendence or control, as to persons under their command, in employ of such corporations; and that "no contract made between the employer and employé based upon the contingency of the injury or death of the employé, limiting the liability of the employer under this Act or fixing damages to be recovered, shall be valid and binding."

California: Under the Civil Code, § 1607, the rule of exemption of the master applies where the co-employes are in the "same general business," where proper care is used in their selection. A miner and an engineer running the hoisting apparatus of the mine are held fellow servants thereunder. Tre-watha v. Buchanan G. Min. & Mill Co. (Cal.) Dec. 16, 1891, and so also were a brakeman and the conductor of the same train. Congrave v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1891), 88 Cal. 360.

The language of the California Code is the same as that used in Lanier v. New York Cent. R. Co. (1872), 49 N. Y. 528, 10 Am. Rep. 417, in expressing the general American common-law rule on this point.

Florida: Laws 1887, p. 117, chap. 3744, § 2, abolishes the exemption of the master, because of fellow service, entirely so far as it concerns railroads.

Georgia: The exemption of the master from liability by reason of the doctrine of fellow service does not apply in Georgia to railroad companies (Acts 1855-56, p. 155; Ga. Code 1882, § 3096; Duulap ligence with the accident, the court should direct a verdict for the defendant.

Holman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 562; Thompson, Trials, § 1678.

When it appears from the plaintiff's case alone that he is guilty of contributory negligence, the court should direct a nonsuit.

Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 48 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558; Beusching v. St. Louis Gas Light Co. 78 Mo. 219, 39 Am. Rep. 503; Stephens v. Macon, 83 Mo. 355; Milburn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. Co. 86 Mo. 109; Thompson, Trials, § 1680.

The deceased assumed the risk of being injured by a train while keeping the cable out of the way of passing trains.

Smith, Neg., Whittaker's ed. p. 127, note m, p. 133; Wood, Mast. & S. 678; Price v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 77 Mo. 503; Aldridge v.

Midland Blast Furnace Co. 73 Mo. 559; Kegan v. Kavanaugh, 62 Mo. 232.

Barclay, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, as the widow of the deceased Mr. Dixon, sues under the Damage Act, (now chapter 49, Rev. Stat. 1889,) claiming the statutory recovery for his death, caused, as is charged, by negligence in the operation of one of defendant's passenger trains. The deceased was a quarry laborer, under orders of a foreman who had entire control of the quarry, represented the defendant there, hired, discharged, and directed the men, and had no connection with the train service, so far as appears, in any way.

The first decisive question is whether deceased and the passenger train men are to be

v. Northeastern R. Co. (1889), 180 U. S. 649, 32 L. ed. 1058; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Brown (1890), 85 Ga. 320; but the statute abolishing the master's exemption applies to all servants of a railway company whether the injury befalling one of them is or is not connected with the running of trains. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miller (1892), Ga.

Iowa: Acts 1862, chap. 169; Code 1880, § 1807, abolishes the master's exemption as to every corporation operating a railway where the injury is "in any manner connected with the use and operation of" the railway. Under this statute it is held that a workman, engaged in a railroad yard to remove ashes, etc., from locomotives and to supply them with water, is "connected with the operation of a railway" within the purview of the section above quoted, abolishing the rule of exemption as to servants so engaged. Butler v. Chicago, R. & Q. R. Co. (1893), Iowa.

Kansas: Since 1874 railroad companies doing business in the state are by statute liable for injuries to employes from negligence of co-employes (Laws 1874, chap. 93, § 1; Gen. Stat. 1889, § 1251). Compare Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Peavey (1886), 34 Kan. 472; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Dwyer (1896), 36 Kan. 53.

Kentucky: The rule of exemption of the master does not apply where one servant is killed by the "willful neglect" of other servants: but a right of action exists in such case for punitive damages in favor of his surviving spouse or children. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Coniff (1890), 90 Ky. 560; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Adams (1890), 11 Ky. L. Rep. 833; McLeod v. Ginther (1892), 80 Ky. 399; Jordan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (1899), 89 Ky. 40.

Massachusetts: Laws 1887, chap. 270, resembles the English statute, and has taken away the defense that the injury was caused by the act of a fellow servant of plaintiff, in the cases mentioned in it. O'Malley v. South Boston Gas Light Co. (1893), Mass.; Dacey v. Old Colony R. Co. (1891), 153 Mass. 112. But where an action is not brought under the Employer's Liability Act, but is at common law, the ordinary rules as to the negligence of fellow servants apply. Dodge v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1892), Mass.

In Fitzgerald v. Boston & A. R. Co. (Mass.) May 9, 1892, men stowing away bales of hay were held fellow servants, and the fact that the superintendent directed the laborer, who was injured, to work in the group was held to constitute no negligence under the Employer's Liability Act.

In Trask v. Old Colony R. Co. (Mass.) May 9, 1892, the master was held not liable under that Act, for defects in the "ways, works," etc., "used in the business" where its employe was hurt by a defective track of another railway company whose tracks it occasionally used in the prosecution of its business.

Minnesota: The exemption of the master from liability for negligence between co-employes is abolished by statute as to railroad corporations, operating finished roads; but not "while engaged in the construction of a new road or any part thereof, not open to public travel or use" (Minn. Gen. Laws, 1887, chap. 13, p. 69). Schneider v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. (1889), 42 Minn. 68; Moran v. Eastern R. Co. (1892), 43 Minn. 46. Some cases where the new statute has been applied: Steffenson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1892), 43 Minn. 235, where a section hand was pushed from a hand-car which was overcrowded. Lorimer v. St. Paul C. R. Co. (1892), 43 Minn. 391, where the statute was held not to change the burden of proof.

Mississippi: Code 1880, p. 806, § 1054, and Constitution 1890, § 198. The latter provision establishes what may be generally described as the "department" rule. But it does not apply to cases which arose before its adoption, though brought after. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cathy (1893), Miss.

Montana: "That in every case the liability of the corporation to a servant or employe acting under the orders of his superior shall be the same, in case of injury sustained by default or wrongful act of his superior, or to an employe not appointed or controlled by him, as if such servant or employe were a passenger." Rev. Stat. 1879, p. 471, § 313, Railroad Corporations.

Texas: Gen. Laws 1891, chap. 24, p. 25. The substance of the Act is that employes of railway corporations are not fellow servants where one is placed under command of the other, or where they are "engaged in any other department" of service of such corporation.

Wisconsin: "Every railroad corporation, doing business in this state, shall be liable for damages sustained by any employe thereof within this state without contributory negligence on his part, when such damage is caused by the negligence of any train dispatcher, telegraph operator, superintendent, yard master, conductor, or engineer, or of any other employe who has charge or control of any stationary signal, target point, block or switch." (Laws 1889, chap. 433, p. 613.)

A case under the statute where a brakeman was injured by negligence of an engineer. Baltzer v. Chicago, M. & N. R. Co. (Wis.) Nov. 15, 1892.

Wyoming: "Any person in the employ of" any railroad company, "who may be injured by any locomotive, car," etc., "shall have his action for damages against said company the same as if he were not in the employ of said company and no agreement to the contrary shall be admitted as testimony in behalf of said company." (Comp. Laws 1876, chap. 87, p. 512.)

regarded as fellow servants, within the meaning of the rule exempting the master from liability for injuries negligently inflicted upon one employé by another in a common employment. This rule has long been acknowledged as part of the general common law, but efforts to apply it in particular cases have led to expressions of wholly irreconcilable views among eminent jurists. These differences seem to spring from the difficulty experienced in assigning the reasons for the rule itself to serve as solid premises in applying it. "Public policy" (McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. [1860,] 80 Mo. 116), "implied contract" (Hutchinson v. York, N. & B. R. Co. [1850,] 5 Exch. 348; Lovell v. Howell, [1876,] 1 O. P. Div. 161), "general convenience" and "expediency" (Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. [1842,] 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339), have been severally mentioned and enlarged upon by learned judges as grounds on which it should stand; but, whatever strength those grounds may have, a stronger reason for its existence to-day is stare decisis, itself, however, a maxim of cogent force in determining judicial action in countries tracing their systems of law to the English source.

The doctrine of exemption is of comparatively recent origin. Its history has been frequently written, and is too familiar to the legal profession to justify repetition here. It sprang into life suddenly, with remarkable vitality and power, and, as originally formulated, was supposed to control many states of facts to which it would not now be applied anywhere. It was at first thought to exempt the master from liability for injury to one servant by reason of the neglect of another to furnish or maintain a reasonably safe plant and machinery for the master's work, of whose defects the injured servant was ignorant (Waller v. South Eastern R. Co. [1863,] 2 Hurlst. & C. 102; McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. [1860,] 80 Mo. 116); but such an application of it is now universally discarded, either because of statutory declarations on the subject, (for example, the "Gladstone Bill," in England, 43 & 44 Vict. [1880,] chap. 42, § 1; Mass. Act, [1887,] chap. 270, etc.), or of decisions by the courts without the aid of legislation, (Lewis v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. [1875,] 59 Mo. 495, 21 Am. Rep. 385; King v. Ohio etc. R. Co. [1882,] 14 Fed. Rep. 277; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, [1886,] 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755).

Again, the scope of the rule was long supposed to relieve the master of responsibility for negligence of a servant under whose direction another was working and by whose neglect the latter was injured, though the negligence of the former may have involved the exercise of the supervising control delegated to the superior servant. [Albro v. Agawan Canal Co. (1850,) 6 Cush. 75, and Hovells v. Landore Steel Co., (1874,) 82 L. T. N. S. 19, will illustrate that line of decisions sufficiently.] And, although that view is still approved in some quarters, the weight of authority at this time in this country is to the contrary. Pantzar v. Tilly Foster L. Min. Co. (1885,) 99 N. Y. 868; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowler, (1872,) 9 Heisk. 866; Darrigan 18 L. R. A.

v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1884,) 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, (1884,) 112 U. S. 877, 28 L. ed. 787; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (1885,) 85 Mo. 588.

But the demands of the case at bar do not make it necessary to enter upon any general discussion of the changes that have taken place in the law on this topic since it began to engage the attention of the courts. Suffice it, for the present, to say that maturer consideration by the judiciary, and the emphatic commands of legislation in some localities, have greatly modified the rigor and narrowed the rule of exemption as originally put forth. [Besides the statutes already mentioned, note Alabama Acts, 1885, p. 115, also Code 1886, § 2590; Florida Laws, 1887, chap. 3741, 3744; Georgia Acts, 1885, p. 115, also Code 1873, § 3036; Iowa Laws, 1882, chap. 169, also Code 1880, § 1307; Kansas Laws, 1874, chap. 98; Minnesota Laws, 1887, chap. 13; Mississippi Code 1880, p. 309, § 1054, and Const. 1890, § 193; Montana Rev. Stat., 1879, p. 471, § 818; Texas Laws, 1891, chap. 24; Wisconsin Acts, 1889, chap. 438; Wyoming Laws, 1876, chap. 97, § 1.] These modifications no doubt conform to more humane conceptions, now prevailing, of the demands of justice with regard to the existing relations of master and servant.

To-day some enterprises reach across a continent. Often they extend beyond the limits of a single state. Many contemplate the performance of several kinds of business, requiring the employment of thousands, and the organization of several departments of service, separate in their operations, but tending to the general advantage of the common employer. To what extent employes in different lines or departments of business followed or established by such a master are coservants is a question constantly recurring, and one of its phases is presented by this case.

The circuit court held that the deceased and the train men were fellow servants. In reviewing that ruling we will not essay to establish any definition of fellow service to enlighten (or increase) the difficulties of this branch of the law, but shall merely deal with the facts before us as shortly as possible.

We think it clear that where a common employer carries on two enterprises, as variant in character as those here considered, each under a separate superintendence, the employes at work in each cannot justly be regarded as fellow servants of the employes in the other, within the meaning of the rule of exemption. In the case in hand the master had seen fit to place the deceased quarryman and the train men under supervision and management totally apart from each other. They were not "acting under the same immediate direction." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, (1887,) 127 U. S. 208, 32 L. ed. 108. Each looked to a different individual as the master's representative for directions in his work, and had no practical connection with the superior who guided and supervised the acts and conduct of the other.

If Dixon, instead of being killed, had merely noticed repeated acts of negligence by the train men in omitting to signal its approach, what could he have done to correct such course of conduct, and insure his own safety? Complain to his foreman? The foreman directing his work had no power to discharge or to control the train men referred to.

The theory that a servant entering employment may fairly be considered to assume the risks (among others) of possible injury from the negligence of his fellow workmen (now most frequently mentioned as the ground work of the exemption) can have no just or logical application where the supposed fellow servants are so widely severed by the division of the employer's business that neither can have a ready appeal to any common superior, having power to require (and, if need be, to enforce) correct and careful conduct on the part of the other. Such an appeal furnishes to the servant the means to avert, or at least to diminish, the dangers arising from incompetency or carelessness on the part of his fellows. But when that appeal is impossible, by reason of the total severance of their fields of labor and of the control to which they severally are subject, we apprehend there is little left of recognizable principle upon which servants so situated can be supposed to have mutually assumed the risks of each other's negligence.

Workmen so distantly related to each other in the master's service as the quarrymen and the train operatives here are scarcely more nearly allied, for all practical purposes of mutual observation, vigilance, and protection, than are the servants of different independent contractors, engaged in separate branches of labor upon a common enterprise, (though we do not mean to imply that the legal relations between them are identical.) Employés of the latter class are universally held not fellow servants within the rule under discussion. Abraham v. Reynolds, (1860,) 5 Hurlst. & N. 143; Turner v. Great Eastern R. Co. (1875,) 88 L. T. N. S. 431; Johnson v. Lindsay, [1891,] L. R. App. Cas. 371; Seenson v. Atlantic Mail S. S. Co. (1874,) 57 N. Y. 108; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Conroy, (1886,) 63 Miss. 562, 56 Am. Rep. 835.

Quarrying and operating passenger trains upon a railway are essentially different sorts of work. The risks incident to each are unlike those encountered in the other. Nor were the operatives in these departments thrown into any sort of habitual business association under a common superior. Each line of service appears to have been conducted as independently, in every respect, as though controlled by a stranger to the other, with this exception: the servants in each employment drew compensation from the same source. But we do not regard that fact (standing alone) as furnishing the touchstone of fellow service.

Without going further, however, into the general subject, or attempting to express an opinion on any other facts than those here in judgment, we believe the considerations above suggested (in the light of recent decisions in this state and elsewhere) lead directly to the conclusion that the trial court was in error in ruling as a matter of law that deceased was a fellow servant with the engineer of the train that struck him.

In the following cases the rule of exemption from liability, because of the relation of fellow service, was held inapplicable: Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1889,) 97 Mo. 113, where a track walker was killed by negligence of train operatives.

In Connolly v. Davidson, (1870,) 15 Minn. 519, (Gil. 428,) 2 Am. Rep. 154, a deck hand on a steamboat was hurt by an explosion, caused by the negligent management of the boiler of another boat, the boat owners being partners.

Nashville & O. R. Co. v. Carroll, (1871,) 6 Helsk. 347, presents the case of an injury to a track man by the negligence of train men.

In Baird v. Pettit, (1872,) 70 Pa. 477, a draughtsman in an establishment for the manufacture of locomotives sustained injuries by falling into an unguarded excavation made on the premises by carpenters in defendant's employ.

In Pool v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., (1881) 53 Wis. 657, a detective, while riding on a hand-car, was injured by negligence of the servants operating the car.

Garraty v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., (1885,) 25 Fed. Rep. 258, arose in Kansas City, Mo., as the record therein shows, (though the printed report does not,) and was decided by the late Mr. Justice Miller. The plaintiff, a common laborer, one of a gang distributing rails along the track, was hurt by the negligence of the operatives of a switch engine, used in the railway yard where plaintiff was working, and a recovery by plaintiff was sustained. Hobson v. New Mexico & A. R. Co., (1886, Ariz.) 11 Pac. Rep. 545, was the case of a teamster, hired to haul ties, who was injured by the negligence of an engine driver of a train.

In Northern Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, (1889,) 1 Wash. 599, a track laborer, while being carried on a gravel train to his place for work, was injured by a collision with another train, resulting from the neglect of the operatives of the latter to "flag" the former as ordered.

In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, (1889,) 127 Ill. 637, a section hand had sustained damage from the negligent action of employés upon a construction train.

In Howard v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., (1889,) 40 Fed. Rep. 195, which arose in Vermont, a track man on a hand-car was killed by the carelessness of train hands.

Pike v. Chicago & A. R. Co., (1890,) 41 Fed. Rep. 95, is a Missouri case, decided by Judge Thayer, whose learning and long experience in the administration of law in this state entitle his opinions to great weight. In it he held that a watchman of a railroad bridge, who was hurt by negligence of the driver of a locomotive of a passing train, was not a fellow servant of the latter.

In Evans v. Carbon Hill Coal Co., (1891,) 47 Fed. Rep. 437, in Washington, a laborer employed by defendant in the work of constructing a railway to haul coal from a mine received an injury by reason of the negligence of one of defendant's miners, engaged in the same locality in handling lumber.

2. Whether the quarryman, Dixon, was properly chargeable with contributory negligence in the premises, is the next question raised on this appeal.

The court is authorized to pronounce certain conduct negligent only when no other construction may fairly and reasonably be placed upon it in the circumstances; but where the facts are such as would warrant a reasonable inference that ordinary care has been taken by the person in question, the issue whether or not such care was really exercised by him is for triers of the fact to decide. The rule on this point has been so often stated that it is not necessary to dwell upon it.

Dixon's general duties have been already indicated. The following further facts, bearing on the particular issue now under consideration, should be noted:

Defendant's foreman testified that Dixon, in the performance of his work, "would stand about the center of the main track on the east side of the strap-track, with his back to the east, facing the west;" that, as he "was right handed, it came handier to him to stand in the center of the main track, on the east side of the strap-track, in detaching the cable;" that he had had but one other man besides Dixon at that post, and they both handled the cable in the same way; that it was the duty of Dixon to keep the cable off the main track when it was not attached to a car; and that, when running regularly, "those cars go up and down between the quarry and crusher about every three minutes."

He also said that the steam crusher while at work made considerable noise as the rock passed through it. It was running that morning. He was on top of the quarry when the accident happened, 150 feet from the turn-table. He did not hear the train that hit Dixon.

Another employé, standing within 18 or 14 feet of the track, and 40 or 45 feet from Dixon, did not hear the train till it was passing him. Dixon was last seen by this witness, about the center of the main track, at the junction with the strap-track, facing towards the northwest, looking down. When struck he was in the act of stooping, and seemed to be reaching for the cable. From the point where Dixon then was, an engine could ordinarily be seen, by one looking eastward, for a distance of 1,035 feet; but from the crossing track, near the turn-table, the range of view in that direction was reduced by intervening objects to 250 or 300 feet. It also appeared in evidence that the atmosphere was "right smart" foggy that morning.

Can it be justly said, in view of these facts, that the deceased was negligent as a matter of law? The noise of the steam rock crusher, not 50 feet distant, obscured, if it did not obliterate, that of the coming train, as is shown by the fact that even the foreman and the workman nearest Dixon did not hear its approach. The work at which Dixon was engaged demanded close attention, and necessitated his frequently taking a position in which his back was towards the engine that hit him. From the main track at the strap-track crossing, the locomotive (at the rate of speed it had) could not have been seen 80 seconds before it passed there; and, from points nearer the turntable, where Dixon's duties required him frequently to go, it could not have been discovered within seven seconds of its arrival, because of obstacles reducing the range of view eastward. He was bound to use common prudence to avoid danger, but that prudence should be measured after giving due weight to all his surroundings. His immediate work involved some risks of its own, and called for constant vigilance; and, without further comment, we hold that the question whether or not he came up to the standard of ordinary care in the circumstances of his situation is very clearly one for the jury.

This branch of the case, moreover, seems to have given no difficulty in the trial court. The learned circuit judge evidently coincided with the view we have taken of it. The result there was definitely placed by him on the single ground that the deceased was a fellow servant of the train employes.

3. There was abundant direct evidence of the omission of the engine men to sound the whistle signal as the train came around this obscure curve. Defendant's rule and custom required such a signal, and the failure to give it was evidence of negligence on defendant's part in managing the locomotive. If that omission should be found, as a fact, to have caused the death of Dixon, we cannot properly say that such finding would be an unreasonable inference from the evidence.

We consider the showing by the plaintiff sufficient to justify the submission of the cause to the jury for findings upon the disputed issues of fact raised by the pleadings, and that the trial court was in error in directing a verdict for the defendant.

The judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Black and Brace, JJ., concur; Sherwood, Ch. J., dissents.

The case was subsequently reheard before the court in banc, after which, on May 9, 1892, the following opinion was handed down:

Per Curiam, (Black, Brace, Barclay, and Thomas, JJ.):

The foregoing statement and opinion of the majority of division No. 1 are adopted and approved by the court in banc after a full reargument.

Macfarlane, J., did not participate having been of counsel in the cause.

Sherwood, Ch. J., and Gantt, J., dissent.

Nannie J. PARKER, Resp't.,
v.
HANNIBAL & ST. JOSEPH R. CO., Appt.

(100 Mo. —.)

1. Plaintiff, a track repairer under direction of a foreman, in defendant's employ, was injured by alleged negligence of the operatives of a passing construction train of defendant, under different management from the section gang to which plaintiff belonged. Held, that plaintiff and the trainmen were not fellow servants.

2. Where persons are engaged in distinct departments of service, and have no such association in their work as that they can observe and influence each other's conduct and report delinquencies to a common correcting power, they are not in a common employment within the meaning of the law.

3. The limitations of the master's exemption from liability to one employé for negligence of a fellow servant discussed.

(Sherwood, Ch. J., Gantt and Macfarlane, JJ., dissent from propositions 1 and 2; Black, J., considers the facts assumed in proposition 1 insufficiently established.)

(March 23, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death, and alleged to have been caused by the actionable negligence of defendant's servants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Statement by Gantt, J.:

The plaintiff, as the widow of William O. Parker, commenced this action December 2, 1886, against the defendant, to recover damages sustained by her by reason of the death of her husband, who was killed by a construction train on defendant's track, near Randolph Bluff, on the 26th day of October, 1886. Plaintiff's husband had been engaged as a section hand or track laborer for the defendant for about two years prior to his death. On the 26th of October, 1886, he was engaged at work on defendant's track at a place called "Randolph Bluff," with the rest of the section men, and had been working at that point every day for about two weeks prior to his death. The train which struck him was a construction train engaged in carrying rock from the rock crusher at Minarville, five miles east of Randolph Bluff, to a point near the bluff, and west of where the section men were working, for the purpose of ballasting the track, and had been thus engaged daily for three months.

*Headnotes by BARCLAY, J.

NOTE—[See notes to the next preceding case and to the three following cases.]

The opinions in these cases refer to nearly all the Missouri cases on the law of fellow servants.

Since the decision of the principal case, the principle declared in the first headnote has been followed in Schlereth v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (March, 1893, 18 L. R. A.

The engine of the construction train pulled the cars after it going west, and, returning east, pushed the cars in front of it. It made the round trips past the place where the section men were at work upon the track daily, the last trip being about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, each day. It was while this train was running eastward, on the 26th of October, 1886, at 5 o'clock P. M., that it struck William Parker, plaintiff's husband, and killed him. From the evidence, there were about twenty-five passenger and freight trains running daily over that part of the track where Parker was killed, during the day-time.

The evidence discloses that, at the time of the accident which resulted in Parker's death, the train had discharged its stone, and was being run, caboose in front, eastward, to Minarville. Parker was working on defendant's track, tamping some rock under the track, with his face to the east and back to the west. On the part of the plaintiff several witnesses testified, in a negative way, that the train made no signals either by blowing the whistle or ringing the bell; that, some 150 yards west of the point where plaintiff's husband was at work, there was a curve in defendant's track; that parallel with defendant's track was the Wabash Railroad track, and distant at this point about 9 feet, one from the other. On the part of defendant there was much positive affirmative evidence that, at a point some 2,000 feet west of where Parker was killed, the engineer blew three blasts of the whistle, as a signal that he was going to back over this track with his train. There was also evidence that, just at the time plaintiff's husband was struck and killed, a freight train of forty-eight cars, on the Wabash, was running eastward by this place, making much noise. A number of witnesses were allowed, without being qualified as experts or showing any familiarity with the speed of trains, to testify that, in their opinion the train was running 30 to 35 miles an hour, and was racing with the Wabash train. On the part of defendant, there was positive testimony that, just west of the point where Parker was killed, there was a curve in the track, and that while going round this curve the engine blew four blasts of the whistle, two long and two short. It appears from the evidence that on the east or front end of the construction train, as it backed east two men were stationed, one with a flag. The train was running backwards, at a rate variously estimated from 15 to 35 miles per hour, at the time it struck Parker. From the point where Parker was at work the track could be seen westward a distance variously estimated by plaintiff's witnesses as being from 150 yards to a quarter of a mile. That all of the other men composing the gang of section men were west, and within 60 feet, of the point where Parker was working, being between him and the approaching train, scattered along the track at work. That the section foreman, Hudgens, noticed the approach of the train and called out to his men to get off the track. Seeing that Parker was standing over the north rail of the track, busy at work, with his back to the approaching train, without heeding the warning, the foreman, Joseph Dawson, and Prince L. Hudgens all three started and ran towards him, yelling as loud as they could for him to get off the track; one of them (Dawson) running some 40 or 45 feet towards Parker before he was struck. In addition to this, the men on the front end of the leading car of the train hallooed with all their might, but failed to attract his attention in time to prevent the train striking him. It seems very probable that the noise made by the Wabash train, passing at the time, prevented the deceased hearing these warnings.

Mo., (Sup.) by Black, Ch. J., Brace, Barclay, Macfarlane and Burgess, JJ.,—Sherwood and Gantt, JJ., dissenting.

In Foster v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (March, 1893) the Missouri Supreme Court, in banc, unanimously approved the principle declared in the cases of Russ and Schroeder, reported in this volume.

The negligence complained of is the excessive speed of the train; the fact that it was backing over the track; the failure of the train men to give signals to the track men at work on the track; and the racing with the Wabash. The defense is that there was no negligence; that as to track men, the company did not owe them the duty of whistling and ringing the bell; that this work had been going on daily for three months over this same track, and this same train passed daily at the very hour plaintiff's husband was struck; that Parker and the other section men had been for two weeks at this point ballasting the track and repairing it, and had every reason to expect this train at that time; that while it was an irregular train in one sense, yet at this time it made quite regular trips twice a day; that the speed made was necessary to permit this train to clear the track for the regular passenger train; and that it was the negligence of fellow servants in charge of the construction train, who were engaged in the same common employment, for the same common master, at that time, and the contributory negligence of plaintiff's husband.

Upon request of plaintiff, the court gave the jury the following instructions to the giving of which the defendant objected at the time, and excepted: "(1) The plaintiff in this action seeks to recover of defendant $5,000 damages for the killing of her husband while he was at work as a section hand upon the defendant's railroad, by one of defendant's construction trains; and her right to recover is based upon alleged negligence of the servants and agents of defendant in the running and management of the train in question. The defendant railroad company, by its answer, admits that plaintiff's husband was killed while in its employ, but denies the negligence charged by plaintiff, and, in substance, alleges that the death of plaintiff's husband was occasioned solely by his own carelessness and recklessness, and without any fault or neglect of defendant's agents or servants contributing thereto. The questions for you to determine under 18 L. R. A.

the issues thus made and the evidence and the instructions of the court, are—(1) Did the agents and servants of defendant in charge of the train in question run and manage said train in a negligent, careless manner? If so, was the injury to and death of plaintiff's husband caused thereby? If the plaintiff has satisfied you, by a preponderance of the evidence, that these questions should be answered in the affirmative, then you will find a verdict in her favor, unless the defendant railroad company has satisfied you, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the plaintiff's husband was at the time guilty of carelessness, recklessness, or negligence, and that such want of due and proper care upon his part directly contributed to his death. These questions it is your duty to determine, under all the facts and circumstances in proof. (2) The degree of necessity, usual, and proper precautions to secure his own safety, to which plaintiff's husband was held, as a section hand upon defendant's railroad, was such care, caution, and diligence only as a man of ordinary prudence should have exercised in the same situation, under the facts and circumstances in proof. (3) If the jury find from the evidence that there was a sharp curve in defendant's track a short distance west of the point at which plaintiff's husband was killed; that it was the custom of defendant's railroad, known to its employes, to give notice of the approach of its trains by ringing the bell or sounding the whistle when running its trains around its curve on its track,—then it was the duty of the agents and servants of defendant, in charge of said train, to give such signals in this instance. (4) If the jury find from the evidence that the agents and servants of defendant, in charge of the construction train in question, were running said train backward; that they were engaged in a race with a train of cars on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway which at that point runs parallel with and near to defendant's track; that they were running said construction train at such a high rate of speed, and in such a manner, as to endanger the lives of employes upon its track; that they knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care upon their part might have known, that plaintiff's husband and his collaborators upon the track were at or near the point where the accident occurred, and did not ring the bell or sound the whistle as they came around the curve, or approached the same, so as to give warning of their approach, and failed to use the ordinary means within their power to prevent the injury to and death of plaintiff's husband,—then the defendant was guilty of negligence in so running and operating its train; and if the jury find that plaintiff's husband was without fault or negligence upon his part, and that such negligence on the part of the servants and agents of defendant in running and managing said train caused his death, then you should find a verdict for the plaintiff. (5) Although the jury may believe from the evidence that the noise made by the running of the train upon the track of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway was so great as to render it difficult for plaintiff's husband, while engaged in his work upon defendant's track, to hear the approach of defendant's train, yet that fact alone did not absolve the defendant from its obligation to use the usual and proper precautions to warn plaintiff's husband of his danger; and if the jury find that plaintiff's husband was standing with his back towards the approaching construction train; that it was necessary for him to stand in that position in order for him to do the work upon which he was at that moment engaged; that the servants and agents of defendant in charge of their train and the deceased had the same means of knowing that the noise made by the other train rendered it difficult for plaintiff's husband to hear the approach of the train that struck and killed him; that plaintiff's husband had no notice or warning of the approach of said train; and that, without fault or neglect on his part, he was struck and killed by said train, on account of the negligence of defendant's agents and servants having the charge thereof, in failing to ring the bell or sound the whistle, or give other warning likely to be seen or heard by an ordinarily prudent person there engaged, and in running said train backward at a high rate of speed without notice or warning, which they might have given by the exercise of ordinary care upon their part,—the jury should find for the plaintiff. (6) If the jury find for the plaintiff, they will assess her damages at the sum of $5,000."

The court, on its own motion, gave the following instructions, viz.: "(1) The defendant's servants engaged in running and operating the construction train mentioned in evidence were not guilty of negligence in failing to anticipate that the section men engaged at work on the track would fail to be reasonably watchful, and upon the alert to ascertain that said train was approaching. In other words, the defendant's servants running said train had the right to assume that the said section men would be in the exercise of that degree of care which would be exercised by ordinarily prudent persons, under the same or similar circumstances. (2) Defendant had a lawful right to run its trains upon the track at the place the injury occurred, either forward or backwards, and the fact that said train was being run at said time with the engine in the rear of the flat cars does not, of itself, constitute any negligence on the part of the defendant, or on the part of those in charge of said construction train,—to the giving of which instructions the defendant then objected and excepted, and still excepts.

The court gave the following instructions at the instance and request of defendant: "(7) The court instructs the jury that in the transaction of its business, and in the operation of its railroad, the defendant has a lawful right to run its trains at any rate of speed it may deem convenient and necessary; and, although the jury may believe from the evidence that the defendant's train was at the time and place mentioned running at a rapid rate of speed, yet that fact alone did not constitute negligence on the part of defendant." "(10) The jury are instructed that, if they find from the evidence that the accident to the said William Parker was the result of the combined negligence of both the said Parker and of the men in charge of the construction train, the verdict must be for the defendant." "(12) Plaintiff does not charge that the servants of the defendant running the rock train were guilty of any negligence—First, in respect to the effort made by them to stop said train after discovering the position and danger of William Parker; or, second, that said servants failed to discover the position and danger of the said William Parker as soon as they should; or, third, that said servants were negligent in any respect after they became aware of his position and danger. And in the consideration of your verdict you will disregard all evidence, if any there be, on these points, as plaintiff must recover on the case made in the pleadings." "(b) Although the jury may believe that in some regards the defendant was negligent, yet if they further believe from the evidence that deceased, by the exercise of ordinary prudence and caution, could have avoided the accident, they must find for the defendant."

The defendant prayed, and the court refused, the following instructions, and defendant at the time excepted to the action of the court in refusing the same: "(1) The defendant moves the court to instruct the jury that, under the pleadings and the evidence in this case, your verdict must be for the defendant—First, because the deceased was a fellow servant of the men engaged in running the train by whose negligence it is alleged he was injured; second, because the said William Parker was guilty of negligence directly contributing to the injury. (2) The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence that the train was being run at an improper or dangerous rate of speed at the time and place of the accident. (3) The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence that the defendant's servants were guilty of any negligence in running the construction train backwards over defendant's track. (4) There is no evidence tending to show that defendant's servants in charge of said train failed and neglected to sound the whistle upon said engine before starting around the curve near the point of the accident. (5) The jury are instructed that if they believe from the evidence that the deceased, William Parker, came to his death by reason of negligence of the employees of defendant in charge of the rock or construction train, in the running and management of the same, they will find for defendant. (6) The defendant's servants engaged in running and operating the construction train mentioned in evidence were not guilty of negligence in failing to anticipate that the section men engaged at work on the track would fail to be watchful and upon the alert to ascertain that said train was approaching." "(8) The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of William Parker, while upon the defendant's track at work, to be constantly on the alert and watchful that he might ascertain whether trains were approaching over the same, in time to avoid danger from the same. He had no right to rely upon being notified by the men in charge of the train of his danger, but was in duty bound, while thus upon the track at work, to use every precaution to learn of the approach of trains, and avoid danger, that a careful, prudent man would have used under similar circumstances. (9) The court instructs the jury that, under the evidence in this case, the section men, including the deceased, engaged at work on defendant's tracks, were bound to expect an irregular train from the west at any moment; and if you believe from the evidence in this case that the curve in defendant's track, and the high bluff on the north side, rendered it impossible to see any considerable distance westward along said track from the point where the deceased stood; and that, by reason of the noise made by the freight train on the Wabash track, it was impossible or difficult to hear an approaching train on defendant's track, or signals made by such train; and that the said William Parker, with a knowledge of these facts, placed himself astride of one of the rails of defendant's track, with his face to the east, and continued in this position, and engaged himself in the work of tamping stone under a tie, without keeping a watch to the west, or taking any precautions to ascertain whether any train was approaching him from that direction,—your verdict must be for the defendant." "(11) Defendant had the lawful right to run its trains upon the track at the place the injury occurred, either forward or backward; and the fact that said train was being run at said time with the engine in the rear of the flat cars does not constitute any negligence on the part of the defendant, or on the part of those in charge of said construction train. (a) If the jury believe from the evidence that, in consequence of the curve in the defendant's track, it was impossible for a person to see any considerable distance along the same; that the noise and roar of the freight train running on the Wabash track made it difficult or impossible to hear the noise or the signals of a train approaching upon the defendant's road at the time of the accident; and you further find that the section men, including the said Parker, knew, or had reasonable grounds to expect, that the construction train would come along over the track going east at about the time said train did in fact come along, and that the said William Parker, with a knowledge of all these facts, went between the rails of defendant's track, and continued to work with his back to the approaching train, and without taking any precautions to ascertain the approach of the same,—your verdict must be for the defendant." "(c) If the jury find from the evidence that the servants of the defendant, running the train in proof, sounded the signal whistle just before starting their train around said curve, then the court instructs you that the defendant's servants in charge of the train had the right to believe that the section men would hear and heed said warning; and if you find from the evidence that a man was stationed on the front end of the train as it moved east, to warn persons off the track, then such servants so in charge of said train were not negligent in respect to the rate of speed at which said train ran, and the finding should be for the defendant."

The court at the request of plaintiff, and against the objection of the defendant, allowed the jury to take to the jury room with them, after the case was submitted to their consideration of their verdict, and while considering of the same, the plat or picture spoken of in the evidence, and shown in evidence by plaintiff. To this ruling and action of the court the defendant then excepted, and still excepts. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $5,000, and judgment was rendered thereon by the court, to which action of the court the defendant then excepted and still excepts.

Messrs. Strong & Mosman, for appellant:

A servant accepting employment knowing as well as his employer its perils, or continuing in service after he acquires such knowledge, has no claim for damages against his employer for an injury occasioned by such perils.

Price v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 77 Mo. 508; Steffen v. Mayer, 96 Mo. 420; Waldheir v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 3 West. Rep. 245, 87 Mo. 87; Benfro v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 86 Mo. 802; Gleason v. Excelsior Mfg. Co. 13 West. Rep. 246, 94 Mo. 205.

If William Parker came to his death by reason of the negligence of the employes of defendant in charge of the rock or construction train in the running and management of the same, the law presumes that under such circumstances these men were fellow servants, and the burden is on him who would seek to avail himself of the absence or non-existence of such relation. No such testimony was offered on the trial of this cause, and the failure on the part of the plaintiff's testimony to show that the men composing the construction gang and the section hands were not fellow servants warranted an instruction to find for defendant.

Blessing v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 412.

The evidence clearly showed that these men were fellow servants within the strictest rule of decision.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 225, 234; Bishop, Non-cont. Law, § 662.

Fellow servants are engaged in a common employment when each of them is occupied in service of such a kind that all the others in the exercise of ordinary sagacity ought to be able to foresee, when accepting their employment, that it may probably expose them to the risk of injury in case he is negligent.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 236. See Bishop, Non-cont. Law, § 673.

The question must be decided by reference to the fact whether a person having experience in a certain employment would, when engaging in that employment, know that the negligence of a servant engaged in the employment of the same master might be productive of harm to him.

Gibson v. Pacific R. Co. 46 Mo. 169, 2 Am. Rep. 497.

It would be carrying the rule to an absurd extreme to hold that those only are fellow servants who are employed in doing precisely the same thing.

Marshall v. Schricker, 68 Mo. 811.

A station agent whose duties were connected with the trains was held to be a fellow servant in the same common employment with the men engaged in running and managing the train.

Evans v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 49.

A brakeman on the road is a fellow servant of the men whose duty it is to see that the bridges are kept in repair.

McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. 80 Mo. 115.

This court has passed upon the precise point involved here.

Rohback v. Pacific R. Co. 48 Mo. 187.

Messrs. John F. Waters, and Crittenden, McDougal & Stiles, for respondent:

Plaintiff's husband was a trackman. He was in no sense a fellow servant with defendant's employes in charge of the train. His death resulted solely from their negligence "whilst running, conducting (or) and managing" the "train of cars." His widow was and is therefore entitled to recover $5,000 damages.

Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 97 Mo. 118, and cases cited.

Plaintiff's husband, a section hand, was not a fellow servant, within the rule, with the engineer of the train which killed him, for the reason that they were in different departments of the service.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 413; Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. R. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 258; Calco v. Charlotte, O. & A. R. Co. 28 S. C. 536.

A conductor of one train is not a fellow servant with the brakeman of another train.

Au v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 72.

A conductor of a material train is not a fellow servant with a laborer on the train, even in adjusting the switch.

Coleman v. Wilmington, O. & A. R. Co. 25 S. C. 446, 60 Am. Rep. 516.

The conductor of a freight train is not a co-servant, within the rule, with the engineer of another train, and the defendant is liable where the accident was caused by the negligence of those in charge of the freight train.

Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Ackley, 87 Ky. 278, 13 Am. St. Rep. 480.

The engineer of one freight train is not a co-servant, within the rule, with the conductor of another freight train through whose negligence a collision occurs, killing the engineer of the other train.

Louisville, O. & L. R. Co. v. Caven, 9 Bush, 559.

The brakeman and section foreman are not co-servants within the rule.

Lewis v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 59 Mo. 495.

Track laborer and fireman are not such fellow servants.

Cowles v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 84 N. C. 309.

Car inspector and brakeman are not.

Condon v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 78 Mo. 567;

Long v. Pacific R. Co. 65 Mo. 225.

18 L. R. A.

Gantt, J., delivered the following opinion:

Plaintiff's husband was a section hand in the service of the defendant at the time he was killed. He had been in this same employment for about two years prior to his death. At the time of his death, he was tamping rock under the head block at the switch, near Randolph Bluff, stooping, with his back towards the west. He was struck by a car, in a construction train coming from the west, on defendant's track, in charge of defendant's train men, who were and had been, for some three months, engaged in hauling and unloading crushed rock for ballast for this section. The train had discharged its load of rock, and was backing, caboose in front, to Minarville, some five miles distant, in order to clear the track for the afternoon passenger train. Just at the time plaintiff's husband, William C. Parker, was struck, a freight train of forty-eight cars was passing on the track of the Wabash Railroad, about 9 feet distant, and at this point parallel to defendant's road. The Wabash train was making a great noise. The evidence for the plaintiff was that Parker and his associate section men did not hear any signals, by way of bell ringing or whistle blowing, on the part of those in charge of the construction train. On the part of the train men, there was much positive evidence that, just prior to starting the train back on the main track, the engineer sounded his whistle. About 150 yards west of the point where Parker was struck there was a curve in defendant's road. The engineer and other train men testify that, when nearing this curve, the engineer gave four signals, two long and two short blasts of the whistle. All the section men except Parker saw the train in time to avoid it, and did so. Three of them, seeing that Parker was apparently wholly unconscious of its approach, ran towards him, and attempted to attract his attention by calling to him in loud voice, but it seems clear now that the noise on the Wabash train prevented his hearing them. Plaintiff bases the right to recover on the grounds that defendant's train men on the construction train were running it at a high, unusual, dangerous, and reckless rate of speed; that her husband was stooping with his back to the west, when this train, suddenly and without warning or signal by whistle or bell, was run over him; that it was racing with the Wabash train at the time.

There are a number of specific exceptions saved in the record, but it is plain that one question of controlling importance arises on this record,—were the train men operating the construction train that killed plaintiff fellow servants of his, working for a common master in a common service, and, if so, is defendant liable for the injury? Learned counsel for defendant, in his argument of this cause, urged us to lay down some definite principle or rule by which employers could govern themselves. After a careful examination of this subject, in its varied aspects, we think the attempt would be futile and unsatisfactory. The judge or court who would deal in general observations outside of the record under consideration, would be treading on dangerous ground, and in a very short time would probably find himself "hoisted by his own petard." It is unnecessary to go over the learning and history of the rule that the master is not liable to his servant for the injury resulting from the negligence of a fellow servant in the same common service. See Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 1 N. Dak. 336. An examination of the cases in this court will show that this court has never denied the rule. McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. 30 Mo. 115; Rohback v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 187; McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 61 Mo. 528; William Bros. v. Carriter, 52 Mo. 372; Gibson v. Pacific R. Co. 46 Mo. 163, 2 Am. Rep. 497; Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 308; Smith v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 359, 8 West. Rep. 729; Sherrin v. St. Joseph & St. L. R. Co. 103 Mo. 378; Murray v. St. Louis, O. & W. R. Co. 98 Mo. 578, 5 L. R. A. 735; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 1116; Higgins v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 104 Mo. 413; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 106 Mo. 74.

The main and only difficulty has been to satisfactorily determine, at all times, whether the employment was a common service, and the employes fellow servants, within the meaning of the rule; and, after due consideration, we are of the opinion that, unsatisfactory as it may seem, the rule itself must remain general; its application specific, as the cases arise. This rule, to exempt the master, requires the servants shall be employed by a common master, and the servants must be employed in the same common employment. In this case we have the first essential. The petition and evidence all show that plaintiff's husband and the train men on the construction train were employed by the same master, the defendant. Were they fellow servants in a common employment?

The record shows plaintiff's husband was and had been for two years a section hand in defendant's employ, working on this section of defendant's railroad, repairing and keeping the track in a safe condition for trains. He was at this work, tamping rock under the block of the switch, at the time he was killed. The train men were in charge of a construction train, which for three months had daily hauled rock from a crusher at Minarville, five miles east of the point where Parker was killed, and unloaded it on this same section, for the purpose, also, of ballasting the track to insure safety of trains passing over it. It is in evidence that this train made two trips daily over this section; that plaintiff's husband had been engaged for two weeks near the place where he was killed; that this train passed the point where he was killed about the same time, every afternoon, about 5 o'clock. These construction trains can only work between the schedule time of regular trains. It was in evidence that track men or section men were expected to look out for trains and clear the track. It was a rule of the defendant that whistles should be sounded in going around curves. That the work of deceased and the construction train crew tended to one common end, to wit, the repairing, and, in this instance, the ballasting, of a common track on a common section, is unquestionable. One set of the employes were managing the train, hauling and unloading the crushed rock; and the other, the regular section men, were carefully disposing of this rock, and tamping it under the rails and switches. Neither had the least control of the other. While they were working in harmony to accomplish a common purpose, the repairing and improvement of their employer's track on this section, neither could command or direct the other. Again, they bore the same general relation to the master. That is to say, in repairing this track they were both engaged in doing a work that the law devolved upon the defendant, and they were both engaged in assisting their common master in discharging a duty to the public and its train men who traveled in regular trains over this track. This train passed every day about the hour of this unfortunate accident. Plaintiff's husband was familiar with the track and the curves. He had worked there two years. He also knew of the proximity of the Wabash road. We believe it is conceded by all the courts, not those who follow the rule in the Farrell Case, 4 Met. 49, but those who deny it, that the servant assumes the natural risks incident to the common course of the business, including the negligence of his fellow servants. When plaintiff's husband went to work on the track that afternoon, he was certainly aware that this train would pull by him about the usual time to clear the track for the afternoon passenger train. In so doing, it would be following a regular, or natural course. His work brought him to work on the same track, at the same time the work of the train men brought them there, serving a common master; and both understood the risk from this necessary contact; and the negligence of the one in doing his work might injure the other in doing his work. Hence we conclude that, applying these facts to the general rule, they make a case of fellow servants in a common employment.

In Rohback v. Pacific R. Co., 43 Mo. 187, the facts were the plaintiff was a section man at work on the defendant's railroad at a place near the foot of Jefferson street, in Jefferson City, where the railroad crossed a street. While so employed, the train men in charge of a locomotive and train of cars, without ringing a bell or sounding a whistle, ran the train over plaintiff. This court then held that the section man and the train men were fellow servants, and the plaintiff could not recover, though it was assumed the negligence of the train men was clearly shown, and the majority of this court still approve that case. We are not aware that this court has ever repudiated that case. In Whealan v. Mad River & L. E. R. Co., 8 Ohio St. 249, the facts were as follows: Plaintiff was a section hand or track man working in repairing the track. He alleged there was a man employed on one of defendant's trains whose duty it was to pass firewood from the tender to the engine, and, on finding sticks unsuitable, he cast the same from the train. That this train was passing where plaintiff was at work on the track. He retired from the track, and, as the train passed, this fireman improperly threw a stick of wood from the tender; it struck plaintiff, and put out his eye. That court said: "This case, it will be perceived, is not one in which the injured party is placed by their common employer in a position subordinate to and subject to orders of the fellow servant, through whose negligence and misconduct the injury occurs," so as to come within the principle decided in Little Miami R. Co. v. Stevens, 20 Ohio, 415, and Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Keary, 3 Ohio St. 201, "but presents the simple question whether the master or employer is liable to one servant for injuries received from the negligence of a fellow servant, where no relation of subordination or subjection exists between them while engaged in the business of their common employer." That court answered the question in the negative, holding the track man and the fireman fellow servants. This case is the more significant, because it came from a court that first denied the rule in the Farwell Case, in the cases cited by Judge Napton in McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. 80 Mo. 115.

In 1842, Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 88 Am. Dec. 839, was decided. In that case an engineer was injured by the negligence of a switchman who left the switch open, and the engine was thereby run off the track. It was shown that the switchman was a careful and trustworthy servant. Farwell sued the company, and the supreme court of Massachusetts held he could not recover. That decision was subsequently followed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 484, 27 L. ed. 1005, (1883.) In that case, the evidence showed the injury occurred at night, at a place where there was a network of tracks, in the defendant's railroad yard, near the junction of a branch road with the main road, and about 10 rods from a highway crossing. Plaintiff had previously been employed on another part of the road. On the night in question, in the performance of his duty as a brakeman on a freight train, he unlocked a switch, which enabled his train to pass from one track to another, and he was stooping down, with his lantern on the ground beside him, to unlock the ball of a second switch, to let the engine of his train pass to a third track, when he was struck and injured by the tender of another freight engine, in no way connected with his train, backing down on the second track. From the evidence it appeared the switch could be worked safely by a man standing midway between the two tracks, using reasonable care. It could not be safely worked by standing at the end of the handle, while an engine was coming on the track next that end. The engine that struck plaintiff was being driven at a speed of about 12 miles an hour by an engineer in defendant's employ, and there was evidence that it had no light except the headlight, and no bell, and its whistle was not sounded. A demurrer to the evidence was sustained. Mr. Justice

18 L. R. A.

Gray, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The general rule of law is now firmly established that one who enters the service of another takes upon himself the ordinary risks of the negligent acts of his fellow servants in the course of the employment. This court has not hitherto had occasion to decide who are fellow servants, within the rule." "Nor is it necessary, for the purposes of this case, to undertake to lay down a precise and exhaustive definition of the general rule in this respect, or to weigh conflicting views which have prevailed in the courts of the several states; because persons standing in such a relation to one another as did this plaintiff and the engineer of the other train are fellow servants, according to the very great preponderance of judicial authority in this country, as well as the uniform course of decision in the house of lords and in the English and Irish courts." "They are employed and paid by the same master. The duties of the two bring them to work at the same place at the same time, so that the negligence of the one in doing his work may injure the other in doing his work. Their separate services have an immediate common object, the moving of the trains. Neither works under the orders or control of the other. Each, by entering into his contract of service, takes the risk of the negligence of the other in performing his service, and neither maintains an action for an injury caused by such negligence against the corporation, their common master. The only cases cited which have any tendency to support the opposite conclusion are the decisions . . . in Chamberlain v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co., 11 Wis. 248, and . . . Haynes v. East Tennessee & G. R. Co., 3 Coldw. 222, each of which wholly rejects the doctrine of the master's exemption from liability to one servant for negligence of another. The first of these has been overruled in the same state. The action cannot, therefore, be maintained for the negligence of the engineer in running his engine too fast, or in not giving due notice of its approach." This decision has never, so far as we can find, been questioned or overruled by the court rendering it. The subsequent case of Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 877, 28 L. ed. 787, though decided only a year later, does not mention it. Certainly it does not overrule it in terms, and we think the cases are not in conflict. They simply treat of the relation of the master to the servant under different conditions. In the Ross Case, the Supreme Court of the United States declined "to lay down a rule which would determine, in all cases, what was to be deemed a common employment;" but placed its decision on the ground that "the conductor, having the entire control and management of a railway train, occupies a very different position from the brakeman, porters, and other subordinates." "He is in fact and should be treated as the personal representative of the corporation for whose negligence it is responsible to its subordinate servants." So that while the learned judge who wrote that opinion discusses with marked ability what is now sometimes termed "the department rule," it seems not to have been the basis of the decision in that case.

In the subsequent case, in the same court, of Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 875, 33 L. ed. 656, it appeared that the plaintiff was the stewardess of the ship. It was her duty to attend to the ladies' room in the cabin, and in the course of that duty to empty slops, as to which her orders were to throw them over the side of the vessel. The cabin was on deck. A railing extended round the vessel, and consisted of four horizontal iron rods, which were supported by stanchions at intervals of 4½ feet. In this railing there were openings or gangways for receiving and discharging freight and passengers. Three of the gangways were for passengers. On her voyage, at one of her stopping places, the gangway was opened to let off passengers. In replacing the rods, they were not placed in proper positions, but remained so far unfastened that the hooks were not secured in the eyes. The carpenter and porter undertook to fasten the rods. The porter testified he told the carpenter of the ship to put the rods in, and he replied, "Wait until the rain is over." While in this condition, the plaintiff came to the gangway with a bucket of slops, leaned against the railing, it gave way, and she fell into the sea, and was injured. The servants were divided into "three departments," the "deck department," the "engineer's department," and the "steward's department." The carpenter was in the deck department, the plaintiff in the steward's. There was a master or captain in command of the whole vessel. The court, Judge Blatchford, delivering the opinion, says: "The contention of the plaintiff is that, as the carpenter was in the deck department and the stewardess in the steward's department, those were different departments, in such a sense that the carpenter was not a fellow servant with the stewardess. But we think both the porter and carpenter were fellow servants with the plaintiff. The carpenter had no authority over the plaintiff, nor had the porter." The division into departments was one of convenience of administration. "The case, therefore, falls within the well-settled rule, as to which it is unnecessary to cite cases, which exempts an employer from liability for injuries to a servant caused by another servant. The plaintiff took upon herself the natural and ordinary risks incident to the performance of her duty, and among such risks was the negligence of the porter and carpenter, or of either of them, in the course of the common employment. There was nothing in the employment or service of the carpenter or the porter which made either of them any more the representative of the defendant than the employment of the stewardess made her such representative." In Murray v. St. Louis, C. & W. R. Co., 98 Mo. 573, 5 L. R. A. 735, this court held that the gripman of a cable car, employed upon it in operating it, was a fellow servant of a watchman of the company, whose duty it was, from his station on the ground, to keep watch of cars as they approach a curve, and give signals to the gripman to prevent more than one train from passing the curves at a time. They were employed in the same "common employment of operating the cars, one from the car, the other from his station on the ground." The learned judge who wrote the opinion in that case very clearly distinguishes those cases in this state in which it was the duty of the master to furnish reasonably safe instrumentalities for his servants from those in which injury occurred by the act of a fellow servant. He concludes by saying: "The majority of the courts, it is believed, hold that servants are in a common employment when they are engaged under the same master, in the same general business." As in that case the gripman and the watchman were engaged in the common employment of operating the train, so in this case the crew and men in charge of this construction train, and the plaintiff's husband and the section gang to which he belonged, were engaged in the common employment of repairing and making safe and secure the track of their employer, the defendant herein, on a common section. So that, if we apply the general rule in this case, unquestionably they were fellow servants; or if we apply "the department rule, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Randall Case and the Quebec Steamship Case, supra, they are fellow servants, in the same department,—that of the construction and repairing of the defendant's track on this section. But neither the general rule nor the rule requiring a co-sociation of the employes would justify the judgment in this case. These train men on the construction train were daily hauling and delivering stone on the section on which plaintiff's husband worked, and had worked for three or four years. This train passed the working place of plaintiff's husband at least four times a day. He was required to get off the track for its passage each time. He could readily observe whether the engineer was in the habit of giving signals as he came and went, and whether he ran his engine so fast that it imperiled the safety of the section hands. This construction train and the section men belong to the same department, that of construction and repair of the track. This train necessarily brought the work of the section and the construction crew daily in contact, so that this section gang could have observed and reported to the roadmaster any dereliction of duty in this regard. As remarked by this court in Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 308, "it would be carrying the rule to an absurd extreme to hold that those only are fellow servants who are employed in doing precisely the same thing." The rule has never been circumscribed in any such a narrow circle. We cannot think of any danger more obvious or likely to happen to a section man than the danger to be apprehended from irregular trains. It was the most ordinary incident to his employment. This seems to have been fully understood by the men. Plaintiff's witness Hudgens says: "All section men are expected to watch and get off the track when the trains come. Trains never stop to give us time to get off." "We are expected to look out for all trains." And to the same effect is the evidence of Henry Hudgens, Joseph Dawson, and M. J. Barry. The risk was one he assumed when he went to work on that section. We think the demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained. The court, having overruled the demurrer to the evidence, should have given defendant's fifth instruction. The evidence clearly made them fellow servants, and it was the court's duty to declare the law. As this disposes of the case, it is unnecessary to examine the other assignments of error.

Sherwood, Ch. J., and Macfarlane, J., concur, and are of opinion, with myself, that the judgment should be simply reversed; but in order to a disposition of the cause, and for that reason alone we consent that the case be remanded. Sherwood, Ch. J., in a concurring opinion, and Black, J., in a separate opinion, hold the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded. Barclay, Brace, and Thomas, J., dissent. Judge Thomas files a dissenting opinion, in which Judge Brace concurs in the conclusions reached. Barclay, J., dissents for reasons given by him in Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 8 W. Rep. 412, in division No. 1, at this term.

The judgment is accordingly reversed, and the cause remanded.

Sherwood, Ch. J., concurring:

I have deemed it best to add a few observations respecting this case. If I employ hands to haul and distribute manure over my meadow, some to drive the team and unload the wagon, and others to distribute the manure when thrown out, and if, while engaged in such work, one of the hands engaged in distributing the manure should be run over by reason of the carelessness of the driver of the wagon and killed I suppose no court in Christendom would hesitate to say the hand run over and the driver of the wagon were fellow servants, engaged in a common employment, and serving a common master, and, therefore that no recovery could be had against me. I am entirely unable to distinguish, in point of principle, the hypothetical case from the one at bar; to note any appreciable difference between the common employment of hauling and distributing stone along the line of a railroad, and hauling and distributing manure upon a meadow. The largeness or smallness of the area over which the given work progresses, the distances to be traveled, or the amount of work to be performed surely cannot affect the principle involved, or vary in any respect the legal conclusion to be drawn from the premises. If the farmer, in the case supposed, should not be held liable, neither should the railroad corporation in the real one, unless it be declared as a matter of law that the law will exonerate the farmer from all liability in circumstances where it will hold the corporation responsible and guilty of actionable negligence.

Black, J., delivered the following opinion:

I find myself unable to agree to all that is 18 L. R. A.

said in either of the opinions just filed, and hence the following observations: We all agree, I believe, that the rule which exempts the master from liability to one servant for the negligent acts of a fellow servant prevails in this state. The real question, therefore, is whether the deceased track repairer was a fellow servant with those persons engaged in operating the rock train, within the meaning of the rule of exemption. That rule, as declared in Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 839, was, in substance this: That the master is not liable for injuries sustained by one employé by reason of the negligence of a coemployé; and all persons are coemployés who are engaged in the prosecution of the same general business, and this, too, without regard to rank or station. We believe it is conceded on all hands that, notwithstanding this rule, there are certain duties personal to the master, and for the nonperformance of which, resulting in an injury, he is liable, even to a servant. Thus, he must observe due care in furnishing suitable machinery and appliances, in seeing that the machinery and appliances are kept in repair, in the selection of competent and trustworthy servants, in making suitable rules and regulations for the conduct of a complex business; and he must see that youthful persons receive proper warning. It is often said that the servant entrusted with the performance of these duties, personal to the master, is not a fellow servant with those engaged in the prosecution of other work; but such statements are misleading, and have been the source of much trouble. The master is liable for a negligent performance of these duties, no matter by or through whom he undertakes to perform them. It is therefore evident that the question as to who are fellow servants within the rule of exemption cannot be determined from expressions found in those cases which have to deal with some default or alleged default of the master in the performance of some personal duty. The broad and sweeping rule of the Farwell Case was adopted in many of the states. It had but little more than been approved, when courts and legislatures began the process of cutting it down, because of the gross injustice which it worked out in its application to the great enterprises of the day. This is clearly shown by the constant enlargement of the field of duties held to be personal to the master. Again, it is held in this and other states, in direct opposition to the rule as laid down in the Farwell Case, that when the master delegates to an employé the power to manage, direct, and control men in the performance of their work, such person is a vice principal or representative of the master, and the master is liable to an under servant for the negligent acts of this representative. But the servants under this representative may be coservants with those under another representative of the same master. Thus, the persons engaged in and about machine shops, foundries, and the like are often strictly fellow servants, though under and subject to the orders of a different foreman. It must be apparent that cases like those before mentioned, whether founded on the nonperformance of some personal duty or the negligent act of a vice principal, do not dispose of the question now in hand. They point out the growth of the law, and furnish some aid in determining who are fellow servants within the rule of exemption, but do not furnish any exact or reliable guide. To determine who are coservants within that rule it may be well to recall the ground upon which it is based, which is, in substance, this: That from considerations of public policy and convenience the law will imply a contract on the part of the employé to take upon himself all risks arising from the negligent acts of his cocompoyés. The reasons for the rule are: "Where several persons are employed in the conduct of one common enterprise or undertaking, and the safety of each depends to a great extent on the care and skill with which each shall perform his appropriate duty, each is an observer of the conduct of the others, can give notice of any misconduct in capacity or neglect of duty, and leave the service if the common employer will not take such precautions and employ such agents as the safety of the whole party may require." Now, it being conceded, as it must be, that the master is liable to third persons for the negligent acts of his servants, it is difficult to see how public policy has much to do with the question as to who shall be deemed fellow servants within the rule of exemption. The liability being admitted in a case a third person is injured, but denied in case a servant is injured by another servant, the denial in the latter case must stand on some peculiar relation between master and servant. This peculiar relation cannot be simply the fact that the servants are in a position where one may be injured by the negligence of another, for third persons often occupy the same position, as where they become passengers. The real and only point of distinction, it seems to us, arises out of the fact that the servants are so associated and related in the performance of their work that they can observe and influence each other's conduct, and report any delinquency to a correcting power. To say a clerk engaged in an office making out pay rolls for a railroad company is a fellow servant, within the rule of exemption, with those engaged in operating trains, is out of all reason. Guided by the real reason for the rule, it seems to us it should be applied, and applied only, in those cases where the servant injured and the one inflicting the injuries are so associated and related in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct, and can report delinquencies to a common correcting power or head. In short, they should be fellow servants in fact, and not simply in dialectic theory. If in separate and distinct departments, so that the circumstances just stated do not and cannot exist, then they are not fellow servants within any just or fair meaning of the rule. This conclusion, though not in strict accord with the majority of the adjudged cases, is, it is believed, within the true and only reason for the rule, and has the support of many cases, some of which go much further than has been indicated. The following are some of the cases: Nashville & O. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 847; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Weaver, 85 Kan. 412; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 98 Ill. 302, 34 Am. Rep. 168. On this question the closing observations of Justice Paxson in New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 112 Pa. 400, 3 Cent. Rep. 576, may be consulted. The real point in judgment in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, was that a conductor, who has charge of a train, with the power to direct its movements, represents the company, and in the performance of such duties is not a fellow servant with the engineer and other operatives of the train, within the rule of exemption. Some observations made in that case support our conclusion. That Justice Miller so understood that case is evident from what he said in Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & O. B. R. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 258.

The deceased was one of a gang of five track repairers, all under a foreman. The rock train and the thirty men operating it were all under the command of a conductor. The evidence tends to show, in an incidental way, that the deceased and his gang had nothing to do with loading or unloading the rock train, and were not subject to the orders of the conductor, but were under the control of their own foreman or boss, and that this boss had no control over the rock train men. In short, the evidence tends to show that the two gangs were entirely independent of each other, both as to the work which they performed and as to the supervising power over them. If these are the facts then, applying the conclusion before stated, the deceased and the men employed in operating the rock train were not fellow servants within the rule of exemption. Prima facie, they were all fellow servants within that rule, and it devolved upon the plaintiff to disclose a state of facts which takes Parker out of it. Those facts should be found by the jury. The instructions do assume the existence of some of these facts, but that will not do. Indeed, the cause does not appear to have been tried with a view of showing that these gangs were independent of each other. For these reasons the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

I do not regard the conclusion before expressed as in conflict with prior cases in this court when we come to look at the facts in judgment. In Rohrbach v. Pacific R. Co., 48 Mo. 187, it appears the men were all at work at the same yard, and, for aught that appears, were under the same foreman, and in constant association. The question considered in Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 308, was whether Clifford occupied the position of a vice principal. So far that case has any direct bearing upon the question in hand, it seems to amount to a recognition of much that we have here said, for it is there said: "Nor was he engaged in a distinct department of the general service, and therefore a stranger to the service in which the plaintiff was engaged;" and the department doctrine finds recognition in other portions of the opinion in that case. What we have said is also in perfect accord with Murray v. St. Louis, C. & W. R. Co., 98 Mo. 573, 5 L. R. A. 785, for there the negligent servant and injured servant were strictly fellow servants. This case is also unlike that of Miller v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 58, (not yet officially reported,) for there it was part of the duty of the track repairers to unload the gravel train, and these two gangs of men joined in their work for the purpose of unloading the cars; not so in the case in hand. Nor, in my opinion, is this case at all like the case where different crews are engaged in operating trains on the same line of road under orders from a common train dispatcher. Should the judgment be for the plaintiff, the damages will be the sum of $5,000, because the case, if any the plaintiff has, comes under the second section of the Damage Act. Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 97 Mo. 114; Miller v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. supra.

Thomas, J., delivered the following opinion:

My opinion is that Parker was not a fellow servant of the conductor, engineer, and members of the crew in charge of the construction train which caused his death. This position I know will be regarded by many as antagonizing principles of law well established by the adjudged cases of this state and the other states of the Union, as well as those of England. No one living has profounder respect for the ancient landmarks of the law than I have, and I hesitate long in refusing to follow precedents long recognized by the courts as sound. Stare decisis is a wholesome maxim, that ought not, in judicial investigation, to be disregarded, except for the most weighty considerations and cogent reasons. Private opinion and speculation should have no license to oppose themselves arbitrarily to established principles of jurisprudence. Innovations, whether introduced by legislative action or judicial construction, tend to unsettle the law, and make men feel insecure in their titles to property, and uncertain as to their legal rights. I have given the subject of fellow service the fullest examination I was capable of, and the conclusion I have reached is not, in my humble opinion, in conflict with the adjudged cases in Missouri except the Schaub Case, reported in 106 Mo. 74, in which I concurred. In the Schaub Case it was held that the train men of one train were fellow servants of the train men of another train. That case is not in line, according to the view I take of the subject, either with the letter or spirit of the previous decisions of this court, and it ought not, therefore, to be followed as authority. Let us examine the history of the law of fellow service as it has been evolved and developed by judicial decisions in Missouri.

The first case in this state in which the doctrine of fellow service was discussed and announced was McDermott v. Pacific R. Co., 80 Mo. 115, in 1860. That controversy grew out of the breaking down of the Gasconade bridge, which created such widespread consternation among the people at the time. Plaintiff, McDermott, was a brakeman on the train that went down on account of the frailty of the bridge, as alleged. Judge Napton, who delivered the opinion of the court, laid down the broad doctrine that a servant who is injured by the negligence or misconduct of a fellow servant can maintain no action against the master for such injury, and that the rule should be "applied in all cases alike, without regard to the degrees of subordination in which the different servants or agents may be placed with reference to each other," and in support of this proposition Redfield, Railroads, p. 387, and Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339, are cited. In 1869 the Robbuck Case, 43 Mo. 187, was decided by Judge Wagner, in which it was held that a track repairer and a train man were fellow servants, and the McDermott Case, supra; Priestley v. Fowler, 3 Mees. & W. 1; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 885; and Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. supra,—were cited in support of the doctrine laid down. These are the foundation cases upon which the law of fellow service was built in our state up to the year 1869. Since that date the principles announced in the McDermott Case have, like the baseless fabric of a vision, totally disappeared in the evolution and development of the common law of Missouri. There is not a vestige of it left. It is now universally recognized here and elsewhere that the master must not only use reasonable care in furnishing his employes safe appliances with which to perform their duties, but he must also use reasonable care in keeping them in repair and in safe condition. Gutridge v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 105 Mo. 520, and 94 Mo. 468, 13 West. Rep. 644; Parsons v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 94 Mo. 286, 12 West. Rep. 615; Sooder v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 100 Mo. 673. And it is equally well settled that the rule of fellow service does not apply alike to all cases, without regard to the degrees of subordination in which the different servants or agents may be placed with reference to each other. Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Mound City Paint & Color Co. v. Conlon, 92 Mo. 221, 10 West. Rep. 100; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 96 Mo. 207. That the courts in the Farwell, Murray, Priestley, and McDermott Cases started out with the proposition that all servants employed and paid by a common master, in a common employment, were fellow servants, without regard to gradations in authority, is evident from the language used in the opinions of the courts, and of the dissenting opinions in the Murray Case. Judge Napton manifestly so understood it in the McDermott Case, for he cited, Little Miami R. Co. v. Stevens, 20 Ohio, 415, and Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Keary, 3 Ohio St. 201, as denying the principle of the Farwell Case. The Ohio cases cited are in full accord with the later decision of this court upon the doctrine of respondent superior. In the Stevens Case the engineer, and in the Keary Case a brakeman, was injured by the negligence of the conductor, and in both it was held that the conductor represented the corporation, and was its vice principal, and that the corporation was therefore liable. This principle finds support in the adjudged cases,—in Kentucky, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moore, 83 Ky. 675; in West Virginia, Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 610; in Virginia, Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 78 Va. 745; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Williams, 86 Va. 165; and Johnson v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 84 Va. 713; in South Carolina, Boatwright v. Northeastern R. Co. 25 S. C. 128; in Washington, Northern Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 1 Wash. 599; and in the Supreme Court of the United States, Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787.

It is very clear the rule in Missouri is that, where a conductor has control and management of a train, he is not a fellow servant of train hands placed under him. What the common understanding of the bench and bar as to the extent of the rule in the earlier cases was appears again very fully from the opinions and dissenting opinions of these Ohio cases. Judge Wagner, in the Rohback Case, while following, severely criticised the principle of the older cases, and utterly failed to follow it afterwards in the cases of Devitt v. Pacific R. Co. 50 Mo. 302; Gibson v. Pacific R. Co. 46 Mo. 163, 2 Am. Rep. 497; William Bros. v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 372; Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 47 Mo. 567; and Lewis v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 59 Mo. 495,—in its application to the condition of railway tracks and appliances, and to servants standing to each other in the relation of superiors, with authority to direct and control, and subordinates whose duty it is to obey. The process of paring down and limiting the broad rule announced in the McDermott Case has continued in this court up to date, and the doctrine that servants cannot recover for injuries resulting from defective appliances, and that all the servants of a corporation are fellow servants, without regard to subordination, is now utterly repudiated without dissent. The principle of fellow service is, however, still recognized and firmly fixed in our law. A servant cannot recover for injury inflicted upon him by the negligence of a fellow servant. Who, then, is a fellow servant? No definition of fellow service can be laid down that may not be subject to criticism,—indeed, that is not subject to criticism, and difficult of application. Men employed and paid by a common master to perform a common service are said to be fellow servants. But this definition would make all the employes of a great railway corporation, owning thousands of miles of road, extending into and through many states, fellow servants. No court now gives the rule any such broad signification. A few years ago, in Missouri, all employes of a common master, engaged in a common employment, who had no authority to hire and discharge hands, were held to be fellow servants. Noddard v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 514; William Bros. v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 372; Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 308. Then the rule was modified so as to exclude from the common service those who were clothed with authority to direct and control the movements of men placed under them. Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Day-harsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 108 Mo. 570. Then finally came the decision in the Sullivan Case in 1888 (97 Mo. 113,) in which it was announced that a track walker on a railroad is not a fellow servant of a locomotive engineer or fireman of a passenger train. This, I take it, in effect, though not in terms, overrules the Rohback Case; and in the determination of the question now under review we must affirm the doctrine of the Sullivan Case, or overrule it, and go back to the principle announced in the Rohback Case. This alternative being presented, I feel at liberty to resort to general principles and reason to guide me in determining what my duty is in the premises. I find two deliverances of this court upon the question, which, to my mind, are in direct conflict with each other, and I choose to follow the last, and in doing so I do not deem that I am disregarding the maxim stare decisis. I regard the Sullivan Case as in line with the spirit and tendency of the development and evolution of the law of fellow service in Missouri and in many other states of this Union, and to overrule it now, and return to the doctrine of the Rohback Case, would be taking a step in the wrong direction. As I have shown, the foundation (McDermott Case) upon which the Rohback Case was based has been wholly removed, and it seems that the superstructure ought to go with its foundation. When I say the principles of the McDermott Case have been repudiated I mean, of course, all of it that is not obiter dictum.

The Rohback Case being founded on the McDermott, Farnell, Priestley, and Murray Cases, it becomes important and appropriate to examine and see what was in fact decided. Priestley v. Fowler, was decided by the Court of Exchequer of England in 1837, and is the first case to be found in the English books where the limitation of the liability of the master for the negligent acts of his servant is even hinted at. The action grew out of an injury resulting from the negligent overloading of a van by another servant. Chief Baron Abinger, arguendo, said: "There is no precedent for the action by the servant against his master. We are therefore to decide the question upon general principles, and in doing so we are at liberty to look at the consequences of a decision one way or the other." With a view to the actual state of English society and the state of labor at that time, he concluded that to hold the master liable for the injuries of one servant by the negligence of another would lead to alarming consequences. The argument of Lord Abinger is characterized in a note to Redfield's work on Railways, (6th ed.) p. 566, as the most ingenious attempt "at reductio ad absurdum upon the subject of fellow service in supposing, among other speculations, some fearful consequences if the master were to be held liable for the negligence of the chambermaid in putting another servant into wet blankets." But in that case both servants were on the van, working together, with no common superior servant over them, and hence that cannot be taken as a precedent that all servants of a common master in a common employment are fellow servants; and it is very questionable if nine tenths of the courts of to-day would not hold the master liable in such case, upon the well-recognized and familiar principle that the master is required to furnish the servant a safe place to work, especially when it was alleged and proved that the master knew the van was overloaded.

The next case decided was Murray v. South Carolina R. Co., supra, in 1841. There it was held that the section foreman was a fellow servant of the engineer. This case and the Farwell Case, where the engineer was injured by the negligence of his fireman, are in line with an almost unbroken current of authority. In both cases the men worked under a common superior,—the conductor,—and were engaged in the joint performance of the same service. All else that was said by the judges in those cases was obiter dicta and we are not bound to follow them, unless their reasoning is satisfactory to us. In other words, as to obiter dicta we are at perfect liberty to examine the foundations upon which they stand, and if they are found to be unsound or unsafe, and not in accord with the eternal fitness of things, to repudiate them. I will not go into an examination of the reasons of the rule laid down in the Priestley, Murray, Farwell, and McDermott Cases, for I find the subject so exhaustively discussed in the dissenting opinions of the judges in the Murray Case, and the opinions of the court in the case of Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Keary, supra, and the opinion of Lord Cockburn in Dixon v. Ranken, 1 Am. Ry. Cas. 569, that I am not able, and therefore not disposed, to attempt to add anything by way of argument or illustration to what they have said. But if their logic and reasoning upon the state of labor fifty years ago were so cogent and conclusive, with how much more force will they apply now, when we find labor divided and systematized as it never was before, and when not only capital but industries are centralized to an extent not dreamed of a few short years ago. Labor is not only divided and organized, but the laborers are also organized. Every man has his place and his sphere, not fixed alone by the master, but by the joint action of master and servant. The large factories and railway corporations could not transact business except upon the plan of gradations in service, and a strict enforcement of obedience by subordinates to the orders of their superiors. This obedience is given unquestioned. The movements of the thousand employes of a great railway system are carried on with the regularity and precision of the maneuvers of an army, and an employe would no more undertake to discuss the propriety of an order with his superior than a private would that of his captain in the midst of battle. He must yield unquestioned obedience at once, or quit the service. Indeed, such business could proceed upon no other theory. In the progress of society, and the general substitution of ideal and invisible masters and employers for the actual and visible ones of former times in the forms of corporations engaged in varied, detached, and wide-spread operations, "it has been seen and felt that the universal application of the rule [the rule in regard to fellow service] often resulted in hardship and injustice. Accordingly the tendency of the more modern authorities appears to be in the direction and limitation of this rule as shall eventually cast upon the employer, under these circumstances, a due and just share of the responsibility of the lives and limbs of the persons in its employ." Gilmore v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 866. In the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 5 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 265, which involved the identical question decided in the Sullivan Case, the court of appeals of Kentucky, per Chief Justice Robertson, said: "We cannot admit that the appellee's relation as an employe in its service should exempt the corporation from that general liability, as it might perhaps do by the application of a recent rule, adjudged in England with some exceptions, and echoed with more exceptions by a few American courts. But this anomalous rule, even as sometimes qualified, is, in our opinion, inconsistent with principle, analogy, and public policy, and is unsupported by any good and consistent reason. In the use and control of the engine the engineer is the chief and governing agent of the corporation, and all his associates in that employment are employes in a common service. Neither of these subordinates under his control is, as between themselves, an agent of the railway company, and therefore it is not responsible for any damage by one of them to another, while in its service; and so far the British rule has foundation in both reason and analogy, but beyond this it is baseless of any other support than a falsely assumed public policy or implied contract." And, speaking of the relation that section men sustain towards train men, the court adds: "They are not, therefore, in the essential sense of contradistinctive classification, in the same service with the engineer and his running co-operators, who act in a different sphere, and constitute a distinct class. Consequently neither of the assumed reasons for the British rule as to employes in the same service can be in any way consistently applied as between the engineer and such common laborer as the appellee. And the apparent extension of the rule to them may be deemed inadvertent, or not carefully and logically considered with rational discrimination and precision. We can, therefore, neither feel the rationale, nor acknowledge the authority of the crude and self-contradictory decisions or loose and incongruous dicta referred to on that subject. But to harmonize the law we must recognize a more congenial principle of normal vitality, and adjudge, as we do now, that the appellee, in his humble and isolated employment, should be treated as a stranger to the engine as a motive power." Mr. Redfield, in a note to this case, says: "We have felt that the opinion is altogether entirely sound in its principles, and maintained with very uncommon ability in its logic as well as its illustrations, both of which seem altogether unexceptionable." And in a note to the discussion of the Ollins Case in Redfield's work on Railways, (6th ed.) p. 570, it is added: "But the profession should be warned that the decisions on the other side embrace a very large number of the best-considered English cases, and almost an equal number in the American states, including all, so far as we know, with the exception of Illinois, Georgia, and Kentucky. And the decisions in these latter states are all placed on peculiar grounds, thereby virtually confusing the soundness of the general rule that one cannot recover of his employer for an injury inflicted through the want of care of a fellow servant, employed in the same department of the master's business, and under the same general control. The consequences of mistake and misapprehension on this point have led many courts into conclusions greatly at variance with reason and the common instincts of humanity. The reasonableness and justice of this construction may, it is to be hoped, induce its universal adoption at no distant day." And as late as 1888, in Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Ackley, 87 Ky. 278, 12 Am. St. Rep. 480, the court of appeals of Kentucky held that an engineer of a passenger train and those in charge of a freight train were not fellow servants.

In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 127 Ill. 687, it was held that a section hand and those in charge of a construction train were not fellow servants. The court there said: "What co-operation was there, at the time of the injury, it may be asked, between Kelly, who was working as a section hand, under the direction of a section boss, and the conductor and engineer of the construction train? None whatever; and it is claimed they were fellow servants. . . . Under the facts shown in evidence, we think it plain that Kelly was not a fellow servant with those in charge of the construction train." In Nashville & O. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 847, the Supreme Court of Tennessee held that a section foreman is not a fellow servant of men in charge of a train of cars. In Calco v. Charlotte, O. & A. R. Co., 23 S. C. 526, it was held that a "railway locomotive engineer and section master of track repairers are not fellow servants within the rule as to masters' liability for injury by one servant to another." In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 108 Ill. 580, where the plaintiff, who had charge of the section of a road, was injured by a piece of coal falling from a passing train, the Supreme Court of Illinois said: "In the former opinion in this case we held that, in order to constitute servants of the same master fellow servants, within the rule respondens superior, it is not enough they are engaged in doing parts of the same work, or in promotion of the same enterprise, carried on by the master, not requiring co-operation, nor bringing the servants together or into such personal relations that they can exercise an influence upon each other promotive of proper caution in respect to their mutual safety, but it is essential that they shall be at the time of the injury directly co-operating with each other in the particular business in hand, or that their mutual duties shall bring them into habitual consociation, so that they may exercise an influence upon each other promotive of proper caution. We feel constrained to adhere to this ruling." In Copper v. Mullins, 30 Ga. 146, 76 Am. Dec. 638, the Supreme Court of Georgia said: "In this case the person whose negligence produced the injury was on one train of cars, and the person who was injured was on another train, and had not the slightest possible opportunity of preventing the other's carelessness. To hold the employes on different trains of cars responsible for the carelessness of each other seems to me about as reasonable as it would be to exact such a mutual responsibility between employes on different railroads, or in different quarters of the earth, because they might happen to be all servants of the same master." In Hobson v. New Mexico & A. R. Co., (Ariz.) 11 Pac. Rep. 545, the Supreme Court of Arizona held that "a teamster who hauls ties in the construction of a railroad is not consociated with the engine driver of a train on which the workmen ride to dinner, so as to defeat his recovery against the common master for injuries caused by the negligence of the engine driver." In Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., supra, the Supreme Court of West Virginia held that a railway company is liable for the death of the engineer on one train caused by the negligence of its conductor on another train. The circuit court of the United States for Vermont, in 1889, in Howard v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 195, held that track men and train men are not fellow servants, saying: "Track men are no more collaborators with train men than the train men of one train are with those of another train on the same road, and not so much so as train men of the same train are. Those in charge of this train were placed there and clothed with authority by the defendant. They acted for the defendant in the exercise of the control given them over the movements of the train, and their negligence in that behalf appears to be the negligence of the defendant." In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, supra, it was held that the engineer and the conductor of a train were not fellow servants. Justice Field, who delivered the opinion of the majority of the court, after reviewing the English cases in regard to the subject, said: "But notwithstanding the number and weight of such decisions, there are in this country many adjudications of courts of great learning, restricting the exemption to cases where the fellow servants are engaged in the same department, and act under the same immediate control, and holding that, within the reason and principle of the doctrine, only such servants can be considered as engaged in the same common employment."

Thus it will be seen that the Sullivan Case finds support in the courts of the United States,—Kentucky, Georgia, Illinois, Arizona, and West Virginia. It is in line also with the Barry Case, 98 Mo. 62, where it was held by this court that the engineer of a freight train was not a fellow servant of section men. Nor do I regard the Murray Case, 98 Mo. 578, 5 L. R. A. 735, as in conflict with it. Murray was aiding the gripman in running the cable car, and in its operations and movements at the point of the accident evidently ranked the latter in authority. And I think there is a marked distinction to be taken between the Sullivan Case and the case at bar and that class of cases of which Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 875, 88 L. ed. 656, is a type, where the master, his foreman and subordinates are all present and consociated in the performance of general work on board a ship, or in one building or one locality.

I know an attempt is made to distinguish the Schaub Case from the Sullivan Case, but to my mind the distinction tendered is without a difference in principle. The embarrassment the courts encounter in the discussion of the law of fellow service grows out of the difficulty in adopting and adhering to some general principle upon which to proceed. When the principle announced in the earlier cases, that all servants employed and paid by the common master to perform common service were fellow servants, was abandoned, the courts were left apparently with no sound principle by which they could be guided and controlled in concrete cases, and the tendency has been steadily to abrogate the rule of fellow service by the limitation of its application and introducing exceptions to it. Let us examine the Sullivan Case, and see if we can deduce a sound principle from it which can be applied in cases involving injuries resulting to servants from the negligence of other servants, employed by the same master to manage one general business. It is settled law that if a servant, representing his master, or standing in his stead, and being his alter ego, injure another servant of the same master in the performance of the same work, the master is liable upon the principle of respondet superior and the maxim qui facit per alium, facit per se. A laborer is sent to drive a spike to make firm a rail on the railroad, or to fasten a handhold on a freight car, and it is held that his hand in driving the spike or fastening the handhold is the master's hand, upon the principle that the master must furnish a clear track and safe appliances for its servants. The act of the laborer is imputed to the foreman, and through him to the master. So it has been held that one having authority to direct and control men under him represents the master, and the latter is liable for his negligent acts. Sullivan was a track walker, and was killed by the negligence of the employés in charge of a passenger train. It was held they were not fellow servants. Upon what theory? Upon the theory alone that the conductor and those employed with him in running the train represented the master, and stood in his stead. It is said Sullivan's duty was to keep the track clear, and hence he was not performing the same kind of work the train men were performing. He and the train men were engaged in the same general work,—that is, in operating traffic on a railroad. He kept the track clear while the train men ran the train on that same track. They were all employed and paid by the same master to aid in carrying on commerce on the same road, and hence it is illogical to predicate a right to recover in such case upon the ground that Sullivan and the train men were engaged in the performance of different kinds of work. The train men were under the conductor as their immediate superior, and Sullivan was under the section foreman as his immediate superior. The conductor represented the corporation in running the train, and, in contemplation of law, it was present in the person of the conductor. The section foreman, on the other hand, represented the corporation in keeping the track clear and in suitable condition for the safe movement of the train. Hence the train men and section men were not fellow servants; not because they performed different work, but because they performed distinct parts of the same work in different groups, under different foremen. They looked to different individuals for directions in their work. They had no common, immediate superior, to whom they could look or appeal, if need be, for protection. They had no control of each other. They were not consociated in the performance of their duties. So, in the case at bar, Parker worked under the immediate direction of the section foreman, and the construction train was operated under the immediate direction of a conductor. Parker was required to obey the directions of the section foreman, and the train men were required to obey the conductor. They had no common, immediate superior, from whom to receive directions for their work. One group of men was subject to one independent will, while the other group was subject to another independent will. I do not mean that these groups of men were independent of the common master, but simply that they were independent of each other. It is true, the train was hauling material for the section men to use in constructing the roadbed. The train was, however, being operated on the road, and I cannot see why the train men's relation to the section men could be changed simply by what the former hauled. Such a distinction is arbitrary and artificial, and hence unsatisfactory. What did Parker know about the skill of the engineer or conductor in charge of the construction train? What right had he to inquire into the operation of that train? He and those in charge of that train were in no proper sense consociated in the performance of their respective duties. I am fully conscious that ample authority can be found to sustain the position, directly contradictory of the one here maintained; but, finding a conflict of opinions, I prefer to follow that line that more fully accords with my conceptions of justice and the best interests of society and of employers and employés, and now, after another quarter of a century of criticism and discussion in my own state and elsewhere of the law of fellow service, and of the reasons upon which it rests or ought to rest, I quote and heartily indorse the eloquent language of Chief Justice Robertson in the Collins Case, supra, where he says the rule announced "is the only doctrine we can recognize as consistent with the enlightened and homogeneous jurisprudence of its ripening maturity. And, looking back through the mist of the adjudged cases and elementary dicta, we can see no other fundamental principle which can mould them into a consistent or abiding form." I stand squarely by the Sullivan Case, and do not hesitate to apply the principle there announced to the facts of this case, and hold that Parker was not a fellow servant of those in charge of the construction train. I think the case was well tried and the judgment ought to be affirmed.

Brace, J., concurs in the conclusion, and all that part of this opinion that treats of the principle announced in the Sullivan Case.

Barclay, J., delivered the following opinion:

In Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 412, (Nov. 9, 1891, in division No. 1), with the concurrence of Judges Black and Brace, my views of some phases of the law governing the case at bar were given. It is unnecessary to repeat what was then said.

The present case comes closer than that did to the doubtful line, but yet appears to involve the same general principles then touched upon. My brother Black has formulated them with vigor and clearness in his opinion here. My only difference from him now is that, in my judgment, those principles point plainly to an affirmance, instead of a reversal. His summary of the evidence, the instructions asked by defendant at the trial, and its statement and brief in this court, indicate that the facts bearing upon the issue of fellow service are admitted. Hence this court may properly pass upon that issue as one of law only, as did the trial court, and, in my opinion, correctly. That course was followed in Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., (1885,) 25 Fed. Rep. 258, a case which arose in Missouri, though tried in Kansas, which Mr. Justice Miller approved after full consideration. Moreover, as to that phase of the case, such action on the part of the court is but the application of a familiar principle of practice, governing the exercise of the respective functions of court and jury. Applying to the conceded facts the rules of law stated by Judge Black, it seems to me that the judgment should be affirmed.

Emma J. RELYEA, Appt.,

v.

KANSAS CITY, FT. SCOTT & GULF
R. CO. et al., Respts.

(.....Mo.....)

*1. Those are fellow servants who are engaged by the same master and so related and associated in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct and report delinquencies to a common correcting power; but they are not

*Headnotes by BARCLAY, J.

NOTE.—[On the subject treated in this note see also the notes to the two preceding and to the two following cases in this volume.

The injured employé, in the illustrative precedents mentioned, is usually indicated by italics.]

Common service.

Where employés work under the eye or direction of a common superior to whom a ready resort may such if engaged in different and distinct departments of work.

2. Two freight trains were operated by orders of a train dispatcher on the same section of a railroad; some cars of the forward train escaped and ran down grade into collision with the rear train, killing the plaintiff's husband, who was on duty as fireman; the collision resulted from neglect of a brakeman on the forward train to set the brakes on the cars that escaped. Held, that the brakeman and fireman were fellow servants.

3. The conductor of the forward train ordered the brakeman to set out four cars from the train, and, in executing that order, the brakeman left unsecured on the track the remaining cars, which escaped. Held, that the conductor was not bound to follow up the brakeman to see that his orders were correctly executed, and that his omission to do so was not negligence of the company.

4. The rear freight train was running on train dispatcher's orders, ahead of schedule time when the accident occurred, but not on the time of the first train. Held, no evidence of negligence in operating the trains.

5. The evidence reviewed, and held not to support a charge of negligence in respect to the number of brakemen in charge of the forward train.

(Brace and Thomas, JJ., dissent from proposition 2.)

(November 14, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by the actionable negligence of defendants' servants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Crittenden, Stiles & Gilkeson and G. L. Jones, for appellant:

The court erred in holding that the conductor in charge of a section of train No. 54 was a fellow servant with the fireman of train No. 52, in such sense as to relieve the company from the negligence of said conductor in causing his train to be cut on a grade, and insecurely and without any one in charge, so leaving it that it would naturally, and did, run down the grade and collide with the train on which was plaintiff's husband.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787; Au v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 72; Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 258; Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 78 Va. 745, 49 Am. Rep. 401; Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Ackley, 87 Ky. 278, 12 Am. St. Rep. 480; Louisville, O. & L. R. Co. v. Cavens, 9 Bush, 559; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brooks, 88 Ky. 129; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Dick v. I. O. & L. R. Co. 88 Ohio St. 389; Levis v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 59 be had by one for the correction of negligence of a co-employé, they are held fellow servants as in the principal case.

Thus, a brakeman on freight train and the conductor and engineer of another freight train which collided with it, both moved by one train dispatcher. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Reynolds (1892), 50 Fed. Rep. 723, 6 U. S. App. 75.

Brakeman (acting as switchman) of one freight

Mo. 495, 21 Am. Rep. 885; Calvo v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 28 S. C. 526; Hall v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 74 Mo. 298; McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 641, 87 Mo. 285; Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 97 Mo. 118; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 81 Kan. 197; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Fox, 81 Kan. 536; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Geary, 110 Ill. 888; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Crockett, 19 Neb. 188; Mason v. The Edison Mach. Works, 28 Fed. Rep. 228; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Coleman v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. 25 S. C. 446, 60 Am. Rep. 516.

Plaintiff was entitled to have her case go to the jury on the issue that the train, second section of train No. 54, was insufficiently manned to do the work, of cutting the train, side-tracking four of the cars, of securely staying and guarding the portion so cut, while the other portion was being side-tracked.

Fluke v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 18 Am. Rep. 545; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97; Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. 8 Allen, 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720; Jones v. Old Dominion Cotton Mills, 82 Va. 140, 8 Am. St. Rep. 93; Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber, 5 Ohio St. 541; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co. 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 243.

If it should be conceded for the argument's sake that the accident was alone due to the negligence of the brakeman, Short, still in view of the advanced ground modifying the old rule as applied to the vast railroad corporations of the present time, taken by many of the leading courts of this country, and especially in view of the department rule now established in this state by the Parker Case, by the Sullivan Case, by the Dixon Case and other recent decisions of this court, Short, who was on another train and in another department of the service, was not a fellow servant with the plaintiff's husband in such a sense as to deprive her of the right to recover in this action.

Messrs. Wallace Pratt, Frank Hagerman and I. P. Dana, for respondents:

The undisputed testimony showed that the collision was caused by the negligence of a brakeman on the first train. The latter was a fellow servant with the deceased, who was fireman on the second train, and therefore respondent, the common master, was not liable for the latter's death resulting from the collision, and the court properly sustained the demurrer to the evidence.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 224; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 594; McMaster v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 65 Miss. 264, 7 Am. St. Rep. 658; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 479, 27 L. ed. 1004; Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 887, 24 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 448; Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 11 West. Rep. 148, 67 Mich. 61, 81 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 249; Hayes v. Western R. Corp. 8 Cush. 270; Harvey v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 32 N. Y. S. R. 817.

There is no testimony showing that the negligence of the conductor of the first train caused the collision, or that he was negligent in any way. But even if he was negligent, plaintiff cannot recover, for he was a fellow servant with her husband, a fireman on another train.

Easton v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 895; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 8 West. Rep. 887, 105 Ind. 151; McAndrews v. Burns, 39 N. J. L. 117; McMaster v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. and Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. supra.

train, and engineer of a freight locomotive. Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1888), 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008.

A baggage-master on a passenger train in Indiana, and the conductor of another such train. Kerlin v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (1892), 50 Fed. Rep. 185.

Engineer of one train killed in a collision occasioned by negligence of engineer of another, in misinterpreting an order of the train dispatcher, directing movements of both trains. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Donnelly (1882), 88 Va. 563; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Lindamood (Va.) March 24, 1892.

Conductor of a freight train and the engineer of another such train, which collided with the first by negligence of the engineer. Enright v. Toledo, A. & N. M. R. Co. (Mich.) Nov. 4, 1892.

Brakeman and engineer of same train under direction of a conductor. Newport News & M. V. R. Co. v. Howe (1892), 52 Fed. Rep. 362.

This ruling discards earlier Kentucky decisions, to the contrary, in a case arising in that state, as not being correct expositions of general law. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brooks (1885), 83 Ky. 129; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moore (1885), 83 Ky. 675.

Brakeman and engineer upon a freight train, "the conductor being in charge thereof." Railway Co. v. Smith (1890), 89 Tenn. 114.

Cooper v. Mullins (1890), 30 Ga. 146, 76 Am. Dec. 688, arose in 1855 (before the statute, approved March 5, 1856, Laws 1855-56, p. 155, which changed the common-law rule in Georgia as to railroads on this subject), and has been sometimes cited as holding that employes on different trains of the same company are not fellow servants; but a careful reading of the opinion reveals that the judgment was placed on a different ground, it being held by a majority of the court that in the peculiar circumstances of that case the injured engineer was to be regarded as in the service of a different master from that in whose employ the negligent operatives of the colliding train were.

So the stewardess, carpenter, and porter on a steam vessel, though in different departments of service on the vessel, are fellow servants, where "the master or captain was in command of the whole vessel." Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant (1890), 138 U. S. 375, 33 L. ed. 656.

And a cook on a steam-tug and engineer, by whose negligence the tug blew up, "where the master is on board." Grimsley v. Hankins (1891), 46 Fed. Rep. 400.

A "shoveler," belonging to a section gang, was injured by a negligent movement of the locomotive attached to a work train. It was held that the negligence was that of a fellow servant, where the sectionmen "with the engineer, fireman, and brakeman, with this engine and train of cars, were there together, engaged in one common enterprise, that of hauling dirt with the train and filling it in, on the roadbed." Parrish v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. (1891), 28 Fla. 251.

A stone mason and bridge carpenters, "engaged together, at the same place, in a work that required co-operation and such association as would bring them in frequent contact with each other," where they were all participating in the building of a bridge, though the mason was directed by a different foreman from the one superintending the carpenters. Bier v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. (Ind. Sup.) May 24, 1898.

Longshoreman assisting in unloading a cargo, and the operative of the hoisting machinery of the steamship when both were working. McDonough v. Walsh (1892), 49 N. Y. S. R. 361.

That Relyea, the fireman on one train, was a fellow servant with Short, the brakeman on the other train, there can be no doubt under all the authorities.

Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 889.

The Supreme Court of Ohio, which has encroached in its decisions further upon the fellow-servant doctrine, as held by the overwhelming weight of authority in England and this country, than any other appellate court, except that of Kentucky, decided in Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio St. 198, as follows: "A railway company is not liable in damages to a brakeman on one of its trains for injuries sustained by him in a collision of his train with another train of the same company, where the collision occurred by means of the negligence of the conductor or engineer, or both, of such other train; unless it appear that the company was guilty of a want of ordinary care in the selection and employment of an incompetent conductor or engineer, through whose negligence the collision occurred."

See also Naylor v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 801; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 627; Hutchinson v. York, N. & B. R. Co. 5 Exch. 341; Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 197; Nashville, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wheelless, 10 Lea. 741, 15 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 315; Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 20 Or. 285.

While this court has not had the question before it exactly as raised in the case at bar, yet we think the tenor of all of its decisions on the fellow-service question supports our contention.

Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 594; McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 61 Mo. 532; Kersey v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 79 Mo. 362; Murray v. St. Louis Cable & W. R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 785, 98 Mo. 573; Sherrin v. St. Joseph & St. L. R. Co. 103 Mo. 378; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 106 Mo. 74.

In Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 627, a fireman on one train, killed by the negligence of a conductor of another, was held to be a fellow-servant with the latter.

Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562; Hayes v. Western R. Corp. 3 Cush. 270.

And the following cases, although differing somewhat in their facts from this, support our position fully:

Easton v. Houston & T. O. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 895; Naylor v. New York Cent. R. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 801; Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 8 West. Rep. 387, 105 Ind. 151; Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 11 West. Rep. 148, 87 Mich. 61, 81 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 249; Nashville, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wheelless, 10 La. 741, 15 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 315; Harvey v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 32 N. Y. S. R. 817.

The conductor and fireman on different trains, as in this case, come within those definitions of fellow service and common employment as to which all the text-writers and all the courts (except Kentucky) agree.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 224; Randall v. 18 L. R. A.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003; McAndrews v. Burns, 39 N. J. L. 117; Sherrin v. St. Joseph & St. L. R. Co. 103 Mo. 378; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 106 Mo. 74.

An engineer killed through the negligence of a switchman in misplacing switch was held to be a fellow servant of latter.

Naylor v. New York Cent. R. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 801.

To the same effect are the following:

Roberts v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 33 Minn. 218; Brown v. Central Pac. R. Co. 68 Cal. 174; Slattery v. Toledo & W. R. Co. 23 Ind. 83; Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 128 Mass. 10; Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 20 Or. 285; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Henry, 7 Ill. App. 323; Harvey v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 32 N. Y. S. R. 817; Howard v. Dence & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 887, 24 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 448; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Rodd, 38 Ill. App. 627; Peaslee v. Fitchburg R. Co. 153 Mass. 155.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought this suit as the widow of Johnson Relyea to recover damages because of the death of her husband who received injuries while in the employ of the defendant, and from which injuries he died. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, and she took a nonsuit, with leave, etc. In support of this ruling it is insisted that plaintiff's husband received the injuries which caused his death by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant, and for this reason the defendant is not liable. The evidence produced by the plaintiff discloses the following facts: At the time of the accident that part of the plaintiff's road extending from Thayer in a northwest direction for a distance of 138 miles to Springfield constituted a division. Two through freight trains, known as "section 1" and "section 2" of No. 54, left Thayer for Springfield at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. Each of these trains had a conductor and two brakemen, besides an engineer and fireman. They were followed by local freight train No. 52, which had in charge of it a conductor, three brakemen, an engineer, and a fireman. The plaintiff's husband was fireman on the engine of this train 52, which was the last of the three to leave Thayer. The distance from Thayer to a station called "Burnham" is 41 miles, and it is four miles from there to the next station, called "Willow Springs." From Burnham to the latter station there is a down grade for about half the way, and then an up grade to the switch at Willow Springs. Section 2 of train No. 54 was in the rear of section 1, and had fourteen or fifteen cars when it reached Burnham. It took on four more cars at that place. When it reached Willow Springs, the conductor concluded to drop four cars on the switch, because the train was too heavy to haul over the up grade from there to Sterling, the next station; and to that end the engine and four forward cars were uncoupled, leaving the fourteen cars standing on the main track. These fourteen cars ran back of their own momentum towards Burnham, and collided with train 52, which had in the meantime left that station for Willow Springs. It was in this collision that plaintiff's husband received the injuries of which he died. Frank Shea was the conductor, Austin the head, and Short the hind brakeman on section 2 of train 54. The plaintiff called Shea and Austin as witnesses, and they are the only witnesses who have any knowledge of what occurred at Willow Springs. Shea, the conductor, says when he reached Willow Springs with his train he directed Short, the rear brakeman, to cut out four cars; that Short went to assist the engineer in setting them in on the side track; that it was Short's duty to see that the hind end of the train was secured with the brakes. From Austin's testimony it appears section 1 of train 54 was at Willow Springs when section 2 arrived. He and his conductor, Shea, had a conversation at that place on the station platform, in which Shea told him to go on to Sterling, the next station with section 1, and there notify train No. 3, coming from the other direction. This order was given to avoid a collision between No. 3 and section 2. Austin got on the caboose of section 1, and that train started up, and then stopped. It seems the engineer of section 1 refused to take the chances of reaching the next station in time to pass No. 3. Austin then went back to the head of his train, and met Shea and Short, when Shea said: "Go after the hind end; they have run back." He and Short, with the engineer and the four cars, went back after the escaping fourteen cars. These cars ran back because the brakes were not set. It was still very dark when all these things took place at Willow Springs.

1. From the foregoing statement of the facts it is manifest that Short, the hind brakeman on section 2 of train 54, was guilty of negligence in not setting the brakes on some of the fourteen cars before he cut out the four cars. The question then arises whether the brakeman on one of these trains and the fireman on the other were fellow servants within the rule which exempts the master from liability when one servant is injured by the negligence of his coservant. Much has been said on this subject of late in the following cases: Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113; Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 412; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 1119; Schlereth v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 1184. These cases reject the rule of exemption as it is often broadly stated, though less frequently applied, that all are coservants who are engaged by the same master in carrying on some general enterprise, no matter how different and disconnected the work may be. They assert the more reasonable and just rule that they are coservants who are so related and associated in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct, and report delinquencies to a common correcting power; and they are not coservants who are engaged in different and distinct departments of work. They show that track walkers and track repairers and persons operating a stone crusher are not fellow servants with those engaged in operating trains. Now, in this case each servant was under the immediate command of his own conductor. It is true: but that fact does not constitute a decisive or controlling circumstance. Many cases may be instanced where different gangs of men, each gang under the orders of its own foremen, are clearly coservants within the rule of exemption. It does appear in this case that train 52 left Thayer and pursued its trip under the orders of the train dispatcher, and it is fair to presume that the other trains made their trips under orders emanating from the same source. The injured and offending servants were operating trains over the same section of the road. Though sometimes far apart, they were necessarily thrown into close relation in respect to the performance of their work, and they were engaged in the same department of service. They were, in our opinion, coservants, within the fair meaning of the rule of exemption, so that defendant is not liable for injuries inflicted by one upon the other. This case, is, on its unquestioned facts, unlike those above mentioned. It is more like Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 106 Mo. 74. In that case a brakeman was injured by cars standing on a side track. Says the court: "There was no evidence of any negligence in the case of any one except the train men who put the cars on the switch, and for that negligence the company was not liable to the deceased." That case was, in its facts, different from those before mentioned, where the relation of fellow servant was held not to exist, and, in the opinion of the writer, it is not in conflict with them in the conclusion reached on this subject.

2. But it is insisted on the part of the plaintiff that the liability of the defendant may be made to stand on the ground that the conductor of the forward train was an agent and representative of the defendant; that he was guilty of negligence leading to the injury; and that the defendant is liable for his negligence, he being an agent and vice principal of the company. This presents, of course, a different question from that which we have been considering. The first inquiry is, Was there evidence tending to show negligence on his part? If not, that disposes of this whole contention. If Conductor Shea was negligent, it was because he knew, or, in the discharge of his duties, ought to have known, that the 14 cars had not been secured. He was called to the stand by the plaintiff, but not questioned as to the details of the transaction. The only inference that can be drawn from his testimony and the evidence of Austin, the head brakeman, is that Shea was standing on the station platform, and there told Short, the hind brakeman, to cut out the four cars, and place them on the side track. Short undertook to obey this order, but in doing so failed and neglected to set the brakes on the cars left on the main track. There is no evidence in the case tending to show that Shea knew that Short had not secured those cars by setting some of the brakes. The only inference which can be drawn from the evidence is that he was not with Short when the forward cars were cut out. We then come to the further inquiry whether it was his duty to know whether the other cars had been secured. The proof shows, and there is no evidence to the contrary, that it was Short's duty, as hind brakeman, to look out for his end of the train. It was necessary and proper for the conductor to go to the station, and to give orders as to the movement of the train, but it is out of all reason to say that he was in duty bound to follow up each brakeman, and see how each movement was executed. There is, in our opinion, no evidence to show, or tending to show, that the conductor was guilty of any negligence whatever. It is again insisted that the defendant was negligent in that the rear train was run ahead of schedule time by orders from superior officers, without giving the conductor of the forward train notice thereof. The evidence shows that No. 52—the rear train—reached Burnham 48 to 55 minutes ahead of its schedule time, and that it made the gain in time pursuant to orders from superior officers, without notice to the conductor of the forward train. But it also appears that it was no uncommon thing for these trains to run ahead of their schedule time when ordered so to do, and that it was not usual or necessary to notify the conductor of the forward train of that fact. Specials were to be expected at all times. There is no evidence that No. 52 was ordered to run on the time of the forward trains. We do not see any evidence of negligence in this respect. Besides all this, the fact that this train was running in advance of its regular time was not the cause of the accident. The direct and only cause was the negligent act of the brakeman in failing to secure the cars at Willow Springs.

4. The further point is made that defendant was negligent in this, that it did not man the forward train with a sufficient number of brakemen. These trains were operated at a slow rate of speed, not exceeding fifteen miles per hour. Three brakemen were allotted to the local freight trains, because it was necessary to handle cars at the way stations. Two were allotted to the through freight trains, and the proof is that they were sufficient to handle such trains composed of fifteen or eighteen cars. Use could have been made of another brakeman at this particular time, but the fact remains that two brakemen and a conductor constituted the usual and a sufficient crew for all ordinary occasions. There is no proof in the case to justify a conclusion that this train was not manned with a sufficient number of brakemen. It is sufficient to say in conclusion that from the evidence produced by the plaintiff this accident occurred solely by reason of the negligence of the brakeman. The court therefore did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence, and the judgment is affirmed.

18 L. R. A.

Brace and Thomas, JJ., dissent. The other Judges concur; Barclay, J., expressing his views in note below, by him written.

Barclay, J., concurs, except that he does not wish to be understood as approving the judgment in the Schaub Case, 106 Mo. 74.

Thomas, J., dissenting:

I find myself unable to concur in the foregoing opinion. The party killed and the negligent brakeman were not, in my judgment, fellow servants, within the rule that exempts the master from liability for the negligence of a coservant. I think the principle announced in Sullivan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113; Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 412; and Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 1119,—should be applied to and control the decision in this case. The rule, I concede, was not, in those cases, formulated in the same language by the four concurring judges, but the principle upon which the rule was made to rest was announced by all substantially alike. Judge Barclay, in the Dixon Case, in holding a railroad company liable for the death of a workman engaged in its quarry, caused by the negligence of one of its engineers, said, "the master had seen fit to place the deceased quarryman and the train men under supervision and management totally apart from each other. They were not acting under the same immediate control." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, (1888,) 127 U. S. 208, 32 L. ed. 108. Each looked to a different individual as the master's representative for directions in his work, and had no practical connection with the superior who guided and supervised the acts and conduct of the other." Judge Black, in the Parker Case, in holding the company liable for the death of a trackman, caused by the negligence of the engineer, stated the rule with great terseness and precision thus: "Guided by the real reason for the rule, it seems to us it should be applied, and applied only, in those cases where the servant injured and the one inflicting the injuries are so associated and related in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct, and can report delinquencies to a common correcting power or head. In short, they should be fellow servants in fact, and not simply in dialectic theory. If in separate and distinct departments, so that the circumstances just stated do not and cannot exist, then they are not fellow servants, within any just and fair meaning of the rule." (The italics in these extracts are mine.) And in the opinion in this case the rule is again stated in substantially the same language. The rule, as stated by myself in the Parker Case, and in which Judge Brace concurred, is this: "The train men and section men were not fellow servants; not because they performed different work, but because they performed distinct parts of the same work, in different groups, under different foremen. They looked to different individuals for directions in their work. They had no common, immediate superior, to whom they could look or appeal, if need be, for protection. They had no control of each other. They were not consociated in the performance of their duties." In these extracts we find a difference in the statement, but not in the principle and grounds, of the rule. A distinction is attempted to be made between laborers in different departments of service, but I think the distinction is wholly an artificial one, and cannot be upheld without abandoning all the grounds on which the rule is made to rest. If those are not fellow servants who are not "so associated and related in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct, and can report delinquencies to a common correcting power or head," or who do not act "under the same immediate control," why should the liability or nonliability depend on the nature of the work done? Why hold a railroad company liable when a section man is injured by the negligence of an engineer, or when a trackman, who tamps rock under the rails and ties, is injured by the negligence of an engineer, who is engaged in hauling the rock thus being tamped, on the ground that these employes are not so associated and related in their work, under a common, immediate superior, as to observe and have an influence over each other's conduct, and let the company escape liability where the fireman on one train is injured by the negligence of a brakeman on another, when they are not so associated and related in their work, under a common, immediate superior, as to observe and have an influence over each other's conduct? I must confess I am unable to see or appreciate the distinction. This distinction cannot be based on the ground of public policy, general convenience, or expediency, for that would apply to all, without regard to the departments of the service or rank among the employes; and, besides that, I think this court has repudiated that ground as a support for the rule of exemption. The distinction cannot be made to rest on an implied contract of the assumption of risks, for that, like the other, would apply to all employes, without regard to rank, and without regard to the departments of service. I prefer to rest the rule on the grounds, fairly deducible, in my opinion, from the cases above named, i. e., upon such association of employes in the master's work, under a common, immediate superior, to whom they can look for protection, as that they can observe the conduct of each other, and mutually encourage and influence each other in the careful and faithful performance of that work. Thus far I feel justified in going from a consideration of the decisions and grounds of decisions in the Sullivan, Dizon, and Parker Cases, alone; but my position finds support elsewhere, for to such limitation of the rule of exemption on the ground of fellow service as herein stated the judicial mind seems to be trending, as illustrated in the following cases: Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Ackley, 87 Ky. 278, 12 Am. St. Rep. 480; Cooper v. Mullins, 30 Ga. 146, 76 Am. Dec. 638; Hobson 18 L. R. A.

v. New Mexico & A. R. R. Co. (Ariz.) 11 Pac. Rep. 545; Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 610, 57 Am. Rep. 695; and Howard v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 195.

Let us apply the rule thus announced to the facts of the case in hand. (1) Relyea and the rear brakeman on the forward train were not consociated in their work, so they could observe each other's acts, and have an influence over each other's conduct. They were miles apart. (2) They did not work under a common, immediate superior. They were under the direction and control of independent conductors, not, it is true, independent of their common superior, but simply independent of each other. And, conceding the propriety of reporting delinquencies, they had no opportunity of reporting the misconduct of each other, nor did they have a common, immediate superior, to whom they could have reported, had they so desired, each being under the supervision and control of an independent and separate conductor. Hence every ground on which the rule announced by a majority of this court in the Sullivan, Dizon, and Parker Cases is made to rest is here wanting, and yet the defendant company is exempted from liability on the ground that the rule applies to co-servants engaged in the same line or kind of service, without regard to consociation in their work or common supervision and control. It seems to be assumed, though not expressly, in the opinion of the court, that liability would have attached in this case if the death of Relyea had been caused by the negligence of the conductor of the forward train. I pause to inquire upon what theory such liability can be predicated. As to deceased, the conductor and members of the crew of that train occupied the same relation as to rank, precisely, and no other. None of them had any control or authority to direct the movements of the conductor and members of the crew of the rear train. Here were two distinct groups of men, controlled and directed by two conductors wholly independent of each other, not consociated in their work, and widely separated by distance. But these distinct, and, as to each other, independent, groups were under the control of a common superior, said in the opinion to be the train dispatcher, and, if he was the common, immediate superior, not only of the conductors, but also of the other members of the crew, and the firemen and brakemen of these trains were required to look for orders and directions, not to their respective conductor, but to the train dispatcher, then, according to the reason of the rule, it logically follows that the conductor of the forward train, with the members of his crew, was a fellow servant of deceased; nay, more, the conductor of the rear train would likewise be his fellow servant. That the latter proposition is not the law I think will be conceded without argument or citation of authority, and the correctness of the former seems in the opinion to be denied, at least by implication; and yet defendant is exempted from liability, apparently, because the injury resulted from the negligence of one servant holding the same rank in one crew that the deceased held in the other, both being engaged in the same line or kind of service, i. e., both being engaged in the operation of trains. But, according to the adjudged cases, nonliability cannot be predicated upon the rank alone of the offending and injured servants. It is true the offending servant here was a subaltern, but so were the engineers in the Sullivan, Dixon, and Parker Cases subalterns,—that is, they were inferior in rank in the groups in which they respectively did service; and yet in those cases it was not supposed that the master was, therefore, exempted from liability. They had charge of their engines, subject to the order of their conductors; and the hind brakeman of the forward train in this case had charge of the fourteen cars, subject to the orders of his conductor. In neither case was the conductor required or expected to go and personally see that the engine was properly managed on the one hand, or the brakes properly set on the other. The engineers and brakemen were required to perform their duties without direct, immediate, and constant oversight. If the master is present in the persons of his engineers, and their negligent acts are his, why is he not present also in the persons of his brakemen, and why are their negligent acts in setting brakes not his? If an engineer under the control of the conductor is the agent of the master in the management of that part of the train (the engine) of which he has charge, upon what principle can it be said the brakeman in this case, under the control of the conductor, was not the agent of the master in his conduct in relation to that part of the train (the fourteen cars) committed to his charge? Whose act was that brakeman's act in setting the brakes on these fourteen cars? It certainly was not the conductor's for it is conceded that "it is out of all reason to say that he [the conductor] was in duty bound to follow up each brakeman, and see how each movement was executed;" nor was it the brakeman's act alone, for he did not own the road nor the cars, but was simply acting under orders for the owner. Then, whose act was it? Beyond controversy it was the act of the company. The company ran the train, and it would be absurd to say that it, through its engineer, opens and closes the throttle of the engine, and opens and closes the valve of the whistle, but it has nothing to do with setting and loosening the brakes, or that the order of the conductor to set the brakes is the order of the company, but the act of setting them in obedience to its order is not its act. Following, therefore, the rule, and the true reason of the rule, as heretofore stated by four of the seven judges of this court, I have no hesitancy in saying that the offending and injured servants in this case were not fellow servants, and the judgment ought to be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial. I am authorized to say that Brace, J., concurs with me in these views.

18 L. R. A.

William RUSS, Resp.,
v.

WABASH WESTERN R. CO., Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

- *1. Plaintiff was one of a section gang on a hand-car under orders of the section foreman; the latter had placed an empty keg on the car before it started, and after sitting upon the keg awhile, arose, while the car was moving, and began to help the men operating the levers, leaving the keg, unsecured, near the front end of the car; the keg soon fell off and threw the hand-car from the track, inflicting injury on plaintiff. Held, that the foreman was charged with the master's duty of reasonable care for the safety of the workmen, and that the above facts tended to show negligence in the performance of that duty, in the circumstances stated in the opinion.
2. The foreman in the case above stated was not a fellow servant with the plaintiff.
3. In the discharge of the master's duties toward the men in his employ, the master is liable for negligent acts of his representative as well as for negligent orders of the latter.
4. It is error to permit the submission to experts of hypothetical questions, assuming facts which the evidence does not tend to establish.
5. Such error is not cured by subsequent action of the adverse party in submitting other hypothetical questions, similarly objectionable.

(November 14, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for St. Charles County

*Headnotes by BARCLAY, J.

NOTE.—(On the points discussed in this note, see also the notes to the three cases preceding and to the next one following.

Italics are used in noting cases to point out the party injured in each instance.)

Negligent superiors.

1.

In the cases following, the courts (except as otherwise stated) have held the master liable for injuries sustained by one employé by reason of negligence of a superior in rank, and thus that they were not fellow-servants:

Laborers in a mine and the "mine boss" or superintendent in general charge of the mining operations. Ryan v. Bagaley (1893), 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 38; Rima v. Rossie Iron Works (1890), 120 N. Y. 433; Quincy Coal Co. v. Hood (1875), 77 Ill. 68. But such a "boss" with power to hire and discharge and a miner under his orders were held fellow servants in Gilmore v. Oxford Iron & N. Co. (N. J.) Nov. 8, 1892, and in Haley v. Keim (Pa.) Oct. 3, 1892.

A carman in a mine and the foreman in charge of the mine were held not fellows in Kalley v. Cable Co. (1897), 7 Mont. 70.

Carpenter employed to work at a coal mine, and the mine foreman under whose orders the former was placed. Miller v. Union Pac. R. Co. (1892), 4 McCrary, 115.

"Top-Miller" in a blast furnace, and the head engineer under whose orders the former was working when injured. Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. (1891), 89 Mich. 387.

in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant's servant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. H. Lehmann and George S. Grover, for appellant:

The demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained, as the evidence simply disclosed the happening of an unfortunate accident without any fault whatever on the part of the defendant.

Lee v. Detroit Bridge & Iron Works, 62 Mo. 565; Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 312; Bowen v. Chicago, B. & K. O. R. Co. 14 West. Rep. 744, 95 Mo. 268; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 91, and cases cited; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 106 Mo. 74; Steffenson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) Feb. 1, 1892; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Lemon (Tex.) Jan. 26, 1892.

For a purely accidental occurrence, causing damage without the fault of the person to whom it is attributable, no action will lie, for though there is damage the thing amiss, the injuria, is wanting.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 91, and cases cited.

Messrs. Nat. C. Dryden and T. J. Rowe, for respondent:

Plaintiff made a prima facie case.

Louisville & N. E. Co. v. Northington (Tenn.) 16 L. R. A. 268; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 14, 41 Am. Rep. 298; McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 641, 87 Mo. 287; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Hoke v. St. Louis, K. & N. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 69, 88 Mo. 369.

The proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries was the carelessness and negligence of Wm. Bizenberger, a section foreman, under whom plaintiff was working, in placing a water keg on the front part of a hand-car, and in failing and neglecting to secure and fasten same so that it would not fall in front of the car, and in promising to sit on same so that it would not fall off, and after such promise neglecting to hold the keg on the car by sitting upon it and thereby allowing it to fall in front of car, derail the car and without notice or warning to plaintiff throw him off the car on his head.

Miller v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 122, 90 Mo. 389; Weber v. Kansas City C. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 822, 100 Mo. 194; Forney v. Geldmacher, 75 Mo. 113.

Wm. Bizenberger was not plaintiff's fellow servant. He was defendant's vice principal.

Gulf, O. & F. S. R. Co. v. Wells (Tex.) June 2, 1891; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 14, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Patton v. Western N. O. R. Co. 96 N. C. 463; McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 641, 87 Mo. 287; Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, 60 Mich. 501; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hawk, 10 West. Rep. 137, 121 Ill. 259; Gilmore v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 866; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Hoke v. St. Louis & N. W. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 69, 88 Mo. 369; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Northington (Tenn.) 16 L. R. A. 268.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover damages because of personal injuries received by the plaintiff while in the employ of the defendant company. The plaintiff and four other persons were section hands, and were all under the orders of one Bizenberger, who was Head "tracklayer," having power to hire, discharge and direct men, and a section man, injured in consequence of negligence of former in overloading flat cars with laborers, etc. Colorado M. R. Co. v. O'Brien (1891), 16 Colo. 219.

"Chief foreman" of a gang of laborers, where one of the latter was hurt by the negligent movement of a locomotive by order of the foreman. Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. (1891), 129 Ind. 268.

Section foreman and a laborer, riding together on a hand-car, where the latter was hurt by the negligent act of the former in suddenly checking the car without warning, thus bringing it into collision with one closely following it. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson (1892), 51 Fed. Rep. 182, 4 U. S. App. 674. [But Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. (1892), 130 Ind. 321, is to the contrary.]

The foreman of railroad repair shops and a section-hand, working in a wrecking crew under orders of the former. Borgman v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. (1890), 41 Fed. Rep. 667, per Brewer and Shiras, JJ.

A foreman in charge of the building of a railroad trestlework and a laborer under his orders. (Caldwell, Ch. J., and Thayer, J.; Hallett, J., dissenting). Woods v. Lindvall (1891), 4 U. S. App. 49, 48 Fed. Rep. 62. [But the same case had previously been decided to the contrary by the Supreme Court of Minnesota. Lindvall v. Woods (1889), 4 L. R. A. 793, 41 Minn. 212, 30 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 339, with valuable note on this general subject.]

Foreman, who prepares material for use and directs laborers in their work, and laborer under him held not co-servants. Sullivan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.) 1892.

18 L. R. A.

In Coyne v. Union Pac. R. Co. (1890), 133 U. S. 370, 33 L. ed. 651, it is assumed that a foreman of a section gang is not to be regarded as a fellow servant of the laborers under his direction; but the court finds that there was no negligence on the part of the foreman in that case. On this latter point compare Gulf, O. & F. S. R. Co. v. Brentford (1891), 79 Tex. 619.

A section laborer, loading poles under direction of the assistant roadmaster, is not a fellow servant of the latter. Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (1890), 7 L. R. A. 623, 79 Mich. 409, 41 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 368, with note.

Conductor of switching crew injured in a switch frog, left unblocked by negligence of the yard master. Ashman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1892), 90 Mich. 567.

Laborer on gravel train and the foreman and conductor of the train; former hurt in obeying order of latter. Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. (Mich.) Nov. 4, 1892.

Section laborer and the assistant roadmaster, directing the former and others in unloading rails from cars. Palmer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (Mich.) Oct. 27, 1892.

Roadmaster and sectionman of his working crew. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson (1891), 43 Fed. Rep. 57, 4 U. S. App. 25.

Section foreman and laborer under his direction, injured, while on a hand-car, which collided with an extra train. Gregory v. Ohio River R. Co. (1893), W. Va.

Foreman in charge of removing a barge from the water, and laborer in his crew, injured by breaking of defective rope selected by foreman. Lund v. Hersey Lumber Co. (1890), 41 Fed. Rep. 202.

their foreman. The foreman and his men, including the plaintiff, were out on the road at work at a point west of O'Fallon. Preparatory to going east to O'Fallon, they placed their tools and a water keg on a hand-car, and then started. The keg was large enough to hold ten gallons, and on their way it rolled off in front of the car. It threw the car and the plaintiff and the other men off the track, and he was seriously and permanently injured. He was removed to a hospital in St. Louis, where he remained five days. At the expiration of that time he went to the defendant's office in St. Louis, where he executed a writing, whereby, for the consideration of one dollar and re-employment by defendant for such time only as might be satisfactory to defendant, he released defendant from all claims he might have for damages because of the injuries so received. The defendant answered by setting up, among other things, the release. To this the plaintiff made reply by admitting that he executed the same, and by alleging that at the time he signed it his mind was so impaired from the injuries which he had received that he did not know what he was signing. The complaint, and the only one, arising out of the pleadings and trial, as to this particular issue, is that the court erred in admitting certain expert evidence. The plaintiff produced several physicians, and his counsel propounded to them lengthy hypothetical questions, one covering seven pages of printed matter. The defendant objected to this question on the ground that it assumed facts not proved, and because it was wholly incompetent. In stating the facts from which the witness is asked to give his professional opinion, the question sets out at great detail the incidents and circumstances which it is assumed occurred at the defendant's office at the time the contract was signed. There was no evidence produced in the cause showing, or tending to show, that such incidents and circumstances occurred, and for this reason the question should have been excluded. Counsel, in propounding a hypothetical question to an expert witness, may assume any state of facts which the evidence tends to establish, and may vary the questions so as to cover and present the different theories of fact. But there must be evidence in the case tending to establish all of the facts stated in the question. If the question assumes any fact which the evidence does not tend to prove, it should be excluded. Rogers says: "To allow, on the direct examination, a hypothetical question to be put which assumes a state of facts not warranted by the testimony, is error, and counsel will never be permitted to embrace in one hypothetical question anything which the testimony does not either prove or tend to prove." Rogers, Expert Testimony, 2d ed. § 27. The following cases and many others are to the same effect: Williams v. Brown, 28 Ohio St. 547; Muldoney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 39 Iowa, 615.

Again, the question does not, in many respects, state the facts, but leaves it to the expert witness to say what the facts are, that is to say whether the witnesses testified to the truth. Thus it states that the plaintiff appeared at the railroad office five days after the reception of the injury, with a letter signed by the physician in charge of the hospital, "which physician says he never Master mechanic in charge of car shops and a machinist, injured by negligence of the former in pulling an "equalizer" out of its proper position. Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. (1899), 6 L. R. A. 584, 121 Ind. 124, 41 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 437, with note.

A locomotive engineer and the train dispatcher who directed the movements of the train on which the former was on duty. McCheesney v. Panama R. Co. (1892), 49 N. Y. S. R. 148.

2.

On the other hand, in the following instances, the courts have ruled that superior servants were co-employees of the others named.

A blacksmith and an assistant to the superintendent, who was, at the time, working along with the blacksmith in a gang of men, putting in a splice block of a railroad crossing. McBride v. Indianapolis F. & S. Co. (Ind. App.) Nov. 29, 1892.

Superintendent of a reservoir company and a workman injured by the fall of a derrick. McGinty v. Athol Reservoir Co. (1892), Mass.

Foreman of a gang and a laborer under his orders, injured by negligence of the former. Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (1891, N. Dak.) 12 L. R. A. 97. This case furnishes a number of illustrations of rulings on this subject.

In Texas, conductor and brakeman of the same train (Corona v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex.) Oct. 21, 1891); a laborer and the engineer and conductor of the train (Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Arispe (1891), 81 Tex. 517) were held fellow servants, in cases arising before the "Fellow Servants" Act of 1891 (Gen. Laws, 1891, chap. 24) by which persons intrusted with command or control of others are not fellow servants with the latter; and persons employed in different departments of service are not fellows.

Brakeman on freight train, and the conductor and engineer of the same train, in South Carolina. (Hovis v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (Ga.) Oct. 17, 1892); but in Kentucky a contrary rule prevails in the state court, where a brakeman and conductor of the same train under whose orders the former was, are held not fellows. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Jameson (Ky.) Oct. 18, 1892.

The foreman of a laboring gang who negligently directed a laborer to use a defective chain, which broke and injured the latter was held a co-servant. Kinney v. Corbin (1890), 132 Pa. 841.

Also the captain of "dredge" boat, having power to employ men, and to direct operations of the boat and crew, and a deck hand on the dredge. O'Brien v. American Dredging Co. (1891), 58 N. J. L. 291, citing many earlier decisions.

Mate of vessel, in sole charge at the time, and lumper (laborer) engaged in unloading cargo. Sanderson v. Smith (1882), 8 N. S. Wales, L. R. 31. But the contrary was ruled in Brown v. Sennett, 68 Cal. 225, 58 Am. Rep. 8, somewhat criticised in Congrave v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1891), 88 Cal. 370.

The captain and one of his crew on board ship while at sea were held fellow servants in Hedley v. v. Pinkney & Sons, 8 S. S. Co. (1892), L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 58, and in Gabrielson v. Waydell (1892), 135 N. Y. 1, by a majority of the court.

Foreman of quarry and laborer, drilling rock for blasting purposes, injured by negligence of the former in omitting to remove an unexploded charge from a drill hole. Cullen v. Norton (1891), 128 N. Y. 1 (Ruger, Ch. J., and O'Brien, J., dissenting).

wrote the letter." "He acted and talked, so Austin says, rationally, stating," etc. "Probably nineteen days after the reception of the injuries he marries, of which he claims to have no knowledge whatever." It was the duty of the jury not of the expert witness, to say whether the physician wrote the letter, whether plaintiff talked rationally, and whether the plaintiff did not know of his marriage. The question should state that the physician did not write the letter, that plaintiff talked rationally on the one occasion, and that he did not know of his marriage. It is the province of the jury to say what the facts are, and the answer of the expert is of no value whatever if the jury do not believe the assumed facts to be true. If the assumed facts are found to be true by the jury, then the answer of the expert becomes of value. Hence it is that the assumed facts should be stated as facts, so that the jury can consider or reject the opinion of the expert, accordingly as they may find the assumed facts to be true or false.

The interrogatory under consideration is bad for the further reason that it parades before the jury a vast number of immaterial circumstances; circumstances which, if true, have no tendency whatever to show that the mind of the plaintiff was sound or unsound. Coupling into a question so many immaterial circumstances must have a tendency to mislead the jury into the belief that these immaterial matters are of some value. The plaintiff insists that the question propounded to the expert was not erroneous, in so far as it assumed unproved facts, because counsel for defendant in his opening statement to the jury said he expected to prove the particular facts, and because there were depositions on file which tended to establish the assumed facts. As the depositions were not read in evidence, they furnished no proof of the assumed facts. Statements made by an attorney, at the opening of the trial, as to what he expects to prove, do not amount to admission. They bind no one. For the error in allowing this and some other like questions the judgment must be reversed. It may be added that the fact that defendant in putting in its evidence committed a like error does not cure the error committed at the instance of the plaintiff in making out his case.

2. The case was submitted to the jury on the second ground of negligence, wherein it is stated that the plaintiff was injured in consequence of want of care and caution of the foreman in failing to secure the water keg on which he had been sitting, and which keg he negligently knocked off of the car, or negligently permitted to fall off, while the car was in motion. The evidence is to the effect that the foreman had power to and did employ and discharge the men constituting his gang, and that he had full control of the work and the men under him. A west-bound train was nearly due, and hence the foreman directed the men to go to O'Fallon. In obeying this order the men placed their tools on the hand-car. The plaintiff testified that Crews, another laborer, picked up the keg, and started to place it on the car between the handles, when the foreman said:

"Set it in front; I will take care of it." Crews testified that he started to put the keg between the handles on the car, when the foreman said: "Let me have it; I want it to sit on." The keg was used by the gang for the purpose of carrying water. It was placed on the front end of the car, and the foreman used it as a seat for a time. After they had moved some 300 yards, the foreman gave the order, "Put her through, boys." He at the same time jumped up, and commenced "pumping;" that is, assisting the men in propelling the car. At this moment one of the men who was at the rear lever said: "The keg is falling off; catch it." Plaintiff was operating the forward lever, but his back was in the direction in which the car was moving. The keg fell off in front of the car, causing the car to leave the track producing the injuries complained of.

The first contention is that the defendant's demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained, because the evidence shows, and only tends to show, an unfortunate accident, without any fault or negligence on the part of the foreman. We are of a contrary opinion. The foreman had caused the keg to be placed at the front end of the car. He used it as a seat, and, of course, knew that he left it unsecured when he got up. It stood at a place where it was liable to roll off in front by reason of the jostling of the car. We think the jury might well find that he was negligent in leaving the keg in its then position without in any way securing it.

The further point is made that, even if the foreman was negligent in leaving the keg unsecured when he got up to assist the men in propelling the car, he was not then in the performance of any duty which the law imposed upon the defendant, and that, therefore, the defendant is not liable; that as to this negligent act he was not the representative of the defendant, but was simply the fellow servant of the plaintiff. There can be no doubt but the foreman was the vice principal of the defendant, for he had the power conferred upon him to employ and discharge the men under him, and he had full control of the work and movements of the men. In the performance of the duties devolved upon him as foreman, he was not a co-servant with the plaintiff, but was a representative of the defendant. His negligent acts, done in the performance of duties devolved upon him as foreman, were the negligent acts of the defendant, and for such negligence the defendant is liable. William Bros. v. Cartter, 53 Mo. 372; Gormly v. Vulcan Iron Works, 61 Mo. 492; Cook v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 63 Mo. 398; Sullivan v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 107 Mo. 66. When speaking upon this subject, this court said, in substance, in Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 85 Mo. 588, that they are "co-laborers" who are engaged in the same common work without rank, either under the direction and management of the master himself or of some servant of the master placed over them. He is a vice principal who is intrusted by the master with power to superintend and control the workmen engaged in the performance of the work. That case has been followed, and the rule there asserted applied, in a number of subsequent cases, under a variety of circumstances. Hoke v. St. Louis & N. W. R. Co. 48 Mo. 860, 4 West. Rep. 69; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 221; Smith v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 359, 8 West. Rep. 729; Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 98 Mo. 79, 11 West. Rep. 458. In the most of these cases the negligent act of the agent consisted in giving some order by the foreman or superintendent, but the principle of liability is not confined to negligent orders. The liability may arise from the negligent performance of some work done by the foreman or superintendent. Thus where a master provides suitable materials for a staging, and intrusts the duty of erecting it to the workmen as a part of the work which they undertake to perform he is not liable for injuries resulting to one of them from the falling of the staging; but, if the master undertakes to furnish the staging, he must use due care in its erection; and, if there is negligence on his part or the part of one representing him in that respect, he is liable for injuries resulting to the servant using the structure. Whalen v. Centenary Church of St. Louis, 62 Mo. 327; Bowen v. Chicago, B. & O. R. Co. 95 Mo. 277, 14 West. Rep. 744; and cases there cited. In the recent case of Duyharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 108

Mo. 574, one Stephens had charge of the engine in the roundhouse, and of the men necessary to assist him in the work. He with his own hand ran an engine upon one of the men under him, and it was held that the injured employé could recover. There are cases where the agent's authority to represent the master is limited, but that is not the present case. As to this gang of men, the foreman represented the defendant to the fullest extent. He took his seat on the keg on the front end of the car, so as to look ahead and to observe the track as he passed over it; and this was in the line of his duty as foreman. It was also his duty to look out for the safety of the men who were engaged in propelling the car; and, if he saw fit and proper to assist the men, it was still none the less his duty to continue to care for their safety. Such a negligent act as that here complained of cannot be separated from negligence in the performance of other delegated powers.

8. There is the further objection that the third instruction given at the request of the plaintiff is erroneous, in this: that it enlarges the issues made by the pleadings. We need not enter into any discussion of this objection, since it can be easily avoided on another trial.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

All concur.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (First Div.).

Louis SCHROEDER, Rept.,

v.

CHICAGO & ALTON R. CO., Appl.

(108 Mo. —.)

*1. When plaintiff submits evidence to sustain his burden of proof, the defendant, though offering nothing to contradict it, is entitled to have the jury determine its credibility.

*Headnotes by BARCLAY, J.

2. It is part of the personal duty of the master to give direction to the work he undertakes, and to prescribe a system for conducting it. This may be done by rules, when necessary, or by the personal guidance of managers and foremen. In so doing the master must use ordinary care for the safety of his employes.

3. A foreman is not a fellow servant of a man under his orders, in respect to his performance of the master's duty of directing the work in his charge.

NOTE. [On the subject of this note, compare also notes to the four preceding cases. The servant injured in the cases cited is indicated generally by italics.]

Superior employes.

Where one employé is injured by the carelessness of another, resulting from the master's negligent omission to give reasonable and necessary direction to the work, e. g. by means of rules, the party injured has been held in many cases to have a right of action.

Thus a defective "system," or mode of conducting the practical workings of a railroad may be actionable if injury results therefrom, though the immediate damage should be caused by the act of a fellow servant. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall (1890), 78 Tex. 657; Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891), 124 N. Y. 498.

So where a car repairer, injured by the movement of a switch-engine by other employes against the car on which he was at work, in consequence (as was found) of negligence in omitting to have reasonable rules for the management of the railway business was allowed a recovery in Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891), 128 N. Y. 662. To same effect, upon somewhat similar facts is Wild v. Ore- gon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. (1891), 21 Or. 159. See also Smith v. Baker (1891), L. R. App. Cas. 323.

Where one servant was caught in a snarl in the fall of a winch on shipboard, and a co-employé, in charge of the winch attempted to stop it, but, in his excitement, hastened its motion, whereby the former was hurt, the master was held liable in admiralty, because the injury was due to the fact that the place where the men were working was insufficiently lighted. Nelson v. The Manhattan (1892), 53 Fed. Rep. 843.

So also the master has been held answerable by some courts for negligent direction of his work through the intervention of managers, superintendents, foremen, and other controlling servants, as well as in respect of rules, etc. In such instances the directing employé and the injured subordinate have been held not to be fellow servants.

On this point Judge McCrary, in Gravelle v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1892), 8 McCrary, 362 stated the rule thus: "Fellow servants, within the meaning of the law, are such as are employed in the same service and subject to the same general control. But if a railroad company sees fit to invest one of its servants with control or superior authority over another with respect to any particular part of its business, the two are not, with respect to such business, fel-

4. A servant assumes all ordinary risks of his employment, but not unknown perils arising from negligent direction of the work. The latter are not usual risks of the service.
5. An employe is bound to use ordinary care to avoid dangers that arise, whether usually incident to the service or not.
6. Persons are justified in assuming greater risks to protect human life than would be sanctioned in other circumstances.
7. Obedience to an order involving personal danger cannot be declared negligent in law unless the danger was so glaring that no prudent person in like situation would have obeyed.
8. It is not error to refuse requests to instruct, where the findings for which they call are necessarily embraced in the verdict upon the instructions given.
9. Plaintiff was one of a section gang under a foreman. On the way to work, while riding on a hand-car, they saw a passenger train approaching on the same track. The gang, under the lead of the foreman, attempted to get the car off, but when the engine was some 60 feet distant the foreman ordered the men to "get out of the way." Plaintiff had not reasonable time to escape, and was struck by the hand-car when it was thrown off by the engine. Held, that the questions of negligent direction by the foreman and of contributory negligence of plaintiff were for the jury.

(February 8, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Saline County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.
Mr. Samuel Boyd, for appellant:

The evidence shows that plaintiff's injury was occasioned by his own negligence, directly contributing to his injury and that the negligence charged in the plaintiff's petition was not the proximate cause of his injury.

low servants within the meaning of the law. One is, in such a case, subordinate to the other, and the superior stands in the place of the corporation."

In Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. (1892), 130 Ind. 321, a number of definitions of fellow service are given and the criterion thereof, as to servants of different rank, said to be "determined by an inquiry into the nature of the service at the particular time in question. If, at the time the offending servant was injured, he was in the performance of a duty which the master owed to his servants, he was not a fellow servant. . . . On the other hand, if, at the time of the alleged negligence, the servant was not engaged in the performance of a duty which the master owed to his servants, but was in the discharge of a duty which the servant acting owed to the master, he will be held to be a fellow servant with others engaged in the same common business."

In the following cases the servants named have been held not co-employees:

Derrick-man of a wrecking gang, and the road-master directing its operations. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson (1891), 48 Fed. Rep. 57, 4 U. S. App. 25.

Foreman of a wrecking crew and one of the latter, injured by negligent direction of the former. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hawk (1887), 121 Ill. 259.

Pit boss and miner, hurt by negligence in the former in failing to take reasonable precautions 18 L. R. A.

Hudson v. Wabash & W. R. Co. 101 Mo. 31; Steffen v. Mayer, 96 Mo. 423; Milburn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 86 Mo. 109; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hester, 72 Tex. 40.

Plaintiff knew the danger and assumed the risk.

See Cummings v. Collins, 61 Mo. 520; Aldridge v. Midland Blast F. Co. 78 Mo. 559; Steffen v. Mayer and Hudson v. Wabash & W. R. Co. supra.

The evidence showed that plaintiff's injuries occurred in attempting to take the hand-car off the track, after the hand-car had been stopped, and plaintiff had got off of it, and that the negligent running of the hand-car was not the proximate cause of his injury.

O'Brien v. Western Steel Co. 100 Mo. 189; Gurley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 12 West. Rep. 330, 93 Mo. 450.

The petition does not charge negligence in removing the hand-car, and the action is not based upon such negligence.

Buffington v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 64 Mo. 246; Ely v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 34; Werner v. Citizen's R. Co. 81 Mo. 373.

The section men had hold of the car to remove it, and while they had hold of it, the foreman ordered them to let the car alone and get out of the way, and all but plaintiff did get out of the way; the man who was beside plaintiff got 30 feet off before hand-car was struck.

The fact that plaintiff stumbled and fell is not charged to be negligence in defendant.

See International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hester, 72 Tex. 40; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Estes, 37 Kan. 715; Parker v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. 83 Ga. 539. Messrs. Davis & Wingfield and Alf. F. Rector, for respondent:

The question of contributory negligence by plaintiff was submitted to the jury under proper instructions, and the finding was against the defendant, and the finding was conclusive.

against fall of roofing of the mine. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Wombacher (1890), 134 Ill. 57.

Train dispatcher, directing movement of trains, and a locomotive fireman employed on one of such trains. Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (1890), 7 L. R. A. 500, 78 Mich. 513.

A railroad laborer and the foreman in obeying whose negligent order the former was injured. Stackman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1891), 80 Wis. 428.

Elevator man and another employe deputed to instruct former in his work. Brennan v. Gordon (1890), 8 L. R. A. 818, 118 N. Y. 489.

Brakeman and conductor, having directing power over the former. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kenley (1893), Tenn.

But, on the other hand, where a car repairer was injured by negligence of an assistant yardmaster, in directing a car to be run down against that on which plaintiff was working, he and the yardmaster were held fellow servants. Corcoran v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1891), 126 N. Y. 673.

And the chief train dispatcher and locomotive fireman, injured by negligence of subordinate train dispatcher of whose incompetency the chief dispatcher had notice, were held co-servants in Reiser v. Pennsylvania Co. (1892), 152 Pa. 33.

And in Russell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1891), 47 Fed. Rep. 204, it was held that a conductor is not authorized to rescind a rule prohibiting a brake-man from going between cars to couple them.

Fell v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 28 Mo. App. 326; Herriman v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 27 Mo. App. 435; Petty v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 297, 88 Mo. 815; Mauerman v. Siemerts, 71 Mo. 104.

The negligence charged in the petition was the proximate cause of the injury complained of. The negligence of Klein in operating, managing, and controlling said hand-car, and attempting to remove the same from the track under the circumstances caused the injury to plaintiff, and the defendant is liable—this is true although other causes may have concurred at the time to produce the injury.

McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 641, 87 Mo. 302; Page v. Buckport, 64 Me. 51, 13 Am. Rep. 239.

Plaintiff is not expected to be equal to the foreman in judgment and must be governed by the foreman in all things except such as present such manifest danger as a prudent man would see and refuse to remain in.

Herriman v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 27 Mo. App. 443.

While the plaintiff may have assumed the ordinary risks of the employment, it is not true that he assumed the risks that result from the negligence of defendant or those placed in authority over him.

Wood, Mast. & S. § 326; Smith, Neg. White's ed. § 130.

Barclay, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sustained the damage which forms the subject of this action near the city of Marshall, Mo., while in defendant's employ as a section hand.

His evidence tended to show that he was working under Mr. Klein, foreman of the section on which the accident took place. The men began work, usually, at 7 A. M. On the day of the injury, August 7, 1888, the westward bound passenger trains of defendant's line, due at Marshall at 5 and 6 A. M., respectively, had not arrived when the time came for the section gang to go to work. Klein learned at the telegraph office that these trains were overdue. He ordered a hand-car put on the track, and started eastward with his crew of five men, including plaintiff. The hand-car carried necessary tools, as well as the foreman and all the men, excepting one, who went ahead at some distance to give warning on the approach of a train.

About a mile east of Marshall, they met the first train. The men lifted the hand-car from the track, and the train passed without mishap. The car was then replaced, and continued its course eastward, but this time no one was sent forward; all the men rode on the car.

After proceeding thus two miles the second train was seen approaching around a curve, emerging from some timber, at the rate of 35 or 40 miles an hour. When first observed, it was about 900 or 1,000 feet away. The foreman immediately stopped the hand-car, jumped off as quick as he could, and began to lift it from the track. All the men did likewise. They did not get the car off.

When Klein saw the engine was about 60 feet from them, he called to the men to "let the car go and get out of the way." They tried to do so. All escaped save plaintiff, who had the misfortune to stumble and fall near the track, and on rising to his feet was struck by the hand-car as the latter was thrown to one side by the passing locomotive. Both of his legs were broken, and he suffered severely in consequence.

When the foreman and men had hold, before the catastrophe, three stood in front and three at the end of the car. Plaintiff was in the middle of the latter group, on the side farthest from the coming train, and facing it.

Plaintiff had had several months' previous experience as a track hand, but had been employed by Klein as one of this gang only the day before the accident.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for $4,000; and, after the usual preliminaries, defendant appealed.

The defendant offered no testimony, so that the plaintiff's was uncontradicted, but from this it is not to be assumed that that evidence is to be accepted as true.

The allegations of plaintiff's cause of action were denied by the answer. Thus was imposed on plaintiff the burden of proving the facts necessary to a verdict in his favor. Upon his submission of proofs to support the issues on his part the defendant was entitled to have the triors of fact determine its credibility, though defendant may have tendered nothing to contradict it.

Should a verdict be returned against the evidence given in such circumstances, it might furnish a matter for the corrective action of the trial court in a proper case, but not for the exercise of the revisory power of an appellate court, reviewing questions of law only.

It is not now necessary to give the reasons for these positions. They inhere in a proper understanding of the system of trial by jury as established by our constitution and laws, and have been already clearly stated by Commissioner Phillips in Gregory v. Chambers, (1883,) 78 Mo. 298, where some of the earlier cases to the same effect are cited.

We are aware that intimations to the contrary have been thrown out in several decisions, but we do not regard those intimations as furnishing a safe guide for the action of appellate courts in Missouri.

Instances may, and often do arise in which the conduct of the case at the trial involves a concession or admission of material facts, previously in issue. In that event, no court can properly deprive the benefited party of the full effect of such admission or concession.

Our remarks do not apply to such instances, or, indeed, to any other facts than those now before us.

Here we shall treat the undisputed testimony for the plaintiff, in determining its sufficiency to support the verdict, just as it would be treated if it had been met by evidence of the defendant, as it was met by denials in the answer; and so the trial court viewed this phase of the case.

The cause was submitted to the jury on plaintiff's theory of defendant's negligence in the management of the hand-car and crew by the section foreman; and on the other side the question of plaintiff's exercise of ordinary care, in the circumstances, was presented. Both of these issues were finally given to the jury as questions of fact; but in the first instance the court was called upon to meet them by an instruction asked by defendant, in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence. That instruction was refused, and error is now assigned upon that ruling.

1. From the outline already given of plaintiff's case, it will be seen that he was a laborer under the orders of the foreman, Klein, and at the time of the accident subject to the sole authority of the latter.

It is a part of the personal duty of the master to give direction to the work he undertakes, and to prescribe the system or method of conducting it. In so doing, he must use ordinary care for the safety of those engaged in his service. Accordingly, it has been held that the omission to adopt and to enforce rules necessary for the reasonably safe management of a business as complex and as hazardous to life and limb as that here in view may sometimes form the basis for a finding of negligence on the part of the master. Reagan v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (1887,) 98 Mo. 848, 12 West. Rep. 367; Atel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891,) 128 N. Y. 662; Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891,) 126 N. Y. 544. Such holdings rest upon the same principle that supports the rule of liability for defects in the plant or appliances. As has lately been tersely said in a case which received very thorough consideration, "a master is no less responsible to his workmen for personal injuries caused by a defective system of using machinery than for injuries caused by a defect in the machinery itself." Lord Watson in Smith v. Baker, (1891,) L. R. 16 App. Cas. 353.

Rules, however, are but one means of giving direction to the master's work. Its guidance, as to details, is often necessarily intrusted to managers, foremen, and others. By whatsoever name such a superior employé may be called, his relation to the subordinates acting under his orders is not that of a fellow-workman in respect to his performance of the master's function of directing them and the work in his charge.

In the case before us, defendant placed plaintiff under the control of the section foreman, Klein, as to the mode and manner of performing the labor he had engaged to do. Any want of ordinary care on the part of the foreman in commanding that labor involved a breach of the master's duty mentioned, and cannot justly be regarded as the negligence of a fellow servant. It is not thought needful to discuss this proposition further at this time, in view of the attention it has received here of late. Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888,) 96 Mo. 207; Dayharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1890,) 103 Mo. 570.

Plaintiff assumed all ordinary and usual risks of the service in which he engaged, but he did not assume unknown perils, arising from any omission of reasonable care in the performance of the master's duty of control of the work in hand. That duty was devolved upon the section foreman by defendant, and in its discharge the law required him to use common prudence to so direct the movements of those subject to his orders as not to expose them to any greater danger than was usually incident to the employment. We think the plaintiff's testimony tends to show a want of such care on the foreman's part.

The facts leading up to the accident have been already stated, and need not be repeated. It may be that the plaintiff's injury should be ascribed, as a matter of fact, solely to his fall near the track, and to the delay it occasioned; but we believe it cannot be declared, as a conclusion of law, that it might not reasonably be found to have been caused by the foreman's negligence in keeping the men at their posts, trying to remove the hand-car, until too late to afford them opportunity for escape from the danger of a collision, and thereby subjecting plaintiff to a greater risk than his service ordinarily involved.

The foreman, it is true, gave them no express command to lift the car off, but his acts were an unmistakable order to that effect. There was little time for speech. Action was the eloquence for the occasion. All present knew that the passenger train had the right of way, and their united efforts indicated that they interpreted alike the foreman's conduct as a direction to follow his leadership in the attempt to clear the track.

The place which fell to plaintiff's lot in lifting was probably the most dangerous around the car. As the middle man of three, on the side furthest from the coming train, he stood between the rails until the foreman's order to "let go." It required a longer time to reach a place of safety from his position than from that of any of the other men.

Reviewing the whole evidence, we think it was fairly a case for triers of fact to say whether or not the foreman allowed him reasonably sufficient time to escape the impending danger, and, if not, whether the omission to do so constituted negligence in directing and managing the car and men, and whether or not such negligence (or want of ordinary care in the circumstances) was the direct cause of plaintiff's injury.

These elements made up the case stated in the petition. No negligence in the management of the locomotive or train was asserted or need be discussed.

It seems almost unnecessary to observe that there is no room in this case for the application to plaintiff's conduct of the maxim, volenti non, etc. The risk occasioned by the foreman's negligence, which forms the gist of defendant's present liability, was of such a nature as could not have been previously known to plaintiff by any ordinary exercise of care or foresight; and it cannot, we think, be reasonably regarded as one of the usual perils of the master's service, in which plaintiff embarked.

In this connection it may be well to notice one of defendant's exceptions, touching the refusal of its request for the following instruction, viz.:

"The court instructs the jury that, when plaintiff entered into the employment of defendant as a section hand, he assumed all risk of injury usually incident to the services he engaged to perform; and if the jury believe from the evidence that, when plaintiff undertook to work for defendant on its track, he knew that in going to and from his work he would be required to travel on the track on hand-cars, and that trains were run over the road at regular and irregular times without notice to section men, then he assumed all risks usually incident to passing and attempting to pass such trains."

In declining to so instruct, we think there was no error. Whatever may be the nature and extent of the usual risks of such a service, as to which this case requires no expression of opinion, it is clear that omission of ordinary care in the conduct and direction of the business is not one of such risks. Negligence in the performance of any personal duty of the master is not, speaking generally, such a peril as an employé should reasonably apprehend or be considered to assume. Dangers arising from such negligence cannot justly be regarded as ordinary risks of the employment. The instruction was hence irrelevant to the only issue on which plaintiff claimed a right of recovery on the facts.

2. We next view the case with reference to the plea that plaintiff's negligence should bar his recovery of damages.

"There is a clear and logical distinction between a defense resting upon the assumption of risks and that predicated upon such negligence. Even if a servant encounters, in the service, perils which are held unusual and extraordinary, he is nevertheless bound to use ordinary care to avoid injury thereby." Alcorn's Case, (Mo.) 18 S. W. Rep. 188, (decided at this term.) That care is to be judged from the standpoint furnished by the facts of the particular case, and also by considering, as a very discriminating judge has recently remarked, "under what exigency he acted; that is to say, the exigency legitimately may affect, not only the question how far he appreciated or ought to have appreciated the danger, but also how far he could run a risk known to be greater than prudently could be incurred under ordinary circumstances, without losing his right to recover in case he was hurt." Pomeroy v. Westfield (1891), 154 Mass. 462. So in passing on this plaintiff's conduct in obeying the tacit direction of the foreman, and in standing to his work until ordered to "let go and get away," we must bear in mind, not only the servant's general duty of obedience, but the self-evident danger to defendant's passengers on the train in event of a collision with the hand-car. It is true that in this instance the locomotive tossed the car from the track without damage to the train or its cargo; but the possibility of serious injury from such a meeting was obvious, at least to an experienced railroad man, if indeed it is not a matter of common knowledge.

Persons are justified in taking somewhat greater risks to protect human life or limb than would be sanctioned in other circumstances.

In view of all the facts before us, we are of opinion that it cannot properly be said that the act of the plaintiff, in remaining at his post, to aid in averting the possibility of a collision, until his superior pronounced the effort hopeless, was negligent, as a matter of law. We think his conduct falls within the protection of the rule that has been sometimes stated to be that if "the master orders the servant into a situation of danger, and he obeys, and is thereby injured, the law will not deny him a remedy against the master on the ground of contributory negligence, unless the danger was so glaring that no prudent man would have entered it, even where, like the servant, he was not entirely free to choose." Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888,) 96 Mo. 212; Keegan v. Kavanaugh, (1876,) 62 Mo. 280.

This rule, closely viewed, amounts to nothing more than a statement that, in determining what is ordinary care on the part of a given individual, all the circumstances of his position should be regarded, including, in cases like the present, the servant's orders, the demands of his duty, the apparent risk to be met, and the purpose of his action, no less than his physical surroundings.

Having weighed all these considerations, unless the case then discloses that the risk was such as would not be taken by a man of common prudence, so situated, the court cannot justly declare the assumption of that risk by a servant, in obedience to orders, as negligence. To warrant such declaration by the court, as has often before been said, it must be satisfied that no other conclusion is fairly deducible from the evidence, giving plaintiff the benefit of every favorable inference that may be reasonably drawn from it. Becke v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (1890,) 102 Mo. 544, 9 L. R. A. 167; Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888,) 98 Mo. 62. Here we are not so satisfied, but, on the contrary, regard the issue of plaintiff's negligence as a proper one for the jury.

The only reasonable inferences of negligence on his part, suggested by the testimony, arise from his remaining so long at his post of work with the foreman, in view of the coming train; and from his falling, outside the track, afterwards, in the effort to escape. As to the first of these acts the jury were plainly told by the fourth instruction for defendant that if they found "that plaintiff saw the approaching train, and at the time he undertook to remove the hand-car from the track the danger of a collision with the hand-car was manifest to any section man of ordinary care and caution, and that, after such danger was so manifest, plaintiff had time, by the exercise of reasonable care, to get out of the way, then it was the duty of plaintiff to abandon the hand-car and get out of danger, regardless of the orders of the foreman or his duty to defendant to remove the car; and, failing to do so, he cannot recover, and the verdict must be for the defendant."

As to the second (plaintiff's fall), the court, in defendant's third instruction, declared that if the foreman notified plaintiff to get out of the way in time for a section man of ordinary vigilance and judgment to avoid danger from collision, the finding should then be for defendant. So that, had the jury found plaintiff wanting in ordinary care with respect to either of these phases of the case, they were bound to return a verdict for defendant, under the instructions. Their finding for plaintiff consequently negatived any negligence of the plaintiff in the circumstances.

3. We now reach defendant's exceptions to rulings upon the other instructions.

It is claimed that those given for the plaintiff submit a different sort of negligence to the jury as actionable from that counted upon. Negligence on the part of the foreman, Klein, "in so running the hand-car," is charged in the petition, after a statement of the substance of the facts we have mentioned above, preceding plaintiff's injury.

It is insisted that no negligence in "running" the car was shown; but it is evident that that term was employed, and, in the connection in which it appears, should fairly be construed, to mean "operating" the car; and in that expression may reasonably be comprehended the management of the men engaged in its operation.

The petition is unnecessarily prolix in furnishing the particulars of the occurrence. Defendant could not possibly have misunderstood the nature of the plaintiff's grievance alleged in it. All the plaintiff's instructions place his right of action solely on the ground of Klein's negligence in the direction of the car and men. They are verbose, and need not be quoted as models for imitation; but each requires a finding of negligence or "want of proper care and caution" on the part of Klein, in the management of the hand-car, as essential to plaintiff's recovery. They are not as explicit in all respects as might be desired; but any defects in them, in this regard, are corrected by the limitations in those given at the instance of defendant. In the latter the jury were told (1) not to consider any evidence of the speed of the train, or that it did not stop, or of the acts or omissions of the train men; (2) that the verdict should be for defendant, if Klein used ordinary care in attempting to remove the hand-car from the track after the train came in sight and the injury of plaintiff was caused by accident, without negligence of the foreman; while defendant's third and fourth instructions, mentioned already in the second paragraph of this opinion, presented for decision the question of plaintiff's exercise of reasonable care for his own safety.

Reading the instructions together, as they should be read, we do not discern in them any material error, to the prejudice of defendant's substantial rights upon the merits. Rev. Stat. 1889, §§ 2100, 2303. We think they assert correctly the principles of liability hereinbefore announced, and only permit a recovery by plaintiff in conformity thereto.

The defendant's instructions closely confined the inquiry as to the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury to a consideration of the foreman's negligence in the matter of attempting to remove the hand-car from the track, and declared, in effect, (in the third) that, if he gave plaintiff sufficient time for escape to have enabled a section man of ordinary vigilance to avoid the danger of collision, there could be no recovery.

Under these instructions the jury would have been bound to find for defendant if they believed the fall of plaintiff, in his haste to escape, to have been the efficient cause of his injury, or, indeed, if they found that cause to have been any other than the foreman's negligence, already indicated.

4. Respecting the errors assigned upon the refusal of other requests for instructions, all that need be said is that the findings for which the latter call were necessarily embraced in the findings upon the instructions which the court gave. The refusal of such requests is not error in a civil action, where this court, viewing the case broadly on its merits, is of opinion that such ruling did not injuriously affect the substantial rights of the appellant. Haniford v. Kansas City, (1890,) 108 Mo. 182; Rev. Stat. §§ 2100, 2303. Such is our opinion here.

5. No point is made upon the instruction touching the measure of damages, or upon the award thereunder.

The case bears many points of resemblance to Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., (1888,) 96 Mo. 207, and in the main is governed by the same general principles.

The judgment is affirmed.

All the Judges of this division concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Edward A. STEVENS et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

ST. MARY'S TRAINING SCHOOL et al.

(.....ILL.....)

An injunction cannot be granted to prevent a board of county commissioners from making an illegal contract or illegal appropriation, at least where there is nothing to show that the remedy to prevent enforcing any illegal act of the board would not be equally effective.

NOTE.—In respect to injunctions to prevent the passage of municipal ordinances, with which question the above case is very closely connected, see

(January 12, 1889.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cook County to review a judgment refusing to restrain defendants from entering into a contract in reference to the education of certain children. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is a bill filed on January 12, 1889, in the circuit court of Cook county by Edward A. Stevens and John M. Stiles, of the city of Chicago, in said county, in behalf tion the above case is very closely connected, see note to Roberts v. Louisville (Ky.) 18 L. R. A. 844.

of themselves, as citizens and taxpayers, and on behalf of all other citizens and taxpayers who may choose to be made parties, against St. Mary's Training School, a corporation organized under the laws of Illinois, and its officers, the board of commissioners of Cook county, and its members, and George R. Davis, the treasurer of Cook county, for the purpose of enjoining said school and its officers from setting up or prosecuting against said county any claim for aid or compensation for the subsistence, shelter, clothing, care, or instruction of its wards or inmates, and from making any contract with said county with reference to such aid or compensation, and for the purpose of enjoining said board, and its members and agents, from approving or ordering paid any such claim, and from making any such contract, and from doing anything to promote or abet the payment of any such aid or compensation, or the making of any such contract, and for the purpose of enjoining said county treasurer from paying out of any public funds in his custody any sum of money whatever on any claim of said school, or for its aid, or for compensation to it for such subsistence, shelter, clothing, care, or instruction. A preliminary injunction was granted, in accordance with the prayer of the bill. A demurrer was filed to the bill by the training school and its officers, which was ordered to stand as the demurrer of all the defendants. The cause was heard upon said demurrer, as the demurrer of all the defendants, and upon such hearing the circuit court dismissed the bill for want of equity. The present appeal is prosecuted from such decree of dismissal.

The bill alleges that said school or corporation, and its officers, propose and intend to procure, out of the public funds of the county, money to aid it, and for its use and benefit; that said corporation is a school and institution under church control, within the meaning of section 3 of article 8 of the Constitution of this state; that said board and its members propose and intend to aid and abet the said interest of such church school by contracting to pay said moneys, and by approving quarterly its claims, and ordering the same paid; that said treasurer intends to pay said approved claims; that said proposals and intentions involve violations of the public trusts reposed in said board and in said treasurer, in that the same are contrary to the form and effect of said constitutional provision; that said corporation was instituted, and has been and is maintained, as an instrumentality of the Roman Catholic Church; that one of its main purposes is to effectuate the religious objects of said church; that said church is provided with a most efficient organization, and is able to sway its members in all matters involving their religion; that it deems itself specially and exclusively commissioned to teach religious truths; that it has an elaborate scheme of religious doctrines, whose acceptance its priests and adherents strive earnestly to promote; that its policy is to control the education of the young, and to surround them with its influence; that said training school is governed and controlled, in accordance with said policy, by priests and laymen devoted to said church, zealous to promote its designs, and obeying its wishes without dissent; that the consequence of sending a minor child to said school is to put him in training to become a Roman Catholic churchman; that the governing purpose to be effected by said school is to mold the inmates thereof, as much as possible, into Roman Catholic Church members; that no other teaching except that of said church is tolerated at said school, and all of the teachers are members, and most of them ecclesiastics, of that Church; that for a number of years said board have contracted with said school for the reception into it of boys sent there as provided by the "Act to Provide for and to Aid Training Schools for Boys," approved June 18, 1888, for their subsistence, clothing, shelter, instruction, and training during their residence there, and for the payment to said school, out of the public funds in the custody of the county treasurer, various graded sums per month for each of said boys so sent; that by means thereof large sums of money have been misappropriated unwarrantably, and in contempt of said constitutional provisions; that the most recent of said contracts expired by its terms on December 31, 1888, that by a decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois the members of said board and the officers of said school were well advised of the illegality of such misappropriation of the public funds, and of such contracts in relation thereto, yet in despite thereof the said school, its officers and management, have presented for allowance to said board a claim in aid of said school, pursuant to said contract expiring December 31, 1888, and for the quarter at that date terminating, amounting to the sum of $2,818, and have applied to said board to renew their contract on the old terms for another year; that complainants have been informed and believe that said board, unless enjoined therefrom, will affirm and order paid said claim of $2,818, and renew said contract; that, from inquiry made and information acquired, complainants aver that members of said board, in number sufficient to approve said claim and said contract, and to order the same paid and executed, "are already pledged, in secret, to the promoters of said claim and contract;" that said school refrains as much as possible from permitting its constitution, rules, by-laws, and operation to be known, and secrecy governs the conduct of those interested in its management; that this reticence is observed for the reason that the real rules by which said school is administered could not be definitely expressed without manifesting the fact that said school has the character of a purely Roman Catholic institution; that, in the hope that said school may appear in the eyes of non-Catholics as a nonsectarian institution, and for the purpose of obtaining in its aid payments out of the public funds, the promoters of said school pretend and claim that it has not a church or sectarian character, and that there is nothing in its character that stamps it as such; that the control of said institution has been from the first, and is intended to be, in the care of those who have special favor for the Roman Catholic Church and its religious interests, and will allow its wishes to govern their conduct in reference to said school. The bill prays that all contracts of said school with reference to the payment to it, out of any of the public funds of said county, of any claim for aid or compensation for the subsistence, shelter, clothing, care, or instruction of any of its wards or inmates, and especially the contract mentioned as expiring December 31, 1888, may be decreed and adjudged wholly void and of no binding effect, and that an injunction may issue against said school and its officers, said board and its members, and said county treasurer, enjoining them in manner and form as above stated.

Mr. F. C. Russell for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. George W. Smith for defendants in error.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was demurred to, and therefore its statements must be assumed to be true. It alleges that the defendant in error, the St. Mary's Training School, is a corporation which is controlled by the Roman Catholic Church; and that the board of commissioners of Cook county has made contracts with said corporation for the payment to it, out of the funds of the county, of certain moneys, for the instruction and training of boys committed to its care. That such contracts are void, and such payments illegal, is settled by the decision of this court in Cook County v. Chicago Industrial School for Girls, 125 Ill. 540, 1 L. R. A. 487. It was there held that county boards in this state have no power to appropriate county funds in aid or support of sectarian schools, or of any school controlled by a church. The Constitution of Illinois is very emphatic upon this subject, and the language in which its meaning is expressed is too plain to be misunderstood. Section 8 of article 8 of that instrument is as follows: "Neither the General Assembly nor any county, city, town, township, school district, or other public corporation shall ever make any appropriation or pay from any public fund whatever anything in aid of any church or sectarian purpose, or to help, support, or sustain any school, academy, seminary, college, university, or other literary or scientific institution controlled by any church or sectarian denomination whatever; nor shall any grant or donation of land, money, or other personal property ever be made by the state or any such public corporation to any church, or for any sectarian purpose."

But the question presented by the record is whether a court of chancery has power to enjoin a board of county commissioners from passing a resolution that an illegal contract be made by the county, and from making an order that an illegal claim be allowed against the county. The bill prays that the county board may be enjoined from making contracts with the training school in the future, and also from ordering the payment to said school of a balance due for the quarter ending December 31, 1888, upon a contract already existing between the board and the school. Has equity the power to enjoin the passage of ordinances, by-laws, resolutions, and orders by municipal corporations, or is its power confined to the issuance of injunctions against the enforcement and execution of such ordinances, by-laws, resolutions, and orders, after the same have been passed. It is well settled that courts of equity will not attempt to control the discretionary or legislative powers vested by law in municipal corporations. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 94, 475, 908; 2 High, Inj. 3d ed. §§ 1240, 1246. Counties are corporations created for the purpose of convenient local government, and possess only such powers as are conferred upon them by law. Harney v. Indianapolis, C. & D. R. Co. 32 Ind. 244. They have been called quasi municipal corporations, and their corporate powers are more limited than those of incorporated cities and towns. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 25; Symonds v. Clay County Suprs. 71 Ill. 355. In the exercise of such discretionary or legislative powers as are conferred upon them by law, counties are as much beyond judicial control as other municipal corporations. Fitzgerald v. Harms, 92 Ill. 372. The board of commissioners of Cook county can exercise the same power as boards of supervisors in other counties. McCord v. Pike, 121 Ill. 288. Each county has power to make all contracts and do all other acts in relation to the property and concerns of the county necessary to the exercise of its corporate powers, and each county board has power to manage the county funds and county business, and to examine and settle all accounts against the county. Fitzgerald v. Harms, supra. Where county boards are acting within the boundaries of their discretionary or legislative power, the court will not only refrain from interfering with the passage of resolutions and orders by them, but will also refuse to enjoin the enforcement of such resolutions and orders, except in certain cases, where they are unreasonable. In Fitzgerald v. Harms, supra, where we refused to sustain an injunction against the county clerk from issuing an order upon the county treasurer for the amount of a claim previously allowed by the county board, and against the county treasurer from paying the same, we placed such refusal solely upon the ground that the board was acting within the bounds of the powers conferred upon it by law, and said: "A court of equity cannot interfere with the deliberations or the action of the board of commissioners over a matter which the law has intrusted to them, unless fraud be shown, or they have undertaken to allow a claim which was not of a character to be paid by the county." Literally interpreted, the language here used might be construed to mean that a court of equity could interfere with the deliberations of the board if its members were undertaking to allow a claim which was not of a character to be paid by the county. But the case cannot be regarded as so deciding, because the question of the power of a court of equity to enjoin the board from making an order by a vote of its members for the payment of a claim, as distinguished from its power to enjoin the clerk or auditor from drawing a warrant, and the treasurer from paying the amount of the claim, after the order of allowance had been made, was not involved, nor in any way suggested.

It is correctly announced by the text-writers, in general terms, that taxpayers and property holders may resort to equity to restrain municipal corporations and their officers from making unauthorized appropriations of the corporate funds, and from misapplying the moneys of the corporation, and from making payment of illegal claims. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 914, 919; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 784; 2 High, Inj. 3d ed. §§ 1237, 1238, 1239; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 260; 10 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 959. It is also correctly laid down, as a general proposition, that the restrictions upon the right of a court of equity to interfere with the action of municipal bodies do not extend to cases where those bodies are exceeding their lawful powers. 2 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 1241. But some of the adjudged cases which are referred to as sustaining these general doctrines are not in harmony with each other, and others of them are not definite and decided in their conclusions upon the question whether equity will confine its restraining power to the instrumentalities which undertake to carry out and execute the unauthorized resolutions and ordinances of municipal corporations, or whether it will enjoin such corporations, acting in their corporate capacity, from adopting resolutions and ordinances which are in excess of their legal or constitutional authority. There are cases which hold, or seem to hold, that where a municipal corporation is about to pass a resolution or ordinance which is void, as being ultra vires, a court of chancery will enjoin it from so doing. Among such cases may be mentioned the following: Davis v. New York, 1 Duer, 451; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536; Davis v. New York, 14 N. Y. 506; Spring Valley Water-Works v. Bartlett, 16 Fed. Rep. 615; Jacksonport v. Watson, 33 Ark. 704; State v. Hamilton County Comrs. 39 Ohio St. 58; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Follmer v. Nuckolls County Comrs. 6 Neb. 204; Peter v. Prettyman, 62 Md. 566; Patton v. Stephens, 14 Bush, 324; Galesburg Board of Education v. Arnold, 112 Ill. 11; Spilman v. Parkersburg, 85 W. Va. 605; Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Howell v. Peoria, 90 Ill. 104.

In none of the cases last above cited, except the first four, was the question now under consideration expressly passed upon, but the facts stated in the opinions seem to warrant the conclusion that injunctions were sustained against the corporate action of the municipalities, as distinguished from the action of agents or officers proceeding under their orders. In the New York cases it was held that a court of chancery could enjoin the board of aldermen of a city from passing an ordinance to construct a railway in one of the streets; that municipal corporations are creatures of limited powers in the appropriation of the funds of the people; that when they attempt to appropriate such funds to purposes not authorized by their charters or by positive law, whether it be done by resolution, ordinance, or under the form of legislation, their acts are void, and that, while courts will not attempt to control their discretion, yet if, under pretense of exercising such discretion, they threaten or are about to do what amounts to a gross abuse of power, to the injury and in fraud of the rights of individuals and the public, the courts will interfere to prevent the threatened injury. But later decisions in New York, some of which are referred to hereafter, have taken a different view, refusing to follow the earlier cases above mentioned, as going too far in the direction of subjecting the legislative and political powers of municipal bodies to the control of the courts. Alpers v. San Francisco, 12 Sawy. 681, 32 Fed. Rep. 508. In Spring Valley Water-Works v. Bartlett, supra, an injunction against the mayor and supervisors of San Francisco, restraining them from passing an ordinance to fix the price of water furnished to the city, was sustained, over the objection that the defendants were a "legislative body, endowed with legislative powers, to be exercised with absolute discretion;" and it was held that the board of supervisors of a municipal corporation will be enjoined from passing an ordinance which is not within the scope of their powers, where its passage will work an irreparable injury. The Bartlett Case, however, seems to have been overruled by the later case of Alpers v. San Francisco, supra. The last four cases above cited, to wit, Spilman v. Parkersburg, Valparaiso v. Gardner, Springfield v. Edwards, and Howell v. Peoria, are cases where cities were enjoined from incurring indebtedness in excess of the constitutional limit, or from entering into contracts that would involve such excess of indebtedness. But in these cases the point to which attention was more especially directed was the meaning of the word "indebtedness," and what constituted a "debt," within the meaning of the Constitution, and it is not altogether clear that "incurring indebtedness" does not refer as well to the enforcement as to the passage of corporate resolutions.

A large number of the decisions which uphold the right of equity to interfere with the action of municipal corporations when such action is in excess of their legal powers will be found, on examination, to be based upon facts which show that the injunctions were issued against the officers or agents attempting to execute or enforce corporate resolutions, ordinances, by-laws, or orders, as will be seen by reference to the following cases: New London v. Brainard, 22 Conn. 553; Webster v. Harwinton, 32 Conn. 131; Bayle v. New Orleans, 23 Fed. Rep. 848; Harney v. Indianapolis, C. & D. R. Co. supra; Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont.

502; Willard v. Comstock, 58 Wis. 565, 46 Am. Rep. 657; Lynch v. East La Fayette & M. R. Co. 57 Wis. 480; Place v. Providence, 12 R. I. 1; Austin v. Coggeshall, Id. 329, 34 Am. Rep. 648; Sherman v. Carr, 8 R. I. 481; Newmeyer v. Missouri & M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 81, 14 Am. Rep. 391; Osterhout v. Hyland, 27 Hun. 167; Baltimore v. Gill, 31 Md. 875; Merrill v. Plainfield, 45 N. H. 126; Hospers v. Wyatt, 68 Iowa, 264; Roberts v. New York, 5 Abb. Pr. 41; Schumm v. Seymour, 24 N. J. Eq. 143; List v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501; Ruts v. Calhoun, 100 Ill. 392; McCord v. Pike, 121 Ill. 298; English v. Smock, 84 Ind. 115, 7 Am. Rep. 215; Madison v. Smith, 83 Ind. 502; Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 478, 45 Am. Rep. 467; Wright v. Bishop, 88 Ill. 802; Sherlock v. Winnetka, 59 Ill. 389; Crampton v. Zabriske, 101 U. S. 601, 25 L. ed. 1070.

In the case of Crampton v. Zabriske, supra, which may be regarded as a leading case upon this general subject, Mr. Justice Field used the following language: "Of the right of resident taxpayers to invoke the interposition of a court of equity to prevent an illegal disposition of the moneys of the county, or the illegal creation of a debt, which they, in common with other property holders of the county, may otherwise be compelled to pay, there is at this day no serious question. . . . From the nature of the powers exercised by municipal corporations, the great danger of their abuse, and the necessity of prompt action to prevent irremediable injuries, it would seem eminently proper for courts of equity to interfere, upon the application of the taxpayers of a county, to prevent the consummation of a wrong, when the officers of those corporations assume, in excess of their powers, to create burdens upon property holders." But the facts of the case, in the decision of which this language was used, show that the legislative action of the county board had already been put forth, in all essential respects, before the injunction was asked for. There the board of chosen freeholders of a county in New Jersey had purchased certain lands without legal authority to do so, and had issued bonds in payment for the same; and the object of the injunction, as is stated in the opinion of the court, was "to enjoin the prosecution of the action to enforce their payment" by the holder of the bonds. In Colton v. Hanchett, 18 Ill. 615, it was held that the board of supervisors of a county had no authority to appropriate the county funds to aid a private individual in the construction of a toll bridge, and that an injunction would issue, at the suit of a taxpayer, to restrain the board from granting a sum of money to a private individual for such purpose; but it appears from the statement of the facts in the case that the board had previously passed a resolution directing that an order should be drawn upon the county treasurer for the money, to wit, $1,000, in favor of such individual upon his completion of the bridge, and upon his conveying to the county a right of way over the bridge for certain of its officers. In Perry v. Kinneear, 42 Ill. 160, the county board made an appropriation to pay to a judge of the circuit court money in addition to the salary allowed him by law; and it was held that such appropriation of the money of the citizens was illegal, and would be enjoined by a court of equity, at the suit of taxpayers; but before the injunction was applied for the board had passed a resolution ordering the county clerk to issue an order on the treasurer in favor of the judge, and the injunction was against the county clerk, from issuing the order, and the county treasurer, from paying it. In Beauchamp v. Kankakee County, 45 Ill. 274, the facts were similar to those in the Perry Case, and the ruling was the same. In Carter v. Chicago, 57 Ill. 283, where the question was whether a city could be enjoined from so constructing a roadway as to include in it the portion of land set apart in the plat for sidewalks on either side of the roadway, it was held that the city held the fee of the streets in trust for the public, and would be enjoined from a violation of such trust by such an abuse of its powers as to injure the property of individuals; but the injunction there issued was against the enforcement of an ordinance which had already been passed. In Sherlock v. Winnetka, supra, where it was held that, although a municipal corporation was vested with the largest discretion in the exercise of its public and political powers, yet it must be regarded as the depository of a trust, in reference to the corporate property and, if guilty of a breach of such trust, would not be exempt from judicial interference merely because the forms of legislation were used, it appears that the injunction was mainly directed against the collection of a tax, the levy of which had been ordered in an ordinance theretofore passed by the village council. Milhou v. Sharp, 15 Barb. 198.

But we are not limited, in the investigation of this subject, to an examination of the facts of the cases which, while sustaining the general power of equity to restrain the action of municipal bodies, do not make any special reference to the mode of exercising such power. There are many decisions which hold, in express and definite terms, that "the courts will not enjoin the passage of unauthorized ordinances, and will ordinarily act only when steps are taken to make them available." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 808, note on page 387. There may be instances where this restriction upon the power of the courts will sometimes be disregarded, as where municipal corporations are exercising mere business or ministerial rather than legislative powers, (Valparaiso v. Gardner, supra; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 478, 474, 927, 1048;) or are wrongfully disposing of property held by them as trustees for the public, (Milhou v. Sharp, supra; Sherlock v. Winnetka, supra;) or are attempting to act upon matters not, by their charters or by the law, subject to their jurisdiction, (Alpers v. San Francisco, supra;) or where it appears that the mere voting on, and formal passage of, a resolution or ordinance, will instantly, without any action or attempt to enforce any right or privilege under it, effect an irremediable private injury, (Whitney v. New York, 28 Barb. 233.) The weight of authority, and the tendency of the more recent decisions, are in favor of the position, that the restraining power of the courts should be directed against the enforcement, rather than the passage, of unauthorized orders and resolutions or ordinances by municipal corporations. To this effect are the following authorities: Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756; Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 171; Merriam v. Yuba County Supra, 72 Cal. 517; Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 52; Whitney v. New York, supra; People v. New York, 82 Barb. 85; People v. New York, 9 Abb. Pr. 253; Cincinnati St. R. Co. v. Smith, 29 Ohio St. 291; Harrison v. New Orleans, 33 La. Ann. 222, 39 Am. Rep. 272; Alpers v. San Francisco 12 Sawy. 631, 32 Fed. Rep. 508; 2 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 1243. In Alpers v. San Francisco, supra, Mr. Justice Field who wrote the opinion in Crampton v. Zabriskie, supra, says: "If by either body—the Legislature or the board of supervisors—an unconstitutional Act be passed, its enforcement may be arrested. The parties seeking to execute the invalid Act can be reached by the courts, while the legislative body of the state or of the municipality, in the exercise of its legislative discretion, is beyond their jurisdiction. The fact that in either case the legislative action threatened may be in disregard of constitutional restraints, and impair the obligation of a contract, . . . does not affect the question. It is legislative discretion which is exercised, and that discretion, whether rightfully or wrongfully exercised, is not subject to interference by the judiciary. . . . The principle that the exercise of legislative power by a municipal body is beyond judicial control is too important, in our institutions, to be weakened by occasional decisions in disregard of it." In Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, supra, where the city of Des Moines had chartered a gas company, with certain exclusive privileges, and attempted by a subsequent ordinance to repeal said charter, and grant the same privileges to another company, it was sought to enjoin the passage of the repealing ordinance on the ground that it would be a violation of the contract created by the charter, and therefore unconstitutional, but it was held that the court had no power to issue the injunction, under the circumstances; and it is there said: "The General Assembly is a co-ordinate branch of the state government, and so is the lawmaking power of public municipal corporations, within the prescribed limits. It is no more competent for the judiciary to interfere with the legislative Acts of the one than the other. But the unconstitutional Acts of either may be annulled. Certainly, the passage of an unconstitutional law by the General Assembly could not be enjoined. If so, under the pretense that any proposed law was of that character, the judiciary could arrest the wheels of legislation. . . . After its passage the judiciary may declare the law unconstitutional. Piqua Branch of the State Bank of Ohio v. Knoop, 57 U. S. 16 How.

860, 14 L. ed. 977; Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U. S. 18 How. 331, 15 L. ed. 401. But previous to that time judicial powers cannot be invoked. . . . A void law is no law, and this, without doubt, is true as to an ordinance. . . . While it is not the province of the judiciary to interfere and arrest the passage of the ordinance, yet the doors are open for the purpose of testing its legality." In Linden v. Case, supra, it was held that an injunction will not be granted to restrain a board of supervisors from contracting a liability, which is not a legal charge against the county, or "from allowing any accounts against the county thereon;" the Supreme Court of California saying: "No order made by a board of supervisors is valid or binding unless it is authorized by law. No claim against a county can be allowed unless it be legally chargeable to the county; and, if claims not legally chargeable to the county are allowed, neither the allowance nor the warrants drawn therefor create any legal liabilities. . . . If illegal claims are allowed by the board against the county, it will be the duty of the auditor to refuse to draw warrants therefor; and, if warrants are drawn, it will be the duty of the treasurer to refuse to pay them. The presumption is that these officers will faithfully discharge their duty in the premises." In the more recent case of Merriam v. Yuba County Supra, supra, (decided in 1887,) it was held that an injunction would lie at the instance of a taxpayer to restrain the board of supervisors of a county from ordering certain claims to be paid, on the ground that they were not proper or valid demands against the county; and it was there said: "The members of the board would themselves be individually responsible for moneys willfully paid out without authority of law. They are trustees of the funds for certain specified purposes, and cannot, except by violating their oaths, allow them to be applied to other purposes. They act judicially, it is true, and will not be held accountable for mere errors; but they will not be excused on the ground that they have acted honestly, merely because they do not steal the funds. If they willfully appropriate moneys for a purpose not authorized by positive law, they are liable, civilly and criminally." In Chicago v. Evans, supra, a bill was filed to enjoin the common council of Chicago from passing an ordinance granting to the North Chicago City Railway Company the right to construct a railway across the Clark street bridge, etc., and we said in that case: "The procuring the adoption of this ordinance is not such an illegal and unwarranted act as can produce injury, and until they act under it, as their only warrant, no reason is perceived why they should be stayed in their action. The passage of ordinances, which confer no right or authority are harmless, until steps are taken to make them available."

Our survey of the authorities leads us to the conclusion that in the case at bar the application for an injunction was premature. If the board of commissioners had passed a resolution to make a new contract with the appellee, or had made an order directing the payment of the balance due on the old contract, and the appellants had filed a bill to prevent the mandates of the board from being carried into effect, by enjoining the clerk or auditor of the board from drawing a warrant on the county treasurer, and by enjoining the county treasurer from paying such warrant, or by enjoining such other steps as might be taken to enforce the action of the board, then a very different case would have been presented for our consideration. The direction that no county shall appropriate or pay any of the public funds to a school controlled by a church involves the ascertainment of a fact. It must be ascertained by the county board whether the school applying for the appropriation or payment is or is not controlled by a church. A court of chancery cannot assume, in advance, that the board of county commissioners will ignore the real facts, and violate the fundamental law of the state, by making illegal contracts or illegal appropriations. It is time enough for equity to stretch forth its preventive arm when some attempt is made to enforce the unconstitutional act. A municipal corporation which has entered into a void contract cannot be estopped from taking advantage of its own incapacity when suit is brought upon such contract or other efforts are made to secure its execution. Austin v. Coggeshall and Schumm v. Seymour, supra. There is nothing in the bill to show that there would have been any haste in drawing a warrant upon the county treasurer, or in obtaining payment from him, if the order allowing appellees' claim had been made by the board. It does not appear that the remedy of appellants would not have been as effective against the instrumentalities attempting to carry out the mandate of the board as against the corporate body itself. While the legislative power which has been delegated to municipal corporations is of a limited and subordinate character, it yet remains true that judicial interference with it is fraught with serious consequences, and cannot be too carefully avoided.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Kansas, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Robert CALHOUN.

(..... Kan.)

*1. Where the accused in a criminal prosecution in the district court is

*Headnotes by VALENTINE, J.

NOTE.—Writ of error coram nobis.

The above case shows how important the writ of error coram nobis still is in American practice notwithstanding the statements of text-books that it has "fallen into practical desuetude, being almost entirely superseded by the more speedy and efficacious remedy by motion in the same court;" (Black, Judgm. § 300), and that it is "generally if not universally superseded . . . by motion." Freeman, Judgm. § 94.

In some cases the writ is called coram nobis or coram vobis, indiscriminately. But the distinction is pointed out by Judge Cooley in a note in Blackstone's Commentaries in the following words: "This writ is called the writ coram nobis or coram vobis according as the proceedings are in the king's bench or common pleas, because the record is stated to remain before us (the king) if in the former, and before you (the judges) if in the latter."

The same distinction is expressed by the court in Camp v. Bennett, 16 Wend. 43, where it is said: "There is therefore in this state no such thing as a writ of error coram nobis." The name is not appropriate nor is it important. A writ of error lies here, as in England, to the supreme court to correct an error of fact in the same court.

In Smith v. Kingsley, 19 Wend. 620, it is said that we have lost the name of the writ only and that a writ will still lie to correct an error of fact in the judgment of the same court.

In Illinois it was said in Sloc v. State Bank, 2 Ill. 428, that the writ of error coram vobis has been disused and superseded by the more summary writ of a direct application to the court by motion. The court in that case refused to turn the party 18 L. R. A.

forced, through well-grounded fears of mob violence, to plead guilty to the criminal charge, and to be sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary for a term of years, he has a right to relief from such sentence and plea by an action or proceeding in the same court in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis.

2. And in such a case where the accused was sentenced to imprisonment over to the remedy by a writ of error coram vobis instead of giving relief on a writ of error from a decision upon a motion.

But this case cannot be regarded as holding that the writ of error coram vobis is entirely obsolete in that state. The later case of Beaubien v. Hamilton, 4 Ill. 213, declares that the "law is well settled that where an error of fact is committed in legal proceedings the court in which the error is committed may correct it by a writ of error coram vobis or on motion;" and the court in that case held accordingly that an appellate court could not correct an error of fact in a judgment of the lower court to which the question had not been presented.

In the still later case of McKindley v. Buck, 43 Ill. 489, a judgment on a writ of error coram nobis was reversed on writ of error; but the court did not decide that the remedy was obsolete. It did hold that where relief had been denied on motion to set aside a judgment by default during the term at which it was granted a writ of error coram nobis could not be used to obtain relief on the same ground after the term.

In Connecticut the writ has not been superseded by the statutory provisions for a new trial. Jeffery v. Fitch, 48 Conn. 601.

Nor in Indiana. Sanders v. State, 35 Ind. 318, 44 Am. Rep. 29.

In Arkansas the absence of any statutory or constitutional provision explicitly providing for or regulating the writ of error coram nobis does not defeat the right to the remedy as at common law. Adler v. State, 35 Ark. 517, 37 Am. Rep. 48.

In Ohio it was held that the court of last resort in the penitentiary for a period of forty-two years, and after having served more than seven years of that term, he commences an action in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis to set aside such sentence and plea, his action is not barred by any Statute of Limitations, for the reason that no Statute of Limitations will operate against the remedy of a party while he is under the legal disability of imprisonment.

3. In such a case, where a deposition of the accused was read in evidence on the trial in his action for relief, and in such deposition was a statement made by him that the relation of attorney and client had never existed between himself and K., but the oral testimony of K., introduced on the trial, showed that such relation did once exist, and that a certain conversation had between them more than seven years prior to that time, and while that relation existed, was a confidential conversation had between them as attorney and client, and the state offered to show what that conversation was, but the accused, through his counsel in the action for relief, objected, and the court excluded the evidence.—Held, that the supreme court cannot say that any error was committed.

4. In such a case, where the trial court permitted the accused to show threats of mob violence, made both before and after, but on the same day of, the entering of his plea of guilty, and many of which threats were not communicated to the accused before his plea was entered.—Held, not error; that the evidence tended to show that there was a real danger from mob violence, and that the fears of the accused were well founded, and that the evidence was proper to go to the jury.

5. And further,—Held, that the question of guilt or innocence of the accused in such a case is not a necessary question to be determined in the case; that a mob cannot, by compelling a person accused of a crime to plead guilty, and to be sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary, so shift the burden of proof from the state to the accused as to compel the accused to prove his innocence, and to prove it by a preponderance of the testimony, and to relieve the state from proving his guilt, and from proving it by evidence sufficient to remove every reasonable doubt. The accused has the right to be placed back in the same condition as he was before he entered his plea of guilty.

6. And it is further held that no error was committed in refusing instructions.

(January 7, 1898.)

ERROR to the District Court for Marion County to review a judgment revoking pleas of guilty and sentences formerly entered upon two indictments charging defendant with carnally knowing females under the age of eighteen years committed to his care, and ordering his release from imprisonment and a new trial. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. H. Carpenter for the State.

Mr. Frank Doster, for defendant in error:

An accused who pleads guilty to a criminal charge, under duress of fear of mob violence, and who is sentenced to prison upon such plea, may after the term at which sentenced, upon proceeding in error coram nobis, have such sentence revoked, the plea of guilt set aside, and a trial upon such charge.

Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 818, 44 Am. Rep. 29; Adler v. State, 85 Ark. 517, 87 Am. Rep. 48; Re Malison, 86 Kan. 729.

This proceeding by implication from all the authorities and under the definitions of our can review its own judgment after the term by writ of error coram nobis. Dows v. Harper, 6 Ohio, 518, 27 Am. Dec. 270.

In other states as will be seen from the cases below, the writ has been recognized in many cases.

But the court of common pleas which is not authorized to issue a writ of error of any description cannot entertain a writ of error coram nobis. People v. Oneida County Ct. C. P. 20 Johns. 22.

In Michigan a circuit court is held to have no power to issue the writ where the Constitution and statutes defining its jurisdiction give it no power to issue a writ of error in any case. Teller v. Wetherell, 6 Mich. 46.

And under the Tennessee Code, § 8110, giving county, chancery, and circuit courts power to issue the writ of error coram nobis, the supreme court, which is given by section 4508 power to "issue all writs and process necessary for the exercise and enforcement of its jurisdiction," cannot issue the writ of error coram nobis. Lamb v. Sneed, 4 Baxt. 349.

But as the writ of error coram nobis can be issued to correct an error of fact only by the same court where the judgment was rendered, a court cannot by such writ reach a judgment of a higher court affirming its own judgment. Land v. Williams, 12 Smedes & M. 362, 51 Am. Dec. 117; Latham v. Hodges, 35 N. C. 267.

In Arnold v. Sandford, 14 Johns. 417, and Camp v. Bennett, 18 Wend. 43, it is held that the infancy of defendant who appeared only by attorney could be tried by the jury in the supreme court and therefore might be assigned as error on writ of error to an inferior court. This seems to be a case if any such exists which it is technically proper to call a writ of error coram nobis as distinguished from the writ coram nobis.

In Davis v. Paokard, 6 Wend. 327, it was held that the New York Court of Errors and Appeals would not reverse a judgment of the supreme court for mere error of fact which might have been tried there on a writ of error coram nobis.

But in Teller v. Wetherell, supra, the court holds that error of fact such as the death of a party before suit can be assigned on a common writ of error.

Scope of the writ.

The writ is not now so comprehensive as it was at common law because where a proper remedy is afforded by appeal or new trial the writ will not lie. Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 818, 44 Am. Rep. 29.

In a criminal case a new fact suggested, which if known would have prevented a conviction, entitles a convicted person to the writ of error coram nobis.

As in the main case mob violence was feared in Sanders v. State, supra, and a plea of guilty was made on counsel's urgent advice, although the prisoner denied any knowledge of the crime, and the judgment was reversed for a new plea and trial.

In Reid v. Strider, 7 Gratt. 76, 54 Am. Dec. 120, a writ of error coram nobis is held inappropriate to chancery proceedings and the court adds that it cannot "for errors of fact not apparent upon its records grant writs of error coram nobis." But it further held that in that case there was no ground for the writ.

But error to contradict the record cannot be as-statute is a civil action, although brought to vacate a criminal sentence.

Kan. Civ. Code, §§ 7, 8.

Writs of error coram nobis were prosecuted at common law not to review errors of law apparent upon the record, but to bring to view some matter dehors the record, which upon being made to appear, justified the entry of a different judgment.

Sanders v. State and Adler v. State, supra.

Jurisdiction to issue writs coram nobis is in the district court.

Kan. Const. art. 8, § 3; Gen. Stat. chap. 27, § 1; Civ. Code, § 727; Cohen v. Trowbridge, 6 Kan. 385.

While district courts have only "such jurisdiction as may be provided by law," Kan. Const. art. 8, § 6; yet the law vests them with "general original jurisdiction of all matters, both civil and criminal, not otherwise provided by law."

Gen. Stat. chap. 28, § 1.

Habeas corpus will not lie because the process under which the confinement is had was issued on the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

Civ. Code, § 671; Ex parte Nye, 8 Kan. 99.

None of the statutory remedies are available.

Sanders v. State, supra.

The common-law writ of error coram nobis may under the express provisions of our statute be sued out.

Civ. Code, § 727.

The issue of fact involved in a proceeding coram nobis is to be tried by a jury.

Tyler v. Morris, 20 N. C. 487, 34 Am. Dec. 395; Adler v. State, supra.

The Statute of Limitations does not run against the right claimed in a proceeding coram nobis.

Powell v. Gott, 18 Mo. 488, 53 Am. Dec. 153; Latah v. McNees, 50 Mo. 381.

And it does not run against the right of a person under disability.

Gen. Stat. chap. 81, § 434; chap. 104, par. 27; Civ. Code, § 19; Angell, Limitations, 6th ed. § 195; Moore v. Armstrong, 10 Ohio, 11, 36 Am. Dec. 72, note.

Valentine, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the February term of the district court of Marion county, in 1885, the grand jury found two indictments against Robert Calhoun for defiling females under the age of eighteen years, committed to his care and protection, by carnally knowing them. The fact of such indictments having been found became known in the community. The public mind became greatly excited and hostile to the accused. Threats of lynching were freely made, and preparations to carry out the same were apparently going on. Knowledge of these threats and preparations was communicated to the accused, who was then in jail, and the same produced in his mind such a state of fear that, to appease the passions of the community, and secure himself from bodily violence, he pleaded guilty of the charges contained in such indictments, and was sentenced to the maximum limit of punishment—twenty-one years' consigned upon such a writ. Holford v. Alexander, 12 Ala. 280, 46 Am. Dec. 258.

A writ of error coram nobis lies to correct errors of fact only. Hawkins v. Bowie, 9 Gill & J. 428; Day v. Hamburg, 1 Browne, 75; Phillips v. Russell, Hempst. 62; Roughton v. Brown, 53 N. C. 308.

But it will not lie to correct errors of law. Hillman v. Chester, 12 Heisk. 34; Patterson v. Arnold, 4 Coldw. 364; Bigham v. Brewer, 4 Sneed, 422; Bridendolph v. Zeller, 8 Md. 325; Hawkins v. Bowie, supra; Fellows v. Griffin, 9 Smedes & M. 322; Williams v. Clay, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 66; Dinsmore v. Boyd, 6 Lea. 689.

Nor will it permit the review of a judgment for after-discovered testimony. Bigham v. Brewer, supra.

Nor will it lie to review an irregularity which arises upon the record where this can be done by motion under the statutes. Hirsh v. Weisberger, 44 Mo. App. 508.

But such an error of fact as the conviction of a slave as a free person is ground for a writ of error coram nobis and not for habeas corpus. Ex parte Toney, 11 Mo. 661.

And the insanity of a person not known at the trial is ground for a writ of error coram nobis after the term at which a conviction was had. Adler v. State, 35 Ark. 517, 37 Am. Rep. 43.

So the infancy of a defendant who appeared by attorney only is ground for a writ of error coram nobis in the supreme court to revoke its own judgment. Higbie v. Comstock, 1 Denio, 652; Meridith v. Sanders, 2 Bibb, 101.

In Kemp v. Cook, 18 Md. 130, 79 Am. Dec. 651, such a writ to set aside a judgment against an infant by confession of his attorney was brought but relief was denied on the ground of laches.

The coverture of a woman who was not given by statute the power to sue or defend without her husband is ground for the writ where her husband was not joined with her and the attention of the court was not called to the omission, and the coverture was not apparent on the record. Latah v. McNees, 50 Mo. 381; Roughton v. Brown, 53 N. C. 308.

Such a writ is also the proper way of having the death of a defendant put upon record and established where a venuditioni exponas was issued after the death of the judgment defendant. Wood v. Colwell, 84 Pa. 92.

In Meggott v. Broughton, Cro. Eliz. 106, and Weaver v. Shaw, 5 Tex. 228, the death of a party before judgment was also held ground for the writ.

In Case v. Ribelin, 1 J. J. Marsh. 29, and Hurst v. Fisher, 1 Watts & S. 433, the death of a plaintiff before judgment was held to be an error of fact for which the remedy was by writ of error coram nobis.

And in Day v. Hamburg, 1 Browne, 75, the same was held in case of the death before judgment of the plaintiff in an action for assault and battery.

So if one of two defendants dies before a judgment against both, the error can be corrected only by writ of error coram nobis. Calloway v. Nifong, 1 Mo. 223.

And where an appellee was dead at the time of affirming an appeal, the judgment was annulled and vacated. Mertel v. Hershheim, 9 Tex. 294.

So in Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154, a writ of error coram nobis is recognized as the proper remedy where a judgment is rendered after the death of a defendant, and therefore the court holds that such a judgment is valid against collateral attack.

The same is decided in Giddings v. Steele, 23 Tex. 722, 91 Am. Dec. 336.

And the same principle is held applicable to a change in the representative character of a party from that of surviving wife to that of administra-finement in the penitentiary at hard labor—in each case. In March, 1893, in the district court of Marion county, he brought proceedings in the nature of those known to the common law as writs of error coram nobis, to revoke the aforesaid sentences, and to set aside the pleas of guilty, upon the ground that such pleas had been extorted from him by duress and threats and appearances of impending and imminent mob violence, operating upon his fears, whereby he had not been allowed his constitutional rights to plead his innocence of the charges alleged against him in said indictments, to defend against the same in person and by counsel, to meet the witnesses against him face to face, and to have a public trial by an impartial jury. A trial was had in the error coram nobis proceeding at the September term, 1892, before the court and a jury, and the jury returned a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff, Calhoun, and also returned a special verdict, which, omitting title and signature, reads as follows: "We, the jury, impeached and sworn upon our oaths, do find that in the cases numbered 1,546 and 1,547, in the district court of Marion county, Kansas, at its February term for the year 1885, wherein the state of Kansas was plaintiff and Robert Calhoun was defendant, being indictments for the offenses of carnally knowing females under the age of eighteen years, confided to his care and protection, found and returned by the grand jury of said county at said term, and to which said indictments said defendant pleaded guilty, that the said pleas of guilty were made by said defendant unwillingly and involuntarily, and under the influence and duress of his fears of death or great bodily injury being inflicted upon him by a mob if he did not so plead guilty to such indictments." A motion by the state for a new trial was made and overruled, findings of fact were made by the court in accordance with the verdict of the jury, and judgment was rendered by the court revoking the sentences and the pleas of guilty, awarding the accused a trial in each case, ordering his release from confinement in the penitentiary, directing the warden to deliver him to the jailer of Marion county, and directing the issuance of warrants for his arrest and commitment to the jail of such county pending the trials to be had. The state in various ways interposed objections to the jurisdiction of the court, and to the sufficiency of the facts alleged and proved, interposed the Statute of Limitations in bar of the proceedings, and objected to the admissibility of some of the plaintiff's evidence, and preserved proper exceptions to all adverse rulings.

Before proceeding to the discussion of the questions presented by counsel as being involved in this case, it would be well to state that it is admitted by counsel that the proceedings in the lower court were civil in their nature, and not criminal, and that the remedy of petition in error, and not appeal, is the proper remedy in this court.

The first question presented by the state, which was the defendant below and is the plaintiff in error, is that the court below had no jurisdiction to hear or determine any of the matters in controversy in this case, no power trix pending a writ of error. Moke v. Brackett, 23 Tex. 443.

But "only such errors in fact can be assigned as are consistent with the record on a writ of error coram nobis." Williams v. Edwards, 34 N. C. 118.

A finding of fact by the court cannot be contradicted on such a writ. Williams v. Edwards, supra; Richardson v. Jones, 12 Gratt. 58.

Such a writ will not reach facts found by referee, court, or jury. Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 20 L. ed. 797.

So in Hillman v. Chester, 12 Heisk. 34, it is held that the writ will not reach a fact directly passed upon in judgment.

A writ of error coram nobis is the remedy where a judgment is rendered on a barred debt without notice, appearance, or defense by the defendant. Merritt v. Barks, 6 Humph. 332.

Also to review a judgment rendered without notice on a bond signed only in blank. Wynne v. Governor, 1 Yerg. 149, 24 Am. Dec. 448.

Also where a judgment by default is taken by plaintiff's attorney, who fraudulently suppressed a plea and deposition furnished him by defendant's attorney. Tucker v. James, 12 Heisk. 333.

So where all litigated cases were continued and a case was afterwards taken up and disposed of in the absence of a party and his attorney, a writ of error coram nobis was held a proper remedy. Crouch v. Mullinix, 1 Heisk. 478.

But not in case of a default judgment merely because a declaration had been made by some one not shown to the effect that no litigated case would be tried that term. Thurston v. Belote, 12 Heisk. 249.

A judgment jointly confessed for fine and costs cannot be shown on a writ of coram nobis to have been entered by mistake for more than the sureties authorized. State v. Disney, 5 Sneed, 598.

18 L. R. A.

Under a code provision which regulates the writ of error coram nobis, and allows it for a review by a court of its own judgment, the court cannot on such a writ inquire into the proceedings of arbitrators. McKinney v. Western Stage Co. 4 Iowa, 420.

The writ was issued in several cases in Mississippi and Kentucky to quash a forthcoming bond. In Miller v. Patton, 8 Smedes & M. 483, the court refused to quash the bond because it had become a judgment and nothing was said about the scope of the writ.

In Parkinson v. Waldron, 7 Smedes & M. 189, it is said that if the motion was considered merely as a mode of bringing up the merits of the case under a writ of error coram nobis, and not as an independent motion to quash the forthcoming bond, and upon investigation it should appear that the bond was absolutely void, the court might perhaps so declare it; but in Fellows v. Griffin, 9 Smedes & M. 382, it is said that this was not deciding that the judgment on the motion was a correct mode of bringing up the merits of the writ of error or that a defective bond could be reached by such writ of error.

In Keller v. Scott, 2 Smedes & M. 82, the writ was issued on behalf of a surety on a forthcoming bond.

In Williams v. Clay, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 56, the writ of error coram nobis was issued to quash an execution.

The practice in these states seems to be peculiar to them.

Right to the writ.

In Combs v. Carter, 1 Dana, 178, it is said that the writ of error coram nobis issues as a matter of right, but this case was one arising under the Kentucky Act of 1803.

In Tyler v. Morris, 20 N. C. 437, 34 Am. Dec. 306, and Ribout v. Wheeler, Sayer, 166, it is said that the

to set aside the aforesaid sentences or pleas, and no power to grant trials in the aforesaid criminal cases. It is admitted on the part of Calhoun—the defendant in the criminal cases, the plaintiff below in this proceeding, and the defendant in error in this court—that no express remedy is given to him or to any one else similarly situated under any express provision of any statute; but he claims that he has a remedy under the principles of the common law, inferentially under those provisions of the statutes which recognize the existence and binding force of the common law. That the common law has existence in Kansas in some cases and to some extent we suppose all will admit. It has existence and force in all cases where the same is not inconsistent with the Constitution or the statutes or the institutions of this country, and where, except for the common law, proper remedies for injustice and wrong and for the redress of grievances would not be furnished. The territory now occupied by the state of Kansas has belonged to the United States ever since the year 1803, and the government of the United States recognizes and enforces the common law everywhere except where it is otherwise provided by the Constitution or statutes, or where it is inconsistent with the institutions of this country. This same territory was also once, and from 1804 to 1812, under the jurisdiction and control of Indiana territory (2 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 287), and was also once, and from 1812 to 1820, under the jurisdiction and control of writ is not a writ of right but can be granted only upon an affidavit showing an error of fact, and that discretion of the court in refusing it is not appealable.

Limitations.

That there is no Statute of Limitations against such a motion is decided in Latah v. McNees, 50 Mo. 381; Powell v. Gott, 13 Mo. 458, 53 Am. Dec. 153. But in Strode v. Stafford, 1 Brock. 162, the limit of the time for such a writ is held not to be the same as that for a writ of error.

And in Jeffery v. Fitch, 46 Conn. 601, the time was held to be that allowed for a new trial.

And in Weaver v. Shaw, 5 Tex. 238, the time was held to be limited by analogy to that allowed for a bill of review.

Procedure.

In Clarke v. Bell, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 168, and in Williams v. Clay, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 55, an assignment of errors and law together was held not subject to amendment by striking out the errors of law.

That the papers on such a writ should not regularly be entitled in any suit is decided in Maher v. Comstock, 1 How. Pr. 175.

A writ of error coram nobis is held not to be a "writ of error" within the meaning of 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat., § 595, § 23, requiring bail on writs of error. Comstock v. Van Schoonhoven, 3 How. Pr. 258.

A plea in nullo est erratum is in effect a demurrer admitting the facts alleged. Goodwin v. Sanders, 9 Yerg. 91.

All the defendants in a joint judgment must be made parties to a writ coram vobis to set it aside and it cannot be set aside as to one only. Cook v. Conway, 8 Dana, 454.

But parties whom the error of fact does not affect need not be joined. Yet a husband must be joined with his wife where she cannot sue or prosecute any legal proceeding without him. Rough-ton v. Brown, 58 N. C. 368.

The writ should command the judges "that the record and proceedings aforesaid [i. e. remaining before you] being inspected you cause further to be done," etc., and it is entirely defective where the command is "that you cause a transcript of the record to be brought before you" at a certain date "that the record and proceedings being inspected we [the people] may further cause to be done," etc. Smith v. Kingsley, 19 Wend. 620.

But mere irregularities in a writ of error coram vobis to supersede an execution are not fatal when the parties have actually appeared in court. Duff v. Combs, 8 B. Mon. 386.

If a fact alleged as error is disputed it must be tried by a jury. Fellows v. Griffin, 9 Smedes & M. 362; Adler v. State, 35 Ark. 517, 37 Am. Rep. 48; Crawford v. Williams, 1 Swan, 341. 18 L. R. A.

A notice must be given in order to obtain the writ. Crawford v. Williams, Comstock v. Van Schoonhoven, and Maher v. Comstock, supra.

If the notice required by statute is not given the judgment may be affirmed. Mears v. Garretson, 2 G. Greene, 816.

But under the Kentucky Act of 1808, the want of notice required by statute is not cause for quashing the writ. Combs v. Carter, 1 Dana, 178.

Discretion as to refusing a writ of error coram nobis is not appealable where the ground of the writ was the death of the defendant at the time of the judgment. Issue might have been taken on that point and so made a question for the jury. Tyler v. Morris, 20 N. C. 487, 34 Am. Dec. 395.

In Pickett v. Legerwood, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 144, 8 L. ed. 638, a writ of error coram vobis, which was but a substitute for a motion to the court to correct an error of its own in granting improvidently a motion for leave to amend a declaration in ejectment by extending the term when in fact unknown to the court the term declared on had long since expired, the terretenant changed, and only one of the original defendants survived, who had removed to a great distance, was held not reviewable by writ of error.

But a judgment on a writ of error coram nobis sustaining a venditioni exponas after the death of a defendant without a scire factas against the executor was reversed on a writ of error, in Wood v. Colwell, 34 Pa. 92.

In and Holford v. Alexander, 12 Ala. 280, 46 Am. Dec. 253, a judgment on such a writ recalling a former judgment for trial de novo is held final for the purpose of a writ of error.

The judgment on a writ of error coram vobis should be "revocatur." DeWitt v. Post, 11 Johns. 460.

But such judgment is proper only when the judgment of the same court is recalled for error in fact, and the judgment correcting an error of a lower court must be "reversed." Camp v. Bennett, 16 Wend. 48.

A judgment for the plaintiff in error on such a writ should be that the judgment is revoked and annulled and should not reinstate the case for new trial de novo, because judgment is final as relates to the former judgment and suit. Crawford v. Williams, 1 Swan, 341.

The writ of error coram vobis will not of itself operate to stay execution. Ferris v. Douglass, 30 Wend. 626; Smith v. Kingsley, 19 Wend. 620.

This is in accordance with the English practice as declared in Horne v. Bushel, 2 Strange, 948; Ribout v. Wheeler, Sayer, 166; Birch v. Triste, 8 East, 415; Semple v. Turner, 6 Mees. & W. 152.

A writ of error coram vobis cannot be brought after affirmance of a writ of error to review the law. Lambell v. Pretty John, 1 Strange, 600; Burleigh v. Harris, 2 Strange 978. B. A. R.

Missouri territory (Id. p. 743 et seq.), both of which territories recognized the common law. At the last-mentioned date a portion of Missouri territory was admitted into the Union as a state. 3 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 545. In 1854 the territory now constituting the state of Kansas became an organized territory, and from 1855 up to 1861 it was governed by its own territorial laws and the laws of the United States, when, in 1861, it became a state. As early as 1858 the following statute was enacted by the territorial Legislature of Kansas, to wit: "Sec. 603. That rights of civil action, given or secured by existing laws, shall be prosecuted in the manner provided for by this Code, except as provided in section six hundred and four. If a case ever arise in which an action for the enforcement or protection of a right, or the redress or prevention of a wrong, cannot be had under this Code, the practice heretofore in use may be adopted, so far as may be necessary to prevent a failure of justice." Civ. Code 1858, § 603. A similar statute has been in force ever since, and is now in force. Civ. Code 1868, § 727; Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 4841. Also the common law, by express enactment, has been in force in Kansas almost from the beginning. The present statute with regard thereto reads as follows: "Sec. 3. The common law, as modified by constitutional and statutory law, judicial decisions, and the condition and wants of the people, shall remain in force in aid of the General Statutes of this state." Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 7281. There are but few statutory actions in this state. Nearly every right of action in this state is founded upon and given only by the all-reaching principles of the common law, and generally it is only the procedure, and not the right of action, that is furnished or regulated by statute; and even as to procedure the statutes sometimes fail, and in such cases parties must resort to and invoke the aid of the common law. That such a remedy as the one resorted to by the plaintiff in this proceeding existed at common law there can be no doubt, and we think it still exists wherever it is necessary to invoke its aid. See the case of Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 818, 44 Am. Rep. 29, and the many authorities there cited. Is it possible that a person, who, under fear of mob violence and of death or great personal injury, is compelled to plead guilty to a criminal charge, and to be sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary, is without remedy to restore to him his lost rights? But if he has no remedy, then what becomes of the guaranties of our own state Constitution? Sections 10 and 18 of the Bill of Rights of our Constitution read as follows: "Sec. 10. In all prosecutions the accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person or by counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to meet the witness face to face, and to have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed. No person shall be a witness against himself, or be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." "Sec. 18. All persons, for injuries suffered in person, reputation, or property, shall have remedy by due course of law, and justice administered without delay." If any court has jurisdiction of proceedings like the present, it is the district court. Under section 8, art. 3, of the Constitution, the supreme court has original jurisdiction only in proceedings in quo warranto, mandamus, and habeas corpus, and such appellate jurisdiction only as may be provided by law; and neither the Constitution nor any statute has given to the supreme court, nor, indeed, to any other court, unless it is the district court, any jurisdiction in any proceeding like the present. Under section 1 of the Act relating to district courts, the district court is made a court of record, and is given "general original jurisdiction of all matters, both civil and criminal, not otherwise provided by law," (Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 1961,) and jurisdiction like the present has not been otherwise provided for by the Constitution or by any statute. Upon the whole, we think the district court, and it alone, has jurisdiction in cases like the present; and this opinion follows from a consideration of the common law and the Constitution and the statutes both of this state and of the United States, viewed in the light of history and of usage, and under the decisions of our own courts and of the courts elsewhere.

But it is claimed that, even if the district court has jurisdiction in cases like the present, still the plaintiff's present action or proceeding was barred by some Statute of Limitations before it was commenced. The original pleas of guilty took place and the sentence and judgments following them were rendered on March 2, 1885, and this present proceeding was not commenced until some time in March, 1892, more than seven years having in the meantime elapsed; and it is now claimed by the state that the proceeding was barred either by the two-years Statute of Limitations (Civ. Code Pr. § 18, subd. 8) or by the five-years' Statute of Limitations, (Id. subd. 6.) There are decisions which hold that no Statute of Limitations can ever operate in cases like the present. Powell v. Gott, 18 Mo. 458, 58 Am. Dec. 153; Latahaw v. McNeas, 50 Mo. 381. But it is not necessary, as we think, to hunt for decided cases. Our statutes govern. Section 19, Civil Code Pr., provides as follows: "Sec. 19. If a person entitled to bring an action other than for the recovery of real property, except for a penalty or a forfeiture, be, at the time the cause of action accrued, under any legal disability, every such person shall be entitled to bring such action within one year after such disability shall be removed." And section 1, subd. 27, of the Act relating to the construction of statutes, reads as follows: "Twenty-Seventh. The phrase, 'under legal disability,' includes persons within the age of minority, or of unsound mind, or imprisoned." Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 6687. But it is claimed on the part of the state that if the plaintiff in this proceeding was under such a legal disability that the Statute of Limitations would not run against such a proceeding, then that he was under such a legal disability that he could not commence or maintain the proceeding at all; or, in other words, it is claimed that, if from fears of his life or of great personal injury, and to avoid death or great personal injury, he pleaded guilty to a criminal charge, and was sentenced thereon to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary for a term of years exceeding the time prescribed by the Statute of Limitations within which he could commence his action or proceeding, then that he was and is wholly without remedy, for he was under such a legal disability that he could not commence any such proceeding to set aside the sentence or the plea while imprisoned, nor until the term for which he was sentenced to imprisonment should expire. Under the Statute of Limitations, he would have one year after the disability from imprisonment was removed within which to commence his action. Civ. Code Pr. § 19. But could he not commence his action before the beginning of that year, and while he was still imprisoned? What would be the use of his commencing any action or proceeding to relieve him from the consequences of his sentence after he had served in the penitentiary the full time for which he was sentenced? The commencing of any action or proceeding would then be of no benefit to him. It must be remembered that the plaintiff's imprisonment commenced before he made his pleas in the criminal cases, and has continued without any interruption up to the present time. While we think that under the statutes the plaintiff is and has been under such a legal disability that the Statute of Limitations has not operated against his remedy, yet we think that he has not been under such a legal disability as would prevent his commencing or maintaining an action to restore him to his just rights, provided, of course, that some friend would commence and conduct the proceeding for him. We do not think that the plaintiff's remedy in this case is barred by any Statute of Limitations.

The state also claims that the court below erred in excluding certain evidence. It appears that on May 25, 1892, the deposition of the plaintiff below, Calhoun, was taken in Leavenworth county, and presumably in the penitentiary where he was confined. In that deposition he stated that the relation of attorney at law and client never existed between himself and C. W. Keller. Afterwards, and on the trial of this case, which occurred on September 12, 1892, in Marion county, the deposition was read in evidence. Also the oral testimony of Mr. Keller was introduced in evidence on the part of the plaintiff, Calhoun. It appeared from the testimony of both these witnesses that they had had a conversation about the last of February, 1895, in the county jail of Marion county where Calhoun was then imprisoned; and Mr. Keller also testified that at the time of this conversation he was employed as an attorney at law by Calhoun, and that the conversation then had was had between them in the relation of attorney and client. Notwithstanding this, the state offered to introduce the testimony of Mr. Keller to show what the conversation was, but Calhoun's counsel in this case, Frank Doster, objected upon the ground that the conversation consisted of confidential communications had between them as attorney and client, and the court excluded the evidence, and this the state claims was error. Calhoun himself was not present at the trial. We do not think that any error was committed in the exclusion of this evidence. Civ. Code Pr. § 323, subd. 4. The court below heard the oral testimony of Mr. Keller, and could determine from it and from Calhoun's deposition very much better than we can whether the conversation had between Keller and Calhoun in the county jail was a confidential conversation had between them as attorney and client or not; and if it was such a conversation, (and we must hold that it was,) then the court below certainly did not err in excluding it. More than seven years had elapsed after the conversation had occurred and before Mr. Calhoun's deposition was taken, and during all that time, except a few days, Calhoun had been confined in the penitentiary at hard labor; and it cannot be expected that his memory would be as good as that of Mr. Keller. It is probable that, if he had had an opportunity to have had his memory refreshed by another conversation with Mr. Keller, he would have made a different statement. We do not think that he was conclusively bound by his statement made in his deposition, but had the right, through his counsel, to show by the testimony of Mr. Keller that the relation of attorney and client in fact existed between them at the time of the conversation had in the county jail in 1895, and therefore that what was said during that conversation could not be given in evidence over the objections of his counsel in this case.

It is further claimed that the court below erred in permitting the plaintiff, Calhoun, to prove threats made against his life both before and after the pleas of guilty in the criminal cases, and threats not communicated to him before his pleas. We do not think that any error was committed in this respect. It was very proper to show the temper of the mob, for the purpose of showing whether any real danger existed as to the life of Calhoun, and these threats tended to show this fact. All the threats proved that were made after Calhoun entered his pleas of guilty were made on the same day, and before the mob had completely dispersed. Of course, it was a very important fact—indeed, a necessary fact—as to whether Calhoun entertained fears of his life or great personal injury at the time he entered the pleas or not. But the fact that he had substantial grounds for such fears was another very important fact, and it was proper that evidence of that fact should also be given to the jury.

It is also claimed that the court below erred in instructing the jury, in substance, that they had no right to consider the question of the guilt or innocence of Calhoun. We would think this instruction was correct. It can scarcely be possible that a mob, by compelling a person accused of crime to plead guilty thereto, and be sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary, can thereby shift the burden of proof from the state to the accused. Can a mob, by this means, abrogate all presumptions of innocence? Can the mob cast the burden upon the accused of proving his innocence, and of proving it by a preponderance of the testimony, and relieve the state of proving his guilt, and of proving it by evidence sufficient to remove every reasonable doubt? A mob has no right by any means to shift the burden of proof from the state to the accused, or to relieve the state from proving the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, and no right to compel the accused to prove his innocence, and to prove it by a preponderance of the evidence. The accused had the right to be placed back in the same condition as he was before he entered his pleas of guilty. He had the right to be placed back in such a condition that he could avail himself of all the rights given to him by sections 10 and 18 of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution, above quoted, and also of section 228 of the Criminal Code, and of all the other provisions of the Constitution and the statutes adopted or enacted in the interest of fair trials and of liberty and justice. On the final trials in the criminal cases he can be fairly tried, and, if his guilt shall then be fairly established, he can then be sentenced according to law. At the present, and in this proceeding, he is not required to establish his innocence. We think no error was committed in this respect.

It is further claimed by the state that the court below erred in refusing to give a certain instruction that, if Calhoun entered his pleas of guilty because he was in fact guilty, and honestly desired to enter such pleas, irrespective of any fear of mob violence, then that the fact that he was threatened with mob violence was not sufficient to avoid the sentence of the court. There are at least two sufficient answers to this claim of error: First, the court, in substance, gave the instruction in its general charge; and, second, the special findings of the jury would cure any error that might have intervened in this respect.

After a careful consideration of all the points presented by counsel in this case, we are of the opinion that no substantial error was committed by the court below. With regard to actions or proceedings in this country in the nature of writs of error coram nobis, a valuable note will be found appended to the case of Hoford v. Alexander, 46 Am. Dec. 257-261. Upon the points made by counsel our decision is as follows:

1. Where the accused in a criminal prosecution in the district court is forced through well-grounded fears of mob violence to plead guilty to the criminal charge, and to be sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary for a term of years, he has a right to relief from such sentence and plea by an action or proceeding in the same court in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis.

2. And in such a case, where the accused was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitenentiary for a period of forty-two years, and, after having served for more than seven years of that term, he commences an action in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis to set aside such sentence and plea, his action is not barred by any statute of limitations, for the reason that no statute of limitations will operate against the remedy of a party while he is under the legal disability of imprisonment.

8. In such a case, where a deposition of the accused was read in evidence on the trial in his action for relief, and in such deposition was a statement made by him that the relation of attorney and client had never existed between himself and K., but the oral testimony of K., introduced on the trial, showed that such relation did once exist, and that a certain conversation had between them more than seven years prior to that time, and while that relation existed, was a confidential conversation had between them as attorney and client, and the state offered to show what that conversation was, but the accused, through his counsel in the action for relief, objected, and the court excluded the evidence, held that the supreme court cannot say that any error was committed.

4. In such a case, where the trial court permitted the accused to show threats of mob violence, made both before and after, but on the same day of, the entering of his plea of guilty, and many of which threats were not communicated to the accused before his plea was entered, held not error; that the evidence tended to show that there was a real danger from mob violence, and that the fears of the accused were well founded, and that the evidence was proper to go to the jury.

6. And, further held, that the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused in such case is not a necessary question to be determined in the case; that a mob cannot, by compelling a person accused of crime to plead guilty, and to be sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor in the penitentiary, so shift the burden of proof from the state to the accused as to compel the accused to prove his innocence, and to prove it by a preponderance of the testimony, and to relieve the state from proving his guilt, and from proving it by evidence sufficient to remove every reasonable doubt. The accused has the right to be placed back in the same condition as he was before he entered his plea of guilty.

9. And it is further held that no error was committed in refusing instructions.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

James C. MASON, Appt.,

RICHMOND & DANVILLE R. CO., Respt.

(.....N. C.....)

1. The want of any bumpers on freight cars, whether received from another company or not, renders a railroad company liable for injury received in consequence thereof by a brakeman who is suddenly called upon in the night to couple the cars and who has no knowledge of their defects.

2. It is not the duty of a brakeman to examine the bumpers of cars on a dark night before essaying to couple the cars in obedience to orders.

NOTE.—See, in connection with the above case, that of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland (Ala.) ante, 18 L. R. A.

290; in which the use of different kinds of buffers in the same train was held not to be negligence.

3. The command of the conductor of a freight train to a brakeman to go between the cars when he cannot couple them otherwise is a waiver of a rule of the company prohibiting brakemen to go between cars under any circumstances.
4. Judicial notice will be taken of the relation between the brakemen and conductor of a freight train and that the brakemen feel impelled to obey the conductor's orders.

(Burwell, J., dissents.)

(December 22, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Guilford County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence.

Reversed.

Plaintiff was a brakeman in defendant's employ and signed the agreement which defendant required of its employés, of which the following is a copy:

"I fully understand that the rules of the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company positively prohibit brakemen from coupling or uncoupling cars except with a stick, and that brakemen or others must not go between cars, under any circumstances, for the purpose of coupling or uncoupling, or for adjusting pins, etc., when an engine is attached to such cars or train; and, in consideration of being employed by said company, I hereby agree to be bound by said rule, and waive all or any liability of said company to me for any results of disobedience or infraction thereof. I have read the above, and fully understand it."

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. John A. Barringer for appellant.

Mr. D. Schenck for respondent.

Avery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court below held that, upon the whole evidence, the plaintiff had failed to make out a prima facie case. The burden was upon the servant, suing his employers, to show (1) that the machinery was defective; (2) that the defects were the proximate cause of the injury; (3) that the master had knowledge, or might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have had knowledge, of such defects. Hudson v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 104 N. C. 491. The question presented by the appeal, therefore, is whether, in any aspect of the evidence, the plaintiff has relieved himself of the onus probandi imposed upon him by law.

The first point to be considered is whether the defendant company was negligent in failing to provide what is known as the "Janney," or some other improved coupler, which would obviate the necessity, under any circumstances, of going between the ends of cars in order to fasten one to another. The general rule is that it is not the duty of railway companies to furnish machinery of the very best varieties, or to attach appliances of the latest and safest kinds, but that it is culpable to use cars or engines of any particular pattern which an ordinary inspection would show to be defective. In view of the changes incident to new inventions and discoveries, facts which would not have shown negligence a few years since may now, or in the near future, be declared in law ample evidence of culpable dereliction in duty, such as will involve liability for damages. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 12; Blackwell v. Moorman (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 729 (decided at this term). We think that the time has arrived when railroad companies should be required to attach such couplers, and perhaps air-brakes, or appliances equally safe and effective for checking the speed of moving trains, on all passenger cars, since, as a rule, each corporation uses for carrying passengers none but its own conveyances, and the new couplers have now become so cheap, as compared to the value of the lives and limbs of servants and passengers, that it is not unreasonable to require that they provide them, on peril of answering for any damage which might have been obviated by their use. But while, doubtless, the day will soon come when they can be attached at comparatively small cost to all freight cars, it might seriously embarrass our commerce, involving an interchange, for the purposes of expeditious transportation, of vehicles between all of the roads from Canada to Mexico, were every carrier required, not only to incur the expense of buying the right, and readjusting all of its own cars for the use, of the improved fastening, but also to choose between refusing to receive a car of another company without such couplers, and incurring contingent liability for using it; since the liability of the corporation for such defects in those received from other companies is the same as for defects in its own. Patterson, Railway Accident Law, 812; Miller v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 99 N. Y. 657; Jones v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 628. But it appears from the evidence that the plaintiff was suddenly called upon on a very dark night to couple to the train two box cars standing upon the siding at Durham,—one of which belonged to the defendant, and another to a different company,—and that, when the train backed towards the train on the siding, he saw that the pin, which he had adjusted with a stick in the drawhead of the car standing on the track, would not go down into the link of the drawhead in the moving car, which he had also arranged with his stick, unless he should use his hand to push it down, and in this emergency he rushed in between the cars, as the conductor had ordered him to do whenever he failed in the effort to couple with a stick. After getting between the standing and the moving car, he discovered for the first time that there were no bumpers on either car. Bumpers are blocks of wood fastened to the end of a box car, above and below or on either side of the drawhead, and usually protrude about eight or ten inches, so that they serve the double purpose of preventing drawheads from being broken by a collision, and of protecting brakemen who may be between the cars. Drawheads have springs in them, and give way when they come into collision with each other, so that they cannot be made to subserve the purpose, like bumpers, of holding the cars apart. In Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 100 N. Y. 467, where the facts were that a brakeman was injured in coupling two cars belonging to another company, the bumpers being only three inches long, the court said: "The defendant was under obligation to its employes to exercise reasonable care and diligence in furnishing them safe and suitable implements, cars, and machinery for the discharge of their duties. . . . The defect was an obvious one, easily discoverable by the most ordinary inspection, and it would seem to be the grossest negligence to put such cars into any train, and especially into a train consisting of cars of different gauge. But these two cars did not belong to the defendant. They belonged to other companies, and came to it loaded, and it was drawing them over its road. . . . It is not bound to take such cars if they are known to be defective and unsafe. Even if it is not bound to make tests to discover secret defects, and is not responsible for such defects, it is bound to inspect foreign cars just as it would inspect its own cars. . . . When cars come to it which have defects visible or discoverable by ordinary inspection, it must either remedy such defects, or refuse to take such cars. So much, at least, is due from it to its employes. The employes can no more be said to assume the risk of such defects in foreign cars than in cars belonging to the company. . . . The defect here complained of was obvious, easily discoverable by the most ordinary inspection, and it seems it could have been easily remedied by simply nailing or fastening additional strips of wood to the ends of the cars, so as to give the bumpers sufficient width to afford the protection needed and intended." The case being exactly in point, it seems not inappropriate to reproduce the language of Judge Earl from this elaborate opinion, instead of discussing the same question at greater length for ourselves. The general rule is that, where freight cars are obviously so defectively made, whether by a failure to attach bumpers at all, or to make them sufficiently long to protect a person standing between the cars when in motion, or in consequence of any other fault in construction, that the slightest indiscretion on the part of an operative may endanger his life, the company is liable for any injury resulting from such defects. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Fredericks, 71 Ill. 294; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Jackson, 55 Ill. 492, 8 Am. Rep. 661; Wedgwood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 478. In Gottlieb's Case, supra, it will be observed that stress was laid upon the fact that the want of a bumper would have been discovered by an ordinary inspection, and in our case, as well as in that, the brakeman was suddenly called upon to pass between two cars, of the condition of which he could not have previously informed himself. Before daylight on a dark morning the duty devolved upon him of attaching a car, which it may be was never north of Wilmington, until brought by some freight train with which plaintiff had no connection on the day before to the station where he found it. In Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 81 N. C. 459, where the injury to the plaintiff was caused by a defective rod, which he had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect, Chief Justice Smith, speaking for the court, said: "Had the proper inspection been made by the defendant, and the rod repaired and strengthened, the accident would not have occurred; and hence it must be ascribed to the 18 L. R. A.

defendant's own dereliction of duty. The fault lies with the company, and it must bear the consequences." The defendant ought to have examined its own car and, upon discovering its condition, bumpers could have been placed upon it at comparatively trivial cost, and the same duty of inspection devolved upon it when the other car was tendered to it; but upon examination it had the option, as will appear from the authorities already cited, of refusing to receive it at all or of repairing it, so as to make it safe, after it was received.

So, apart from the special contract which is pleaded as a defense, the defendant is prima facie liable to answer in damages because of its negligence, when its officers ought to have known of the defect, and to have remedied it, and it has not relieved itself of this apparent liability by showing that the plaintiff knew, or had opportunity to know, the condition of the particular cars on the siding; but, on the contrary, the only testimony on the subject is that of plaintiff, to the effect that he did not see the car till he had put himself in danger, and then, in the imperfect light, discovered that there was no bumper on either of those between which he was already caught. Crutchfield v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 76 N. C. 322; Pleasants v. Raleigh & A. A. R. Co. 95 N. C. 195; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 92, 94, 95; Cooley, Torts, 561. Leaving the agreement, designated as Exhibit A, out of view, if there is any testimony tending to show contributory negligence, there was certainly no admitted state of facts which justified the court in withdrawing the case from the jury, and holding that, in any aspect of the evidence, the injury was caused by the fault of the plaintiff. In Crutchfield's Case, supra, it was expressly declared that, though the servant assumed the risks of accident incident to his service, he did not contract to excuse the negligence of the company, unless he knew of the danger to which he was exposed by its want of care, or might, by reasonable diligence, have known of it, and failed to give notice to his employer, so that the defect might be remedied.

The case at bar is not one in which the plaintiff was injured by the fault of a fellow servant, but by the negligence of the master in carelessly retaining on the line, and receiving from other carriers, palpably defective conveyances; the master being presumed to know of the danger, which could have been discovered by ordinary inspection, while the servant had no opportunity to know, until it was too late to avoid it. The dangerous condition of the car was not, as in Pleasants' Case, supra, known to both employer and employe, but only to the former. Where the rolling stock or machinery of a company is so defective in its construction that by an ordinary inspection the company could discover its condition, unless it appear that, notwithstanding such want of care on its part, the supervening negligence of the servant was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, the company is liable. Wedgwood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. and Hudson v. Charleston, O. & C. R. Co. supra; St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Valirius, 56 Ind. 511; Gottlieb's Case, supra. Another case precisely in point is King v. Ohio & C. R. Co., 14 Fed.

Rep. 277, in which Judge Gresham, of the circuit court, held that a brakeman in coupling cars had a right to assume that they are in good and safe condition, and is not negligent in running between cars without stopping to examine and see whether the drawheads are properly adjusted or not. No more is it his duty to examine bumpers on a dark night before essaying to couple cars.

The cars being palpably defective, and it appearing plainly that the company might, by ordinary care in inspecting them, have known their condition, the defendant still insists that, though the plaintiff may not have been negligent in knowingly incurring risk that he might have avoided, still he was violating a rule of the company of which he had express notice when he passed between the cars to adjust the coupling, and his want of care was therefore the cause of the injury. The authorities which we have cited fully sustain the position that, in the absence of such an agreement, the company would be deemed negligent and the plaintiff would be held free from blame. In addition to those authorities, we can fortify our position more strongly still by recurring to the principle that, notwithstanding any real or supposed negligence of an injured plaintiff, a railway company is liable in damages if but for its own want of care the injury could have been avoided. Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 686; Clark v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 109 N. C. 480, 14 L. R. A. 749. If, therefore, we were to concede that the plaintiff was culpable in exposing himself to danger, the carelessness of the defendant would nevertheless be deemed in law the proximate cause of the injury.

Mr. Beach, citing with approval 71 Ill. 294, supra, says: "But when the cars are so constructed, the bumpers being of different heights, or being in any respect so made that the slightest indiscretion on the part of the operative will prove fatal to him, it has been held that when the injury results from such causes the company is liable." Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 865. But the case of Cowles v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 84 N. C. 809, 87 Am. Rep. 620, it would seem, is so strikingly analogous as, upon principle, to be decisive of that at bar. If, then, the company was held to be wanting in ordinary care because the cars provided did not so fit each other that the bumpers would keep them apart and prevent collisions, it would seem, where the failure to place any bumpers at all on cars is the proximate cause of a collision in which a brakeman is injured, there would be still more palpable proof of negligence. Justice Ruffin stated the fact to be, as appeared from the plaintiff's testimony on the trial, "that the brakeman was under the immediate direction and order of one Garrison, who was the engineer and conductor of the defendant's freight train," and that while executing the order of the conductor, as in our case, the brakeman "was injured in the manner complained of, by a collision of two cars, which collision resulted from the fact that the cars were so constructed that their bumpers did not correspond or fit one another as they should have done, in order to prevent the cars coming in too close contact, which defect was unknown to plaintiff, and but for which he would not have been injured." This court held that the defects in the cars were such as to establish negligence on the part of the defendant, because the defect was so obvious as to be seen on inspection, and to make it incumbent on the company to show that some subsequent carelessness of the plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury. The statement as to the relations of the conductor and brakeman was much more meager, it is true, than in Patton v. Western N. C. R. Co., 96 N. C. 455, since there the superior, discharging himself the same double duties of conductor and engineer, was expressly shown to have the power to employ and discharge the laborers subject to his orders.

The question involved in all such cases is whether the subordinate feels constrained to obey the orders of his superior, though apparently obedience will be attended with peril, rather than run the risk of defying his authority. The fact that the conductor has the power to employ and discharge brakemen on his train is but evidence to show that the brakemen fear to disobey his commands. The existence of such authority, in the very nature of things, cannot be made the invariable test of the servant's culpability. If the servant never knows or communicates with a higher official than the conductor, and receives every order upon which he acts in the line of his duty from him as a superior,—as it is a matter of universal knowledge is the true state of facts on all railroads,—is it not reasonable for the laborer to conclude that the conductor has power to waive the requirement of the rule that he has signed, and that, if he refuses to couple cars in accordance with his direction, and thereby delays the departure of a train, he may at least be reported for inefficiency and discharged from the service of the company? If the servant acts upon a well-grounded fear of losing his place, the reason of the rule would be met and he should be declared free from culpability, unless the plaintiff recklessly exposed himself to manifest peril, or chose to subject himself to danger when another safe mode of discharging his duty was open to him, as in Chambers v. Western N. C. R. Co. 91 N. C. 475. The elaborate opinion of Justice Field in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 877, 28 L. ed. 787, in which he reviews the question, Who are servants engaged in a common employment?—in the light of all the previous decisions in America and England, contains the clearest and most philosophical discussion of the subject to be found in any authority to which we have had access. He announces the conclusion of that court as follows: "A conductor, having the entire control and management of a railway train, occupies a very different position from the brakemen, the porters and other subordinates employed. He is in fact and should be treated as the personal representative of the corporation, for whose negligence it is responsible to subordinate servants. This view of his relation to the corporation seems to us a reasonable and just one, and it will insure care in the selection of such agents, and thus give greater security to the servants engaged under him in an employment requiring the utmost vigilance on their part and prompt and unhesitating obedience to his Orders. . . . We know from the manner in which railways are operated that, subject to the general rules and orders of the directors of the companies, the conductor has entire control and management of the train to which he is assigned." "The true view," says Wharton (Law of Negligence, § 232), "is that, as corporations can only act through superintending officers, the negligences of those officers with respect to other servants are the negligences of the corporation." The command of the conductor to the brakeman to go between the cars, when he could not couple them otherwise, was one to which unhesitating obedience was expected and demanded. The giving of such an order by the conductor ought, upon the plainest principles of right and justice, to be declared a waiver of the regulation by an officer who is the representative of the corporation. That a brakeman feels impelled to obey the orders of the conductor no observant person can deny; and since we can take judicial notice of a relation so common and well understood, it would be a voluntary preference of fiction to fact were we to adhere to an arbitrary rule, founded in a supposed reason that we know does not exist. A brakeman does not contract to incur the risk of serving under a conductor who will order him to disobey the regulations of the company, and leave him to choose on the instant between observing the rules and obeying his superior.

The Supreme Court of Georgia, in Central R. Co. v. De Bray, 71 Ga. 406, held that, while neither a conductor nor any other officer had a right to order an employé to get on or off a moving train, and the employé was not bound to obey it, yet where the conductor did give the order, and the brakeman obeyed it, the act of the conductor was the act of the corporation, and the corporation could not escape responsibility for its own wrong. The court held in that case that it was immaterial what the rules of the company were, and so in our case, where the brakeman was ordered to jump between cars, instead of from the top of a car, the same principle should prevail.

The Supreme Court of South Carolina held, in Boatwright v. Northeastern R. Co., 25 S. C. 129, that "the conductor of a train is the representative of the company, and not a fellow servant with other employés operating the same train under his orders." That case was exactly in point, as the conductor had ordered the brakeman to go between cars because of uneven couplers on freight cars. The same principle is decided in Coleman v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co., 25 S. C. 446, 60 Am. Rep. 516. It has been repeatedly held that an engineer in charge of a train, discharging the duties usually devolving on a conductor, in addition to managing the engine, is not a fellow servant of a brakeman. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Ky. 129. The American rule, as distinguished from the English, is that a servant intrusted with the general management of the master's business, or of those in a particular department or on detached service, in charge of the train or body of laborers, is not a fellow servant of those who are employed under him and subject to his orders. Augusta Factory v. Barnes, 72 Ga. 217, 53 Am. Rep. 888; Douling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Chicago

& A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Lundstrom, 16 Neb. 254; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Crockett, 19 Neb. 188; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 226.

It will be conceded that, though the owner and manager of a manufacturing establishment should make a rule, and cause every employé to sign it, to the effect that the employé would not pass between certain machines, go into an engine room, or expose himself to any specified danger connected with the machinery of the mill, and would hold the owner discharged in advance for any liability growing out of such exposure, yet if the manager should, in the face of the rule, order the servant who signed it to disobey it, and his obedience to orders should expose him to a danger caused by defects in the machinery that on an ordinary inspection would have been obvious to the master, though not so readily discoverable to the servant, acting instantly on the order, it would scarcely be contended that the superior who had made the regulation would not thus waive its observance. A corporation is usually governed by its directors, but they may shift its responsible management by such a variety of orders, by-laws, and regulations as to make it impossible to discover a real, tangible, directing head. If, as authority and reason clearly dictate, we consider a conductor in charge of a train as representing the untangible head of the company, then his order is as much a waiver of a regulation as that of the owner and head of a mill.

But, speaking for a minority of the court only, it seems that there should be but little difficulty in arriving at the same conclusion by the relation of another question, whether, in consideration of receiving employment, a brakeman can, by written agreement, "waive the liability" of the company incurred by furnishing cars without bumpers, and which cannot be coupled with a stick, in the event that he shall be injured in the attempt to fasten the couplings of such cars, under the command of the conductor in charge of the train, with his hands, instead of using his stick, as the rule of the company requires. It is settled as the almost universal rule in America that, though a common carrier of freight by contract upon consideration may relieve itself of the full measure of responsibility as an insurer, no limitation can in that way be placed upon its liability for its own negligence. Smith v. North Carolina R. Co. 64 N. C. 285; 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 1840; Lawson, Cont. §§ 29-67. The same rule applies to agreements made by common carriers of passengers, purporting to restrict their liability for injuries caused by their own negligence. Such contracts are void as against the public policy of the law. 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 1913. This stringent rule of liability is said to rest upon the duty of the government to give unrestricted protection to the lives and limbs of its citizens. Lawson, Cont. §§ 212-220. It would seem that the government owes it to the servant of a carrier to give to him the same protection of life and limb as to the passenger, by declaring void an agreement, in consideration of being employed, to excuse the company for negligence even when it causes death; and it has been so held, as far as our investigations have extended, in all of the courts except the Supreme Court of Georgia. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 460; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 2 Head, 517; Roesner v. Hermann, 10 Biss. 486, 8 Fed. Rep. 782; 1 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 318. It is difficult to draw a distinction between contracts affecting only the safety of goods or animals or those affecting the lives and limbs of passengers, and those which vitally concern another large class of human beings. If public policy prohibits the recognition of the validity of a contract limiting liability for a paying passenger, or, as most authorities in this country maintain, even one riding on a free pass, upon what principle can the court refuse to extend the same protection to a class of people who are much more exposed to danger, and much more liable to be influenced to sign such agreements?

For the reasons given, we think that the court below erred in holding that the plaintiff could not recover. The case should have been left to the jury, and the judgment of nonsuit will be set aside, and a new trial granted.

Burwell, J., dissents.

Shepherd, Th. J., concurring:

I concur in the conclusion reached by the court, but not on the ground that the regulation in question was an unreasonable one. It was not a stipulation against negligence, in the ordinary sense of the term, and, as long as it remained in force, the defendant did not owe to the plaintiff the duty of providing bumpers for its cars. The essential element of negligence is a breach of duty; but, in order to recover, it is not enough for the plaintiff to show a simple breach of duty, but he must also show that the defendant owes the duty to him. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 8; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 6; Emry v. Roanoke Nav. & W. P. Co. (N. C.) (decided at this term,) 16 S. E. Rep. 18. In the decisions cited, where a recovery was had for negligence in not furnishing bumpers, there was either no regulation like that in the present case, or such regulation had been waived. I cannot understand how it was the duty of the defendant to provide against an accident which could not possibly have happened but for a violation of its reasonable regulations. However negligent, then, as to others, the defendant may have been in not seeing that the cars were provided with bumpers, such negligence was not actionable by this plaintiff if his injuries were caused by his disobedience of an existing regulation, known and agreed to by him, forbidding him from going between the cars, under any circumstances, for the purpose of coupling them, etc. The evidence, however, tended to show that there was a waiver of the regulation by the conductor in charge of the train, and, in view of the authorities cited, and the convincing reasons given in the opinion, I think that such a waiver was, for the purposes of this action, binding on the defendant. It is upon this ground that I concur in the disposition made of the appeal.

18 L. R. A.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF BLADEN COUNTY, Appt.,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF BLADEN COUNTY.

(.....N. C.....)

A special tax by county commissioners to supply a deficiency in the amount necessary to keep the public schools open for at least four months in the year, as required by Const., art. 9, § 3, is not a tax "for a special purpose," under art. 5, § 6, which limits the amount of county taxes to double the state tax "except for a special purpose and with the approval of the General Assembly."

(Avery, J., dissents.)

(December 12, 1892.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Bladen County in favor of defendant in an action brought to compel it to make provision for keeping open the public schools. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Batchelor & Devereux for appellant.

MacRae, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions presented for our consideration are precisely the same as those which were determined in the case of Durkdale v. Sampson County Comrs., 93 N. C. 472, where in it was held that, while it is the duty of the county commissioners, under article 9, § 3, of the Constitution of North Carolina, to keep the public schools open for at least four months in every year, yet, in discharging this duty, they cannot disregard the limitations imposed by article 5, § 1,* as to the amount of tax to be levied; and that section 23, chap. 174, Laws 1885, which requires the commissioners, if the tax levied by the state for this purpose shall be insufficient to carry it into effect, to levy annually a special tax to supply the deficiency, is unconstitutional, because it is not such a special tax for county purposes as is provided for by article 5, § 6,† of the

*That section is as follows: "The General Assembly shall levy a capitation tax on every male inhabitant of the state over twenty-one and under fifty years of age, which shall be equal on each to the tax on property valued at three hundred dollars in cash. The commissioners of the several counties may exempt from capitation tax in special cases on account of poverty and infirmity, and the state and county capitation tax combined shall never exceed two dollars on the head."

†That section is as follows: "The taxes levied by the commissioners of the several counties for county purposes shall be levied in like manner with the state taxes, and shall never exceed the double of the state tax, except for a special purpose, and with the special approval of the General Assembly."

NOTE.—The constitutional restrictions on taxation are, in recent years, the subject of so many vigorous discussions by counsel and courts, and of such increasing interest to citizens, that the above case is deemed a valuable contribution to the subject although it is primarily based on the particular terms of the North Carolina Constitution.

Constitution. The subject has been so recently and thoroughly discussed in the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Smith for the court, and in the dissenting opinion of the then Associate Justice Merrimon, with all the authorities on both sides, that we deem it unnecessary to recite the reasons upon which a conclusion was then reached by a majority of the court.

We have been induced to give the questions a careful reconsideration, and have listened with interest to the able argument of counsel, who have sought to induce us to put a different construction upon the Constitution than was announced in the decision above referred to, and to hold that it is the duty of the county commissioners to obey the mandate of the Act of 1885, and levy the additional tax sufficient to make up the deficiency, caused by the failure of the General Assembly to provide funds to maintain the schools for at least four months in the year. But we are constrained by the principle involved in the maxim stare decisis, in which is bound up the stability of judicial decision, on which depends, not only respect for law, but knowledge of law, so necessary to be possessed by those whose duty and business it is to advise the people on all matters concerning their interests, to abide by the decisions of the court, unless it be made to appear that there was palpable error or mistake. When there is room for construction, and reasons may be adduced on both sides of a matter in controversy, the certainty of a rule is of more importance, often, than the reason of it. In saying this we do not wish it to be understood that, were the question before us an open one, we should reach a different conclusion upon it than has been declared by the court. The subject of taxation, general and special, by state and counties, has been considered in a long line of judicial decisions, beginning almost immediately upon the adoption of the Constitution of 1868. It is well settled that for the ordinary expenses of government, both state and county, the first section of article 5 of the Constitution places the limit of taxation, and preserves the equation between the capitation and the property tax,—the capitation tax never to exceed $2, and the tax upon property valued at $800 to be confined within the same limit. It is also settled in the same manner that by article 5, § 6, the counties may not exceed the double of the state tax, within the equation, except for a special purpose, and with the special approval of the General Assembly. It appears from an examination of the authorities that no case has ever come before the courts involving the exercise of this special power of taxation by the counties except upon special or private acts for local objects, until the Act of 1885 was brought to our attention, wherein, in a public Act ("An Act to Amend the Public School Law,—chapter 15 of the Code") it is sought by section 23 to require a special tax in the county to supply the deficiency in the sum raised by general taxation and appropriation for public school purposes, under the requirements of article 9 of the Constitution, in section 2 of which "the General Assembly . . . shall provide by taxation and otherwise for a general and uniform system of public schools wherein tuition shall be free of charge to all the children of the state between the ages of six and twenty-one years." It was held in Barksdale's Case, supra, which we are now asked to review, that this section 23 of the Act of 1885 was not warranted by section 6, art. 5, of the Constitution, because it was not such a special tax for local objects as was contemplated in the last-named section. We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the decision of the court upon this question, if it were now open to us for revision. The reasons are given and cases cited in the opinion of the chief justice, in the case referred to, and it would be but cumbering the books for us to reproduce them here. Were the question presented to us of the power of the General Assembly to deal with the matter and provide adequate means for the necessary expenses incident to the maintenance of the public schools under the requirement of article 9, by general taxation, unfettered by any limitation of article 5, § 1, in the same manner as they may provide for a casual deficit, or for the payment of the public debt or interest on the same, or for the suppression of insurrection or invasion, we might possibly find a solution of the apparent difficulty which has resulted in a failure in some counties to maintain the schools for at least four months in every year; but, as the question may never arise, we will not discuss it.

We are content to abide by the decision of the court in Barksdale's Case, and declare that in the judgment of his honor below, following that decision, there is no error.

Avery, J., dissenting:

Entertaining the most profound respect for the views of my brethren, I feel, nevertheless, constrained to give expression to the reasons that have impelled me to the conclusion that a most important provision of the organic law has been misconstrued, and the will of the people, as embodied therein, has been thwarted, by restricting the right of the Legislature to delegate to the counties the taxing power to levy tax for the maintenance of public schools. If the court has fallen into error, it is a misconception that vitally concerns the public welfare. In the face of this constitutional inhibition, the Legislature is no longer left free to enact and enforce uniform and liberal laws for sustaining our schools, and elevating and educating the ignorant classes of our people. Experience and observation have shown that education and morality advance hand in hand, while ignorance and vice are, as a rule, as constant companions. Acting upon the enlightened and philanthropic idea that crime could be best combated and happiness promoted by the refining influences of religion, morality, and learning, the framers of our fundamental law dug deep, and made mandatory public education one of the bedstones upon which the Constitution rests. The provisions which apply specifically to this subject are sections 1-3 of article 9, the material portions of which are as follows: "(1) Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. (2) The General Assembly, at its first session under this Constitution, shall provide, by taxation and otherwise, for a general and uniform system of public schools, wherein tuition shall be free of charge to all children of the state. (8) Each county of the state shall be divided into a convenient number of districts, in which one or more public schools shall be maintained at least four months in every year, and, if the commissioners of any county shall fail to comply with the aforesaid requirements of this section, they shall be liable to indictment." This, like many other expressions of the sovereign will embodied in the Constitution, is not only addressed to and obligatory upon the Legislature, but likewise appeals to and deals directly with its agencies for local government,—the counties,—and arms the courts with power to stimulate the commissioners to diligence. Starting out with the announcement, as solemn and binding and as clear and comprehensible as any fundamental principle transplanted from Magna Charta into our Declaration of Rights, that knowledge, as the handmaiden of religion and morality, is essential to the perpetuity of good government, two conventions of the people have deliberately and solemnly ordained that the system which "shall be maintained" must meet this necessity by compliance on the part of the Legislature with certain requirements of the instrument, and that the aid of the criminal law also shall be invoked, if necessary, to insure the enforcement of the constitutional mandate.

1. It was made the duty of the Legislature without delay, at its first session, both after the ratification of the Constitution in 1868 and in its amended form in 1876, to provide for a "general and uniform system," by taxation or otherwise.

2. The county commissioners were required to fix the bounds of the districts in which one or more schools were to be maintained four months, etc.

8. The county commissioners are declared liable to indictment for an offense created by the Constitution, to wit, the failure to comply with this section, not only by neglecting or refusing to lay off the limits of the districts, but by omitting to keep up the schools.

How could the law-making power provide a general and uniform system of schools, so that the counties, as public agencies, should have the power, which they were liable to punishment for not exercising, of keeping up public schools for four months in the year in localities designated by them? Section 5, art. 9, appropriates to the school fund of the counties the clear proceeds of penalties and forfeitures collected, and all fines for breaches of penal or military laws, paid within their respective borders. The state system must be uniform, "but the funds necessary for the support of the public schools are not derived exclusively from the state," said the late Chief Justice Merrimon in Greensboro v. Hodgins, 106 N. C. 187. "The Constitution plainly contemplates and intends that the several counties, as such, shall bear a material part of the burden of supplying such fund." In a subsequent portion of the same opinion, in construing section 4, art. 9, the court says: "It is likewise required that the funds supplied by the counties shall supplement that of the state, and be distributed in the counties supplying the same, as pointed out above," viz. so as to insure the maintenance of a school for four months in the several districts. Obviously it is impracticable for the Legislature to so adjust the state taxation and distribution of the fund arising from it that the same per centum of tax, with fines, forfeitures, and penalties superadded, shall provide anything like uniformity in the duration or character of the schools. The division of the fund raised by state taxation according to the number of children within the school age under the general law providing for its distribution has been declared uniform and constitutional. Greensboro v. Hodgins, supra. But it is manifest that, unless the local authorities of the several counties may exercise the power delegated to them by the Legislature to make a sufficient supplement, the share of one county may maintain schools for ten months, while that allotted to another, where school children are not numerous, and are scattered over a sparsely settled region, and where the amount paid in the shape of penalties is insignificant, may not prove sufficient to keep the schools open for one month in the whole year. The only criminal offense created and defined by the Constitution itself is that mentioned in section 8. It is difficult to understand why this wide departure from the usual course was made, unless we interpret it as emphasizing the intent of the framers of the Constitution that the officers held subject to this unusual liability should have power coextensive with their accountability. The Legislature, in enacting the law under which the tax was levied, manifestly placed this interpretation upon the sections which we have quoted; and in the construction of laws great respect should be shown to the opinion of the law-making power, and statutes solemnly enacted by the Legislature should be declared unconstitutional only when they are plainly repugnant to the provisions of the organic Act.

Counties and towns are created by the Legislature for public convenience, and may be destroyed at any moment by the authority that gave them existence. Lilly v. Taylor, 88 N. C. 489; 10 Myer's Fed. Dec. §§ 2424-2426. The only limit upon the law-making power is to be found in the restrictive clauses of the Federal and state Constitutions. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 65, 68, et seq.; Barrington v. Neuse River Ferry Co., 69 N. C. 165. Duties and burdens may be devolved upon the governing officers of counties against their will, and, in the absence of a restraining provision in the organic law, counties may be even compelled to assume the liabilities of towns lying within their borders. Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. pp. 295, 296, * 241; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 60 (35) to 65 (38); Granville Comrs. v. Ballard, 69 N. C. 18; Currituck County Comrs. v. Dare County Comrs. 79 N. C. 565; Dare County Comrs. v. Currituck County Comrs. 95 N. C. 189. The Legislature may devote the streets or other property of a town to a public purpose, or, if such action does not violate the rights of creditors, it may modify or repeal a tax levy already laid by its authorities, or modify its action in any other respect. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 70 (42) to 77 (45); Washington Toll-Bridge Co. v. Beaufort Comrs. 81 N. C.

491; Carrow v. Washington Toll-Bridge Co. 61 N. C. 118.

The statute which has been pronounced invalid (Laws 1885, chap. 174, § 25) is amendatory of Code, § 2590, and requires the county commissioners, where the tax levied by the state proves insufficient to maintain one or more schools in each school district for four months in the year, to levy annually "a special tax to supply the deficiency for the support and maintenance of said schools for said period of four months or more." It is obvious that, if there were no constitutional restriction upon the power of the Legislature, it was authorized and expressly required to pass just such a law as that enacted. Was its power exceeded in passing it? The Constitution of 1868 (art. 7, § 2) provided that it should be the "duty of the commissioners to exercise a general supervision and control of the penal and charitable institutions, schools, roads, bridges, levying of taxes, and finances of said county, as may be prescribed by law." The Amendment of 1875, which took effect January 1, 1877 (art. 7, § 14), provided that "the General Assembly shall have full power by statute to modify, change, or abrogate any and all of the provisions of this article, and substitute others in their place, except sections 7, 9, and 18." The Acts of 1876-77, chap. 141, were passed in the exercise of the power given under section 14, art. 7, and, after providing for the election of county commissioners, and the levying of taxes with the assent of the justices of the peace, declares, in section 6, that they "shall have and exercise the jurisdiction and powers vested in the board of commissioners now existing, and also those vested in and exercised by the board of trustees, etc., except as may be hereafter provided by law." Construing the Constitution of 1868 together with the Amendment of 1875 and the Act of 1876-77, it is manifest that before 1875 there was this further recognition of the right and duty of the county commissioners to overlook the schools as a part of the ordinary and necessary county government, and that the Act of 1876-77, passed in pursuance of the Amendment of 1875, left this power and obligation still intact. But, despite all of these constitutional and statutory grants of power and injunctions of duty, it is contended that section 1, art. 5, of the Constitution limits the levy for ordinary purposes to not more than \$2 on the poll, or 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ cents on every \$100 in value of land; that the education of the people of a county is not a county purpose; and the Act of 1876-77 does not provide for levying a "special tax," though the Legislature expressly so denominated the tax to be levied in every instance when there should be a deficiency in the appropriation by the state. Is education a county purpose? No one has ever contended that a tax providing for the support of the penal and charitable institutions of a county, or for building bridges across streams at the public crossings in its limits, is not a county purpose, or, if such a position has ever been assumed, it will no longer be insisted on in view of the decisions of this court, and the constant practice of the Legislature. Barrington v. Neuse River Ferry Co., supra. When we find the word "schools" sandwiched between charitable institutions and roads in the constitutional definition of the duties of commissioners, who are the embodiment of the municipal corporation, it would seem unreasonable to insist that an answer to an alternative mandamus, which stated that a levy of twenty cents on the hundred for support of prisoners in the jail and the poor, ten cents to make up the deficiency in school appropriation, and five cents for payment of damage assessed for public roads opened by order of the commissioners, raised the tax in the aggregate, with that levied by the state, to the constitutional limit, would not be deemed sufficient to relieve the commissioners from attachment for contempt. Fry v. Montgomery County Comrs., 83 N. C. 804. The distinction between taxes levied under a power which associated schools with roads and bridges, and between those devoted to one purpose or the other, seems to me to be clearly arbitrary and unreasonable. When the Constitution declares that knowledge is "necessary to good government," and that particular agents of the state—the county commissioners—shall be indicted for failure to provide the means of acquiring it, I cannot yield my assent to the proposition that it is a part of the appropriate public duty of those officers to protect the health of the people of the county by levying a tax for the purpose of constructing hospitals, if need be, or for opening new roads or erecting bridges, while the Legislature cannot even clothe them with authority, by a special Act applicable to all of the counties in the state, to levy and collect any sum for the intellectual betterment of the people of the county. It seems to me that the framers of the Constitution not only intended that the commissioners should be empowered and required, as a part of their regular duty, to open roads, and provide for the payment of the expense of punishing criminals, but that, above all these other functions, should be that of furnishing the means and facilities for acquiring knowledge.

If the maintenance of schools is a county purpose, then the remaining question is whether it is competent for the Legislature to pass an Act providing for the levy, under certain specified circumstances, of a "special tax" by any county in the state; or whether it is essential, in order to authorize the levy for the very same purpose, to pass a separate act specifically applicable to each county. I do not think that the organic law requires any such vain and useless proceeding. I believe that the Legislature construed the Constitution properly in enacting that all counties, under certain clearly specified circumstances, should have the power delegated to them to lay a special tax for the particular purpose of making up a deficiency in the appropriation for the maintenance of schools for four months of the year, and, incidentally, of relieving themselves of their liability to indictment for failure to provide such schools for the requisite period. A careful scrutiny of the cases cited by the court in Barksdale v. Sampson County Comrs., 93 N. C. 476, will show that the court had never, prior to the announcement of the doctrine in that case, held that the taxation provided for in section 6, art. 5, should be so far local, as well as special, as to deprive the Legislature of the power to pass a special statute applicable to all counties alike under certain specified circumstances. The court in the case at bar have advanced a step further than did Chief Justice Smith in Barkdale's Case, in declaring that the maintenance of schools is not a county purpose. Assuming that I have shown that the Constitution so characterizes it, it is difficult to conceive of a plausible reason for so limiting the power of the Legislature that it could not pass a special Act applicable to a class of counties where a certain state of affairs already existed, or might arise in the future, instead of declaring in the case of each individual county, by a separate Act, that, if the appropriation of the next year should not be sufficient to accomplish a certain end, the commissioners should be authorized to make a levy to supplement it. But it would seem to have been intended, in framing the Constitution, to place the maintenance of public schools, like the payment of debts of the state, far above constitutional restrictions applicable to ordinary expenditures for state or county purposes. If the simple declaration of broad generalities in reference to preserving the public credit is sufficient to override the constitutional limit of taxation in order to meet the obligations of the state, whenever created, and if the commissioners are required, without any special statutory warrant for their conduct, to levy a tax in excess of the limit, also to meet a debt of the county, created before the limit was imposed (in 1868), it would seem to me altogether more reasonable to hold that the provision of the Constitution which subjected the commissioners to indictment for failure to keep the schools open for four months gave them by implication, without the aid of an express statute, the power to disregard the restriction, whenever it became essential to do so in order to meet the express requirement of section 3, art. 9. It is true that, in so far as section 1, art. 5, impaired the remedy of a pre-existing creditor, it was void, because it was repugnant to the Federal Constitution. But in University R. Co. v. Holden, 63 N. C. 410, all of the justices concurred in the opinion that the Legislature had the power, in order to meet the interest on the public debt, or to repel invasion, or in any great emergency to disregard the limit. Justice Settle pointed out expressly the sections of article 9 which we have quoted as enjoining the duty and giving the power to provide for public education without regard to the per centum of tax on property or the rate on the poll. There was a consensus of opinion in that case as to the principle that the General Assembly had the power to determine whether there was a necessity for transcending the restriction applicable only in ordinary cases. It seems clear to me that the Legislature not only has the power to determine when there is a necessity for exceeding the limit imposed upon the tax levy for ordinary expenditures in order to furnish the necessary school facilities, but whether the end can be attained by a general legislative levy only, or by empowering the counties to supplement the state appropriation, should it become manifestly necessary to do so. This view finds support in the fact, to which I have already alluded, that it is impossible for the Legislature to calculate what per capita rate and corresponding per centum on property will raise the sum necessary, when distributed according to the number of children, and added to the local yield from fines and penalties, to maintain schools, some of which cost $40 and some $10 per month for the prescribed period. In view of all of these uncertain elements entering into the estimate, which we must suppose were in contemplation of the delegates who ordained the provisions of the Constitution in reference to education, it seems to me impossible to give effect to all of the provisions of the organic law without granting to all county commissioners power commensurate with their allotted duty and their liability for failure to discharge it. It is not practicable in any other way to devise a system that will operate uniformly, and at the same time furnish the requisite educational advantages; and it is essential to a compliance with all of the sections that it should so accomplish the end. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46, 60 Am. Dec. 581. Uniform laws are not necessarily universal in their operation, but a special law may affect alike all persons who may become in any way subject to it. People v. Judge of Twelfth Dist. 17 Cal. 548; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338. The question of uniformity in this case bears a striking analogy to that raised under the Bankrupt Law by reason of the inequality of exemptions in the different states, all of which were allowed by an amendment to the Federal law, yet it was expressly declared a uniform law. Bump, Bankr. p. 875, § 14. The uniformity contemplated in framing article 9, § 2, was in the minimum duration of schools, and that can be secured only by the intervention of the counties in their governmental capacity.

18 L. R. A.

The doctrine of stare decisis can be invoked and insisted on only where, by acquiescence in a decision for a long time, it has become a rule of property; but inadvertent decisions, which can be corrected without disturbing titles, should be overruled at the earliest possible moment. Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 254; Long v. Walker, 105 N. C. 90; Gaskill v. King, 84 N. C. 223.

Upon reviewing the dissenting opinion of the late Chief Justice Merrimon in Barkdale's Case, supra, I have been so greatly impressed with the strength and force of the argument that it seems almost useless to have done more than refer to it as an embodiment of my reasons for differing with my brethren. This was, indeed, the magnum opus of a grand tribune of the people whose heart responded to the sentiment which imbedded in the Constitution the obligation to educate the youth of the land, and lend a helping hand to those whose lot might be cast in the humble walks of poverty, but whose worth and talent might warrant them in aspiring to the highest positions.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Re ESTATE OF Samuel S. TAYLOR, Deceased.

APPEAL OF C. Wealey RUFFELL, Admr. d. b. n. of Samuel S. Taylor, Deceased.

(.....Pa.....)

1. One to whom a check is given merely for the purpose of making a gift causa mortis to a third person to whom he gives a due-bill for the amount, is not incompetent by reason of interest to testify in a controversy between the donee and the donor's administrator as to the validity of the gift.
2. A check drawn upon a bank for the full amount of a deposit with intent to make a gift of the money may constitute a valid gift although the donor dies before the check is paid.

(February 6, 1893.)

APPEAL by the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Samuel S. Taylor, deceased, from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Philadelphia County awarding the balance of said Taylor's estate to the administrator of the estate of Theresa J. Taylor, deceased. Affirmed.

Samuel S. Taylor died May 25, 1890. Theresa J. Taylor, his stepmother, presented to the register of wills a petition upon which letters of administration were granted to her. Before settling the estate the administratrix died and letters of administration were obtained upon her estate by Charles M. Williamson, who filed an account showing a balance on hand of $398.20. This sum was claimed by the administrator, d. b. n., of Samuel S. Taylor as part of his estate and also by Williamson as administrator of Theresa J. Taylor as a gift alleged to have been made by Samuel S. Taylor to Theresa J. Taylor.

The further facts appear in the opinion of the auditing judge which was as follows:

Samuel S. Taylor died intestate May 25, 1890, unmarried and without issue. His sole surviving next of kin is one sister, Louisa Rabe, who is of full age.

Letters of administration to his estate were issued to Theresa J. Taylor, his stepmother. She died on or about November 14, 1890, and thereupon letters of administration de bonis non to the decedent's estate were granted to C. Wealey Ruffell.

NOTE.—Gift of checks.

"The law seems to be in a very curious state," says the opinion of the court in Rolls v. Pearce, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 730, 46 L. J. Ch. 791, when speaking of the gift of checks, and a comparison of the conflicting statements of text-books on the subject shows that the "curious state" still continues.

In several cases it has been held that an unaccepted bank check which is not paid during the life of the drawer will not constitute a valid gift by him causa mortis. Detroit Second Nat. Bank v. Williams, 13 Mich. 291; Simmons v. Cincinnati Sav. Soc. 31 Ohio St. 457, 27 Am. Rep. 521; Hewitt v. Kay, L. R. 6 Eq. 198, 37 L. J. Ch. 470; Beak v. Beak, L. R. 13 Eq. 489, 41 L. J. Ch. 470.

In Simmons v. Cincinnati Sav. Soc., supra, the intent to make the gift was clear. The bank gave the donee a blank check to be filled up for the purpose of the gift, but the check, when made, was not presented to the bank during the donor's life.

In Beak v. Beak, supra, the check was accompanied by the donor's pass-book, but this was held to make no difference.

The main case has a ground of distinction from those above cited in that the check was drawn for the full amount of the donor's deposit and therefore might be regarded as an assignment of the fund even by courts which do not allow such effect to a check for a part only of a fund on deposit.

But some of the cases which have denied the validity of such a gift have expressed dissatisfaction with the rule.

In the Waynesburg College's App., 111 Pa. 130, 56 Am. Rep. 252, the delivery of a check made payable six months after the maker's death to a payee named therein as trustee was held not to be a valid gift.

In Rolls v. Pearce, supra, a check intended as a gift causa mortis was held valid although not presented to the bank on which it was drawn until after the donor's death, but it was given in a foreign country where it was put into a bank by the donee who was the donor's wife and money obtained by her thereon was used, in part to pay the donor's debts. The court held that the donor must have anticipated from the circumstances of the case that the check would pass through various hands before reaching the bank on which it was drawn; and therefore must have intended it to be valid even if he died before it was paid.

This case recognizes the importance of the donor's intent and seems to be inconsistent with the cases first cited above which deny the validity of such a gift even where the donor's intention is unquestioned, although it is distinguishable from them in the fact that it had passed into the hands of third persons who had paid the money upon it.

In Bouts v. Ellis, 17 Beav. 121, a gift of the donor's check to a third person for the donor's wife which was paid before the donor's death was held a valid gift although a check given by the third person to her was worthless because unstamped and post dated, where a valid check was given her in exchange therefor after the donor's death. This case was affirmed in 4 DeG. M. & G. 249.

In Tate v. Leithead, 1 Kay, 658, the question was as to a check which had been collected before the maker's death and it was held not to be a gift causa mortis but a trust by virtue of certain memoranda on the check showing that intent.

In some of the old English ecclesiastical cases checks were held valid as legacies. Thus in Bartholomew v. Henley, 3 Phillim. 317, checks were upheld as codicils to a will where for some of them entries were made in the donor's check-book saying that they were given for fear anything might happen before he could make a codicil, and in one case where the entry was "this draft to be paid from my banker's in case I should die."

So in Gladstone v. Tempest, 2 Curt. Ecol. Rep. 650, checks were held to be codicils where they were delivered in sealed packages and it appears that the donor intended that they should not be presented until after his death.

So in Walsh v. Gladstone, 1 Phill. Ch. 298, checks in sealed packages were held to be legacies but to be revoked by subsequent will.

The present account is of the sum of $650, which was on deposit in bank in the name of decedent, at the time of his death. The balance thereof amounts to $372.20 and constitutes the fund for distribution. This balance was claimed on the one hand by the administrator d. b. n. as the custodian of the decedent's estate; and on the other by the administrator of the estate of the deceased accountant, on the double ground: First, that it was the subject of a gift to the accountant by the testator in his lifetime, and, second, that it was part of her share in the proceeds of sale of certain real estate owned jointly by her and the decedent, which he had sold in his lifetime.

To award the fund to the administrator d. b. n. would relieve the auditing judge of considerable present labor, and would conform to customary procedure. But this estate is small, and at the distance of two years from his death the administrator d. b. n. admitted that but one claim against the decedent had been brought to his notice. Nothing, therefore, will be lost and delay and expense will be saved by passing at this time upon the questions which otherwise must be postponed until the filing and auditing of a final account, and which are now as ready for determination as they would be then. So far as the single creditor other than the deceased accountant is concerned, it is worthy of note that letters de bonis non were taken out at his instance. The creditor in question was Dr. Beatty, and his claim was duly presented at the audit in the sum of $150 for medical attendance upon decedent. The testimony in its support, however, furnished no data from which either the length of the service or its value could be computed and it is therefore rejected.

Against the claim of the stepmother it was urged that it was offered by her neither as creditor, legatee, nor next of kin, and was therefore under McBride's App., 72 Pa. 480, and later cases, outside the jurisdiction of the orphans' court. The answer is that by bringing the money into the account, she has treated it as an asset of the decedent's estate; and she has a right to show, like any creditor, that under a contract or promise decedent transferred its ownership to her. Nor is she estopped from claiming as an individual a fund which as administratrix she holds as the property of another. In the present instance she administered to the estate in order to bring the fund before the court and there prosecute her demand. The auditing judge thinks that the claim is cognizable in this proceeding, and the question is as to the character in which if at all it may be sustained. If it rested upon the title of the stepmother to one half of the real

Check or draft on person other than banker.

In Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441, a draft by a husband intended as a gift causa mortis drawn upon his goldsmith in favor of his wife was held good as an appointment although it was not paid during the donor's life.

But in Harris v. Clark, 8 N. Y. 98, 51 Am. Dec. 832, the donor's own draft upon a third person in favor of the donee is held not a valid gift causa mortis.

And in Gerry v. Howe, 130 Mass. 350, a written order or direction to one having charge of the donor's funds in a bank to draw a certain amount and hand it to a certain person, is held not a sufficient gift where the direction is not obeyed.

Gift of third person's check.

The gift of a third person in the possession of a donor would seem to be like a promissory note or any other transferable security and the decisions are to this effect. Thus in Burke v. Bishop, 27 La. Ann. 485, 21 Am. Rep. 597, it is held that the gift of a check by the payee with his indorsement is not defeated by the death of the donor before it is paid.

So in Clement v. Cheeseman, 27 Ch. Div. 681, it is held that a check payable to the donor or his order may be given causa mortis without indorsement.

In Rhodes v. Childs, 64 Pa. 18, it was held that a check payable to bearer received by the donor in payment of a debt could be transferred by him as a valid gift inter vivos by mere delivery to the donee.

In Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 244, the gift of the checks of a third person in a box was held not to be valid, but the ground of the decision was that there had not been a sufficient delivery of the box and its contents.

In Jones v. Look, L. R. 1 Ch. App. 23, 11 Jur. N. S. 918, 14 Week. Rep. 149, the validity of a gift was denied on similar grounds. A check payable to the donor was put by him into the hands of his infant son with the declaration that it was a gift but the donor then locked it up saying he would put 18 L. R. A.

it away for the child and 'give him more with it, and the court held that it was a question of fact as to his intention, and that it did not appear that he meant to put the check out of his own power of disposal.

Gifts inter vivos.

Some of the cases in the division immediately preceding are cases of gifts inter vivos, as are the following also:

In Hemphill v. Yerkes, 132 Pa. 545, which the main case so much relies upon, there was no gift involved but a check for the whole of a special fund held by a beneficiary was held valid as an assignment.

In Bromley v. Brunton, L. R. 6 Eq. 275, the gift of a check inter vivos was held valid although it was not paid before the donor's death, where it had been presented and payment delayed merely to ascertain the genuineness of the signature.

In Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 111, a bill in chancery to enforce the gift of a check drawn to self or bearer and intended as an immediate gift was dismissed without prejudice to a suit at law, the Lord Chancellor said: "I do not think it so clear as it seems to have been taken that an action will not lie by the holder against the executor;" but it does not appear that the counsel in the case had much hope of being able to maintain any suit at law.

In De Pouilly's Succession, 22 La. Ann. 97, the gift of one's own check is held to be that of a corporeal movable, and to constitute a manual gift, needing no other formality than delivery, under La. Civil Code, art. 1538.

The enforcement of a gift against the donor himself is denied in Cloyes v. Cloyes, 36 Hun, 145, where a check was given by husband to wife as a wedding present and after its dishonor she brought an action against him thereon.

A similar decision was made in Easton v. Pratchett, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 808, where the enforcement of a gift of a bill of exchange against the donor who indorsed it was denied.

R. A. R.

estate out of which the money was derived, it would involve a question of title which the orphan's court cannot consider; and if upon an agreement which was alleged to have been made by the decedent to the effect that his stepmother was to have one half of the proceeds of sale, the promise, if made, was merely executory and without consideration, and the fund for distribution was not shown by any satisfactory evidence to have been part of those proceeds. Was it a gift inter vivos? The proof was that the decedent shortly before he died sent for a Mr. Hubbert, in order that he might fix up the decedent's affairs. He said that he wanted to give to his stepmother $650, which he had in bank. Mr. Hubbert drew up or caused to be drawn up a check on decedent's bank for that amount and the decedent signed the check by his mark. One check was drawn to the order of Hubbert, and he in turn gave his due-bill in the same sum to the stepmother as a receipt. When he presented the check at the bank payment was refused because the decedent's mark was not attested by subscribing witness. The presentation seems to have been made before the decedent died; after his death the bank officers suggested that an administrator should be appointed. Mr. Hubbert gave the check to the stepmother and received back his due-bill. He was, of course, a competent witness to prove these facts. The check was drawn to his order simply to enable him to secure its payment, and he had no beneficial interest in the claim. Whether he was competent or not his evidence both as to the declaration of the decedent and the making of the check was corroborated by the testimony of other and disinterested witnesses. To state the evidence more at large, Mr. Nichols testified that he saw the decedent the night before he died and told him he thought he should settle his matters up. The decedent replied that he would like to have Mr. Hubbert settle everything up, and that he wanted Mrs. Theresa Taylor to have everything. Mr. Hubbert testified that he was sent for and was present just before the decedent died and was told by the decedent that he wanted Mr. Hubbert to fix up his matters for him; that he wanted to give his stepmother $650 which he had in bank; that he wanted her to have it. The witness added: 'Mr. Taylor was very sick. I suppose he was in condition to do business from the way he talked. I made the proposition to him to give the check so that there should be no delay. He said he wanted something drawn up so that his stepmother could have the money. I could just about hear him speak that was about all. I had to support him while he put his hand to the mark.' The auditing judge after some reflection thinks that the gift may be upheld as a gift inter vivos. It is true that a check is not ordinarily an appropriation of the fund upon which it is drawn; and that it is rather an order upon the banker to pay, which like any other order may be revoked at the will of the maker as it will be revoked by his death. The presentation having in this case been made before the death and payment having been refused, the holder may perhaps have an action for damages against the bank, but that would be no criterion of her right to claim against the estate (Jordan's App. 10 W. N. C. 87; 18 L. R. A.

Kuhn v. Warren Sav. Bank, 20 W. N. C. 230), but this and kindred cases are separated from the present case by a very clearly defined distinction. The decedent's check was not drawn upon a general fund nor meant to withdraw therefrom a sum of money which was not earmarked; on the contrary it covered the whole fund, and was meant as a specific transfer of that fund. The testator's language was that "He wanted to give his stepmother $650 which he had in bank;" and the check was suggested to him as the readiest instrument by which the gift could be effected. It is impossible to doubt, from what he said and did, that he intended to assign his title to the fund, then and there; and there is little room to doubt that if he had made a formal assignment, his interest would have passed. But the delivery of the check worked the same result, because it had the same purpose. "Whenever the party has the power to do a thing (statutory provisions being out of the way) and means to do it, the instrument he employs shall be so construed as to give effect to his intention (Bond v. Bunting, 7 Pa. 210). This distinction has been recognized in a number of cases. In Clemson v. Davidson, 5 Binn. 898, Tilghman, Ch. J., said: "Any order, writing, or act which makes an appropriation of a fund, amounts to an equitable assignment of that fund." In Greenfield's Estate, 24 Pa. 232, an order to pay was held not to be an assignment because it was drawn generally upon trustees without specifying the fund, whether principal or interest, from which it was to be paid. In Loyd v. McCuffrey, 48 Pa. 410, a check was held invalid for the same reason. In First Nat. Bank of Mt. Joy v. Gish, 72 Pa. 18, however, a check was undoubtedly held to be an appropriation. There a note for $6,000 was discounted with the understanding that $1,000 was to be retained by the discounting bank out of the loan. In pursuance thereof a check for $1,000 was drawn on the bank by the maker of the note and was retained by the bank. The check was held to be part of the original transaction and to have reduced the loan to $5,000. Hemphill v. Yerkes, 132 Pa. 545, is nearer the point under discussion. "It is true," says Paxson, Ch. J., "as a general principle, that a check drawn in the ordinary form vests no title to the general funds of the drawer in the bank upon which it is drawn. . . . The check (in dispute) was not drawn against the general fund of Monaghan (the maker); it was drawn against the whole of a specific fund which in equity belonged to the payee, and, as before observed, passed the legal title to the fund even as against the drawer." In that case the check was drawn by a master, who was the custodian of the money, in favor of a distributee who had been awarded a share in the fund, and in this case a check was drawn by the owner of the fund. But in all other respects the cases are parallel. By the delivery of the check, with words of absolute and present gift, the donor parted with the specific money in bank and vested the title thereto in the donee as irrevocably as he could possibly have done by an assignment formally executed and delivered. If the proof of irrevocability is not sufficient to make this a good gift inter vivos, it will at least sustain it as a valid gift causa mortis.

Whether the check under the circumstances attending its issue could have been probated as the last will of the decedent is a question which was not brought forward at the audit and does not require to be considered.

The account shows an amount for distribution amounting to . . . $372 20 Add by credit not proved, disallowed 20 00

$392 20

The said balance is awarded to Charles M. Williamson, administrator of the estate of Theresa J. Taylor, deceased, in settlement of the claim of that decedent.

Exceptions were taken to the adjudication of the auditing judge, which were dismissed and the adjudication confirmed, whereupon Ruffell appealed to this court assigning for error the admission in evidence of the testimony of George W. S. Hubbert, and the awarding of the balance to Williamson and not to Ruffell.

Mr. J. Willis Martin, for appellant:

The testimony of George W. S. Hubbert, the payee in the check, was incompetent.

The exception in the enabling Act of 1887 provides for cases where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, and the law renders any surviving party to the thing or contract incompetent.

Fross' and Loomis' App. 105 Pa. 258; Graves v. Griffin, 19 Pa. 176; Bailey v. Knapp, Id. 192; Hatz v. Snyder, 26 Pa. 512.

In distribution in the orphans court no one can claim but through the decedent as creditor, legatee or next of kin.

McBride's App. 72 Pa. 480, 484; Braman's App. 89 Pa. 78, 84; Gravenstine's App. 2 Pennyp. 61; Winton's App. 111 Pa. 387.

There was neither a gift inter vivos nor de mortis causa, and no action could lie against the bank at the suit of the payee or Theresa Taylor.

A check which has not been accepted by the bank on which it is drawn does not operate as an assignment to the payee of the sum for which it is drawn.

Morse, Banks and Banking, 275.

The holder of a bill of exchange is not the owner of the money or property remitted by the drawer for the payment of the bill.

Hopkins v. Bebe, 26 Pa. 85.

Agreeably to the weight of authority, a check is essentially a bill of exchange and will not, therefore, operate as an equitable transfer or an appropriation.

1 Lead. Cas. Eq. vol. II. pt. 2, 1653; Loyd v. McCaffrey, 46 Pa. 410.

An essential element to gifts inter vivos and causa mortis is the delivery of the thing given. Though the delivery of the check itself was complete, it does not follow that this was equivalent to a delivery of the gift. Had it been payable on demand, it seems clear upon reason and authority that it would not have been. It would not have operated as an assignment of the fund, and had there been sufficient funds to meet it, and payment been refused, there would have been no right of action against the bank.

Waynesburg College's App. 111 Pa. 180, 66 Am. Rep. 253; Morse, Banks & Banking, 85, 18 L. R. A.

275; Greenfield's Estate, 24 Pa. 232; First Nat. Bank of Mt. Joy v. Gish, 72 Pa. 13; National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897; Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 23.

The gift of such a check is only the gift of a promise (Morse, 382), and is but a parol executory promise, without consideration to make a gift which would not be executed until the check was accepted or paid; the death of the drawer before acceptance or payment would revoke it and the gift would therefore fail.

Yard v. Patton, 18 Pa. 284, 285; Campbell's Estate, 7 Pa. 100, 47 Am. Dec. 503; Simmons v. Cincinnati Sav. Soc. 81 Ohio St. 457, 27 Am. Rep. 521; Detroit Second Nat. Bank v. Williams, 13 Mich. 291; Hewitt v. Kaye, L. R. 6 Eq. 198; Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. 24.

In Walsh's App., 1 L. R. A. 535, 122 Pa. 177, 190, the delivery of a saving fund book, accompanied by the declaration that the donee was to have the money, was held not to be a complete gift.

Mr. Arthur M. Burton, for appellee:

Mr. Hubbert, being a naked trustee, was a competent witness.

Ryeres v. Blossburg Presby. Cong. 83 Pa. 117, and cases therein cited; Fross' App. 105 Pa. 258.

The auditing judge and the orphans' court were right in holding that the claim of Theresa J. Taylor was cognizable in this proceeding.

Marshall v. Hoff, 1 Watts, 440; Miller's App. 84 Pa. 391; McBride's App. 72 Pa. 480; High's Estate, 136 Pa. 286; McDermott's App. 106 Pa. 358, 51 Am. Rep. 526; Gaffney's Estate, 146 Pa. 49; Stewart's Estate, 187 Pa. 175.

Whether the giving of the check of Theresa J. Taylor should be considered as a gift inter vivos or as a donatio mortis causa, or as an executed declaration of trust, it was sufficient to vest in her the property in the fund in decedent's lifetime.

Bond v. Bunting, 70 Pa. 210; Hemphill v. Yerkes, 132 Pa. 545.

If the check is drawn for the whole deposit, this is a special fact which readily determines it to be an assignment.

Morse, Banks & Banking, § 492.

Judge Sharswood, in note (1) to Byles on Bills, 21, says: "In cases, also, where an order is drawn for the whole of a particular fund, it amounts to an equitable assignment of that fund, and after notice to the drawee, it binds the funds in his hands."

As between the drawer and the payee (or holder), there is no doubt that the delivery of the check constitutes an assignment of the amount.

Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1638 (1), and cases cited in note.

In Bromley v. Brunton, L. R. 6 Eq. 275, a check was given by A. to B., and presented without delay. The bankers had sufficient assets of A., but refused payment because they doubted the signature. The next day A. died, the check not having been paid.

Held, a complete gift, inter vivos, of the amount of the check.

See also Rhodes v. Childs, 64 Pa. 18, 24; Gourley v. Linsenbiger, 51 Pa. 845; Com. v. Orompton, 187 Pa. 147; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 27 L. ed. 500.

A check is held to be an appropriation or assignment of the specific money called for.

Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 514; Fonner v. Smith, 11 L. R. A. 528, 81 Neb. 107; Roberts v. Corbin, 26 Iowa, 815, 96 Am. Dec. 146; Fogarties v. State Bank, 12 Rich. L. 518, 78 Am. Dec. 468; Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 815; German Sav. Inst. v. Adas, 1 McCrary, 501.

The giving of the check to Mr. Hubbert in the presence of the donee and the execution of a due-bill by him to her at the same time made it an executed trust in favor of Theresa Taylor which did not require any consideration to support it.

Crawford's App. 61 Pa. 52, 100 Am. Dec. 609; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428; Helfenstein's Estate, 77 Pa. 328, 18 Am. Rep. 449.

It is not essential to the validity of a trust of personal property that it should be irrevocable; indeed, a right of revocation may be expressly reserved.

Dickerson's App. 115 Pa. 198; Lines v. Lines, 142 Pa. 149.

The notion that a gift which would be valid if made through a declaration of trust, will fail if put in the form of an assignment, was repudiated in Richardson v. Richardson, L. R. 3 Eq. 686.

An instrument executed as a present and complete assignment is equivalent to a declaration of trust.

Kekewich v. Manning, 1 DeG. M. & G. 176; Clemson v. Davidson, 5 Binn. 398; Neemith v. Drum, 8 Watts & S. 9.

A reserved right of revocation is not inconsistent with the creation of a valid trust.

Dickerson's App. supra.

Per Curiam:

We think the testimony of the witness George W. S. Hubbert was properly admitted. He had no interest in the matter in controversy. He was not a party in any sense of the term. He was at most a mere conduit through which the sum in controversy was to pass to Mrs. Taylor. Nor do we think it was error to award the fund to the administrator of Mrs. Taylor. The check was drawn upon the bank for the full amount on deposit, under circumstances which showed that it was intended as an assignment of the fund. It did not come within the principle of that class of cases which hold that a check drawn in the ordinary form vests no title to the general funds of the drawer in the bank upon which it is drawn. It more nearly resembles Hemp-hill v. Yerkes, 183 Pa. 545.

Judgment affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

J. L. BERNARD, Respt.,

v.

Joseph TAYLOR, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. Wagers being inconsistent with the established interests of society and in conflict with the morals of the age are void as against public policy.

2. Money deposited with a stakeholder as a wager on a foot race by one who knows that the race is to be bogus and has been fixed in advance may be recovered by him on demand before the race has been run.

(January 16, 1898.)

NOTE.—Legality of wagers; betting.

A wager is something hazarded on the issue of some uncertain event, as a bet. Cassard v. Hinman, 1 Bosw. 207.

To constitute a wager there must be a risk on both sides. Quarles v. State, 5 Humph. 561.

A wager is a contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid for delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. 2 Bouvier, Dict. 647.

It is an agreement having all the requisites of a legal contract, the consideration being the mutual promise of each to pay or to deliver in case he loses the money or thing wagered. 1 Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. 448.

The bet or wager is none the less gambling because it is made to assume the form of a contract. Irwin v. Willfar, 110 U. S. 511, 28 L. ed. 230; Beadles v. McElrath, 85 Ky. 243.

The facts and circumstances surrounding a contract alleged to be a wager may be shown for the purposes of determining its real character, whatever its form. Mohr v. Miesen, 47 Minn. 223.

The burden of proving that a contract is void as a wager rests upon the party asserting its invalidity. Mohr v. Miesen, supra.

At common law all wagers were recoverable except such as were prohibited by law, were against public policy, or calculated to affect the interest, character, or feelings of third parties. Johnson v. Fall, 6 Cal. 859, 65 Am. Dec. 513; Smith v. Brown, 3 Tex. 360, 49 Am. Dec. 748; Jeffrey v. Ficklin, 3 Ark. 18 L. R. A.

227; Bunn v. Riker, 4 Johns. 427, 4 Am. Dec. 292; Petlamberdass v. Thackoorseydass, 7 Moore, P. C. C. 230; Moon v. Durden, 2 Exch. 23; Hasket v. Wootan, 1 Nott & McC. 180; Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670; Wheeler v. Spencer, 15 Conn. 26; Winchester v. Nutter, 52 N. H. 507, 13 Am. Rep. 93; Stoddard v. Martin, 1 R. L. 1.

Bell, J., in Monroe v. Smelly, 25 Tex. 586, 78 Am. Dec. 541, said: "The rule and the exceptions taken together are founded upon a principle which enables the law to adapt itself to the changing circumstances and conditions of communities and states. . . . In a merely political sense a thing may be said to be contrary to public policy in one generation which is not so in the next. And when the law institutes an inquiry into the morality or immorality of a particular thing the inquiry does not proceed upon abstract principles so much as upon the received and common opinion of the great body of the people constituting the great body of the people upon which the law has its operation."

One of the earliest cases was that of Andrews v. Herne, 1 Lev. 33, reported in 1 Keb. 56, as Walcot v. Tappin, where a wager had been laid that Charles Stuart would be king of England within twelve months then next ensuing. The action was maintained. Justice Buller alluding to this case in Good v. Elliott, 3 T. R. 693, said: "I presume no one will say that an action could now be maintained on any bet of that kind."

In Gilbert v. Sykes, 16 East, 156, the case of a wager on the life of Bonaparte, Lord Ellenborough

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money which had been bet upon a foot race and deposited with defendant as stakeholder. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Measrs. McGinn, Sears & Simon, for appellant:

A wagering contract upon an indifferent subject is valid by the common law, and except where prohibited by statute. It is valid by the laws of Oregon except in respect to those matters which come within the inhibition of the statute relating to gambling. This statute does not prohibit bets upon foot races.

Hill, Or. Laws, § 3526 et seq.

The enumeration of the unlawful games excludes all other games from the illegal category.

That the rule is as stated at common law, see—

Good v. Elliot, 8 T. R. 698; Allen v. Hean, 1 T. R. 56-60; Atherfold v. Beard, 2 T. R. 610; Da Costa v. Jones, 2 Cowp. 729; Ramloll Thackoorseydas v. Soojumnull Dhondmull, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 800-810, 12 Jur. 815; Harding v. Walker, 1 Hempst. 53; Sackett v. Davis, 8 McLean, 101; Pope v. St. Leger, 1 Salk. 844; March v. Pigot, 5 Burr. 2802; Jones v. Randall, 1 Cowp. 17, 87; Brandon v. Hibbert, 4 Campb.

87; Moon v. Durdan, 3 Exch. 23; Campbell v. Richardson, 10 Johns. 406; Bunn v. Riker, 4 Johns. 427; Walker v. Armstrong, 54 Tex. 609; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 544; Kirkland v. Randon, 8 Tex. 10; Dunman v. Strother, 1 Tex. 59; Johnson v. Fall, 6 Cal. 859, 65 Am. Dec. 518; Bass v. Peevey, 22 Tex. 295; Devees v. Miller, 5 Harr. (Del.) 847; Trenton Mut. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 24 N. J. L. 576; Morgan v. Pettit, 4 Ill. 529; Smith v. Smith, 21 Ill. 344, 74 Am. Dec. 100; Beadles v. Bless, 37 Ill. 820, 81 Am. Dec. 281; Hasket v. Wootan, 1 Nott & McC. 180; Stoddard v. Martin, 1 R. I. 1; Phillips v. Ives, 1 Rawle, 49.

Then the stakeholder had the right to retain the funds until the happening of the event. If the wager is legal neither party has the right to rescind the contract and claim the money.

2 Parsons, Cont. 626; Brandon v. Hibbert, 4 Campb. 87; Bland v. Collett, Id. 157; Murray v. Keyes, 85 Pa. 884; Parks v. Kleeber, 37 Pa. 251; 3 Bishop, Married Women, § 806; Smith v. Sherwin, 11 Or. 269.

If according to the wager the parties have appointed judges on the event it can be ascertained only by the decision of the judges.

Devees v. Miller and Kirkland v. Randon, supra.

The findings show that the agreement of the parties was not an ordinary wager, but said: "Wherever the tolerating any species of contract has a tendency to produce a public mischief, or inconvenience, such a contract has been held void."

Le Blanc, J., in the same case said: "It has often been lamented that actions upon idle wagers should have been maintained in courts of justice. The practice seems to have prevailed before that full consideration of the subject which has been had in modern times, and it is now clearly settled that the subject-matter of a wager must at least be perfectly innocent in itself, and must not tend to immorality or impolicy."

In Da Costa v. Jones, 2 Cowp. 729, Lord Mansfield stating as a case a wager that an unmarried woman has a bastard, said: "Would you try that? Would it be endured? Most unquestionably it would not, because it is not only an injury to a third person, but it disturbs the peace of society, and the party to be affected by it would have a right to say, 'How dare you bring my name in question?'"

This case arose about a bet upon the sex of the Chevalier D'Eon, on the first trial the plaintiff obtained a verdict; but on motion for arrest for judgment which was heard the next year, and after the case had been considerably discussed throughout Europe, it was said that it would be a disgrace to judicature to sustain the action, and that physicians, servants, and confidential friends could not be required to give evidence on such a question.

In the case of Henkin v. Gerss, 2 Campb. 408, Lord Loughborough refused to try an action for a wager whether a person could be held to bail on a special original for a debt under forty pounds. This was approved by the court of king's bench in Henkin v. Guerss, 12 East, 247.

Brown v. Leeson, 2 H. Bl. 43, was the wager concerning the manner of playing an illegal game. The court refused to sustain an action concerning a prohibited game. Lord Loughborough said in addition: "This was a mere idle wager, and I have no hesitation in saying that I think a court or a jury ought not to be called upon to decide such wagers."

18 L. R. A.

In 1824 Lord Chief Justice Abbott refused to try the case of a wager upon a dog fight.

In Scotland the courts have refused to entertain actions on wagers. Bruce v. Ross, 3 Paton, 107.

By 8 & 9 Vict. all contracts and agreements, whether by parol or in writing, by way of gambling or wagering are declared to be null and void.

In Massachusetts the English law has never been adopted, and it has been declared that all wagers are unlawful. Bail v. Gilbert, 12 Met. 397; Sampson v. Shaw, 101 Mass. 145; Love v. Harvey, 114 Mass. 82.

A party who receives money from a stakeholder after notice has been given to the latter not to pay it over is liable to the loser for money had and received. Love v. Harvey, supra; McKee v. Manice, 11 Cush. 367.

And money lost and voluntarily paid to the winner on a wager on a dog-fight may be recovered back in an action for money had and received. Grace v. McElroy, 1 Allen, 568.

But where a party to a bet had declared that he was the winner and demanded that the stakeholder pay over the stakes to him, but did not ask for the return of his deposit, he was held to be in part delicto and not in a position to recover from the winner after the stakes had been paid over. Patterson v. Clark, 128 Mass. 531.

In Maine all wagers are void. Lewis v. Littlefield, 15 Me. 238; Stacy v. Foss, 19 Me. 335.

In Pennsylvania an action to recover money lost upon a wager or bet cannot be maintained. Edgell v. McLaughlin, 6 Whart. 176, 36 Am. Dec. 214; Phillips v. Ives, 1 Rawle, 37; Pritchett v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 3 Yeates, 453.

Nor in Vermont. Collamer v. Day, 2 Vt. 144.

In Phillips v. Ives, 1 Rawle, 37, the defendant bet that Napoleon would escape or be removed from St. Helena within two years; and if he died defendant would lose the bet. Within two years Napoleon died. But the bet was held not recoverable; and it was further held that no bet about a human being was recoverable in a court of justice.

The winning party to a wager cannot recover the stakes in a court of law. Johnston v. Russell, 37 that it had in contemplation a "job race;" that is, it was a corrupt, criminal, and criminally illegal agreement. It was in advance "fixed" that one of the parties should win and that certain persons should lose their money. This put the plaintiff in pari delicto with the defendant, and the rule is in such cases, potior est conditio possidentis.

Davis v. Holbrook, 1 La. Ann. 176; Sutphin v. Croser, 32 N. J. L. 463; Murdock v. Kilbourn, 6 Wis. 468; Winchester v. Nutter, 52 N. H. 507, 13 Am. Rep. 98.

Messrs. Miller & Miller, with Mr. John MacMillan, for respondent.

Lord, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover the sum of $560 deposited with the defendant as a wager on the result of a foot race. The case was tried without the intervention of a jury, and the material facts, as found by the court, are that the plaintiff deposited with the defendant the sum of $560 in gold, for the benefit of one George Grant, and as a wager upon a foot race which said Grant and one Anderson were to run the next day, at a place agreed upon; that, at the time the said money was so deposited, it was understood by Grant and the defendant, Taylor, and the plaintiff, that the money should be paid back to the plaintiff, on his demand of the same, at any time before the race should be run, which the defendant agreed to do; that before such race was run the plaintiff, on two occasions, demanded said money of the defendant, who refused to pay it back, but pretends that said race was run, and that Anderson was the winner, and to whom he paid the money before the commencement of this action; that the race agreed to be run was not run, but that Grant, at the appointed time, refused to run, and Anderson ran over the course alone, and was declared by the defendant to be the winner; that said pretended race was never intended to be a fair and honest race, and that plaintiff knew at the time he deposited his money with the defendant that the race was to be a "bogus race;" that the parties engaged in getting it up, namely, Grant, Anderson, and the defendant, wanted to "rope in" somebody; that it was understood that Grant was to win the race; that the plaintiff furnished the money, and deposited it with the defendant, as a stakeholder, for the benefit of Grant, in whom he had confidence at the time, but afterwards, before the time appointed for the race to come off, became suspicious that he would lose the money, and thereupon, by reason of such suspicion, and by virtue of the agreement with the defendant, demanded of the defendant the return of said money; and that said Grant, then and there, before the time of running the Cal. 672; Hill v. Kidd, 48 Cal. 615; Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 73, 40 Am. Rep. 110; Waterman v. Buckland, 1 Mo. App. 46.

In Rice v. Gist, 1 Strobb. L. 32, Judge O'Neill said: "I am prepared hereafter to declare all wagers unlawful on their clear immoral tendency, and thus to sweep from our courts the whole body of wagers great and small."

One cannot maintain an action to recover on a wager, to decide which the court must inquire into the conduct of an independent department of the government, the parties having no interest other than that created by the wager. Smith v. Brown, 8 Tex. 380, 49 Am. Dec. 743.

By statute in Arkansas all contracts by way of wagering are void. Gantt's Dig. § 2367.

The winner of a bet on a horse-race cannot recover from the stakeholder more than his own deposit. McLain v. Huffman, 30 Ark. 429.

Wisconsin Rev. Stat., chap. 169, § 16, makes all wagers, bets, or stakes made to depend upon any race, or contingent event, unlawful.

In New York it is declared that "all wagers, bets, or stakes made to depend upon any race, or upon any gaming by lot or chance, or upon any lot, chance, casualty, or unknown or contingent event whatever shall be unlawful;" and that "all contracts for or on account of any money or property or thing in action so wagered, bet, or staked, shall be void." 1 Rev. Stat. 662, § 8.

Under this statute, money knowingly lent to be bet or staked cannot be recovered back. Ruckman v. Bryan, 8 Denio, 340; Peck v. Briggs, 3 Denio, 107.

Even though the bet was not made. Morgan v. Groff, 5 Denio, 364, 49 Am. Dec. 373.

In Denniston v. Cook, 12 Johns. 346, where a bet was made on an election and the principals had deposited checks for the amount of their bets, and one, after the result of the election was known, but before the official canvass, withdrew all his money from the bank, supposing the wager lost, it was held that the other principal, to whom the check had been delivered by the stakeholder, could not recover on the check, nor for money had and received.

Where one borrowed money to bet on an election, and deposited it with the lender as a stakeholder and lost the bet, and the stakeholder paid it to the winner on his agreeing to return it in case the loser would not repay, it was held that the agreement was binding. Peck v. Briggs, 3 Denio, 107.

By Pub. Stat. (Rev. Stat. chap. 245, § 16) it is provided that "all bonds, notes, judgments, mortgages, deeds, or other securities as well as promises given, or made for money . . . won at any game or by betting at any race or fight . . . shall be utterly void." This has been held to apply to wagers on the result of a game made by others than the players, as well as to wagers made by the players themselves. McGrath v. Kennedy, 15 R. I. 209.

In Beadles v. Bless, 27 Ill. 320, 51 Am. Dec. 231, it was said that a wager that a railroad would be completed by a given time had no immoral, indecent, illegal, or pernicious tendency. To the same effect, see Johnson v. Fall, 6 Cal. 359, 65 Am. Dec. 518.

The effect of a wager that a railroad would not be completed within a certain time upon the progress of the work is a question of fact. Johnson v. Fall, supra.

Horse-racing in Texas is not unlawful, and wagers made upon them are recoverable. Walker v. Armstrong, 54 Tex. 614; Pierce v. Randolph, 19 Tex. 235; Armstrong v. Parchman, 42 Tex. 188; Dunman v. Strother, 1 Tex. 39, 46 Am. Dec. 97.

In Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 73, 40 Am. Rep. 110, a wager on a horse-race was held void. Ross, J., delivering the opinion, said: "If the question were a new one in this state, we should be inclined to hold all wagers contrary to good morals and sound public policy, and therefore invalid."

In Minnesota a bet on the result of a horse-race is illegal. Wilkinson v. Tousley, 16 Minn. 290, 10 Am. Rep. 139.

By Tenn. Code, § 4870, it is made a misdemeanor race had arrived, demanded of the defendant the repayment of the money to the plaintiff, etc. Substantially upon such findings, the court found, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the sum of $560 and interest, and for costs, etc. From this judgment the appeal has been brought to this court.

The first contention for the defendant is that wagers or wagering contracts upon indifferent subjects are valid in this state, by force of the common law, except when prohibited by statute. There can be no doubt that wager contracts upon indifferent matters were valid at common law. Good v. Elliot, 8 T. R. 698; Jones v. Randall, 1 Cowp. 37; Da Costa v. Jones, 2 Cowp. 784; Bunn v. Riker, 4 Johns. 427, 4 Am. Dec. 262. But all wagers which tended to a breach of the peace, or to injure the feelings, character, or interests of third persons, or which were against the principles of morality or of sound policy, were void at common law. 4 Kent, Com. 466; Greenhood Pub. Pol. 226. And all wagers in contravention of the positive provisions of any statute are also void. Of late years, by legislation and judicial decision, the hostility to wagers of every nature has been marked. This is doubtless due to the increase of betting, and the evil consequences resulting therefrom. As O'Neill, J., said: "Every bet tends directly to beget a desire of possessing another's money or property without an equivalent. Men acted upon by such influences easily become gamblers, and then the road to every other vice is broad and plain." Rice v. Gist, 1 Strobb. L. 84. And the tendency of judicial opinion in repudiating all kinds of wagers is well illustrated in Love v. Harcey, 114 Mass. 82, wherein Gray, Ch. J., says: "It is inconsistent with the policy of our laws, and with the performance of duties for which courts of justice are established, that judges and juries should be occupied with every frivolous question upon which idle or foolish persons may choose to lay a wager." Equally emphatic is Belford, J., in Eldred v. Malloy, 2 Colo. 321, wherein he says: "If we enter upon the work of settling bets made by gamblers in one case, . . . we may despair of ever finding time for the dispatch of those weightier matters which affect the person and property rights of the respectable people in this territory. If the gate is once opened for this kind of litigation, it is more than probable we may be overrun with questions arising out of bets. The spirit of our laws discourages gambling." Wagers are inconsistent with the established interests of society, and in conflict with the morals of the age; and, as such, they are void, as against public policy. In view of

to "make any bet or wager for money or any other valuable thing."

By section 4881 horse-racing "upon a track or path kept for that purpose" is exempted from the provisions of the statutes against gaming. The betting of money upon a horse-race on an unlicensed track within the state has been held to be gambling within section 4870. Huff v. State, 2 Swan, 279.

Betting on races run in another state is unlawful, within section 4870. Edwards v. State, 8 Lea, 412; Daly v. State, 13 Lea, 228; State v. Blackburn, 2 Coldw. 236.

Betting money on a horse-race is gaming and in violation of law. Tatman v. Strader, 23 Ill. 494; Shaffner v. Pinchback, 133 Ill. 410; Garrison v. McGregor, 61 Ill. 473.

In Colorado horse-racing is gaming within Colo. Gen. Stat., § 850. Boughner v. Meyer, 5 Colo. 71.

And a wager on a horse-race is a gaming contract. Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Colo. 212.

Betting on elections.

Betting on elections is utterly prohibited by the laws of Kansas. Reynolds v. McKinney, 4 Kan. 94, 39 Am. Dec. 603.

In Hickerson v. Benson, 8 Mo. 8, a bet on the result of the vote in the electoral colleges was held against public policy and void at common law.

A wager made in Canada by citizens of Vermont on the result of a presidential election was held illegal. Tarleton v. Baker, 18 Vt. 9.

In Allen v. Hean, 1 T. R. 56, a wager made, before the opening of the poll, between two voters, as to the result of an election for member of parliament, was held illegal, as being corrupt, and against the fundamental principles of the British Constitution.

All wagers on the event of an election are void, though made after the election is closed, if before the canvass is complete. Rust v. Gott, 9 Cow. 169, 18 Am. Dec. 497; Brush v. Keeler, 5 Wend. 250.

In Mississippi a bet made on the result of an election, after the election, is an indictable offense. Miller v. State, 33 Miss. 356.

In West Virginia it is provided that "if any person bet or wager money or other thing of value on any election held" in the state he shall be punished as therein prescribed. It was held in State v. Griggs, 34 W. Va. 73, that this covered bets made after the election as well as those made before. To the same effect, State v. Snider, 34 W. Va. 83.

The statute in Indiana provides for the punishment of "any person who shall bet or wager any money or other valuable property upon the result of any election." 2 Rev. Stat. 1876, 468.

In Morgan v. Pettit, 4 Ill. 529, a wager between two citizens of Illinois on the result of an election in Kentucky was held not illegal.

Smith v. Smith, 21 Ill. 244, is to the same effect. This was upon the ground that the persons making the bet were not in a position to exercise any "dangerous or controlling influence over the result."

In Gregory v. King, 58 Ill. 169, 11 Am. Rep. 56, which overruled all previous conflicting cases in Illinois, it was held that a wager made between two citizens of Illinois as to the result of a presidential election in Pennsylvania was void.

But the provision of the Texas Penal Code regarding betting on elections, refers only to bets on elections held within that state, and an indictment under this statute is not supported by evidence of bets on the result of a presidential election in another state. Covington v. State, 23 Tex. App. 225.

In Lucas v. Harper, 47 Va. 409, hogs had been delivered to the defendant who converted them to his own use, and agreed to pay for them at a specified rate per pound when H. G. should be elected. H. G. was defeated, and an action was brought under the Act of 1831, to recover the value of the hogs. The transaction was held a wager and recovery was allowed.

In Harper v. Crain, 47 Va. 409, the facts were similar. C. delivered to H. a horse for which the latter was to pay a specified sum when G. should be elected president. Before the election H. wished to rescind the agreement, and tendered the horse to C. who refused to receive it. G. was elected and C. demanded payment of H. who refused, but held himself ready to return the horse. The transaction was held a wager and C. was denied recovery. This case differed from Lucas v. Harper, in that these considerations, we do not think that such transactions, though upon indifferent subjects, are valid in this state.

The next contention for the defendant is that the alleged agreement was corrupt, illegal, and criminal, in this, that it was in advance "fixed" that one of the parties should win, and that certain persons should lose their money. In other words, that the agreement had in contemplation "a job race." This, it is claimed, put the plaintiff in pari delicto with the defendant, and, as a consequence, entitled to the benefit of the rule, potior est conditio possidentis. The general rule is that the law will not interfere in favor of either party in pari delicto, but will leave them in the condition in which they are found, from motives of public policy. There is no doubt, where money has been paid on an illegal contract, which has been executed, and both parties are in pari delicto, the courts will not compel the return of the money so paid. But the cases show that an important distinction is made between executory and executed illegal contracts. While the contract is executory, the law will neither enforce it nor award damages; but, if it is already executed, nothing paid or delivered can be recovered back. So that, while the contract is executory, the party paying the money or putting up the property may rescind the contract and recover back his money. This arises out of a distinction between an action in affirmance of an illegal contract and one in disaffirmance of it. In the former such an action cannot be maintained, but in the latter an action may be maintained for money had and received. The reason is that the plaintiff's claim is not to enforce, but to repudiate, an illegal agreement. Whart. Cont. § 354. In such case, there is a locus penitentis. The wrong is not consummated, and the contract may be rescinded by either party. In Edgar v. Fowler, 8 East, 215, Lord Ellenborough said: "In illegal transactions the money has always been stopped while it is in transitu to the person entitled to receive it." As Lord Justice Mellish said: "To hold that the plaintiff is entitled to recover does not carry out the illegal transaction, but the effect is to put everybody in the same situation as they were before the illegal transaction was determined upon, and before the parties took any steps. If money is paid or goods delivered for an illegal purpose, the person who has so paid the money or delivered the goods may recover them back before the illegal purpose is carried out; but if he waits till the illegal purpose is carried out, or if he seeks to enforce the illegal transaction, in neither can he maintain an action. The law will not allow that to be done."

there was in this case no proof of conversion, and the contract was rescinded before the election.

A bet on an election is against public policy and void. Like v. Thompson, 9 Barb. 315; Willis v. Hoover, 9 Or. 418; Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 21; Thomas v. Cronise, 16 Ohio, 54; Lucas v. Harper, 24 Ohio St. 323; Harper v. Crain, 38 Ohio St. 338; Jeffrey v. Ficklin, 3 Ark. 227; Cooper v. Brewster, 1 Minn. 94.

By statute in Indiana money lost by betting on a game may be recovered. Burroughs v. Hunt, 13 Ind. 178; Frybarger v. Simpson, 11 Ind. 59; Alexander v. Mount, 10 Ind. 161.

But an election is not a game within the meaning of this statute. McHatton v. Bates, 4 Blackf. 63; Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 14; Woodcock v. Palmer, 12 Ind. 482; State v. Henderson, 47 Ind. 127; Smoot v. State, 18 Ind. 19; Schlosser v. Smith, 96 Ind. 64.

A bet on an election is not gaming. State v. Smith, Meigs, 99, 33 Am. Dec. 132.

Liability of stakeholder.

A stakeholder who pays all the money deposited with him to one party to a wager before the time when the wager can be decided is liable to the other party for the amount deposited by him. Brewer v. Gobble, 32 Ill. App. 115.

If a contract be executed and both parties in pari delicto, neither can recover. But if the contract continues and the party is desirous of rescinding it he may do so and recover back the deposit. Comyn, Contracts, 30, 46.

Money bet upon an illegal wager can be recovered by the loser of the stakeholder, if before paying it over the loser has notified the stakeholder not to pay it but to return it to himself. Wilkinson v. Tousley, 16 Minn. 299, 10 Am. Rep. 139; Ball v. Gilbert, 12 Met. 397; Sutphin v. Crozer, 30 N. J. L. 267; Huncke v. Francis, 27 N. J. L. 55; Moore v. Trippe, 20 N. J. L. 233; Morgan v. Beaumont, 121 Mass. 7; Cleveland v. Wolff, 7 Kan. 137; Hutchings v. Stilwell, 18 B. Mon. 776; Cotton v. Thurland, 5 T. R. 405; Smith v. Bickmore, 4 Taunt. 474; Hasletow v. Jackson, 8 Barn. & C. 221; Laoussade v. White, 7 T. R. 536; Stacy v. Foss, 19 Me. 335; McAllister v. 18 L. R. A.

Hoffman, 16 Serg. & R. 147, 16 Am. Dec. 556; Atkins v. Flemming, 29 Iowa, 122; Thrift v. Redman, 18 Iowa, 25; Shannon v. Baumer, 10 Iowa, 210; Gilmore v. Woodcock, 69 Me. 118, 31 Am. Rep. 255.

Even though the stakeholder was an infant. Lewis v. Littlefield, 15 Me. 233.

An illegal wager is revocable at any time before the event happens. This rule is founded on the justice and policy of allowing each party a locus penitentis while the contract remains executory. Tarleton v. Baker, 18 Vt. 9.

A demand by one of the parties to a betting transaction of the whole amount from the stakeholder on the ground that the wager has been won by him, is not a revocation of the wager. O'Kerson v. Crittenden, 63 Iowa, 298.

Money received by a third person may be recovered as money had and received to the plaintiff's use before it is paid over; and where an illegal wager has been laid, either party may notify the stakeholder not to pay it to the winner, and may recover back the amount of his stake. And it is immaterial whether the event has happened or not. Wheeler v. Spencer, 15 Conn. 27; Hale v. Sherwood, 40 Conn. 332, 16 Am. Rep. 37; Conner v. Ragland, 15 B. Mon. 634.

A stakeholder who pays over the stakes to the winner after notice not to do so, even if it is given after the result of the bet is known, is liable to the party who gave the notice for his deposit. Logue v. McCuish, 21 N. S. 75.

An infant may repudiate a bet he has made; but he may not recover the amount from the stakeholder after the latter has by his directions paid over the money to the winner. McLean v. Wilson, 36 Ill. App. 657.

In pari delicto is not a maxim of universal application; for where money has been paid on a contract which is illegal, merely because it is in violation of a rule which has for its object the protection of weak and necessitous men, it may be recovered back; and for the very reason that the rule itself would be frustrated by any other construction. McAllister v. Hoffman, 16 Serg. & R. 147, 16 Am. Dec. 556.

In this case the defendant was stakeholder and Taylor v. Bowers, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 291. In Hastelov v. Jackson, 8 Barn. & C. 221, which was an action by one of the parties to a wager on the event of a boxing match, commenced against the stakeholder after the battle had been fought, Littledale, J., said: "If two persons enter into an illegal contract, and money is paid upon it by one to the other, that may be recovered back before the execution of the contract, but not afterwards." Smith v. Bickmore, 4 Taunt. 474; Tappenden v. Randall, 2 Bos. & P. 487; Lowry v. Bourdieu, 2 Dougl. 452; Munt v. Stokes, 4 T. R. 561; Utica Ins. Co. v. Kip, 8 Cow. 20; Merritt v. Millard, 48 N. Y. 288; White v. Franklin Bank, 23 Pick. 181; O'Bryan v. Fitzpatrick, 48 Ark. 490. "And this rule," says Mr. Justice Woods, "is applied in the great majority of the cases, even when the parties to an illegal contract are in pari delicto, because the question which of two parties is the more blamable is often difficult of solution, and quite immaterial." Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 60, 26 L. ed. 850. The object of the law is to protect the public, and not the parties. This is upon the principle that it best comports with public policy to arrest the illegal transaction before it is consummated. Stacy v. Foss, 19 Me. 335, 36 Am. Dec. 755.

It only remains to apply these principles to the facts. These show that the plaintiff was cognizant that the race had been fixed in advance; that one of the parties should win, and that certain other persons should lose their money; that it was a bogus race, and the arrangement based upon it corrupt, and designed to cheat and defraud the other parties; but at the same time they show that he repented, and repudiated the contract before it was consummated, by demanding the return of his money the evening of the day before the race, and on the day of the race, but before it was to come off, and that the defendant refused to pay it back, and that he afterwards forbade the defendant to pay said money to any other person than himself. He availed himself of the opportunity which the law affords a person to withdraw from the illegal contract before it has been executed. He repented before the meditated wrong was consummated, and twice demanded to withdraw his money, and thereby rescinded the contract. To allow the plaintiff to recover does not aid or carry out the corrupt and illegal transaction, but the effect is to put the parties in the same condition as they were before it was determined upon. By allowing the party to withdraw, the contemplated wrong is arrested, and not consummated. This the law encourages, and no obstacle should be thrown in the way of his repentance. Hence, if the plaintiff retreated before the bet had been decided, his money ought to have been returned to him, and, in default of this, he is entitled to recover.

There was no error, and the judgment must be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

had been notified by the plaintiff, after the result of the election on which the bet was made was known, not to pay the money to the winner. The money was, however, paid over; it was held that recovery could be had.

Where B, the agent of A, made a bet with C on the event of the approaching election for governor and the sums were deposited with D, it was held that A, the loser, might recover the money from D after the event of the election was known, the money not having been paid over to the winner. Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 23.

But in Yates v. Foot, 12 Johns. 1, the case of Vischer v. Yates, supra, was reversed.

In N. Y. Rev. Stat., 662, § 9, it is provided that if the money or property has been paid, delivered, or deposited, it may be recovered back from the winner, and whether the wager be lost or not; and it may be recovered from the stakeholder, notwithstanding he may have paid it over to the winner.

It was held in Morgan v. Groff, 4 Barb. 525, that the policy manifested by that section favored the recovery back of money placed in the hands of an agent to be wagered with a particular person, which wager had not been placed.

So the form of action must be that given by the statute, which is debt and not assumpsit. McKeon v. Caherty, 3 Wend. 494.

And the action is one upon a statute which under the Statute of Limitations must be brought within three years. Fowler v. Van Surdam, 1 Denio, 560.

The action may be brought by the person who made the bet, although he was simply acting as the agent for others. Haywood v. Sheldon, 18 Johns. 68.

Even under a statute permitting recovery back 19 L. R. A.

from the winner, it is no defense to an action against the stakeholder that the money has been paid over to the winner. Simmons v. Borland, 10 Johns. 468.

At least if a demand was made upon him by the loser before such payment. Allen v. Ehle, 7 Cow. 496.

The cases of Vischer v. Yates, and Yates v. Foot, have been reviewed by the courts of several of the states and the doctrine deduced by the former case declared sound and correct and more consonant with good morals and better sustained by principle and authority than the latter case. Wheeler v. Spencer, 15 Conn. 283; Wood v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 231; Perkins v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 298; Willis v. Hoover, 9 Or. 422; Whitwell v. Carter, 4 Mich. 323; Alford v. Burke, 21 Ga. 46, 68 Am. Dec. 449.

But the case of Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670, approved the case of Yates v. Foot and declared that there was no satisfactory reason for the distinction made by the English cases.

By Ky. Gen. Stat., chap. 47, § 5, it is provided that the stakeholder of any money or other thing that may be staked on any bet or wager shall, when thereto notified, return the same to the person making the stake or deposit, and for failing to do so the amount of value of the stake may be recovered from him by the party aggrieved.

Wis. Rev. Stat., chap. 139, § 17, provides that the money wagered may be recovered of the stakeholder "whether the same shall have been paid over by such stakeholder or not, and whether any such wager be lost or not."

These provisions were not repealed by Gen. Laws 1858, chap. 117. Simmons v. Bradley, 27 Wis. 689.

A. P. W.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Second Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with Oct. 1, 1892, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. FIDUCIARIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES; NUISANCES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; GIFTS; WILLS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Passage of Statute.

The debated question as to the conclusiveness of the proper enactment of a statute duly enrolled and signed is raised in a Kentucky case which holds that such presumption is not conclusive as against facts admitted by demurrer which show that constitutional requirements have not been complied with. (Ky.) 556.

Regulation of Private Business.

The claim that the business of a livestock exchange is subject to regulation as a public one on the ground that it does business at the largest market in the world is not upheld, at least so far as to give the courts any power to declare the business impressed with a public use where the Legislature has not done so. (Ill.) 190.

Legislative Power.

The power of the Legislature to provide for a rehearing in the supreme court is denied in North Carolina as the court is established by the Constitution, and the legislative, executive, and judicial departments are required to be kept separate. (N. C.) 547.

The validity of a legislative divorce is denied in Alabama on the ground that it violates a constitutional provision against the suspension by the Legislature of any general law for the benefit of any individual. (Ala.) 95.

The constitutionality of a statute making a railroad company liable for fires on its right of way or set by its engines is upheld after extensive discussion and against dissent in a South Carolina case. (S. C.) 440.

Due Process.

The removal of a wooden building erected in violation of an ordinance can be made without any judicial proceeding. (Mo.) 590.

Regulations of Commerce.

The Indiana Act requiring a blackboard at each railroad station where there is a telegraph office on which a report shall be made whether trains are on time is extensively considered in a case upholding the act and declaring that it is not a regulation of commerce although the information to be given is received by telegraph from agents in another state. (Ind.) 502.

A state statute requiring seed sold to be marked with the year in which it was grown except when sold by farmers to other farmers or gardeners in open bulk is held void as to original packages from another state. (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 549.

A contract with a foreign corporation to canvass for its sewing machines which it agrees to sell on credit and a bond as security for payment are held in an Arkansas case to constitute a part of the interstate commerce carried on by the sale of the machines and therefore unaffected by a statute restricting business by foreign corporations. (Ark.) 206.

Appropriations.

An appropriation by a state Legislature for a state exhibit at the world's fair is for a public purpose. (Ky.) 556.

A constitutional prohibition against legislative gifts to individuals is violated by an appropriation for the benefit of sufferers from flood. (Cal.) 744.

A statute allowing a county treasurer to pay bounties and be credited by the state with the amount is held a violation of a constitutional provision against payment of public money except upon appropriations by law and warrants drawn by the proper officer. (Colo.) 396.

Conflict of Laws.

The rule that the place where an injury was received determines the liability for causing it is applied to a case in which the injury resulted from the negligence of a co-employé which transpired in another state which was the domicile of the parties and the place where the contract of employment was made. (Ala.) 438.

See also infra, VII., WILLS.

Officers.

The suspension of an officer under the Florida Constitution is held not to affect his right to qualify and hold office for the succeeding term. (Fla.) 594.

The power of the governor in Florida to suspend an officer and that of the courts to interfere is fully discussed in an extensive opinion by the supreme court of that state. (Fla.) 410.

That a notary public is a civil officer who cannot be also receiver of public money is decided in Nevada. (Nev.) 818.

The limitation of the power of officers to make contracts extending beyond their term is applied in an Illinois case to the employment of a poor-house keeper. (Ill.) 447.

Railroad Commission.

The powers of the railroad commission of North Carolina are discussed and construed in a case from that state which holds also that equal facilities need not be given by a railroad company to express companies. (N. C.) 398.

Attorneys.

A bad or fraudulent motive is held necessary to justify the disbarment of an attorney, and the interlineation in a decree, after it was signed by the judge, of immaterial words, when done in good faith, is not ground of disbarment. (Fla.) 401.

License.

The license tax required of an attorney by the Florida laws must be paid by each member of a firm of attorneys. (Fla.) 409.

A license for "doing a business of selling at retail" is required from a farmer or planter who sells goods and liquors to his employés exclusively. (La.) 596.

Civil Rights.

A statute requiring equal but separate accommodations for white and colored persons on railway trains is held not to be unconstitutional. (La.) 639.

Eminent Domain ; Taking Property.

An owner is deprived of property without compensation by a statute denying compensation for improvements upon it after a map of a proposed street is filed although the property may never be taken for that purpose. (N. Y.) 543.

The crossing of one railroad by another is the taking of the latter's property within the constitutional provision as to compensation. (Ala.) 166.

A very close distinction which seemed to perplex the lower courts is brought out in a New York case deciding that a railroad company's liability to abutting owners for an embankment which cuts off their access and which practically closes the street to them does not extend to abutters on another street in which a similar embankment is made to make the necessary change of grade at the intersection of the streets. (N. Y.) 768.

The use of the word "damage" which is now found in many state constitutions in a provision for the protection of private property from public interference is discussed in a Washington case which grants an injunction against changing the grade of a street until compensation is made for damages to the abutting owner. (Wash.) 161.

A special tax on part of a lot which is not taken for the amount of compensation due the owner for the part which has been taken for a public alley and for damages to the latter is held equivalent to confiscation and in violation 18 L. R. A.

of the constitutional provision for just compensation. (Ill.) 487.

A steam railroad on the established grade of a street under municipal authority is not in Missouri regarded as an additional servitude. (Mo.) 389.

Jurisdiction.

The effect of a decision on a jurisdictional question in respect to the estate of a deceased person is presented in a New York case, which holds that where a testator was an inhabitant of the state, a surrogate's decision that he was an inhabitant of the county is conclusive on collateral attack. (N. Y.) 342.

Equity Jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of equity in cases of boundary, which is extended by the Oregon statute to all cases of confused or uncertain boundaries, is held to be limited by the Constitution to the mere ascertainment of boundaries and an adjudication fixing such boundaries does not bar a claim to the land by adverse possession. (Or.) 361.

Taxes.

The validity of a tax on mortgages is discussed on both sides by the judges of the California Supreme Court. (Cal.) 465.

The right to tax property out of the state is discussed in a New York case concerning collateral inheritance taxes which decides that personal property but not real property outside the state is subject to such tax, and that the tax is a tax on the right of succession rather than upon the property. (N. Y.) 709.

The subject of the taxation of railroad property is very extensively considered in an Indiana case which decides among other things that such proportion of the rolling stock of a company as the length of the track within the state or any county bears to the whole length of the road may be taxed in such state or the county and that the assessment of railroad property by a state board in the first instance while other property is assessed by local boards is not unconstitutional. (Ind.) 729.

The exemption of educational institutions with the grounds attached "necessary for their proper occupancy, use, and enjoyment and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit" is construed in Minnesota to include houses occupied by professors without rent but not to include unimproved lands intended to be used but not yet used as a place of recreation. (Minn.) 278.

The exemption of religious and similar corporations from the collateral inheritance tax under the New York laws applies only to domestic corporations although it in terms applies to "any" corporation of the classes specified. (N. Y.) 718.

Schools.

A tax to make up the deficiency necessary to keep the public schools open for the time required by the Constitution is held not to be a "special tax" within the meaning of the North Carolina Constitution limiting the amount of county taxes. (N. C.) 850.

The duty of providing and maintaining a city hall for the use of city officers is held to be a public and governmental use in the performance of which a city is not liable for negligence of servants or agents. (Minn.) 151.

The liability of a city for negligence of its own employes whereby a street is rendered unsafe is applied to a case in which an excavation was made by the waterworks department on request of a contractor who had agreed to connect a private house with the city waterworks. (N. Y.) 449.

A municipal corporation cannot be a trustee merely to collect separate sums of money due to its citizens. (Conn.) 256.

The right to enjoin a county board from making an illegal contract or appropriation is denied in an Illinois case which reviews the decisions at length. (Ill.) 832.

The power of a village to purchase a cremating furnace for garbage, etc., is upheld under the general authority to abate nuisances. (Wis.) 45.

The same case holds that the fact of a patent on the mode of constructing such furnace will not make the contract void where the contract is let to the lowest bidder on the patentee's promise to furnish the use of the patent and supervise the construction for any contractor at a fixed price. (Id.)

The subject of extra compensation to councilmen is discussed at large in a Washington case which limits the right to such compensation to services outside the duties of his office. (Wash.) 872.

Vote.

The invalidity of a vote by a common council because of the interest of a councilman may be cured by a subsequent ratification when he is not a member. (Ind.) 867.

Ballots.

An elaborate review of the decisions on the question of marking ballots is presented in a Florida case which holds that certain printed words on the face of the ballots did not constitute an unlawful marking. (Fla.) 721.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

A note given as a forfeit in case of the non-performance of a parol contract which is void under the Statute of Frauds is also void. (D. C.) 142.

Bills and Notes.

The dishonor of the first of several notes given for the same consideration is held no notice to a subsequent bona fide purchaser of the other notes. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 201.

The liability of a stranger to a promissory note who writes his name across the back before its delivery is held in Kansas prima facie to be that of a guarantor, but subject to parol proof of intention of the parties. (Kan.) 83.

Attorney's Fee.

The validity and effect of a stipulation for attorney's fee is considered at length in an Illinois case which holds that an indorsee is entitled to enforce such agreement and that it may be done by a separate suit when so stipulated. (Ill.) 428.

Assignment.

The assignability of a cause of action extends to a claim for money paid by a purchaser of land unlawfully sold for taxes. (S. Dak.) 847.

Each part of a coupon ticket over several lines is transferable in the absence of any words to the contrary although the ticket was purchased at a reduced rate. (Or.) 55.

The effect of an assignment of an insurance policy with the consent of the insurer is held to be a creation of a new contract unaffected by prior causes of forfeiture unknown to either party. (Mich.) 185.

Carriers.

See also, as to assignment, supra, and as to negligence, infra.

The rule that a common carrier cannot limit its liability is declared in an Arkansas case even where the limitation does not extend to loss from negligence if opportunity is not given the shipper to make the shipment under a common-law contract. (Ark.) 527.

The discrimination by a carrier between shippers in car-load lots is held unlawful by 18 L. R. A.

an Indiana case which also holds that payment of an overcharge of freights is not voluntary so as to prevent recovering it back. (Ind.) 105.

On the other hand, the right of a common carrier at common law to discriminate in rates is affirmed in a California case. (Cal.) 221.

The doctrine that a conductor is not obliged to take a passenger's statement as to his right to ride, in the absence of any other evidence, is applied in a Michigan case to one who has failed to take a transfer on changing street-cars. (Mich.) 335.

The right of a railroad company to collect demurrage for cars not unloaded within the time allowed is fully discussed and upheld in a Georgia case. (Ga.) 323.

Insurance.

See also, as to assignment, supra.

The effect of notice to an insurance company of prior insurance as an estoppel against enforcing a condition against other insurance is fully discussed in a Rhode Island case. (R. I.) 496.

The neglect of an insurance agent to write upon a policy a permission for incumbrances which he has granted in the exercise of his authority is held not to defeat the rights of the insured. (Mich.) 481.

The failure to furnish proofs of loss within the time prescribed is held in a Michigan case not to avoid the policy although it expressly provides that no suit shall be maintained until after full compliance with the requirements of the policy where a forfeiture was expressly declared for failure to comply with many other provisions but not in respect to the proofs. (Mich.) 85.

The doctrine of joint tenancy and survivorship is applied to a mutual benefit certificate payable to two persons named without any direction for dividing the benefits. (Wis.) 249.

Sale.

A contract to sell a certain number of "merchantable brick" to be sorted from a kiln does not pass the title although the price is paid. (Wash.) 419.

Usury.

A loan to a member by a building and loan association is held to be not usurious where the excess over legal interest is contingent on the prosperity of the association. (Ark.) 129.

Lease and License.

The distinction between a lease and a license is the subject of an Indiana case in which an instrument for an exclusive right for one year in a sand-bar is held to be a lease. (Ind.) 491.

Implied Covenant.

The claim of an implied covenant of title by recitals in a quit-claim deed and by the use of words of conveyance is rejected in a Georgia case which extensively reviews the subject. (Ga.) 343.

The rule that there is no implied warranty that premises leased for a dwelling are in habitable condition is not changed by the California Code requiring the lessor to put the premises in that condition. (Cal.) 264.

Wager.

The illegality of a wager is declared in an Oregon case which nevertheless holds that even if the wager was made with intent to defraud by a bogus race it can be recovered back if demanded before the race has been run. (Or.) 859.

Termination of Contract.

The effect of a stipulation employing a person to carry on a business for a specified time to the employer's "satisfaction" is held to give the employer a right to discharge him whenever he is in good faith dissatisfied. (Minn.) 644.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

What constitutes a de facto corporation which will prevent partnership liability of the members is illustrated in a Minnesota case. (Minn.) 778.

The by-laws prescribing reasonable qualifications of the directors of a corporation are valid and may declare one who is an attorney against the corporation in a suit, ineligible. (W. Va.) 582.

What constitutes the principal office or place of business of a corporation is a question presented in an important Wisconsin case. (Wis.) 853.

The power of one corporation to purchase the stock of another is denied in a case where one corporation purchased all the shares of another in another state for the purpose of controlling its business. (Tenn.) 252.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

The doctrine of the supreme right of the state to guardianship of children is clearly declared in an Indiana case. (Ind.) 431.

The power of a wife to become her husband's partner is denied in a Wisconsin case following the weight of authority under modern statutes. (Wis.) 512.

A married woman has power to become a partner in a firm of which her husband is not a member under statutes giving her power to carry on business on her separate account. (Mich.) 515.

Antenuptial pregnancy is held no ground for the annulment of the marriage where it was known to the husband although he was induced by false representations to believe that he was the only person with whom the wife had been guilty of illicit intercourse. (Cal.) 875.

The rule that an agreement to facilitate a divorce is void is applied to an agreement by a husband made the day after a decree of divorce in his favor to pay monthly alimony to the wife in consideration of her covenant not to move for a new trial. (Mo.) 850.

As to legislative divorce, see supra, I.

V. FIDUCIARIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Drummers.

Implied authority to indorse checks in the name of his principal is denied to a commercial traveler who makes collections. (Tenn.) 863.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES; NUISANCES.

As to municipal corporations, see supra, I.

Joke.

The defense in an action of tort that the act was done by way of a joke is held to raise a question for the jury as to whether the parties had been engaged in practical jokes so that defendant had a right to believe plaintiff would accept the act as a joke. (N. J.) 44.

False Imprisonment.

The liability for false imprisonment of one who acts in good faith in causing a criminal prosecution is denied in a Minnesota case. (Minn.) 356.

18 L. R. A.

Carrier's Negligence.

A carrier's strict duty to keep its track and road all safe is held not to apply to a canal bridge which a street railway company is obliged to cross but over which it has no control. (N. Y.) 764.

The liability of a railroad company to furnish necessary care for a feeble passenger is affirmed in a Minnesota case provided the carrier voluntarily accepts such passenger without an attendant. (Minn.) 602.

That a railroad train need not be held for passengers to get seated or for a person who entered to assist them in getting on to leave the train, unless his purpose to get off is known to the trainmen is affirmed in a Missouri case. (Mo.) 599.

Electric Shock.

The liability of an electric street railway company for injuries to a passenger from an electric shock is upheld in a Wisconsin case. (Wis.) 479.

Explosion.

The liability of a gas company for explosion caused by a leak in its pipes is discussed in a Pennsylvania case. (Pa.) 759.

Bathing Resort.

The keeper of a bathing resort is held liable for lack of reasonable care to keep the bottom of his bathing resort free from things which might injure the bathers. (Utah) 509.

Master and Servant.

Injuries received by a servant by the use of machinery for purposes not contemplated, although it was defective, is held to create no liability against the master. (Cal.) 124.

Railroad Injuries.

There being no statute requiring railroad companies to fence stock off their right of way in Arkansas, a railroad company is held not liable for the death of a colt which got on the right of way through gaps in a barbed-wire fence and when frightened off the track by a train whistle ran into the fence and was killed. (Ark.) 110.

The failure of an engineer to give signals at a highway crossing is held not to constitute a neglect of duty by the railroad company as matter of law where the statute is directed to the engineer and makes his failure to give the signals a crime. (N. Y.) 771.

The command of a conductor on a freight train to a brakeman to go between cars if he cannot couple them otherwise is held to waive a regulation of the company, prohibiting brakemen to go between cars under any circumstances. (N. C.) 845.

The increased hazard of coupling cars with different coupling apparatus coming from other roads is held to be assumed by a brakeman, and the hauling of such cars is not negligence. (Ala.) 260.

Fellow Servants.

A series of Missouri cases on the subject of the law of fellow servants is presented in this number with elaborate annotation, by one of the foremost members of the legal profession in that state. (Mo.) 792, 802, 817, 823, 827.

As to the negligence of a railroad company in making flying switches, see (Me.) 60, (Ky.) 68.

The negligence of a railroad company in respect to a flying switch on one of the principal streets of a city is held to be so gross where no watchman was at the crossing or any lookout on the front of the cars which were being pushed that ordinary negligence of a boy injured at the crossing was held not to preclude his recovery. (Ky.) 68.

Proximate Cause.

Negligence in leaving a street unsafe is held in an Illinois case reviewing the conflicting decisions to be the proximate cause of an injury although it would not have occurred except for the running away of a horse which was due to an accident. (Ill.) 750.

The doctrine of proximate cause is discussed in a West Virginia case in its relation to an injury received by a traveler at a railroad crossing where his own negligence contributed to the injury. (W. Va.) 519.

The doctrine of proximate cause as applied to the contributory negligence of a fellow servant where the master's negligence is one of the causes, is well illustrated in a case in which both the master and a fellow servant were negligent as to the cutting off of a supply of oil by the igniting of which a servant was injured. (Ill.) 215.

On the question of the proximate cause of an injury in a highway it is held that a defect in the highway which is safely passed by the traveler does not give him a cause of action where it contributes to his injury which results from the frightening of his horse by an independent cause whereby he becomes uncontrollable, wheels suddenly around and goes back to the place of the defect. (Pa.) 100.

A somewhat peculiar case as to the cause of the frightening of a team at a railroad crossing decides that a freight train unlawfully obstructing the crossing may be a concurrent cause with the noise, smoke, and steam of another train which it conceals from view and thereby render the railroad company liable for the resulting damages. (Mich.) 154.

As to nuisances, see, infra, VIII.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; GIFTS; WILLS.

Occupying Claimants.

The Occupying Claimant's Law of Nebraska is construed by the Federal court of appeals to make the occupying claimant and the owner of the fee cotenants where each fails to pay the other the amount of his interest in the property. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 266.

Persons not in Esse.

The power of a court to cut off the rights of persons not in esse is affirmed in case of a suit to compel the execution of a deed by those having the whole estate subject only to the contingency that others may be born who would have an interest therein. (N. Y.) 831.

Adverse Possession.

The right to acquire title to a portion of a street by adverse possession is upheld by a Nebraska case. (Neb.) 146.

braska decision which notes the conflict of decisions on the subject but declares the weight of authority to be in favor of the decision. (Neb.) 146.

Coal and Gas.

Considering the multitude of coal mines and of gas and oil wells which have existed in the same territory, it is very strange that it has remained until now an unadjudicated question whether the surface owner who has sold the coal may drill oil or gas wells through it. This right is affirmed in a Pennsylvania case subject to restrictions as to injuring the owner of the coal. (Pa.) 702.

Easements.

An abandonment of an easement created by grant is not shown by mere nonuser without anything to indicate an intention to abandon. (N. Y.) 535.

Judicial Sale.

The doctrine of cateat emptor is applied to a purchaser on foreclosure sale although he is wrongly informed by the sheriff and clerk that he will obtain by the purchase a title free from incumbrances, as it is his duty to examine the title. (Neb.) 88.

Civil Death.

That sentence to imprisonment for life is not death for the purpose of descent of property is decided in Texas. (Tex.) 82.

Dedication.

The user by the public of one side only of a dedicated street having two tracks is held an acceptance of the whole dedication. (Cal.) 510.

Ice.

Prescriptive rights to ice on the whole surface of a pond are held to be acquired by an exercise of the right to cut at any place desired without objection for the time long enough to give prescriptive rights where the right was claimed under a deed which gave the right to fowage by which the pond was created. (Mich.) 89.

Ponds.

An exceedingly exhaustive and valuable discussion of the law concerning the ownership of ponds and other waters is made in an opinion by Chief Justice Dow in a New Hampshire case. (N. H.) 679.

Lakes.

The grant of public lands bordering on non-navigable lakes extends to the centre, and the question whether the waters are public or private is to be determined by the law of the state. (Minn.) 670.

The test of the navigability of inland lakes to determine their public character is held to be a capacity for any public use. (Minn.) 670.

Wharves.

The right of a riparian owner to build wharves out to navigable water is upheld in a Connecticut case although the land required had been designated under the statute for the cultivation of oysters. (Conn.) 668.

Tenancy by Entirety.

The doctrine of tenancy by the entirety is held by a New York decision not to extend to a mortgage given to husband and wife for moneys of which each contributed part. (N. Y.) 829.

Dower.

The rights of a widow to dower in lands which were depreciated in value after conveyance by her husband either by natural causes or mere neglect are held both at common law and under the Alabama statute to extend only to an assignment by metes and bounds and not to compensation according to the value of the land at the time of conveyance. (Ala.) 425.

The inchoate contingent interest called the dower right which is given by Minnesota statutes to husband or wife in the real estate owned by the other is not divested by a sale on execution under a judgment against the owner. (Minn.) 80.

The effect to defeat dower of a conveyance made by the husband with the express purpose of defeating it is discussed in a Georgia 18 L. R. A.

case, which holds that dower will be thereby defeated if the sale is real but not if it is only colorable except for the purpose of a division among the vendor's children after his death. (Ga.) 75.

The rule that a wife's inchoate right of dower is defeated by dedication of the land to a public use is applied in Missouri to a voluntary conveyance of a right of way to a railroad company executed by her husband alone without consideration. (Mo.) 68.

Trusts.

A woman is held to be a trustee of lands purchased with moneys which she obtains by fraud from a man under a promise to marry him and hold the land in lieu of dower. (N. C.) 204.

Another case on the subject of spendthrift trusts from Mississippi sustains as against creditors a trust for the support of a person to whom quarterly payments of the income are to be made during his life. (Miss.) 49.

The indestructibility of a real estate trust which is valid in its creation under the New York laws is affirmed by a decision denying the power of any court to compel the trustee to consent to a destruction of the trust. (N. Y.) 745.

Liens.

A purchase money mortgage which would otherwise have been prior to mechanics' liens being postponed by agreement to another mortgage which would otherwise have been inferior to such liens, the court transfers the priority of the purchase money mortgage pro tanto to the other mortgage and then holds the mechanics' liens superior to the balance of the mortgage indebtedness. (Minn.) 753.

Contractors supplying laborers and teams are not themselves laborers or employes within the Kentucky lien statutes. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 805.

Mortgages.

A mortgagor in possession is to be regarded as the owner of the land for all purposes of establishing and opening highways. (Kan.) 118.

Chattel Mortgages.

A very extensive discussion of the validity of chattel mortgages accompanied by agreements for the sale of mortgaged goods is furnished by a Washington case, in which the invalidity is held to depend upon the actual fact of fraud. (Wash.) 604.

See also infra, VIII., Trover.

Gift.

The death of a person who has given his check as a gift is held not to defeat the gift although the check is not paid before his death. (Pa.) 855.

A case of great importance on the subject of gifts causa mortis is decided by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia in which the fact that the whole of donor's personal estate amounting to a large sum was given is held not to defeat the gift. (Va.) 170.

Wills.

The rule that a testamentary disposition of property is invalid everywhere if invalid at the domicile of the owner is held in a New York case not to defeat a trust to be executed in a foreign country in which it is valid because such a trust would be invalid at the testator's domicil. (N. Y.) 458.

The Wyoming statute allowing holographic wills to be proved like other private writings is held not to dispense with the necessity of witnesses to such wills as are required for other wills by Wyo. Rev. Stat., § 2237. (Wyo.) 588.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES: RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

Mistake in Payment.

Whether a payment is made by a mistake of law or of fact will give no right to recover it when made by an indorsee in the mistaken belief that he was legally bound by his indorsement. (Mass.) 144.

Parties.

The necessity of making beneficiaries under a trust parties to a suit against the trustees is much discussed in an Illinois case, which denies the necessity on the ground that the trustees hold the title in fee. (Ill.) 881.

Election of Remedies.

A satisfied judgment for one week's wages is held not a bar to the recovery of wages thereafter accruing where the plaintiff had been previously discharged wrongfully and his employment was for one year at a weekly salary. (Md.) 53.

An attempt by the vendor in a conditional sale to enforce a note for the purchase price is held in a Connecticut case fatal to his right thereafter to retake the property. (Conn.) 187.

Exemptions.

The statutory exemption of wages is extended to wages under the debtor's control though temporarily in the hands of another. (Idaho) 586.

Private Action for Nuisance.

The denial of a remedy to a private person for an injury common to the public is applied to an injury to a public fishery although the person's nets were damaged and fish that he had caught were killed in one instance by the garbage which damaged the fishery. (Wis.) 558.

Estoppel.

The use of a process in burning brick which generates noxious gases to the injury of the crops of another on adjacent land is a nuisance and the lease of the land for brick-making does not estop the owner from claiming such damages. (Kan.) 756.

The recovery of pay for services of a physician is held in a West Virginia case to estop the defendant from bringing an action for malpractice only where he appeared to defend in the former suit. (W. Va.) 627.

Judgment Nunc pro Tunc.

The right to enter judgment nunc pro tunc is denied where no judgment was entered for two years after trial and verdict in a justice's court although an execution had been issued at the time of the verdict reciting an entry of judgment. (W. Va.) 684.

Ejectment.

The nature of a title which will support ejectment is discussed in a Pennsylvania case, which holds that a conveyance of the exclusive right of interment in burial lots is not a sufficient title for that purpose. (Pa.) 781.

18 L. R. A.

Trover.

A mortgage on chattels afterwards manufactured does not give the mortgagee a sufficient title to sustain an action for conversion. (N. Y.) 298.

Attachment.

A creditors' bill is held unsupported by a judgment for money only where the jurisdiction was obtained only by attachment of property. (N. Y.) 240.

The effect of a bond for dissolution of an attachment as an appearance in the action is denied in a case where the defendant was not a party to the bond. (Mich.) 486.

Service.

A peculiar case in the Illinois Appellate Court decides that knowledge by an attorney of an attempted service upon him of a notice of motion to place a case upon the short-cause calendar by leaving a copy with the co-occupant of the same office operates in effect as a valid notice. (Ill. App.) 500.

Mailing a summons to the defendant by a person on whom it was served by mistake is not a sufficient personal service. (Minn.) 498.

Time.

In computing the time for appearance the day of service of a summons is to be excluded and the return day included, in Michigan. (Mich.) 837.

Limitations.

The right of a foreign corporation to plead the Statute of Limitations is discussed in an Iowa case which sets up a distinction between those like railroad companies which must have agents within the states and others such as manufacturing companies. (Iowa) 524.

The loss of a valid cause of action by mere lapse of time pending a suit to enforce it is shown in a suit to establish the priority of the lien of a judgment. (Ind.) 211.

New Trial.

A new trial for the disqualification of a juror related to the parties is upheld by a Maine decision. (Me.) 478.

Damages.

Damages for the sale of poisonous coloring matter for ice cream are not limited to the value of the cream spoiled by its use but may include compensation for a resulting loss of business. (N. Y.) 885.

The right to damages sustained after the commencement of a suit in case of a continuing nuisance is denied in Illinois where the nuisance complained of was a roof and eave-trough which cast water during rains on plaintiff's house. (Ill.) 390.

The limitation of the amount of damages for conversion of notes to their actual as distinguished from their face value is affirmed in a New York case in which this rule was sharply contested. (N. Y.) 120.

The right of a defendant in an injunction

RÉSUMÉ OF DECISIONS.
(CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.)

erroneously granted to recover damages is denied in the absence of an undertaking unless the injunction constituted a malicious prosecution. (N. Y.) 275.

Tender.

The effect of a condition to defeat a tender is illustrated in the case where a demand was made for the surrender of notes. (Minn.) 850.

Evidence.

Extrinsic evidence is held admissible to show that indorsements before delivery by persons named as directors as well as the signature of persons named as president and secretary of a corporation on a note reading, "We promise," etc., were made for and bind only the corporation. (Kan.) 538.

The decision in New York, in 18 L. R. A. 499, against the admissibility of opinions as to what the value of land would have been if a railroad had not been built is disapproved in an Oregon case which admits evidence of what the value would have been if a railroad had been built. (Or.) 815.

Presumption.

The presumption of due care on the part of a person found killed by a train just as it started is held not sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company where the manner of death does not appear. (Mo.) 599.

The presumption that there is no promise to pay a child for services to a parent is clearly defined in a New York case which limits it to a case in which there is no evidence of any agreement. (N. Y.) 37.

Set-off.

As against a trustee in insolvency as well as the insolvent a debt of the latter to a decedent's estate may be set off against his distributive share therein. (Md.) 158.

Assignment by Insolvent.

An important case concerning assignments for creditors decides that an assignment of part of the debtor's property is governed by the Illinois statute and is valid as to that part but is enlarged by the statute so as to operate in favor of all creditors. (Ill.) 281.

Right to Jury.

An exhaustive review of the jurisdiction of equity to abate nuisances and of the right to a jury in such cases is given in a New Hampshire case, which holds that there is no right to a jury in a suit to abate a nuisance, and that equity jurisdiction cannot be defeated on the ground that the proceeding is for the punishment of a criminal offense. (N. H.) 646.

Amicus Curia.

An attorney-general is held to be merely an amicus curia when invited by the court to appear in a case involving a constitutional question brought in the name of the state by a relator to enforce a private right, and therefore he is not entitled to ask for a rehearing either as a party or as intervenor. (Ind.) 567.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

Irresistible Impulse.

The defense of irresistible impulse in a criminal case and the doctrine of partial insanity is fully discussed in a West Virginia case. (W. Va.) 224.

The test of a knowledge of right and wrong as to the particular act done is reaffirmed in an Illinois case in respect to the defense of insanity. (Ill.) 287.

Insanity.

The effect of drunkenness producing temporary insanity under the Texas statute may reduce the degree of a homicide and also the penalty therefor. (Tex.) 421.

Anti-trust Law.

Foreign insurance companies are held subject to the provisions of the Kansas Act against combinations in restraint of trade where they combine to increase rates, and such business is 18 L. R. A.

held not to be interstate commerce. (Kan.) 657.

Sunday Newspapers.

Selling Sunday newspapers is held not to come within the exception of a Sunday law as to works of necessity or charity. (Pa.) 761.

Error Coram Nobis.

Relief from a plea of guilty and a sentence thereon is granted in a Kansas case in an action in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis where the plea was induced by threats of mob violence. (Kan.) 838.

The constitutional provision against cruel and unusual punishments is not violated by a statute authorizing imprisonment from two to ten years and a fine not exceeding $2,000 for conspiracy to do an unlawful act in the nighttime or to do such act while wearing white caps, masks, or other disguises. (Ind.) 774.

INDEX TO NOTES

(The General Index follows this.)

Accretions. See WATERS.

Adverse possession; rights acquired as against the public by adverse possession of highway or city street; presumption of abandonment; estoppel; rule in case of city streets; inclosure of part of the width of the way; neglect to open; restraint of summary proceedings to remove obstructions; rule as to lateral support; miscellaneous decisions; statutory provisions 148

Anti-trust law 657

Appeal. See CORAM NOBIS.

Assignment. See CARRIERS.

Attachment. See LABORERS; LEVY.

Attorneys; necessity of bad or fraudulent motive to justify disbarment 401

License tax on 400

Betting; legality of wagers; on elections; liability of stakeholder 860

Bills and notes; liability of a stranger who indorses commercial paper before delivery; distinction between negotiable and non-negotiable instruments; presumption as to date of signature; intention of the parties controls liability; intention may be shown by parol 88

Building and loan associations. See USURY.

By-laws. See CORPORATIONS.

Carriers. See also CIVIL RIGHTS.

Assignability of railroad ticket 55

Right of carrier at common law to discriminate between passengers or shippers 105

Duty to give equal facilities to express companies 393

Right of a common carrier to limit common-law liability by contract in the absence of negligence 527

Chattel mortgages. See MORTGAGE.

Checks. See GIFT.

Civil death; law as to, in United States 82

Civil rights; rights of colored passengers; statutory obligations 630

Colored persons. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

Commercial travelers. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Common service 817

Constitutional law. See also CIVIL RIGHTS.

As to legislative divorces, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Protection of private rights from interference by public 543

Validity of promissory note given as a forfeit or as collateral to an invalid oral agreement within the Statute of Frauds 143

Coram nobis; writ of error coram nobis; scope of; right to; limitations; procedure 630

18 L. R. A.

Corporations. See also LABORERS; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Power to deal in the stock of other corporations or in its own: (1) power to deal in the shares of other corporations; taking stock in payment of debts; (2) power to deal in its own stock; taking in satisfaction of debts; donations 230

Regulation of elections by by-laws; as to right to vote; as to proxies 563

Courts. See also TRUSTS.

Adoption by Federal courts of remedies created by state statutes; preservation of equity jurisdiction; enlargement of equitable remedies; limitation of or enlargement of equity powers; extending legal remedies; limiting equitable jurisdiction 206

Covenants; recitals in a deed as basis of implied covenants of title 343

Criminal law; irresistible impulse as an excuse for crime; effect of disease to create irresistible impulse; impulse obliterating sense of right and wrong; kleptomania 224

Damages; right to recover damages caused by an injunction; right to damages for obeying a void injunction 275

Measure of damages for breach of implied warranty 385

Dedication; public user as acceptance of dedicated highway 510

Definitions. See LABORERS.

Derelict. See WATERS.

Divorce. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Dower; power of husband or his creditors to defeat wife's right of dower; as to lands held in common by the husband; as to lands sold under mortgage; bankruptcy; sale on execution to satisfy mechanics' lien; sale under execution against husband; adverse possession of the husband's lands; as to lands sold for taxes 75

Effect of depreciation in value of land on a widow's right of dower therein 425

Drummers. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Easement; effect of nonuser; mere nonuser will not extinguish; nonuse must be accompanied by adverse use of servient estate; duration of adverse use; intention of the owner as indicated by acts; public easements 535

Ejectment; what title or interest will support; plaintiff must prove title; sufficiency of equitable title; title by patent; necessity of right of possession and interest in the land; sufficiency of possession as against mere intruder; what constitutes possession; title acquired by limitation; action by riparian owner; mining rights; fixtures; action by owner of dominant es-

- tate; land subject to the easement of a highway; interest of a mortgagee; action by tenant in common, executors, administrators, and guardians; to enforce right of dower; action by remaindermen; miscellaneous 781
- Eminent domain; rights of mortgagee of premises taken by; (a) as between mortgagor and mortgagee; (b) as between mortgagor and appropriator; how far mortgagee must be made a party and given notice; special circumstances under which no notice need be given; effect of failure to give notice 113
- The "taking of property" by 166
- Employees. See LABORERS.
- Equity. See COURTS.
- Error. See CORAM NOBIS.
- Evidence; presumption as to date of indorsement of note; parol evidence to show intention of indorser 38
- Executors and administrators; collateral impeachment of findings as to jurisdictional facts on which administration of a decedent's estate is based; inhabitation of county; existence of estates in county; administration of the estate of a living person; conflict of jurisdiction; lapse of time; miscellaneous 243
- Exemption. See LABORERS.
- Express companies. See CARRIERS.
- False imprisonment; lack of jurisdiction or of legal grounds of criminal prosecution as affecting the liability for false imprisonment of a complainant who acts in good faith 356
- Flying switches. See RAILROADS.
- Fright. See HIGHWAYS.
- Garnishment. See LEVY.
- Gift; sufficiency of constructive delivery to sustain gift causa mortis; gift of savings bank deposit; other instances 170
- Of checks; check or draft on person other than banker; gift of third person's check; inter vivos
- Highways. See also ADVERSE POSSESSION; DEDICATION.
- Effect upon right of recovery of the fact that a horse was frightened when an accident occurred on a defective highway; where fright is caused by defect in highway; duty of town to provide for safety of runaway horse; when liability exists; illustrations; fright occurring outside of highway 100
- Liability of a railroad company for obstructing a highway crossing 154
- Husband and wife; validity of legislative divorce; granting divorces a rightful subject of legislation; how far conflicting with judicial power; construction of particular constitutions 96
- Antenuptial pregnancy or unchastity as a ground of divorce or annulment of marriage: (1) pregnancy; (2) existence of a bastard child; (3) unchastity 373
- Injunction. See DAMAGES.
- Insanity. See CRIMINAL LAW.
- Insolvency. See LABORERS.
- Insurance; forfeiture by failure to furnish proofs of loss within a stipulated time 85
- Effect on assignee of policy of assignor's acts of forfeiture; prior acts; subsequent acts; assignment after loss 126
- How far an undivided interest in property is a complete or full ownership for the purposes of insurance; partnership interest 421
- Interest; on sum allowed as damages: (I.) for personal injuries; when death results; (II.) for injuries to property: (1) by railway fires; (2) by other fires; (3) injuries to stock by passing trains; (4) property injured, delayed, or lost in transportation; (5) vessel captured as a prize; (6) collision; (7) property destroyed by mob; (8) from negligent construction of railroads, canals, etc.; (9) from explosion, etc.; (10) against agents and officers; (11) on exemplary damages; (III.) rate of interest 429
- Judicial sale; effect of misrepresentation to purchasers by sheriff 36
- Jurisdiction. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
- Laborers; who are laborers, employes, or servants within the meaning of statutes giving preferences: (1) definitions; (2) who are secured by mechanics' lien laws; (3) preferences of claims against insolvent corporations; (4) under the statutes making stockholders individually liable; (5) whose earnings are exempted from attachment or garnishment; (6) seamen 305
- Lakes. See WATERS.
- Landlord and tenant; distinction between a lease and license; as to minerals 491
- Lease. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.
- Levy; exemption of debtor's wages after payment by employer 598
- License. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.
- Liens. See LABORERS.
- Limitation of actions; loss of cause of action by lapse of time pending suit 211
- Right of foreign corporation to plead statute 524
- Loan associations. See USURY.
- Master and servant. See also LABORERS.
- Liability of master for injuries caused by defects in machinery while used for a purpose not contemplated 124
- Liability for negligence of fellow servant; general principles; what constitutes common employment; servants not on duty; recent legislation 738
- Mortgage. See also EMINENT DOMAIN.
- Efficacy of mortgage on chattels to be manufactured or acquired as independent articles, and not as increase or fruits of existing property; the general rule; effect as between the parties; effect of further act to perfect title in the mortgagee; property contemplated as additions to other property; the exception established by equity; application of equitable exceptions; where equitable exception is not recognized; the attitude of courts of law towards the equitable doctrine; sufficiency of record notice; the effect of Holroyd v. Marshall, in England 286
- Effect upon the validity of a mortgage of merchandise, of a provision or agreement giving the mortgagor the possession with power of sale: (1) the general rules; (2)

- mortgage showing possession with power of sale; (3) effect of extraneous agreement; (4) sales by mortgagor as agent for mortgagee; (5) how far the instrument is void in toto; (6) effect of Recording Acts; (7) effect of statutes making fraud a question for the jury; (8) effect of mortgagee's taking possession; (9) analysis of the law in different jurisdictions 604
- Municipal corporations; municipal contracts for work or articles which embody a patented invention 45
- Validity of vote of common council or similar body as affected by personal interest of members 367
- Negligent superiors 823
- New trial; disqualification of juror as ground for; general statement of the law; waiver of objection by silence; ignorance of disqualification; neglect to make inquiries as affecting party's right; objections on the ground of juror's age; alienage; want of property qualifications; irregularities of selection; bias of jurors; relationship; preconceived opinions: juror having served on grand jury; concealment of interest by juror; preponderance of evidence to show bias; criminality of juror 473
- Parliamentary law; effect of personal interest on validity of vote 367
- Patents. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
- Ponds. See WATERS.
- 18 L. R. A.
- Principal and agent; extent of authority conferred upon traveling salesman; authority to collect payment; effect of agent's possession of goods; authority to accept payment in anything else than money; authority to pledge principal's credit for traveling expenses; authority to sell samples; other cases relating to the powers of drummers 668
- Private rights. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.
- Railroads; negligence of railroad company in respect to flying switches or detached cars moving by their own momentum; contributory negligence 63
- Liability for obstructing highway crossings 154
- Seamen; exemption of wages of 310
- Statute of Frauds. See CONTRACTS.
- Superior employes 827
- Trusts; power of court to dissolve 745
- Usury; in loans by building associations; contract held usurious; effect of voluntary payment; contract not usurious; constitutionality of statutes; necessity of strict conformity with statute 129
- Wagers. See BETTING.
- Wages. See LEVY.
- Waters; ownership of bed of lakes and ponds; small lakes and ponds; derelict and accretions; artificial ponds 695
- Writ. See CORAM NOBIS.

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ACCRETIONS. See WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; JUDGMENT, 7.

1. The maxim de minimis non curat lex does not apply to the positive and wrongful invasion of another's property. The right to maintain an action for the value of property of which the owner is wrongfully deprived is never denied. Wartman v. Swindell (N. J. Err. & App.) 44

2. The living owners of an estate in whom is vested the whole estate subject only to the contingency that other persons may be born who will have an interest therein represent the whole estate for all purposes of any litigation in reference thereto and affecting the jurisdiction of the courts to deal with the same, and stand, not only for themselves, but also for the persons unborn. Kent v. St. Michael's Church (N. Y.) 331

3. The exercise of an option by the vendor in a conditional sale, to enforce payment of a note given for the purchase price, defeats his right under the contract to retake the property upon default, although he is unable fully to collect the note because of the purchaser's insolvency. Crompton v. Beach (Conn.) 187

4. A contract between a city and a railroad company, by which the former consents to the closing of certain streets upon the consideration that the latter shall pay certain damages to thirty-five different property-holders, if enforceable at all, can be enforced only by such property-holders. New Haven v. New Haven & D. R. Co. (Conn.) 256

5. The issue of a woman has not a vested interest in real estate devised in trust during her life to apply the income to her use, and upon her death to convey to her issue if she leaves any surviving, in such shares as she shall appoint, otherwise to them in equal shares per stirpes, and if she leaves none then to other persons, which will make such issue necessary parties to a suit against the trustees, as the latter take the title in fee. Green v. Grant (Ill.) 381

6. Creditors whose attachments have been dissolved by an assignment for benefit of creditors may intervene under Wash. Code 1881, § 1997, in proceedings for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage on the debtor's property, to contest the right to foreclose such mortgage 18 L. R. A.

as against their rights. Ephraim v. Kelleher (Wash.) 604

ADMIRALTY.

The admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States courts extends to controversies arising out of contracts for the shipment of merchandise upon the high seas between ports of the same state. Cowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co. (Cal.) 221

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Actual, visible, exclusive, and uninterrupted possession of a portion of a street in a city under a claim of right for the statutory period, vests an absolute title in the occupant. Meyer v. Graham (Neb.) 146

2. Possession or intrusion upon land by mistake in consequence of confusion or uncertainty as to the true boundary, without any intention to claim title beyond one's lawful boundary, is not adverse. King v. Brigham (Or.) 361

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Adverse possession; rights acquired as against the public by adverse possession of highway or city street; presumption of abandonment; estoppel; rule in case of city streets; enclosure of part of the width of the way; neglect to open; restraint of summary proceedings to remove obstructions; rule as to lateral support; miscellaneous decisions; statutory provisions. 146

AFTERBORN CHILDREN. See also JUDGMENT, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Afterborn persons; power to cut off contingent interests of, in property. 331

ALLEY. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 2.

ANTI-TRUST LAW. See also COMMERCE, 5; CONSPIRACY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Anti-trust law; validity and effect of. 657

APPEAL AND ERROR. See also CORAM NOBIS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A writ of error is the proper remedy to review the overruling of a motion to quash an attachment after the entry of judgment in 877 favor of the attachment creditor. Pierce v. Johnson (Mich.) 486

2. The constitutional right of appeal under Ala. Const. art. 14, § 7, from any preliminary assessment of damages, by viewers or otherwise, in condemnation proceedings, is violated by Ala. Code 1886, § 1582, which merely provides for the appointment by a probate judge of three arbitrators and the recording of their award, without any provision for appeal, as the general statutes provide for an appeal only from a final judgment, order, or decree of the judges of probate. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Birmingham, S. & T. R. R. Co. (Ala.) 166

8. An unnecessary recital by the clerk of a charge to the grand jury does not make it a part of the record. Hobbs v. State (Ind.) 774

4. It will be presumed on appeal that the jury followed an erroneous instruction allowing interest for a greater period than demanded in the petition, although the verdict is much less than the damages demanded. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 524

5. The decision of the trial court as to impaneling a jury to inquire into the sanity of a prisoner will not be reversed, if at all, unless it manifestly appears that the decision was wrong or that the court abused its discretion. State v. Harrison (W. Va.) 224

6. The denial of a continuance is not a cause for reversal unless it was plainly erroneous and an abuse of discretion. Id.

7. The appellate court is not limited, upon appeal from an order granting a new trial, to an exclusive consideration of the grounds upon which the new trial was allowed, although all other grounds relied on were distinctly overruled; but all the grounds embraced in the motion, excepting an allegation of insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict, will be examined and the order sustained if justified by any of them, irrespective of the ones mentioned by the trial court. Kauffman v. Maier (Cal.) 124

8. The refusal of the court to allow a witness on his re-examination to answer a question whether or not he had recovered a judgment against the defendant, where on cross-examination he had been asked if he had not a controversy with the defendant, sufficiently protects the defendant's rights as against an objection to the question. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 63

9. The refusal to open the case after the trial had closed, on the ground of the discovery of important testimony, is not error where the witnesses had been previously summoned, except one who was an employé of the party moving to open the case. Id.

10. Only where the evidence, by whomsoever introduced, with all fair and legitimate inferences thereupon, is so insufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff that the court must set it aside if rendered, will the court be justified in directing a verdict for the defendant. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

11. The refusal to send the jury to view premises at a particular time during the trial and before the close of the testimony cannot be complained of, where the place had been fully described and they were sent to make the view at the close of the testimony. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 63

12. The attorney general is only an amicus curiæ when invited by the court to appear in an action involving an important constitutional question, which is brought in the name of the state on the relation of a person who seeks thereby to enforce a private right; and he is not a party or intervener who is entitled as such to file a petition for a rehearing. Parker v. State, Powell (Ind.) 567

13. A rehearing cannot be considered if no brief is filed in its support. Id.

14. One to whom the decision is not adverse cannot petition for a rehearing. Id.

15. The right to file a petition to rehear a case in the supreme court, given by N. C. Code, § 986, does not extend to the right to require the court to consider the rehearing contrary to its rules. Herndon v. Imperial F. Ins. Co. (N. C.) 547

APPORTIONMENT. See ELECTION DISTRICTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

APPROPRIATIONS.

1. A legislative appropriation for the benefit of sufferers from a flood is in violation of Cal. Const. art. 4, § 81, prohibiting the gift of any public money or thing of value to any individual. Patly v. Colgan (Cal.) 744

2. A statute providing for the payment of bounties by a county treasurer for the destruction of certain wild animals or poisonous weeds and for planting trees, the amount to be credited in his settlement with the state treasurer, violates a constitutional provision that "no money shall be paid out of the treasury except upon appropriations made by law and on warrant drawn by the proper officer." The fact that the money has not actually reached the treasury does not prevent the application of this provision to money belonging to the state. Institute for Edu. of Mute & B. v. Henderson (Colo.) 398

3. An appropriation to exhibit the resources and progress of the state at the World's Columbian Exposition is for a public or governmental purpose. Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers of World's Col. Expo. (Ky.) 556

4. The state auditor has not only the right, but the duty, to question the validity of a legislative appropriation on the ground that it is unconstitutional, when he is called upon for a warrant upon the treasurer under such appropriation. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appropriations; validity of. 744

ASSESSMENT. See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

ASSIGNMENT. See also CARRIERS, 5 NOTES AND BRIEFS.

The right of a purchaser at a wrongful, unlawful, or erroneous tax sale, to have his money refunded under the provisions of Dak. Comp. Laws, § 1629, is assignable so as to sustain an action by the assignee in case of refusal to refund the money. Erickson v. Brookings County (S. D.) 847

ASSOCIATIONS.

A court of chancery will not undertake to force a member upon a corporation which is not engaged in commercial business, but merely furnishes to its members facilities for carrying on business, against the will of those whose duty it is to pass upon applications for membership. American Livestock Commission Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch. (Ill.) 190

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Associations; right to transfer of membership. 190

ASSUMPSIT.

1. Payment of an overcharge of freight to a railroad company engaged as a common carrier of goods is not voluntary so as to prevent recovering it. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson (Ind.) 105

2. Payment of the amount due on an instrument by one who indorsed it, which is made and accepted in the mistaken belief of both parties that such indorser was legally liable, where the matter was equally open for the inquiry and judgment of both parties, cannot be recovered back whether the mistake is to be considered one of fact or of law. Alton v. Webster First Nat. Bank (Mass.) 144

3. A payment of salary in excess of the lawful amount, by order of a municipal council, to one of its members, is not within the rule which precludes recovery of money voluntarily paid. Tacoma v. Lillis (Wash.) 372

4. Payments for services outside the scope of his official duties, rendered by a city councilman, and which could have been appropriately performed by a private individual, under a contract which is contrary to public policy, cannot be recovered back by the city, in the absence of corruption or fraud. Id.

5. A city cannot recover back money paid to a councilman for his services in pursuance of a vote or resolution, on the sole ground that it had failed to pass an ordinance authorizing the payment, if it had legal authority to compensate him. Id.

ATTACHMENT. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 1; LABORERS; LEVY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. No debt is created on the part of a bank by the sale of its draft on another bank for cash, which can be levied on under attachment against the purchaser, so long as the draft remains outstanding without default thereon. Capital City Bank v. Parent (N. Y.) 240

2. The right of attachment debtors to move to quash the attachment is not waived by the fact that a bond was given to the sheriff for the retention of the chattels attached, by a stranger to the suit in whose possession they were. Pierce v. Johnson (Mich.) 486

3. Attachment of the debtor's property to secure a debt not due is not authorized by Mich. Pub. Acts 1889, No. 149, where the facts alleged in the affidavit as a basis for the attachment are consistent with an honest purpose on the part of other creditors to secure their just claims. Id.

3. A judge should personally hear the evidence in a proceeding for the disbarment of an attorney, and should not delegate the taking of the evidence to a commissioner or anyone else. Id.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 12.

ATTORNEYS.

1. A bad or fraudulent motive must be shown to justify the disbarment of an attorney, although the acts charged against him are proved to have been committed. State, Fowler, v. Finley (Fla.) 401

2. The interlineation into a decree, after it has received the judicial signature, of immaterial words patently omitted therefrom through clerical oversight, is not ground for disbarring an attorney, where he acted without any bad or fraudulent motive. Id.

3. A judge should personally hear the evidence in a proceeding for the disbarment of an attorney, and should not delegate the taking of the evidence to a commissioner or anyone else. Id.

4. Charges preferred against an attorney for the purpose of disbarring him should be clear, specific, and circumstantial, and should be stated with great particularity. Id.

5. Each member of a firm of practicing lawyers must pay a license tax and fee prescribed for lawyers practicing their profession, by Fla. Act June 10, 1891 (Fla. Rev. Stat. p. 929, et seq.), and must take out the required license, before he can lawfully practice his profession. Blanchard v. State, Cathoun (Fla.) 409

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys; necessity of bad or fraudulent motive to justify disbarment. 401

License tax on. 409

ATTORNEYS' FEES. See BILLS AND NOTES, 1-8; USURY, 1.

BALLOTS. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

BANKS. See ATTACHMENT, 1; ESTOPPEL, 3.

BATHING RESORT.

One maintaining a bathing resort on the shore of a natural body of water, to which he invites the public, must use reasonable care to keep the bottom under the section of water which the bathers use free from everything which might injure their feet, failure to do which, resulting in injury, is actionable negligence. Boyce v. Union P. R. Co. (Utah) 509

BETTING.

1. Money deposited with a stakeholder as a wager on a foot race, by one who knows that the race is to be bogus and has been fixed in advance, may be recovered by him on demand before the race has been run. Bernard v. Taylor (Or.) 859

2. Wagers, being inconsistent with the es-established interests of society and in conflict with the morals of the age, are void as against public policy. Bernard v. Taylor (Or.) 859

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Betting; legality of wagers; on elections; liability of stakeholder. 859

BILLS AND NOTES. See also ATTACHMENT, 1; COURTS, 8.

1. The indorsement of a negotiable note passes with it to the assignee the right to enforce a stipulation in the note for an attorneys' fee, to be recovered either as part of the note or by separate action. Dorsey v. Wolf (Ill.) 428

2. A separate suit for an attorneys' fee may be authorized by express stipulation in a promissory note. Id.

3. The negotiability of a note is not destroyed by a stipulation for 10 per cent attorneys' fee to be recovered as part of the note or in a separate suit, if the note is not paid when due and suit is brought thereon. Id.

4. Dishonor of the first to mature of several notes given upon the same consideration, but not showing that fact upon their face, is no notice to a subsequent indorsee for value before maturity of the other notes, of the equities existing between the original parties. Bank of Edgfeld v. Farmers Co-Op. Mfg. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 201

5. A bona fide holder of a note the consideration for which has failed in part as between the original parties is not limited, by the fact that it was taken as collateral security, to recovery only of the amount for which it was valid as between the original parties, unless he had notice of the equities between them, but may recover at least the amount for which it was pledged. Id.

6. A note given as a forfeit in case of the nonperformance of a parol contract for the sale of land void under the Statute of Frauds is itself void. Kraak v. Fries (D. C.) 142

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; liability of a stranger who indorses commercial paper before delivery; distinction between negotiable and non-negotiable instruments; presumption as to date of signature; intention of the parties controls liability; intention may be shown by parol. 88

BLACKBOARDS. See RAILROADS, 1-8.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER. See BILLS AND NOTES, 4, 5.

BOUNDARIES. See also ADVERSE POSSESSION, 2; EQUITY, 4; JUDGMENT, 5.

1. The common-law rule governing the construction and extent of grants of land bordering and bounded on non-navigable waters is applicable alike to conveyances bounding lands on fresh-water rivers and small non-navigable lakes or ponds. Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. (N. Y.) 695

2. Describing one boundary of a conveyance of land as along a certain pond will carry title 18 L. R. A.

to the center of the pond, unless a contrary intention appears. Id.

3. The designation of the courses and distances of the shore line, in a deed describing one boundary of the land conveyed as "along" a certain pond, will not prevent the passing by the grant of title to the center of the pond. Id.

4. If a meandered lake is non-navigable in fact, the patentee of riparian land takes the fee to the center of the lake. Lamprey v. State (Minn.) 670

BOUNTY. See APPROPRIATIONS, 2.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. See also USURY, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

A borrowing member of a building and loan association has no right to receive interest on his stock payments, or to have such payments applied in reduction of his indebtedness, unless such right is expressly reserved. Reeve v. Ladies Bldg. Assn. (Ark.) 129

BUILDINGS.

1. No judicial proceeding is necessary to give a city the right to tear down a wooden building erected in violation of an ordinance fixing fire limits. Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph (Mo.) 590

2. An ordinance prohibiting wooden buildings within fire limits, which is enacted under a charter which allows such regulations to be made only by ordinance, cannot be suspended by a simple resolution of the city council, which is not presented to the mayor and which does not constitute an ordinance; and a permit given in accordance with such resolution is void. Id.

BY-LAWS. See CORPORATIONS, 6, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CARRIERS. See also ASSUMPSIT, 1.

1. A railroad train may be started without waiting for a passenger to reach a seat after he has entered the vehicle, unless there is some special reason to the contrary, as in the case of a weak or lame person. Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (Mo.) 599

2. Time need not be given for a person who has entered a railroad train merely to assist passengers in getting on, to leave the train, where no notice is given of his intent to get off. Id.

3. A railway company which voluntarily accepts as a passenger, without an attendant, a person whose inability to care for himself is apparent or made known at the time to its servants, is negligent if it fails to render such passenger the necessary care and assistance. Oroom v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 602

4. Alighting from the train and assisting passengers to enter it is no part of the duty of the employes on a passenger train, where access to the cars is easy, a neglect of which, resulting in injury, can be the basis of an action

Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co.
(Mo.) 599

5. Each portion of a "coupon ticket" issued by a railroad company for itself and also as agent for other lines to be passed over is a separate contract so far as to be transferable, although the ticket is sold at a reduced rate, where there are no words of limitation or restriction thereon as to the person entitled to use it. Nichols v. Southern P. Co. (Or.) 55

6. A street-railway company is not liable for injury to a passenger caused by iron falling from a canal bridge belonging to the state and over which the railroad company has no control, but which it is necessary to cross on its route, if the company has not been guilty of negligence in failing to discover the defect. Birmingham v. Rochester City & B. R. Co. (N. Y.) 764

7. An electric street-railway company is liable for injuries to a passenger from an electric shock received while passing from one car to another by grasping a hand rail charged with electricity because of imperfect insulation, where it has ready means of ascertaining the escape of electricity from the works of the car, and the passenger is free from contributory negligence. Burt v. Douglas County Street R. Co. (Wis.) 479

8. It is not, as matter of law, negligence contributing to injury from an electric shock caused by imperfect insulation, for a passenger to swing around from the step of an electric street-car to that of the trailer, when the railway company has no rule prohibiting and allows it without objection. Id.

9. A passenger who fails to ask or obtain any written transfer or other evidence of his right to ride in a car which he enters after leaving one in which he has paid fare may be lawfully ejected if he refuses to pay fare therein; and the conductor is not obliged to take the passenger's statement as evidence of his right to ride. Mahoney v. Detroit Street R. Co. (Mich.) 835

10. A carrier cannot by special contract limit its common-law liability for losses not occasioned by negligence, where it does not afford the shipper an opportunity to contract for the service required without such restriction, even if he makes the special contract without objection or demand for a different one. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Cravens (Ark.) 527

Demurrage.

11. A regulation of a carrier as to demurrage upon cars, known to its customer before its shipments are made, is binding upon him, whether mentioned in the bills of lading or not, and whether the shipments are made to the order of the consignor with instructions to notify the customer, or directly to the customer himself. Miller v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. (Ga.) 323

12. Under a regulation of a carrier providing for demurrage upon cars to be placed and remain accessible to the consignee for the purpose of unloading, the cars are to be considered accessible, where the carrier is always ready to place them in a position for unloading within, at the longest, a few hours after being notified that the consignee is ready to unload. Id.

18 L. R. A.

13. A carrier whose customers are allowed the option of unloading for themselves may make and enforce a reasonable regulation as to the time in which the vehicles may be unloaded free of demurrage, and may fix a reasonable rate per day at which demurrage will be charged for such vehicles so long as they remain unloaded after the expiration of such time. Id.

14. A carrier which has adopted a reasonable regulation regarding demurrage upon its cars is not prevented from enforcing it by the fact that it was promulgated by a board or combination of carriers. Id.

15. A charge of $1 per day demurrage upon railroad cars which the consignee of freight fails to unload within a reasonable time allowed for that purpose is not as matter of law unreasonable, although cars vary in capacity and the customary rate of storage in warehouses and elevators is much lower. Id.

Discrimination.

16. A railroad company is not under obligation to furnish an express company with facilities for doing an express business upon its road, such as it provides for itself or some other express company, unless it holds itself out as a common carrier of express companies. Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 898

17. A statute making it unlawful for any common carrier to give undue or unreasonable preference to any person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, does not require equal facilities to be given to express companies for carrying on business over a railroad, unless it holds itself out as a common carrier of such companies. Id.

18. Mere discrimination in freight rates by a common carrier against a shipper was not a wrong for which the common law gave a remedy, so as to come within the clause in the United States statute (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 711) conferring jurisdiction over maritime cases upon United States courts to the exclusion of state courts, which saves to suitors in all cases "the right of a common law remedy where the common law is competent to give it." Cowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co. (Cal.) 221
But see next case.

19. A railroad company cannot discriminate in favor of a shipper who is able to furnish a large amount of freight, over one engaged in the same business who is unable to furnish the same quantity, — at least where both ship in carload lots. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson (Ind.) 105

20. A carrier cannot rightfully establish rates in order to keep on its own line material for which it has use, or to keep the price low for its own advantage. Id.

21. A contract with a shipper, of such character as to destroy the business of his rivals by giving him a monopoly, is unjust without regard to the consideration upon which it is based. Id.

22. Under the Louisiana statute authorizing a railroad conductor to assign white and colored passengers to separate coaches, a conductor is not authorized to assign a passenger to a coach to which his race does not belong;

nor is the passenger bound to accept such wrongful assignment, or the carrier exempt from liability for refusal to carry him when he disobeys such assignment. Ex parte Plessy (La.) 689

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CIVIL RIGHTS.

Carriers; assignability of a railroad ticket. 55
 Delay of consignee in unloading. 825
 Right of carrier at common law to discriminate between passengers or shippers. 105
 Right to discriminate in rates. 221
 Duty to give equal facilities to express companies. 898
 Liability for injury to passenger. 479, 764
 Right of a common carrier to limit common-law liability by contract in the absence of negligence. 527

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. See MORTGAGE, 2, 8, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CHECKS. See also GIFT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A drummer or commercial traveler has no implied authority to indorse checks in the name of his principal because he has power to collect accounts and receive money and checks payable to his principal. Jackson v. McMinnville Nat. Bank (Tenn.) 668

2. A check drawn upon a bank for the full amount of a deposit, with intent to make a gift of the money, may constitute a valid gift although the donor dies before the check is paid. Re Taylor's Estate (Pa.) 855

CITIZENS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

CIVIL DEATH.

Sentencing a person to imprisonment for life does not cast the descent to his estate, under statutes fixing the time at which descent shall be cast at a person's death. Davis v. Laning (Tex.) 82

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Civil death; law as to, in United States. 83

CIVIL RIGHTS. See also CARRIERS, 22; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2.

No badge of slavery or involuntary servitude contrary to the 18th Amendment of the United States Constitution is imposed by requiring equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races in railroad cars by providing separate coaches or compartments. Ex parte Plessy (La.) 689

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Civil rights; rights of colored passengers; statutory obligations. 639

CLERK. See INSURANCE, 10.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

1. A judgment creditor may maintain a suit in equity to have the lien of his judgment declared paramount to the title of the purchaser at a sale by the administrator of the judgment debtor, where such sale was made without mention of the judgment, since a motion would not remove the obstruction to the enforcement of the judgment, and a sale upon execution would leave such purchaser's claim undetermined. McAfee v. Reynolds (Ind.) 211

2. The power of a court of equity to compel a vendor to execute another deed where one has been lost, so as to clothe the purchaser with the record title, has its sanction in the general jurisdiction of a court of equity. Kent v. St. Michael's Church (N. Y.) 331

COAL. See MINES.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX. See TAXES, 12-17.

COLORIED PERSONS. See CIVIL RIGHTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. See APPROPRIATIONS, 8.

COMMERCE. See also TAXES, 2.

1. A contract by which a resident of a state agrees with a foreign corporation to canvass certain territory for the sale of its sewing-machines, which the corporation thereby agrees to sell to him on credit, and a bond given to secure payment to the corporation of any sum that may become due under such contract, constitute a part of the interstate commerce carried on by the sale of such sewing-machines in accordance with said contract, and therefore cannot be affected by a state statute prohibiting business within the state by a foreign corporation which has not complied with certain requirements, such as filing a certificate to designate an agent on whom process may be served. Gunn v. White Sewing-Mach. Co. (Ark.) 206

2. Making a railroad company liable for fires set by its engines or on its right of way is not a regulation of commerce among the states. McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (S. C.) 440

3. A state statute requiring railroad companies to report, at each station at which there is a telegraph office, whether trains are on time or not, is not a regulation of interstate commerce, although the information to be noted must be received from an agent in another state, through the agency of a telegraph company engaged in interstate commerce. Stat. v. Indiana & I. & R. Co. (Ind.) 502

4. A state statute prohibiting the sale of seed unless the year in which it is grown is plainly marked on each package, except on a sale of seed in open bulk by farmers to other farmers or gardeners, is void as to seed brought from another state and sold in original packages. Re Sanders (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 549

5. The business of insurance as ordinarily conducted by insurance companies organized under the legislation of other states is not interstate commerce so as to be exempt from state legislation as to combination by insurance companies to control rates. State v. Phipps (Kan.) 657

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; is interstate when. 549

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COMMON SERVICE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS. 817

CONDITIONAL SALE. See SALE, 1, 2.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. The law of a state in which a railroad brakeman is injured by negligence of a coemployee determines his right to recover, although such law is contrary to that of another state in which the negligence occurred and which is also the domicile of the parties and the place of the contract of employment. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll (Ala.) 438

2. A gift in trust to a charity in a foreign country in which the trustees are competent to take and hold and the trust is capable of being executed and enforced is not invalid because such a trust would contravene the law of the testator's domicile in respect to the creation of trusts and perpetuities. Hops v. Brewer (N. Y.) 458

3. The laws of the state in which the lands lie determine the question whether the bed of waters belongs to the state or to the owners of riparian lands, where these have been granted by the United States without reservation or restriction. Lamprey v. State (Minn.) 670

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; as to action for injuries sustained in another state. 438

As to gifts in trust. 458

CONSPIRACY. See also INDIOTMENT.

A combination by foreign insurance companies to increase the rates of insurance is in violation of Kan. Laws 1889, chap. 257, as an unlawful trust and combination "in restraint of trade and products;" and such companies and their local agents, who attempt to and do enforce such combined rates, are subject to prosecution under that statute. State v. Phipps (Kan.) 657

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also CIVIL RIGHTS; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 6;
TAXES, 8, 4.

1. The rule of practical construction is of no value in construing a constitution, when it is plain that the practice has been in open violation of that instrument. Parker v. State, Powell (Ind.) 567

2. A statute requiring equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races by providing separate coaches or compartments does not deny or abridge the equal privileges or immunities of citizens. Ex parte Plessey (La.) 689

3. Investing a railroad commission with authority to make just and reasonable rules and regulations to prevent excessive charges and unjust discriminations and preferences by carriers, the reasonableness and legality of which is reviewable by the courts, is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power. Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 893
18 L. R. A.

4. Giving a prosecuting attorney an interest in a penalty does not prevent due process of law. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 503

5. Due process of law in the assessment of railroad property is not denied to railway companies by a law making the assessment of a state board of tax commissioners final, where it allows after assessment a correction in assessments and valuation, on the showing of a railroad company or on motion of the board itself. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

6. The property of a railroad company is not taken without due process of law by a statute making the company liable for fires set by its locomotives or originating on its right of way by an act of its agents or servants, but giving the company an insurable interest in the property exposed to such dangers. McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (S. C.) 440

7. The privileges or immunities of citizens are not abridged by a statute making railroad corporations liable for fires on its right of way or set by its engines. Id.

8. The police power of a state has no application in respect to the liability of a railroad company for fires communicated by its engines or originating on its right of way, as this power applies only to matters pertaining to the public health, the public morals, and the public safety. Id.

9. No restraints, disqualifications, or burdens are placed upon, or discriminations made against, railroad corporations, within the prohibition of S. C. Const. art. 1, § 12, by a statute applicable only to the operators of railroads, making them liable for all fires set out by their engines or on their rights of way, if it applies equally and uniformly to them. Id.

10. The equal protection of the law is not denied to railroad corporations by statutes making them liable for fires set by their engines or upon their right of way by the act of their agents or servants, and giving them an insurable interest in the property exposed to such loss. Id.

11. A railroad company is not denied the equal protection of the laws in the assessment of its property because original jurisdiction of the assessment and valuation is given to a state board of tax commissioners which has power to hear grievances and make corrections, instead of being given in the first instance to a county board, as in the case of other property, with the right of appeal to the state board. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

12. A law which applies alike to all persons under like circumstances and conditions does not deny to any the equal protection of the laws. Id.

13. Railway companies are persons within the provisions of U. S. Const. 14th amend.

§ 1, relating to due process of law and the equal protection of the laws. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

14. A statute requiring a report on a black-board as to whether trains are on time, at every station where there is a telegraph office is not unconstitutional as class legislation, where it applies uniformly to all persons operating railroads and to the same class of stations. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 502

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CIVIL RIGHTS.

As to legislative divorces, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Constitutional law; validity of statute making railroads liable for fires. 440

Validity of statute imposing penalty on railroad company. 502

Protection of private rights from interference by public. 543

Equal protection of railroads. 729

CONTINUANCE. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 6.

An affidavit for a continuance to procure a nonresident witness should state not only a bona fide belief that he can be procured, but also the grounds of such belief. State v. Harrison (W. Va.) 224

CONTRACTS. See also BETTING; CORPORATIONS, 11; EVIDENCE, 8; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 10, 11.

1. The absolute right to discharge an employé whenever the employer in good faith becomes dissatisfied with him is reserved by a stipulation in a contract of employment for a specified time to carry on the employer's business to his "satisfaction." Prary v. American Rubber Co. (Minn.) 644

2. The surrender and cancellation of a contract for the purchase of land will not prevent the purchaser from recovering the damages sustained by the breach of a contract with him for the construction of a motor railway, the purpose of which is to enhance the value of such land. Blagen v. Thompson (Or.) 815

3. An executory contract by a corporation to sell franchises, with a stipulation to secure and transfer additional rights of way, cannot be construed as part of the same contract with an executed sale of stock of the corporation, made by persons in their individual capacity. Id.

4. A contract by a stockholder who was president of a corporation, to pay one half of all liability which might be fixed upon it as the result of certain suits, which is made as part of the transfer of all its shares to another corporation which buys them for the purpose of controlling it, is unlawful and cannot be enforced, although the purchasing corporation has fully executed the contract on its part. Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harvey (Tenn.) 252

5. The illegality of the by-laws or contract of a stock exchange as being in restraint of trade cannot be invoked by a stranger as a 18 L. R. A.

ground of compelling the members of such exchange to disobey such rules, as the law does not prohibit contracts in restraint of trade, but merely declines after they are made to recognize their validity. American Livestock Commission Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch. (Ill.) 190

6. An agreement by a city not to oppose a railroad company's closing certain of its streets crossed by the latter at grade, in consideration of the making of compensation solely to private individuals, is void as against public policy. New Haven v. New Haven & D. R. Co. (Conn.) 256

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contract; when implied for services of child. 37

Validity of promissory note given as a forfeit or as collateral to an invalid oral agreement within the Statute of Frauds. 142

CONVERSION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conversion; by pledgee. 120

CORAM NOBIS.

1. Relief from a plea of guilty and a sentence thereon may be granted by an action or proceeding in the same court in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis, where the plea was made under well-grounded fear of mob violence. State v. Calhoun (Kan.) 833

2. The question of guilt or innocence of the accused is not a necessary question to be determined in an action in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis for relief from a plea of guilty induced by fear of mob violence, as the burden of proof cannot be shifted to the accused by reason of the fact that he was compelled through fear to plead guilty. Id.

3. No statute of limitations will operate against the remedy of a party while under the legal disability of imprisonment, to have his sentence reviewed by an action in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Writ of error coram nobis; scope of; right to; limitations; procedure. 833

CORPORATIONS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; TAXES, 1.

1. The requirement that articles of incorporation shall state "the name and location of such corporation" does not authorize the articles to fix the place of the "principal office." Milwaukee Steamship Co. v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 353

2. A corporation may be formed for the purpose of buying, owning, improving, selling, and leasing lands, tenements, hereditaments, real, personal, and mixed estates, and property, including the constructing and leasing of a building, under an Act authorizing corporations for trade or for carrying on any lawful mechanical, manufacturing, or agricultural business. Finnegan v. Knights of Labor Bldg. Assn. (Minn.) 778

3. A de facto corporation exists where there is a law authorizing the creation of corporations, an attempt to organize a corporation pursuant to it, and user as a corporation under such attempted organization. Id.

4. A substantial compliance with the law is not necessary to constitute a body which attempts to comply with it a de facto corporation. Id.

5. Taking subscriptions to and issuing stock, electing managers and directors, adopting by-laws, buying a lot, and constructing and leasing a building upon it, constitutes a sufficient user to constitute a de facto corporation which will prevent liability of the members as partners under a statute authorizing corporations for such business. Id.

6. A joint-stock corporation has power by by-law to declare that no person who is attorney against it in a suit shall be eligible as a director. Cross v. West Virginia O. & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 582

7. Power to prescribe reasonable qualifications of its directors by by-law is included in power to make such by-laws, rules, and regulations for the management and government of the affairs of the corporation, its officers, directors, and agents, as may be deemed necessary or proper. Id.

8. A purchase of shares of a domestic corporation by a foreign corporation engaged in a similar business, for the express purpose of controlling and managing the domestic corporation, is ultra vires and therefore unlawful and void. Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harcey (Tenn.) 252

9. A state legislature has power to prescribe the conditions upon which insurance companies of other states can do business within the state. State v. Phipps (Kan.) 657

10. A state statute granting powers and privileges to corporations must, in the absence of plain indications to the contrary, be held to apply only to corporations created by the state and over which it has the power of visitation and control. Re Prime's Estate (N. Y.) 713

11. A contract made by a railroad charter is not impaired by a statute making the company liable for fires caused by its engines or the act of its servants on its right of way, where, although the original charter, was not subject to amendment or repeal, the company accepted an amendment the effect of which, under general laws then in force, was to make the charter subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal. McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (S. C.) 440

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also LABORERS; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Corporations; acts ultra vires. 256

Power to deal in the stock of other corporations or in its own: (1) power to deal in the shares of other corporations; taking stock in payment of debts; (2) power to deal in its own stock; taking in satisfaction of debts; donations. 252

Regulation of elections by by-laws; as to right to vote; as to proxies. 582

De facto; personal liability of stockholders. 778

COSTS.

1. An extra allowance of costs is not precluded by the fact that on a former trial of the same case an extra allowance had been granted and the costs paid as a condition of a new trial. Bolton v. Schriever (N. Y.) 242

2. Costs of a contest on the accounting of a husband's executors, to determine whether or not a husband and wife were tenants by the entirety in a bond and mortgage for moneys of which each contributed part, should be paid out of the estate where the question is new and the executors have acted in good faith. Re Albrecht (N. Y.) 329

COTENANCY. See IMPROVEMENTS, 3; INSURANCE, 1.

COUNTIES.

1. A contract for the employment of a keeper of a county poor-house for three years is not within the power of a board of supervisors, each of whom is elected for one year only, although the statute gives them power to appoint such keeper without any express limitation as to the time. Millikin v. Edgar County (Ill.) 447

2. A special tax by county commissioners to supply a deficiency in the amount necessary to keep the public schools open for at least four months in the year, as required by N. C. Const. art. 9, § 8, is not a tax "for a special purpose" under art. 5, § 6, which limits the amount of county taxes to double the state tax, "except for a special purpose and with the approval of the General Assembly." Bladen County Bd. of Edu. v. Bladen County (N. C.) 850

COURTS. See also MARKETS.

1. The Legislature cannot give the right to a rehearing in the supreme court contrary to its rules, where the Constitution creates the court and provides that the legislative, executive, and supreme judicial powers of the government shall be separate and distinct, and also that the General Assembly may regulate methods of proceeding in "courts below the supreme court." Herndon v. Imperial F. Ins. Co. (N. C.) 547

2. No court possesses the power to compel a trustee to consent to a destruction of a real-estate trust which the statutes prohibit him from doing any act to contravene. Cuthbert v. Chauvet (N. Y.) 745

3. The courts cannot interfere to arrest the action of the governor in suspending an officer, so long as he acts within the power given him by the Florida Constitution, and cannot review his decision as to the proof of the charge against an officer, that power of review being given to the Senate. State, Attorney-General, v. Johnson (Fla.) 410

4. Courts have no power to give any relief against erroneous assessments of boards whose assessments for taxation are made final by statute. Cleveland, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

5. Courts will presume the Legislature intended a statute to be reasonable, constitutional, and just. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

6. The constitutionality of a statute will not be considered in a case which can be decided upon its merits without such consideration. Parker v. State, Powell (Ind.) 567

7. The constitutionality of a legislative apportionment Act is a judicial question, and not one which the court cannot consider on the ground that it is a political question. Id.

8. The general commercial law as to notice to an indorsee of a note, of the equities between the original parties, prevails in the Federal courts, rather than any particular rule established in a state by its courts or statutes. Bank of Edgefield v. Farmers Co-Op. Mfg. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 201

9. In a suit by an occupying claimant to restrain the execution of a writ of possession, a Federal court may in its discretion refer the case to a master or appoint commissioners, instead of directing the marshal to summon appraisers in accordance with the state practice, although it is desirable to follow state practice as near as may be. Leighton v. Young (C. C. App. 8th C.) 286

10. That the mode of procedure in a Federal court adopted by an occupying claimant to enforce compensation for improvements placed by him on land which has been adjudged to the true owner does not conform strictly to the requirements of the state Occupying Claimants' Law will not defeat the action, if in the state statute legal and equitable rights and modes of proceeding are confounded, since the Federal courts will enforce the right but will preserve the distinction between law and equity. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also TRUSTS.

Courts; adoption by Federal courts of remedies created by state statutes; preservation of equity jurisdiction; enlargement of equitable remedies; limitation of or enlargement of equity powers; extending legal remedies; limiting equitable jurisdiction. 266

COVENANT.

No implied covenant arises out of a recital of facts, or out of the use of words of conveyance, in a quitclaim deed, in the absence of fraud or intentional misrepresentation, where the terms of the deed taken together show that the instrument is in its essence a quitclaim with no warranty intended except as against the grantors and their own acts. McDonough v. Martin (Ga.) 848

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Covenant; recitals in a deed as basis of implied covenants of title. 848

CREDITORS' BILL.

A creditors' bill cannot be based upon a judgment for money only, in an action in which jurisdiction was obtained only by attachment of the property of an absconding debtor, since under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. 18 L. R. A.

§ 707, such judgment can be enforced only against the attached property. Capital City Bank v. Parent (N. Y.) 240

CRIMINAL LAW.

1. A person partially insane is responsible for a criminal act, if at the time he knows right from wrong and knows the nature and character of the act and its consequences, knows that it is wrong, hurtful to another, and deserves punishment. State v. Harrison (W. Va.) 224

2. Mere irresistible impulse to do an act will not exempt a person from criminal responsibility therefor. Id.

3. Lunacy or insanity, to take away accountability, must be of such degree as to obliterate the sense of right and wrong as to the particular act done. Hornish v. People (Ill.) 237

4. The constitutional provision against cruel and unusual punishments is not violated by a statute authorizing imprisonment from two to ten years and a fine not exceeding $2,000 for conspiracy to do an unlawful act in the night-time, or to do such act while wearing white caps, masks, or other disguises. Hobbs v. State (Ind.) 774

5. A verified plea in abatement is the only mode of raising the question that an information cannot be filed while the grand jury is in session. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; irresistible impulse as an excuse for crime; effect of disease to create irresistible impulse; impulse obliterating sense of right and wrong; kleptomania. 224

DAMAGES. See also INJUNCTION, 7, 8.

1. The rule that damages which are uncertain or contingent cannot be recovered does not apply to an uncertainty as to the value of the benefit or gain to be derived from performance, but to an uncertainty or contingency as to whether any such gain or benefit would be derived at all. Blagen v. Thompson (Or.) 315

2. The loss of the profits or gains of a contract for land, which the purchaser is obliged to surrender because of the failure to construct a motor railway in accordance with a contract made with him by a third person who knows that his object in the latter contract is to enhance the value of the land, may be included in the damages for breach of the contract to build the road. Id.

3. The measure of damage for breach of contract to build a motor railway to connect with the business portion of a city a tract of land which one of the parties has just purchased with the view of fitting and selling it for residences is the difference between the value of the land on the day the road should have been completed, not less than the agreed purchase price, and what its value would have been on that day with the road completed and in operation. Id.

4. For the conversion of notes by a pledgee by surrendering them to the maker in exchange for bonds without authority from the pledgor, he is liable to the latter for their actual value only, if that is less than their face value.

Griggs v. Day (N. Y.) 120

5. Damages for injuries after the commencement of a suit cannot be given in an action for a continuing nuisance, such as a roof and eave trough so placed as to send water against plaintiff's house upon the occurrence of every rainstorm. Joseph Schlitz Brew. Co. v. Compton (Ill.) 890

6. The damages recoverable from one who sells poisonous coloring matter to be used in the manufacture of ice cream, representing it to be harmless, may include the value of the cream ignorantly spoiled by its use, and also compensation for loss of business by the manufacturer which results from his innocently delivering the poisoned cream to his customers. Swain v. Schteffeln (N. Y.) 885

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; right to recover when slight. 44

Right to recover damages caused by an injunction; right to damages for obeying a void injunction. 275

Measure of damages for breach of implied warranty. 385

For matters pending suit. 390

DANGEROUS AGENCIES. See NEGLIGENCE, 2.

DEATH. See CHECKS, 2.

DEDICATION.

User by the public of one side only of a dedicated street laid out and mapped with two tracks, having a watercourse and double row of trees between them, constitutes an acceptance of the whole dedication. Southern P. R. Co. v. Ferris (Cal.) 510

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dedication; public user as acceptance of dedicated highway. 510

DEED. See also CLOUD ON TITLE, 2.

Courts should not give a construction to a deed in direct conflict with that which the parties have themselves put upon it,—especially after a time long enough to create prescriptive rights thereunder. Mansfield v. Place (Mich.) 89

DEFINITIONS. See also LABORERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; LIENS, 3.

A lien or incumbrance on land would be created by filing a map of a proposed street across it, by virtue of a statute denying compensation for any buildings subsequently erected thereon, if such statute were valid. Forster v. Scott (N. Y.) 548

DELEGATION OF POWER. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

DEMURRAGE. See CARRIERS, 11-15.

DERELICT. See WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.
18 L. R. A.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

See CIVIL DEATH.

DIVORCE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 6, 10, 11, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DOWER.

1. An inchoate right of dower is destroyed by a voluntary conveyance executed by the husband alone, without payment of any consideration, of a right of way to a railroad company to be used only for railroad purposes, as this constitutes a dedication of the land to a public use. Venable v. Wabash W. R. Co. (Mo.) 68

2. The inchoate contingent interest of a husband or wife in real estate owned by the other, under Minn. Gen. Laws 1889, chap. 46, subc. 3, § 64, and commonly called the "dower right," is not devested by a transfer of title from the owner of the property to a purchaser at a sale on execution founded upon a judgment against such owner. Dayton v. Corser (Minn.) 80

3. An actual sale and conveyance, though made for the purpose of defeating the dower of the vendor's wife, will be upheld against her claim after his death, under a statute giving dower only in lands of which the husband dies seised and possessed; but it is otherwise with a mere colorable sale not intended to be operative except as a means of dividing the lands among the vendor's children after his death, while he is to remain the real owner during life. Flowers v. Flowers (Ga.) 75

4. The test whether an assignment of dower by metes and bounds would or would not be unjust under Ala. Code 1886, §§ 1910, 1911, is not to be determined by the interest of the doweress alone, but according to what would be just and right as between her and the present owner of the land. Sanders v. McMillian (Ala.) 425

5. The depreciation in the value of land which is subject to dower, after alienation by the husband, whether from natural causes or from the mere negligence of the purchaser or alienee in keeping the property in repair, is not sufficient cause for assigning compensation to the widow according to the value at the time of the alienation, instead of setting off the dower by metes and bounds. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dower; power of husband or his creditors to defeat wife's right of dower; as to lands held in common by the husband; as to lands sold under mortgage; bankruptcy; sale on execution to satisfy mechanics' lien; sale under execution against husband; adverse possession of the husband's lands; as to lands sold for taxes. 75

Effect of depreciation in value of land on a widow's right of dower therein. 425

DRUMMERS. See CHECKS, 1; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DUE PROCESS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4-6.

EASEMENTS.

1. An easement acquired by grant cannot be extinguished by mere nonuser, without anything to show an intention to abandon it. Weish v. Taylor (N. Y.) 535

2. The mere existence of a gate in an alley and acquiescence therein by one having an easement by grant in the alley, but who did not use it, will not be prejudicial to his right, unless an adverse claim is brought to his knowledge. Id.

3. The erection of a house and fence without any opening on an alley in which the owner has an easement by grant does not show an intention to abandon the easement. Id.

4. The failure or refusal of a life tenant of premises to which an easement in an alley was made appurtenant by grant, to pay taxes and expenses on the alley, which she was primarily bound to do, will not show any intention of the owners of the fee to abandon the easement, unless they knew of such failure or refusal. Id.

5. A prescriptive right to the ice on the whole surface of a pond, and not merely to those portions of it from which ice has been cut, is acquired by those who have exercised the right, without objection from anyone, to cut and gather ice at any point or points they choose during a time long enough to create prescriptive rights under the Statute of Limitation, claiming the right under a deed which gave the right to the flowage by which the pond was created. Mansfield v. Place (Mich.) 39

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easement; effect of nonuser; mere nonuser will not extinguish; nonuse must be accompanied by adverse use of servient estate; duration of adverse use; intention of the owner as indicated by acts; public easements. 535

Way of necessity. 702

EJECTMENT.

An interest in land which will support an action of ejectment is not created by a deed conveying "the exclusive and entire right of interment or sepulture in" certain burial lots to be held "for the uses and purposes of sepulture only, and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever." Hancock v. McAvoy (Pa.) 781

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ejectment; what title or interest will support; plaintiff must prove title; sufficiency of equitable title; title by patent; necessity of right of possession and interest in the land; sufficiency of possession as against mere intruder; what constitutes possession; title acquired by limitation; action by riparian owner; mining rights; fixtures; action by owner of dominant estate; land subject to the easement of a highway; interest of a mortgagee; action by tenant in common; executors, administrators, and guardians; to enforce right of dower; action by remaindermen; miscellaneous. 781

ELECTION DISTRICTS.

1. No scheme for senatorial districts can be lawfully devised in which a county having less than the unit of population for a senatorial 18 L. R. A.

district can legally be entitled to vote for two senators, where the constitutional provisions require equality in representation. Parker v. State, Powell (Ind.) 567

2. A county having more than the representative unit of population cannot be denied the right to a separate representative. Id.

3. Counties fully represented cannot be used in the apportionment of districts for the purpose of joining counties which are not otherwise contiguous. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Election districts; validity of legislative apportionment. 567

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES. See CARRIERS, 7, 8.EMINENT DOMAIN.

1. A statute denying compensation for any building erected on land after filing a map of a proposed street across it, although proceedings to open the street or condemn the land have not been begun and perhaps never will be, is unconstitutional as depriving the owner of property without just compensation. Forster v. Scott (N. Y.) 543

2. The constitutional requirement of just compensation to the owner of a lot, of which part is taken and the remainder damaged by opening an alley across the lot, cannot be complied with by charging the owner with the amount as a special tax on that part of his lot which is not taken. Such assessment would amount practically to confiscation. Bloomington v. Latham (Ill.) 487

3. The construction and operation of a steam railroad along a street on the established grade, under proper municipal authority, does not constitute such an application of the street to a new public use as requires payment of compensation for damages to the owner of abutting lots. Henry Gaus & Sons Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (Mo.) 339

4. A change of grade of a street, which will make the property of an abutting owner less valuable to sell or rent, is within a constitutional provision that no private property shall be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation having been first made or paid into court for the owner. Brown v. Seattle (Wash.) 161

5. The liability of a railroad company to abutting owners for constructing an embankment for its track, which practically closes the street to such abutters for ordinary street purposes, does not extend to persons whose premises abut only on another street in which a corresponding embankment is made solely to change the grade so far as the railroad embankment at the intersection of the streets makes it necessary. Rauenstein v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. (N. Y.) 768

6. The crossing or intersecting of the road of one railway company by that of another is the taking of property within the meaning of constitutional provisions requiring compensation to be made. Memphis & O. R. Co. v. Birmingham, S. & T. R. R. Co. (Ala.) 166

7. The provision of Ala. Const. art. 14, § 21, that "every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and shall receive and transport each the other's freight, passengers, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination,"—does not give a railroad company the right to cross another road without compensation. Id.

8. A mortgagor in possession is to be regarded as the owner of the land for all purposes of establishing and opening highways. Goodrich v. Atchison County (Kan.) 118

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; rights of mortgagee of premises taken by: (a) as between mortgagor and mortgagee; (b) as between mortgagor and appropriator; how far mortgagee must be made a party and given notice; special circumstances under which no notice need be given; effect of failure to give notice. 118

Injury to property by change of grade of street. 161

The "taking of property" by. 166

Additional servitude in streets. 339

Liability of railroad for embankment practically closing street. 768

EMPLOYEES. See LABORERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

EQUITABLE CONVERSION. See WILLS, 2.

EQUITY. See also CLOUD ON TITLE.

1. Equity as a great branch of the law of their native country was brought over by the colonists, and has always existed as a part of the common law in its broadest sense, in New Hampshire. State, Rhodes, v. Saunders (N. H.) 646

2. A statute declaring the use of a building for either of several unlawful purposes to be a nuisance abatable in equity does not introduce an exceptional mode of trial, or change the ordinary course of procedure on questions properly triable by jury. Id.

3. The fact that a fisherman's nets were damaged, and fish which he had caught therein were killed, on a single occasion, by garbage deposited by a city in a navigable lake, which was driven into and upon his nets by the winds and waves, where there is nothing to show danger of a repetition of these injuries, will not give him a right to sue in equity to prevent such deposits of garbage whereby a public nuisance is created to the destruction of a common fishery. Kuehn v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 553

4. The jurisdiction in equity to ascertain boundaries under Or. Act 1897, although it extends to cases of confused or uncertain boundaries which involve no other ground of equity jurisdiction, does not extend to the question of title to a disputed strip of land lying between the different lines alleged by the parties to be the boundaries. King v. Brigham (Or.) 861

5. Jurisdiction having attached on an injunction against the execution of a writ of possession in favor of an occupying claimant, the court may retain the cause and take and state accounts which are necessary to a final decree. Leighton v. Young (C. C. App. 8th C.) 266
18 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also COURTS.

Equity; jurisdiction in boundary cases. 361

ERROR. See CORAM NOBIS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ESTOPPEL.

1. A person cannot be permitted to allege for one purpose that an injunction was utterly void, and in the same action deny it for another purpose. Mark v. Hyatt (N. Y.) 275

2. The purchaser of land from several owners is not estopped from asserting his rights therein by the estoppel only of a part of his grantors. Welsh v. Taylor (N. Y.) 535

3. A bank which settles in a foreign country with one who has stolen money from it, and, to enable him to make such settlement, solicits a third person to purchase from him a draft which he had procured with part of the stolen money, cannot dispute the title of the purchaser thereto. Capital City Bank v. Parent (N. Y.) 240

4. Owners of the fee of land are not estopped by the conduct of a life tenant of which they have no knowledge. Welsh v. Taylor (N. Y.) 535

5. Leasing land for the manufacture of brick does not estop the owner from claiming damages from the lessee for the use of a process in burning the brick which generates noxious gases by which his crops on adjacent land are injured. Fogarty v. Junction City Pressed Brick Co. (Kan.) 756

6. The unlawful issuance of a permit by city officials, authorizing the erection of a wooden building within the fire limits, although acted on, will not estop the city from enforcing its ordinance by tearing down the building. Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph (Mo.) 590

EVIDENCE.

Judicial notice.

1. A court takes judicial notice of and determines for itself the law. Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers of World's Col. Expo. (Ky.) 556

2. Judicial notice will be taken of the geography of a state, and also of the enumeration of inhabitants taken pursuant to law. Parker v. State, Powell (Ind.) 567

3. A court judicially knows that telegraph lines are maintained, operated, and used in connection with railroads, and are necessary to their proper operation. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 502

4. It is a matter of common knowledge that the demands and exigencies of commerce require the cars of one railroad company to be hauled over the road of another. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland (Ala.) 260

5. Judicial notice will be taken of the relation between the brakemen and the conductor of a freight train and that the brakemen feel compelled to obey the conductor's orders. Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (N. C.) 845

6. That the breaking of bridles and harness is of frequent occurrence, and that horses otherwise tractable and gentle are liable to run away when thus freed from restraint, is a matter of common knowledge which the court may assume as a fact. Joliet v. Shufelt (Ill.) 750

Presumptions.

7. It will be presumed that the common law of a state is the same as that where the court is sitting, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carroll (Ala.) 483

8. There is no presumption of law against an agreement by a parent to pay a child for personal services, where there is evidence tending to show such an agreement, although if there is no such evidence there is a presumption that the services are gratuitous. Ulrich v. Ulrich (N. Y.) 37

9. It will be presumed that chattel mortgagees who have taken possession of the mortgaged property and are proceeding to sell it acted in accordance with the provisions of the mortgage, where such provisions are not shown. Pierce v. Johnson (Mich.) 486

10. The presumption of negligence on the part of a railroad company cannot be based on the presumption that a person who was killed by the train as it started was in the exercise of due care, where it does not appear whether he was killed while getting off the train or while standing too near it. Farnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (Mo.) 599

Documentary.

11. An ordinance having the seal of the city attached is properly admitted in evidence without further proof of its passage, under Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 4633. Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph (Mo.) 590

12. The assessment book is prima facie evidence, not only of the assessment of all taxes required by statute to be levied by the supervisors and to appear therein, including road and school taxes, and of their amount, but also of the fact that all forms of law in relation to the assessment and levy have been complied with, and consequently of their validity, under Cal. Pol. Code, § 3789. San Gabriel Valley Land & W. Co. v. Witmer Bros. Co. (Cal.) 465

13. A private entry on one's own book of accounts, which shows an intention to take at 75 cents on the dollar certain notes held as collateral which he surrenders to the maker in exchange for bonds, cannot be used by the pledgor, who did not consent to such entry or to such use of the notes, as evidence of a sale thereof to the pledgee at their face value. Griggs v. Day (N. Y.) 120

14. A will in which no provisions for testator's wife are made is not admissible on the question whether a conveyance of his land which he had the power to make to defeat her dower was real or only colorable and pretended. Flowers v. Flowers (Ga.) 75
18 L. R. A.

Parol as to writing.

15. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show, as between the original parties to a note reading "We promise," etc., or as to one who took the note merely as collateral with notice of the facts, that the indorsement before delivery by persons described as directors, as well as the signature by persons described as president and secretary, were made by such persons solely as officers of the corporation and to bind the corporation only. Kline v. Bank of Teacott (Kan.) 533

16. Parol proof may be received to show the exact liability of one who writes his name across the back of a promissory note before it is delivered to the payee, by showing the agreement and understanding of the parties at the time of such indorsement. Fullerton v. Hill (Kan.) 33

Opinions.

17. A hypothetical question must be based upon facts which there is evidence to prove. Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. (Mo.) 823

18. A hypothetical question which does not state the facts, but leaves it to an expert witness to determine the truth of testimony as to such facts, is improper. Id.

19. A person who is competent to prove his motives and intentions may state in general terms that he did or refrained from doing a particular thing material to the issue, on account of information received from a third person, but cannot go into details or give conversations with third persons held out of the hearing of the opposite party. Lawson v. Conaway (W. Va.) 627

20. One farmer who has lived near another and worked with him, both before and after the latter's arm was broken, is competent to testify to the physical ability of the latter before and after the injury. Id.

21. Opinion evidence as to what the value of land would have been if a railway had been constructed in accordance with a contract is admissible on the question of damages for breach of the contract. Blagen v. Thompson (Or.) 315

22. The opinion of an expert cannot be taken upon the question whether or not it is dangerous for a revolving shaft with a rough surface to project into a room where there are workmen who may come in contact with it; nor can it be taken as to the relative danger which would attend the removal of a towel from such shaft in comparison with one having a smooth surface. Kauffman v. Maier (Cal.) 124

Declarations.

23. Proof of the declarations of a cab driver that he called, "There he goes," as an officer went to arrest a person, is inadmissible. Evers v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 421

24. Evidence of declarations by the donee and her companion as to the fact of the gift, made on the day of the donor's death, is admissible in support of an alleged donatio causa mortis, both as part of the res gesta and to rebut the inference flowing from testimony that in a conversation three days after the donor's death the donee made no mention of the gift. Page v. Lewis (Va.) 170

25. Evidence of statements by a lawyer who went to the bedside of a dying man with an offer to prepare his will, that the man made an appointment to meet the lawyer at a future time for the purpose of having his will drawn, before which time he died, is not admissible to defeat an alleged donatio causa mortis, where the lawyer is employed in the case and refuses to testify as to what took place at the interview between himself and decedent. Id.

26. A confidential conversation between an attorney and client is properly rejected in a criminal proceeding against the client, where their relation has been proved by the oral testimony of the attorney, although a deposition of the client is in evidence in which he states that the relation of attorney and client had never existed between them. State v. Calhoun (Kan.) 838

27. A ticket inspector's declaration, as his only reason for rejecting a ticket which he has demanded for inspection, that the holder cannot ride upon it because he is not the original purchaser, is admissible—at least where there is some evidence to show that the railroad company has recognized the issuance of such tickets as valid—for the purpose of raising an implication that the ticket was authorized originally and genuine. Nichols v. Southern P. Co. (Or.) 55

28. Testimony that the uncle of a boy with whom he lived said he had often warned him to quit playing on railway tracks is inadmissible in an action by the boy for personal injuries at a railway crossing, in which the question of his contributory negligence is involved. Kentucky U. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 68

29. Threats of mob violence, made both before and after, but on the same day of, the entering of a plea of guilty, are admissible to show a real danger of such violence, in a proceeding for relief from the plea and sentence thereon, although not all of the threats were communicated to the accused before the plea was entered. State v. Calhoun (Kan.) 838

Relevancy; materiality; sufficiency.

30. The common consent and opinion of the legal profession as shown by their practice for a long period of time is very good evidence of what the law is. Venable v. Wabash W. R. Co. (Mo.) 68

31. Proof of the reputation of deceased as a dangerous man is not admissible in favor of one being tried for killing him, where at the time of the homicide deceased had done no act indicating a purpose to harm defendant. Evors v. State (Tex.) 421

32. As tending to show a motive for endeavoring to defeat dower without parting with dominion and real ownership, evidence of family disturbances between husband and wife and between her and one of his children by a former marriage is relevant. Flowers v. Flowers (Ga.) 75

33. Evidence of failure to mention an alleged donatio causa mortis at an interview three days after the donor's death, at which the affairs of the estate were under consideration, and that the donee said that "as there was no will she supposed all she would have"

was certain other property mentioned and not including the gift,—does not furnish a sufficient basis for even a reasonable conjecture against the gift, where the donee had not then consulted a lawyer, and had been informed by the family physician that the gift was invalid, especially where the witness giving the testimony contradicted himself on material points and had always acted adversely to the claimant. Page v. Lewis (Va.) 170

34. That only a few days elapsed between the execution of a chattel mortgage and taking possession of the mortgaged property is not of itself a badge of fraud. Pierce v. Johnson (Mich.) 486

35. A recovery for abandonment of treatment by a physician may be had under a declaration charging that he "carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully conducted himself" in the treatment, and that the injury resulted from his "careless, negligent, improper, and unskillful attention." Lawson v. Conaway (W. Va.) 627

36. Overruling a demurrer to a petition will not prevent the court from excluding evidence on the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Goodrich v. Atchison County (Kan.) 118

37. The failure of a street-railway company to discover a defective welding in an iron on a canal bridge belonging to the state, which the street railway was obliged to cross, is not evidence of negligence sufficient to go to the jury, where there was nothing to suggest to the general traveler or to the company the presence of any such defect, and it was not discoverable by one using the bridge merely for the purpose of crossing. Birmingham v. Rochester City & B. R. Co. (N. Y.) 764

38. One competent credible witness is sufficient to establish a gift causa mortis. Page v. Lewis (Va.) 170

39. Reasonable doubt of sanity is not a proper test of the sufficiency of evidence to convict; but the reasonable doubt must be as to the whole evidence, and not as to a particular fact in the case. Hornish v. People (Ill.) 287

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; presumption as to date of indorsement of note; parol evidence to show intention of indorser. 83

By party's books of account. 120

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See also JUDGMENT, 2.

As against a trustee in insolvency, as well as the insolvent, a debt of the latter to a decedent's estate may be set off against his distributive share therein. Gomell v. Flack (Md.) 158

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executors and administrators; collateral impeachmentability of findings as to jurisdictional facts on which administration of a decedent's estate is based; inhabitancy of county; existence of estates in county; administration of the estate of a living person; conflict of jurisdiction; lapse of time; miscellaneous. 249

EXEMPTION. See LABORERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

EXPLOSIONS.

The fact that an explosion of gas which has accumulated in a cellar by negligence of a gas company was caused by the act of a third person in lighting a match will not relieve the gas company from liability. Koosch v. Philadelphia Co. (Pa.) 759

EXPRESS COMPANIES. See CARRIERS, 16, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

A person who in good faith and without malice merely makes complaint before a magistrate of the commission of a public offense in a matter over which the magistrate has a general jurisdiction, on which complaint the magistrate issues a warrant, is not liable for an assault and false imprisonment because of an arrest on such warrant, although the particular case may be one in which the magistrate has no jurisdiction. Gifford v. Wiggins (Minn.) 856

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

False imprisonment; lack of jurisdiction or of legal grounds of criminal prosecution as affecting the liability for false imprisonment of a complainant who acts in good faith. 856

FENCE. See RAILROADS, 4.

FINES.

A penalty recoverable by a civil action, although called a fine in the statute providing for it, is not a fine within the meaning of Ind. Const. art. 8, § 2, providing that "fines assessed for breaches of the penal law of the state" shall go to the common-school fund. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 502

FIRE LIMITS. See BUILDINGS.

FIRES. See COMMERCE, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8, 9.

FISHERIES. See also EQUITY, 8; WHARVES, 8.

An injury to a public fishery in navigable waters, which affects all alike who fish in that locality, will not sustain a private suit by a fisherman who has no special privilege or right to fish at the place affected. Kuehn v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 553

FLYING SWITCH. See RAILROADS, 9, 10, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

FRIGHT. See HIGHWAYS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

GARNISHMENT. See LEVY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

GAS. See also EXPLOSIONS; MINES; NUISANCES, 2.

1. If injury to a gas main is a natural and probable consequence of the construction of a sewer in close proximity to it, it is the duty of the gas company, which has or ought to have knowledge of the sewer, to guard against the damage likely to be sustained. Koosch v. Philadelphia Co. (Pa.) 759

2. A gas company is required, not only to have pipes and fittings of such material and workmanship and laid with such skill and care as to provide against the escape of gas therefrom when new, but also to have such system of inspection as will ensure reasonable promptness in the detection of all leaks that may occur from deterioration of the material of the pipes or from any other cause within the circumspection of men of ordinary skill in the business. Id.

GIFT. See also CHECKS, 2; EVIDENCE, 38.

1. A gift causa mortis may extend to the whole of the donor's personal estate, however large. Page v. Lewis (Va.) 170

2. A valid gift causa mortis, including the valuables in the depository, is effected where a man sick in bed on the day of his death sends for securities and the keys to the depository, containing other securities, all belonging to him; and with the remark, "I am a sick man and don't know what may happen to me," picks up the securities and hands them to the donee, saying, "I give you these;" and, taking the keys, describes in a general way the contents of the depository, and, handing the keys to the donee, says, "These keys I now give you" are where the valuable papers are; "whatever you find you can have—it is yours;" and then directs the donee to place the securities and keys in her trunk and lock it, which the donee does. Id.

3. The mere existence, for precaution against loss or accident, in the hands of a third person, of a duplicate set of keys to the receptacle where valuable papers are kept, will not impair the validity of a gift of the papers causa mortis by delivery of the keys in the donor's possession. Id.

4. That the donor of valuables causa mortis in transferring them to the donee used the expression, "to be yours in case of my death," will not convert the transaction into a testamentary disposition so as to prevent its taking effect as a donatio causa mortis. Id.

5. A donatio causa mortis is not within the provisions of Va. Code, § 2414, providing that no gift shall be valid unless actual possession come to and remain in the donee, and that, "if donor and donee reside together at the time of the gift, possession at the place of their residence shall not be sufficient possession" within the meaning of the section. Id.

6. Delivery of possession of a bank pass-book in consummation of a gift causa mortis is not sufficient to transfer the bank deposit. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gift; sufficiency of constructive delivery to sustain gift causa mortis; gift of savings bank deposit; other instances. 170

Of checks; check or draft on person other than banker; gift of third person's check. inter vivos. 855

GOVERNOR. See OFFICERS, 7.

HIGHWAYS. See also ADVERSE POSSESSION, 1; DEDICATION; EMINENT DOMAIN, 1, 3-5, 8; INJUNCTION, 2, 3; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 9; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 2.

1. A defect in a highway does not give a cause of action to a traveler who, after safely passing it, was taken back by his horse, which became frightened at an independent cause, and uncontrollable, and turned suddenly around in the road breaking the vehicle and dragging it back to the defective portion of the highway, where the traveler was thrown out and injured. Schaeffer v. Jackson Twp. (Pa.) 100

2. The addition must be laid out before a city can avail itself of the right to cross land granted to a railroad company, under a reservation in the deed of the right to cross the tracks whenever it should determine to lay out an addition composed of the remainder of the tract. Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 367

3. A city street cannot be extended across a railroad yard without authority from the Legislature, express, or necessarily implied, when the effect will be to destroy the use of scales erected near the point of crossing as well as of a portion of the yard, to greatly discommode the company's business and impair the value of its franchise, and it will be dangerous to life for the public to attempt to use the street if so extended. Id.

4. Notice to a city of a dangerous excavation in a street is not necessary to make it liable for injuries caused thereby, where the excavation was made by employes of the city under proper authority. Wilson v. Troy (N. Y.) 449

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also ADVERSE POSSESSION; DEDICATION.

Highways; effect upon right of recovery, of the fact that a horse was frightened when an accident occurred on a defective highway; where fright is caused by defect in highway; duty of town to provide for safety of runaway horse; when liability exists; illustrations; fright occurring outside of highway. 100

Liability of a railroad company for obstructing a highway crossing. 154

HOLIDAY.

The service of a summons by publication is valid, although one of the publications is made on May 30 (Memorial Day). Malmgren v. Phinney (Minn.) 753

HOMICIDE.

1. The fact that one who committed a homicide was temporarily insane when he formed and executed the design to kill another may be taken into consideration under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 40a, both to determine the degree of the murder and in fixing the penalty. Evers v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 421

2. Insulting language which can reduce a homicide to manslaughter being restricted by statute to that for which the killing takes place immediately, it cannot have that effect where the defendant ignored it and started to go away, and committed the homicide only after he had been called back. Id.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. A married woman can enter as a partner a firm of which her husband is not a member, and thus bind her separate property for the undertakings of the firm, under the Michigan statutes, which give her power to carry on business or trade in her own name and upon her sole account. Vail v. Winterstein (Mich.) 515

2. A wife may become a partner of her husband under the Wisconsin statutes, which authorize her to make contracts in relation to her separate estate, and in certain emergencies—as, in case of her husband's desertion—giving her the power of a feme sole. Fuller & P. Co. v. McHenry (Wis.) 519

3. Tenancy by the entirety does not exist in a bond and mortgage executed to husband and wife for moneys of which each individually contributed a part; but upon the death of either, his or her share vests in his or her personal representatives. Re Albrecht (N. Y.) 829

4. Pregnancy of a wife at the time of marriage does not constitute physical incapacity for which the marriage will be annulled under Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 58, 82; but such incapacity must be such physical defect or incurable disease as will prevent sexual coition. Franko v. Franko (Cal.) 375

5. False representations by a woman to a man with whom she had had illicit intercourse and who knew her to be pregnant, that he was the only person with whom she had been incontinent, made to induce him to marry her, are not fraud for which the marriage will be annulled. Id.

6. A special Act of the Legislature granting a divorce is in violation of Ala. Const. art. 4, § 23, which prohibits the suspension of any general law for the benefit of any individual, since the subject of divorce is covered by general laws. Jones v. Jones (Ala.) 95

7. A wife's ill temper and mean disposition which make her principally responsible for an unhappy state of feeling in the household, although not a legal justification to her husband for abandoning her, may in a measure palliate his offense and abridge her claim to an allowance from his estate for her separate maintenance, on obtaining a divorce from him for abandonment. Id.

8. Voluntary abandonment of a wife by her husband is shown where he requires her to leave his house, and fails to provide for her support, and does not consent to her return. Id.

9. A wife's offensive behavior, coarse and indelicate language, and her anonymous letters foully slandering one of her husband's daughters by a former marriage, do not furnish him a legal justification for his abandonment, which will prevent her from obtaining a divorce for abandonment. Id.

10. An agreement made by a man on the day after obtaining a decree of divorce, to pay his former wife a monthly sum during her life if she will not apply for a new trial, is against public policy and void as tending to promote and facilitate a divorce. Blank v. Nohl (Mo.) 850

11. A contract for a valuable consideration not to apply for a new trial, made by one against whom a decree of divorce has been entered after a trial at which she wholly abandoned the position assumed in her pleadings and made no defense, is on its face collusive and a fraud on the law. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; validity of legislative divorce; granting divorces a rightful subject of legislation; how far conflicting with judicial power; construction of particular constitutions. 95

Tenancy by the entirety in personal property. 829

Validity of agreement to facilitate divorce. 850

Antenuptial pregnancy or unchastity as a ground of divorce or annulment of marriage: (1) pregnancy; (2) existence of a bastard child; (8) unchastity. 875

Partnership between. 512, 515

ICE. See also EASEMENTS, 5.

1. The total quantity of ice that may be taken by all persons from a great public pond is, as to the owners of a mill on a stream flowing from the pond, limited to what will constitute a reasonable use of the pond, which is the extent of the water right attached to the soil and invested in the owner of the basin through which the water flows. Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson (N. H.) 679

2. The right of a littoral proprietor to cut ice on a great pond belonging to the public is not exclusive, although he may have advantages over others in the right to erect stagings and platforms in front of his lot for use in filling ice-houses; and the extent of his right, as against persons owning land on a stream flowing from a pond, may be limited by the exercise of the same right by the public. Id.

IMPROVEMENTS. See also COURTS, 10; INJUNCTION, 4.

1. Statutes providing that the value of improvements by an occupying claimant in good faith may be adjudged to be a lien on the land, and that he may retain possession until he has been paid the value thereof, are valid. Leighton v. Young (C. C. App. 8th C.) 266

2. Fixing the uniform date for the valuation of improvements by an occupying claimant in good faith, as the date of the occupant's entry upon the land, is not a violation of any constitutional right of the owner of the fee. Id.

3. An occupying claimant in good faith and the owner of the fee should be regarded in effect as tenants in common in proportion to the value of their respective interests, with the sole right of possession in the occupant so long as the joint tenancy continues, where the owner does not pay for the improvements and the occupant does not pay for the land as is re- 18 L. R. A.

quired by statute, and the statute does not provide for such a contingency. Id.

4. A sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds according to the rights of the parties may be decreed in an equity case between an occupying claimant and the owner of the fee, where by the failure of each to pay to the other the value of his interest in the property they have become cotenants. Id.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 1-3.

Reasonable ground to doubt the sanity of a person about to be tried for felony must appear before the court will impanel a jury to inquire as to his sanity; and the court may inspect and examine him, consider his action and demeanor, read affidavits, and inquire of physicians and others touching his condition. State v. Harrison (W. Va.) 234

INCUMBRANCE. See DEFINITIONS.

INDICTMENT.

An indictment for conspiracy to do an unlawful act in the night-time, and also for conspiracy to do an unlawful act while wearing white caps, masks, or other disguises, each of which acts is made unlawful by the same section of the statute, is not bad for duplicity. Hobbs v. State (Ind.) 774

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indictment; duplicity in. 774

INFANTS.

The supreme right of the state to the guardianship of children controls the natural right of parents when the welfare of society or of the children themselves conflicts with such parental rights. Van Walters v. Marion County Bd. of Children's Guardians (Ind.) 481

INJUNCTION. See also DAMAGES, NOTES AND BRIEFS; EQUITY, 5.

1. An injunction will be refused in the exercise of the discretion of the court when it would work an injury greater than the wrong to be redressed. Chartiers Block Coal Co. v. Mellon (Pa.) 703

2. An abutting owner will be enjoined from tearing up the tracks of a railroad lawfully in a highway. Southern P. R. Co. v. Ferris (Cal.) 510

3. An injunction against a change of grade of a street without making compensation for the damage, required by a constitution which prohibits private property to be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation having been first made or paid into court, may be granted in favor of an abutting owner, where the change will seriously reduce both the rental and the selling value of his property. Brown v. Seattle (Wash.) 161

4. An injunction suit in a Federal court, when it has jurisdiction, against the execution of a writ of possession, is a proper remedy to enforce an occupying claimant's right to compensation for improvements; and it may be instituted at any time before he is dispossessed of the premises after they have been adjudged to the true owner, where the state statute provides for the protection of his rights by the appointment of appraisers after such judgment to ascertain the value of improvements and state the account. Leighton v. Young (C. App. 8th C.) 268

5. An injunction against the unlawful use of buildings as a nuisance is not beyond the jurisdiction of equity on the ground that it is in the nature of a punishment of a criminal offense. State v. Saunders (N. H.) 646

6. An injunction cannot be granted to prevent a board of county commissioners from making an illegal contract or illegal appropriation,—at least where there is nothing to show that the remedy to prevent enforcing any illegal act of the board would not be equally effective. Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School (Ill.) 883

7. Damages resulting from obedience to an injunction which is utterly void and under which no action has been taken by the plaintiff cannot be recovered by the defendant, but result from his voluntary and needless act. Mark v. Hyatt (N. Y.) 275

8. Damages caused by an injunction erroneously granted in the exercise of jurisdiction, where the proceedings have been regular, cannot be recovered from the party who obtained and served it, in the absence of an undertaking, unless the prosecution was malicious and without probable cause. Id.

9. An injunction which merely exceeds the relief demanded by perpetually restraining licensees from manufacturing a patented article, without in express terms merely forbidding it under the license, is not wholly void, although it would be in excess of the jurisdiction if regarded as restraining future infringement, but should be construed as a restraint upon manufacture under the contract, and as erroneous simply because open to possible misconstruction, and therefore valid until reversed. Id.

10. On sustaining a motion to dissolve an injunction where the bill is in effect for an injunction only, the bill may be dismissed. American Livestock Commission Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch. (Ill.) 180

INSANE PERSONS. See CRIMINAL LAW, 1-3, NOTES AND BRIEFS; INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

INSOLVENCY. See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. A partial assignment for particular creditors is included within the provisions of Ill. Act May 22, 1877, which provides that an assignment shall include "any other property . . . comprehended within the general terms of" the same, and that all debts and liabilities are to be paid pro rata "from the assets thereof;" and the trust is enlarged by the statute, which makes it enure to the benefit of all the creditors. Farwell v. Cohen (Ill.) 281

2. A voluntary assignment which on its face includes only part of the debtor's property, and contains no general terms descriptive of property, is not converted into a general assignment of all the debtor's unexempt property by Ill. Act May 22, 1877, which provides that an assignment for creditors shall not be void for want of any list or inventory, and that a list or inventory shall not be conclusive, but that the assignee shall take title to "any other property not exempt by law . . . comprehended within the general terms" of the assignment. Id.

3. A claim by an assignor and assignee that an assignment for creditors is a trust for certain creditors only, as they intended it, estops them from claiming that it is invalid for lack of acknowledgment and recording, when it is held to enure under the statute to the benefit of all creditors. Id.

4. A voluntary transfer by an insolvent of certain specified property in trust to sell enough of it to pay certain specified debts and return the remainder is, regardless of the form of the instrument, an assignment within the meaning of Ill. Act May 22, 1877, conferring jurisdiction on county courts to supervise the execution of trusts growing out of voluntary assignments for creditors. Id.

5. A petition by a creditor or some other party in interest is a proper way to call upon the court to declare a deed of trust for certain creditors to be in effect an assignment for all creditors. Id.

6. Failure to acknowledge and record an assignment for creditors as required by a statute which contains no negative words declaring it void for such failure will not prevent the assignment from becoming operative. Id.

7. A creditor of the assignor may be assignee in an assignment for benefit of creditors. Id.

8. A bill of sale which constitutes a voluntary transfer or assignment of a stock of goods for creditors, securing to one of them a preference over all others, is in violation of Wis. Rev. Stat. § 1698a. Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry (Wis.) 512

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also LABORERS.

Insolvency; what constitutes an assignment for creditors. 281

INSURANCE. See also COMMERCE, 5; CONSPIRACY; CORPORATIONS, 9.

1. A joint tenancy in the beneficiaries of a mutual benefit certificate is created where the whole sum, without any direction for division, is made payable to two persons named; and on the death of one of them during the life of the insured the other takes the whole amount of the benefits. Farr v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. (Wis.) 249

2. The assignment of an insurance policy with the consent of the insurer creates a new contract between the latter and the assignee, which is unaffected by any causes of forfeiture previously existing and unknown to either party. Hall v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 185

3. Each of two persons owning in severalty respective shares of personal property insured is the "absolute owner" of the property, within the meaning of a question and answer in an application for insurance thereon. Beebe v. Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. (Mich.) 481

4. The provision of an insurance policy, that it shall become void, unless consent is indorsed thereon, if the insured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property, relates only to subsequent changes, and does not apply to the state or condition of the property when the policy was issued. Hall v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 185

5. Avoidance of an insurance policy for breach of a condition against other insurance, by the existence of a prior policy, is not prevented by the fact that the latter contains a like condition, although a void policy is not a breach of such a condition. Reed v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. (R. I.) 496

6. A policy of insurance conditioned against other insurance is avoided by the existence of other insurance at the time of its issuance, although such other insurance is not in effect at the time of the loss. Id.

7. A condition against other insurance, contained in a policy of insurance, is not waived by the issuance of the policy after notice to a mere soliciting agent of the existence of additional insurance. Id.

8. Notice to an insurance company at the time of the issuance of a policy, that there is prior insurance, will estop it from asserting that the policy is void under a condition against other insurance. Id.

9. A false statement in an application for insurance, that there is no other insurance on the property, will not make the policy void where the other insurance was placed upon it by the same insurance agents, and the statement of the insured to the agents who wrote the application was that there was no other insurance except what they had placed on the property. Steele v. German Ins. Co. (Mich.) 85

10. The acts of clerks of insurance agents who solicit insurance, make out applications and policies, and generally attend to the business of such agents, are as binding as though done by the agents themselves. Id.

11. The knowledge of an incumbrance, on the part of an insurance agent who filled out an application and had the applicant sign it without reading, assuring her that it was all right and that she was fully protected under it, will prevent a forfeiture because of such incumbrance, which is not stated in the application. Beebe v. Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. (Mich.) 481

12. The failure of an insurance agent to write upon a policy the permission which he has, in the exercise of his authority, granted to place incumbrances on the property, will not defeat the permission,—especially where he took an active part in procuring the money for the insured, and gave assurances that the rights of the latter were fully protected. Id.

13. Proceedings to oust a tenant according to the provisions of a contract under which he has become merely a tenant holding over without permission is not a litigation which will defeat an insurance policy which provides that it shall be void "if the title or possession be now or hereafter involved in litigation." Hall v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 185

18 L. R. A.

14. Failure to make proofs of loss within sixty days after the fire, as required by the Michigan standard policy, which provides that the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after such proofs, and that no suit or action shall be maintainable "until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements, nor unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire," will not make the policy void, where the specified requirements in fourteen cases expressly provide for a forfeiture in case of failure to comply therewith, but no such provision is made in respect to the proof of loss. Steele v. German Ins. Co. (Mich.) 85

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; forfeiture by failure to furnish proofs of loss within a stipulated time. 85

Effect on assignee of policy, of assignor's acts of forfeiture; prior acts; subsequent acts; assignment after loss. 135

Joint tenancy in proceeds of life policy. 249

How far an undivided interest in property is a complete or full ownership for the purposes of insurance; partnership interest. 481

Waiver of forfeiture by knowledge of facts. 496

INTEREST.

Interest on the sum by which property is diminished in value on account of an accident in a street caused by the negligence of the city may be included in the damages awarded therefor. Wilson v. Troy (N. Y.) 449

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Interest; on sum allowed as damages: (I.) for personal injuries; when death results; (II.) for injuries to property: (1) by railway fires; (2) by other fires; (3) injuries to stock by passing trains; (4) property injured, delayed, or lost in transportation; (5) vessel captured as a prize; (6) collision; (7) property destroyed by mob; (8) from negligent construction of railroads, canals, etc.; (9) from explosion, etc.; (10) against agents and officers; (11) on exemplary damages; (III.) rate of interest. 449

INTERVENTION. See ACTION OR SUIT, 6.

JOKE. See TRIAL, 11.

JUDGMENT. See also CREDITORS' BILL.

1. An entry of judgment nunc pro tunc by a justice's court nearly two years after the time when the case was tried, a verdict rendered, and an execution issued reciting that a judgment had been rendered, although no judgment was in fact rendered at that time, is a nullity under W. Va. Code, § 114, which requires the entry of judgment within twenty-four hours (Sunday excepted) after the trial. McClain v. Davis (W. Va.) 684

2. The decision that a testator was an inhabitant of the county, made by a surrogate to whom the will is presented for probate, is conclusive against collateral attack, independent of any statutory provision,—at least where the surrogate had jurisdiction of the subject matter by reason of the fact that testator was an inhabitant of the state at the time of his death. Bolton v. Schriever (N. Y.) 242

8. A judgment requiring the execution of a deed to the real owner of land by persons having the record title to the whole estate, subject only to the contingency that other persons may be born who will have an interest in such record title, is effectual to cut off the rights of such persons subsequently born. Kent v. St. Michael's Church (N. Y.) 831

4. A justice's judgment is not open to collateral attack because his docket does not affirmatively show that he waited one hour on an adjourned day for defendant to appear. People, Chaddock, v. Barry (Mich.) 837

5. An adjudication as to a boundary line, in a suit under Or. Act 1887, cannot operate as an estoppel or bar to a subsequent suit, based on adverse possession, to quiet title to the strip of land between the lines respectively claimed as the boundary. King v. Brigham (Or.) 861

6. The recovery of compensation by a physician for his services, in a suit in which there is no appearance by the defendant, does not estop the latter from bringing a cross-action for malpractice, but if the latter appear, he is estopped by the recovery unless the records show that it was not to defend the suit, but solely to disclaim the waiver to his own right. Lawson v. Conway (W. Va.) 627

7. A satisfied judgment for one week's wages, in a suit brought after wrongful dismissal from service, is not a bar to a subsequent suit for wages thereafter accruing under the same contract, where the employé continues ready to work and his employment was "at a salary of $50 per week payable weekly," although there was an express provision that the contract should continue for one year. Olmstead v. Back (Md.) 58

8. The expiration of the time during which a judgment continues to be a lien upon land pending an action to enforce the lien as against a title inferior thereto, but which would be a cloud on the title of an execution purchaser, will defeat the right of the plaintiff to such relief, since the court cannot extend the life of the lien beyond the statutory period. McAfee v. Reynolds (Ind.) 211

9. A judgment cannot be set aside on a petition which merely alleges facts in contradiction of the judgment. Van Wallers v. Marion County Bd. of Children's Guardians (Ind.) 431

10. A judgment void for want of jurisdiction may be set aside without showing a meritorious defense. St. Paul Sav. Bank v. Authier (Minn.) 498

11. An affidavit is not sufficient as a basis for setting aside a judgment entered after trial ex parte, which states simply that defendant "has fully stated his case to his attorney, who has advised him that he has a good defense on the merits to plaintiff's action." Trefts v. Stahl (Ill. App.) 500

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; expiration of lien of. 212, 758

JUDICIAL SALE.

1. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to 18 L. R. A.

a foreclosure sale, notwithstanding the fact that the purchaser is told by the sheriff and clerk that if he buys the land he will get a clear and perfect title thereto free from liens, and such statements are untrue, as it is his duty to examine the title, and not rely upon their statements. Such facts are not ground, therefore, for a motion to vacate and set aside the sale. Norton v. Taylor (Neb.) 88

2. A purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale will not be relieved from completing his purchase on the ground of defective title or because of prior incumbrances, when the true condition of the title is fully set out in the pleadings and the record of the proceedings under which the sale was made, as he is chargeable with notice of such material facts as the record discloses. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judicial sale; effect of misrepresentation to purchasers by sheriff. 88

JURISDICTION. See ADMIRALTY; CREDITORS' BILL; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. See also JUDGMENT, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Justice of the peace; regularity of judgments by. 684

LABORERS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Laborers; who are laborers, employés, or servants within the meaning of statutes giving preferences: (1) definitions; (2) who are secured by mechanics' lien laws; (3) preferences of claims against insolvent corporations; (4) under the statutes making stockholders individually liable; (5) whose earnings are exempted from attachment or garnishment; (6) seamen. 805

LAKES. See BOUNDARIES; WATERS, 8-11, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. A lease, and not a mere license, is made by a writing acknowledging the receipt of a specified amount of money in payment of a certain described sand bar for one year, with "the exclusive right to all gravel and sand for the year above named, and excluding all other parties from said premises." Heywood v. Fulmer (Ind.) 491

2. A landlord is not liable for damages to an employé of his lessee from illness caused by defective plumbing, where he is not charged with fraud or deceit or with any more knowledge of the defects than the lessee had. Angvine v. Knox-Goodrich (Cal.) 264

3. No implied warranty of the habitable condition of a house leased for a dwelling is created by Cal. Civ. Code, § 1941, which provides that the lessor must put it in such condition. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord and tenant; obligation of landlord as to fitness of building for occupancy. 264
 Distinction between a lease and license; as to minerals. 491

LEASE. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LEVY.

The statutory exemption of the wages or earnings of a debtor continues while they are under his control, though temporarily in the hands of another. Elliot v. Hall (Id.) 586

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Levy; exemption of debtor's wages after payment by employer. 586

LICENSE. See also ATTORNEYS, 5; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

A planter or farmer keeping a store on his plantation, and selling goods and liquors to his employes exclusively, is "doing a business of selling at retail," within the terms of a statute requiring a license. Thibaut v. Kearney (La.) 596

LIENS. See also LABORERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A purchase-money mortgage which would otherwise have been prior to mechanics' liens, being by agreement postponed to another mortgage to a third person which would otherwise have been inferior to such liens, the priority of the purchase-money mortgage is transferred pro tanto to the other mortgage, and the balance of such other mortgage and the purchase-money mortgage are inferior to the mechanics' liens. Malmgren v. Phinney (Minn.) 753

2. A statute giving a lien for lumber, materials, or teams furnished in the construction of railroads or other works of public or quasi public character, is a legislative declaration that prior lien statutes did not cover such cases. Tod v. Kentucky U. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 805

3. Contractors cannot be regarded as "employés" or "laborers" within the meaning of a statute giving liens to laborers and employes for their services, where the contract is to furnish laborers, tools, and teams by the day, for which certain sums per day are to be paid, with 10 per cent additional for the use of tools and superintendence. Id.

4. The mere fact of furnishing articles or supplies suitable or capable of being used in carrying on a designated business, without any understanding or agreement that they shall be so applied, will not of itself, without actual application in the business, give the furnisher a lien, under Ky. Act 1876, upon the property and effects embarked in such business. Id.

5. One who has failed or neglected to comply with the requirements of Ky. Act 1868, providing for a lien in favor of persons furnishing labor or materials in railroad construction, cannot claim a lien under the Act of 1876 giving a more extended lien in favor of 18 L. R. A. laboring men and supply men in numerous kinds of business. Id.

LIFE TENANT. See ESTOPPEL, 1.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See also CORAM NOBIS, 8.

The running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of a foreign corporation depends on the fact of its residence in the state in such sense that service may be made on it, through its keeping a managing agent therein, and not upon the knowledge or lack of knowledge of one having a cause of action against it as to the presence of such agent; but a foreign manufacturing corporation whose business is such that it can carry it on without a resident general agent cannot set the statute running by appointing at any time or times an agent in the state upon whom process may be served. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 524

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Limitation of actions; loss of cause of action by lapse of time pending suit. 211

Right of foreign corporation to plead statute. 524

LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. See USURY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MANDAMUS. See also INJUNCTION, 6.

1. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel an officer who has been regularly and lawfully suspended, to deliver the official property of the office to his successor. State, Attorney-General, v. Johnson (Fla.) 410

2. The presumption that a statute has been constitutionally enacted when it has been enrolled, signed by the presiding officer of each House, and approved by the governor, is not conclusive in a proceeding by mandamus to enforce it, where facts showing that the bill was not constitutionally passed are alleged by the answer and admitted by demurrer. Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers of World's Col. Expo. (Ky.) 556

3. The new appointee is not a necessary party to proceedings to compel a suspended officer to deliver over the official property of the office, but the attorney-general is a proper and sufficient relator. State, Attorney-General, v. Johnson (Fla.) 410

MARKETS.

The mere fact that the business of a particular market has become the largest in the world does not give to the courts any power to declare the market public and impressed with a public use, or to apply to it any rules of public policy peculiar to that class of markets, although the Legislature might be warranted in making such a declaration. American Livestock Com. Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch. (Ill.) 190

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CONTRACTS, 1; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 1.

1. It is part of the personal duty of the master to give direction to the work he undertakes, and to prescribe a system for conducting it, which may be done by rules, when necessary, or by the personal guidance of managers and foreman. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

2. A railroad company is not guilty of negligence making it liable to a fireman on a train coming in collision with another train in advance of it on the road while the latter is stopping at a station, in ordering his train to run ahead of schedule time without giving the conductor of the forward train notice thereof, where it is not unusual to do so and specials are to be expected at all times,—especially where the train's running in advance of its time is not a direct cause of the action. Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 817

3. A foreman occupying the place of the master is guilty of negligence in placing a keg at the front end of a hand car on which he is riding with the hands under him, and leaving it where it is liable to roll off in front by the motion of the car, while he assists the men in moving the car. Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. (Mo.) 823

4. That on a particular occasion use could have been made of another brakeman does not make a railroad company guilty of negligence in failing to provide more than the number of brakemen usually necessary upon a freight train, which will render it liable to a fireman of another train injured in a collision with such train. Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 817

5. A conductor of a freight train is not guilty of negligence in going to the station at which his train stops, without waiting to see that a brakeman ordered to detach cars from the train sets the brakes upon the remaining cars standing upon a grade. Id.

6. A master is not liable to his servant for injuries received by the latter in attempting to remove a towel from a shaft with which his service was in no way connected, where he had hung it for his own convenience to get it out of his way while engaged in the performance of his duties, where the shaft was not designed for, and the master could not have contemplated, such use, although the construction of the shaft was defective. Kauffman v. Maier (Cal.) 124

7. The motives which prompted a servant to inform the foreman about the condition of machinery, as well as his opinion concerning it, are immaterial upon the question of the master's liability to another servant for injuries caused by it. Id.

8. The want of any bumpers on freight cars, whether received from another company or not, renders a railroad company liable for injury received in consequence thereof by a brakeman who is suddenly called upon in the night to couple the cars, and who has no knowledge of their defects. Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (N. C.) 845

9. It is not negligence in a railway company to haul cars of another company with double dead woods or double buffers, while couplings of a different pattern are in use on 18 L. R. A.

its own road. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland (Ala.) 260 Warning.

10. A master must notify a servant of increased danger to which he is exposed by reason of any omission to supply usual and ordinary means to prevent accident, whereby the hazard to the servant is increased, if the change is not known to the servant or so open and visible that by the exercise of ordinary care it will be seen and known. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

11. A brakeman twenty-six years of age and of average intelligence is sufficiently warned of the increased danger, which is open to ordinary observation, in coupling cars with double dead-woods or double buffers which sometimes pass over the road, by a caution that railroading is dangerous and that coupling cars is specially so, requiring very great care, where he is further notified that cars with different coupling apparatus are hauled over the line. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland (Ala.) 230

12. A master cannot delegate to another, even though it be a fellow servant, the duty of notifying his servant of increased danger, so as to absolve himself from liability for failure to communicate it. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

Assumption of risks.

13. A servant assumes all ordinary risks of his employment, but not unknown perils arising from negligent direction of the work. The latter are not usual risks of the service. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

14. The extra hazard to a brakeman by the use of cars with couplings of different patterns, some of which have double dead-woods or double buffers, is one of the risks or dangers assumed by entering the employment. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boland (Ala.) 260

Contributory negligence.

15. An employé is bound to use ordinary care to avoid dangers that arise, whether usually incident to the service or not. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

16. A servant is not to be held guilty of negligence in returning to protect his master's property after he has reached a place of safety, because some unforeseen cause intervenes which, concurring with the master's negligence, produces an injury which reasonable and prudent foresight could not have anticipated. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

17. It is not the duty of a brakeman to examine the bumpers of cars on a dark night before essaying to couple the cars in obedience to orders. Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (N. C.) 845

Obeying orders.

18. Obedience to an order involving personal danger cannot be declared negligent in law, unless the danger was so glaring that no prudent person in like situation would have obeyed. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

19. The command of the conductor of a freight train to a brakeman to go between the cars when he cannot couple them otherwise is a waiver of a rule of the company prohibiting brakemen to go between cars under any circumstances. Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (N. C.) 845

Fellow servants.

20. A foreman is not a fellow servant of a man under his orders, in respect to his performance of the master's duty of directing the work in his charge. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

21. A foreman of a gang of section hands, having power to employ and discharge the men under him, and full control of their work and movements, is a vice-principal, and not a fellow servant with them. Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. (Mo.) 828

22. A brakeman on a freight train is a fellow servant of a fireman on another train on the same section of the road, where both are under orders of the same train despatcher. Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 817

23. Employés of independent contractors, engaged in separate branches of labor upon a common enterprise, are not fellow servants. Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 793

24. Where persons are engaged in distinct departments of service, and have no such association in their work as that they can observe and influence each other's conduct and report delinquencies to a common correcting power, they are not in a common employment within the meaning of the law. Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (Mo.) 802

25. A track repairer under direction of a foreman, and the operatives of a passing construction train under different management from the section gang, are not fellow servants. Id.

26. A laborer working in defendant's quarry, under direction of a foreman having no connection with the train service, is not a fellow servant of employés operating a passenger train on defendant's line. Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 792

27. Persons who, under a license from the master, put new burners in a brick kiln for the purpose of testing their advantages, are in the position of vice-principals so far as relates to making such apparatus suitable and safe for the employés or giving notice of increased danger. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also LABORERS.

Master and servant; liability of master for injuries caused by defects in machinery while used for a purpose not contemplated. 124

Duty to warn inexperienced servant. 260

Right to discharge servant. 644

Liability for negligence of fellow servant; general principles; what constitutes common employment; servants not on duty; recent legislation. 792

MAXIMS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

1. A man shall not be twice vexed for one 18 L. R. A and the same cause. Van Walters v. Marion County Bd. of Children's Guardians (Ind.) 431

2. Caveat emptor. McDonough v. Martin (Ga.) 343

3. In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis. Bernard v. Taylor (Or.) 859

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Maxim; de minimis non curat lex. 44

MINES.

The right to drill oil or gas wells through a stratum of coal belonging to another person, to reach oil or gas in a lower stratum belonging to the owner of the surface, is a right which exists at all times, although it must be exercised so as to do no violence to the rights of the owners of the coal. Charlton's Block Coal Co. v. Mellon (Pa.) 703

MISTAKE. See ASSUMPSIT, 2.

MONOPOLY. See CARRIERS, 21; COMMERCE, 5.

MORTGAGE. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 6; EMINENT DOMAIN, 8; EVIDENCE, 5; JUDICIAL SALE; LIENS, 1; SALE, 2; TAXES, 9, 10.

1. Statutory permission to the mortgagor to pay the taxes levied on the mortgage interest, and deduct the amount from the mortgage debt, does not make that remedy exclusive; but in case he pays the mortgage debt in full, and is afterwards compelled to pay such taxes to relieve his property from their lien, he may recover their amount from the mortgagee. San Gabriel Valley Land & W. Co. v. Witmer Bros. Co. (Cal.) 465

2. A mortgage on chattels afterwards manufactured does not give the mortgagee a sufficient title to sustain an action for conversion. Deeley v. Dwight (N. Y.) 298

3. An indemnity chattel mortgage upon a stock of goods is not void, as matter of law, in favor of creditors of the mortgagor, because of an extraneous agreement that he may continue to sell the goods in the usual course of trade, and use the proceeds to replenish the stock and defray the expenses of the business, applying the balance in discharge of the mortgage indebtedness, under a statute giving him the right to possession until foreclosure and sale; its invalidity depends upon the finding of fraud as a matter of fact. Ephraim v. Keltner (Wash.) 604

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also EMINENT DOMAIN.

Mortgage; efficacy of mortgage on chattels to be manufactured or acquired as independent articles, and not as increase or fruits of existing property; the general rule; effect as between the parties; effect of further act to perfect title in the mortgagee; property contemplated as additions to other property; the exception established by equity; application of equitable exceptions; where equitable exception is not recognized; the attitude of courts of law towards the equitable doctrine; sufficiency of record notice; the effect of Holroyd v. Marshall, in England. 298

Effect upon the validity of a mortgage of merchandise, of a provision or agreement giving the mortgagor the possession with power of sale: (1) the general rules; (2) mortgage showing possession with power of sale; (3) effect of extraneous agreement; (4) sales by mortgagor as agent for mortgagee; (5) how far the instrument is void in toto; (6) effect of Recording Acts; (7) effect of statute making fraud a question for the jury; (8) effect of mortgagee's taking possession; (9) analysis of the law in different jurisdictions. 604

MOTIONS.

1. That service of notice of a motion to place a case on the short-cause calendar is defective because the copy was left only with one who merely has desk room in the office which defendant's attorney occupies is waived if such attorney acquires knowledge of the attempted service, and, with reason to believe that plaintiff's attorney is relying on such service, suffers the case to be placed upon such calendar and tried without objection. Trefts v. Stahl (Ill. App.) 500

2. Knowledge on the part of defendant's attorney, of an attempted service upon him of a notice of motion to place a case upon the short-cause calendar, by leaving a copy with a co-occupant of the same office, will be assumed where it is not positively denied, but the affidavits of denial merely deny facts the nonexistence of which is perfectly consistent with such knowledge. Id.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also ASSUMPSIT, 8-5; BUILDINGS, 3; CONTRACTS, 6; ESTOPPEL, 6; EVIDENCE, 11; PARKS.

1. A municipal corporation cannot become a trustee to collect in its own name—especially at its own expense—separate sums of money due to some of its citizens for damages from the closing of streets by a railroad. New Haven v. New Haven & D. R. Co. (Conn.) 258

2. Valid ordinances have the force of laws, and are as binding upon inhabitants of a municipality as are the statutes of the state upon its citizens generally. Tacoma v. Little (Wash.) 872

3. A valid ordinance limiting the salary of councilmen is not repealed or modified by merely allowing and paying a larger salary, but the payment thereof is as to the excess unlawful. Id.

4. A councilman can perform no "extra services" in his official capacity, for which he can receive compensation in addition to his salary, even if the services rendered greatly exceed in value the amount of his salary. Id.

5. A ratification of a resolution of a common council donating city land to a railroad company, passed when the vice-president of the road was a councilman and voted for it, is effected by a subsequent resolution of the council passed at a time when he was not a member, directing the execution of a deed which will 18 L. R. A.

render valid a deed executed in pursuance of it. Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 387

6. An order or direction by the mayor to enforce an ordinance, which need not be made by a written order, is sufficiently made by a letter or order which is understood by both parties as a direction to enforce the ordinance, although it is not in words or form an order or even a request. Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph (Mo.) 590

7. The fact that the mode of building a cremating furnace is patented will not make the contract of a municipal corporation for its construction void, when the contract for performing the work and furnishing the materials is let to the lowest bidder, with the understanding that the patentee will allow the use of his patent and superintend its construction in consideration of a certain specified sum paid him by whoever secures the contract. Kilvington v. Superior (Wis.) 45

8. A village board may contract for a cremating furnace to consume garbage or dead animals, etc., as a means of conserving the health of the city, under the general power conferred to prevent and abate nuisances. Id.

9. The negligence of city employes in leaving uncovered an excavation in a street, made by them under direction of the superintendent of the city waterworks, for the purpose of connecting a private house with the street main, makes the city liable, although the work was done at the request of a private contractor who had agreed with the owner of the house to do the work. Wilson v. Troy (N. Y.) 449

10. The duty of providing and maintaining a city hall for the use of the city officers is a public and governmental use, for the negligence of its agents in the discharge of which the city of St. Paul, Minnesota, is not liable in a private action. Snider v. St. Paul (Minn.) 151

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Municipal corporations; municipal contracts for work or articles which embody a patented invention. 45

Validity of vote of common council or similar body as affected by personal interest of members. 367

NEGLECT. See also BATHING RESORT; CARRIERS, 8.

1. The question whether or not the result could have been anticipated is not the test of liability for an act which is negligence per se, but the person guilty of it is equally liable for its consequences whether he could have foreseen them or not. Sellick v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Mich.) 154

2. A higher degree of care and vigilance is required in dealing with a dangerous agency than in the ordinary affairs of life or business which involve little or no risk of injury to persons or property. Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. (Pa.) 759

3. Failure to provide a stopcock in the pipe connecting an oil tank with burners used for firing a brick kiln may be found by the jury to be negligence, notwithstanding there was a shut-off at each of the burners and one on the tank, where the tube adjacent to each burner was by reason of its construction liable to crack and allow the oil to escape, which in such case would ignite and render approach to the burner impossible because of the heat, and the valve on the tank could not be turned without a mechanical appliance, while in case the flow of the oil was not stopped a conflagration and explosion of the tank would be probable. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

4. Contributory negligence fairly imputable to the plaintiff according to his own evidence will defeat his right of action for an injury resulting from negligence of the defendant. Butcher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 519

5. Persons are justified in assuming greater risks to protect human life than would be sanctioned in other circumstances. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence; what constitutes. 509

NEGLIGENT SUPERIORS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS. 828

NEGROES. See CARRIERS, 22; CIVIL RIGHTS; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2.

NEWSPAPER. See SUNDAY.

NEW TRIAL. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 7.

1. A right to a new trial as matter of law is not lost by failure to take the statutory course to remove from the panel a juror who is related to the parties within such a degree as to be by statute disqualified to sit, if knowledge of the relationship is not obtained until after the trial. Jewell v. Jewell (Me.) 478

2. A principal cause of challenge to a juror, which was not known, and was not and could not have been known by the exercise of ordinary diligence, until after the verdict, will not require a new trial of a criminal case, unless injustice resulted to the prisoner from the fact that such juror served; and in determining this the court should look only to the evidence touching such cause of challenge, and not to that as to the prisoner's guilt. State v. Harrison (W. Va.) 224

3. To set aside a verdict because of an opinion entertained by a juror before he was sworn, it must appear to have been, not merely unsubstantial and hypothetical, but such as would have excluded him if it had been known before he was sworn. Id.

4. Mere business conversation by a juror with another person, entirely foreign to the case on trial, in the presence and hearing of the sheriff and other jurors, will not avoid the verdict. Id.

5. A mere separation of the jury will not entitle a person to a new trial, although in a criminal case where there has been an improper separation the State has the burden of showing beyond reasonable doubt that no injury resulted therefrom to the prisoner. Id. 18 L. R. A.

6. The testimony of jurors may be received to disprove or explain any separation, misconduct, or irregularity, but not to show their motives or that they were influenced by any admitted fact. Id.

7. Other grounds for a new trial cannot be filed after a motion for a new trial has been overruled and after the expiration of the three days allowed for filing such grounds by Ky. Code, § 342. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 63

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

New trial; disqualification of jurors as ground for; general statement of the law; waiver of objection by silence; ignorance of disqualification; neglect to make inquiries as affecting party's right; objections on the ground of juror's age; alienage; want of property qualification; irregularities of selection; bias of jurors; relationship; preconceived opinions; juror having served on grand jury; concealment of interest by juror; preponderance of evidence to show bias; criminality of juror. 473

NOTARY.

The office of notary public is a civil office of profit which cannot be held by a person holding the office of receiver of the United States land office, under Nev. Const. art. 4, § 9, providing that no person holding any lucrative office under the United States shall be eligible to any civil office of profit in the state. State v. Summerfield, v. Clarke (Nev.) 813

NOTICE. See HIGHWAYS, 4; MOTIONS, 1, TAXES, 6.

NUISANCES. See also BUILDINGS, 1; DAMAGES, 5; EQUITY, 2; ESTOPPEL, 5; FISHERIES; INJUNCTION, 5.

1. A nuisance cannot be abated with or without legal process, if it has been discontinued and has not been renewed when proceedings are begun against it. State, Rhodes, v. Saunders (N. H.) 646

2. The use, in burning brick, of a process that generates noxious gases which are wafted upon adjacent land, injuring and destroying growing crops of wheat, is a nuisance that will render a brick company using the process liable for the damages to the owner of the wheat. Fogarty v. Junction City Pressed Brick Co. (Kan.) 756

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nuisance; private remedy for. 553

By use of neighboring property. 756

NUNC PRO TUNC. See JUDGMENT, 1.

OCCUPYING CLAIMANTS. See COURTS, 10; IMPROVEMENTS, 1, 2; INJUNCTION, 4.

OFFICERS. See also COUNTIES, 1.

1. Members of a state board of taxation are not judicial officers within a constitutional provision requiring judicial officers to be elected by the people. Cleveland, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

2. An appointment to fill an office, of which the incumbent has been suspended under Fla. Const. art. 4, § 15, can be only for the remainder of the pending term and until the qualification of a successor. Advisory Opinion (Fla.) 594

3. A suspension from office and the appointment of another to fill the office under Fla. Const. art. 4, § 15, do not affect the suspended officer's right to qualify for or exercise the duties of a succeeding term of the same office, nor prevent the governor succeeding the one who made the suspension from commissioning the suspended officer for the new term. Id.

4. One elected or appointed to an office under an unconstitutional statute before it is adjudged to be so is an officer de facto. Parker v. State, Powell (Ind.) 587

5. Whether or not a tax collector was guilty of such neglect of duty in not receiving poll taxes on a certain day on which electors had the right to pay them to qualify for an election as will justify his suspension from office is a question for the governor under the Florida Constitution. State, Attorney-General, v. Johnson (Fla.) 410

6. The suspension of an officer by the governor for neglect of duty may be made, under the Florida Constitution, without previous notice of the charge against him; but the officer has a constitutional right to notice of the cause and of a hearing on such charges, and to reinstatement if they are not sustained by the evidence. Id.

7. The suspension of an officer for neglect of duty, whether it is to be considered as an exercise of judicial or administrative authority, is vested in the governor by the Florida Constitution. Id.

8. The term "eligible," in Nev. Const. art. 4, § 9, providing that United States officers shall not be eligible to civil office in the state, applies to appointive, as well as to elective, offices. State, Summerfield, v. Clarke (Nev.) 818

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Officers; who are.	818
Power of removal and suspension.	410
Validity of agreements extending beyond term.	447

OIL. See NEGLIGENCE, 8.

OPTION. See ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

PARKS.

Before land purchased by a city for a park has been actually dedicated to the public use the city may convey it to a railroad company for a yard and depot grounds, if no limitation or restriction as to alienation was inserted in the deed to it. Fort Wayne v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 387

PARLIAMENTARY LAW. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parliamentary law; effect of personal interest on validity of vote.	367
18 I. R. A.

PARENT AND CHILD. See INFANTS.

PARTIES. See ACTION OR SUIT, 4-6; MANDAMUS, 3.

PARTNERSHIP. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1, 2.

PATENTS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PAYMENT.

A direction by the maker of notes to an agent to apply money in his hands to the payment of the notes, which the agent holds as agent for the payee, does not of itself constitute or have the effect of such an application of the money. Moore v. Norman (Minn.) 359

PENALTY. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; FINE; RAILROADS, 8.

More than one penalty can be incurred by violating the Indiana Act of 1889 which requires a report at each railroad station at which there is a telegraph office as to whether trains are on time, and provides that "for each violation" in failing to report or making a false report a penalty may be recovered; but there can be only one forfeiture as to one train at any particular station on the same trip. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 502

PERPETUITIES.

An unlawful perpetuity is not created by a provision that executors shall sell all the real estate as soon as may be conveniently done after testator's death. Hope v. Brewer (N. Y.) 458

PHYSICIANS. See also JUDGMENT, 6.

1. The employment of a physician continues while sickness lasts, unless put an end to by the assent of the parties or revoked by the express dismissal of the physician. Lawson v. Conway (W. Va.) 627

2. The mere failure to effect a cure does not even raise a presumption of a want of proper care, skill, and diligence in a physician. Id.

3. A physician does not ensure that his treatment will be successful, but he is bound to bestow such reasonable ordinary care, skill, and diligence as physicians in the same neighborhood, in the same general line of practice, ordinarily have and exercise in like cases. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Physicians; liability for malpractice.	627
--	-----

PLEADING.

1. Plaintiff in an action upon a warranty cannot recover interest for a longer period than asked in his petition. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 524

2. A plea defectively verified may be verified in open court at the trial, under Ga. Code, § 3479, relating to amendments, and U. S. Rev. Stat. § 954, permitting the amendment, at any time, of any defect in process or pleadings. Bank of Edgefield v. Farmers Co-Op. Mfg. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 201

3. A petitioner who has no cause of action has no right to compel answers to interrogatories. Van Walters v. Marion County Bd. of Children's Guardians (Ind.) 481

4. An allegation in a suit to recover an overcharge of freight, that an excess was paid, authorizes an inference that it was paid by the shipper,—at least as against a demurrer. Louisville, H. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson (Ind.) 105

5. The invalidity, on the grounds of public policy, of a contract by a city with a railroad company, will be considered by the court in an action to enforce it, although such invalidity is not pleaded. New Haven v. New Haven & D. R. Co. (Conn.) 256

6. A demurrer to a complaint by a city upon a contract between it and a railroad company, by which it consents to the closing of certain streets on condition that the company pays to thirty-five different property-holders injured thereby the damages sustained, must be sustained, even if such property-holders have any right of action thereunder, since such right would be several, and not joint, and the court is not required to select and substitute one of the thirty-five claimants in place of the city. Id.

7. The difference between a complaint and a receipt attached as an exhibit, in respect to the date of a payment, does not make the complaint demurrable. Erickson v. Brookings County (S. D.) 347

8. A petition against a foreign corporation, showing that defendant had no agent within the state upon whom personal service could be had between the inception of the right and the commencement of the action, is not demurrable on the ground that the cause of action is barred. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 524

POND. See BOUNDARIES, 2, 3; WATERS, 6, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS

POOR. See COUNTIES, 1.

PRACTICAL JOKE. See TRIAL, 11.

PRESCRIPTION. See WATERS, 1.

PRESUMPTION. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See also CHECKS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Principal and agent; extent of authority conferred upon traveling salesman; authority to collect payment; effect of agent's possession of goods; authority to accept payment in anything else than money; authority to pledge principal's credit for traveling expenses; authority to sell samples; other cases relating to the powers of drummers. 663

PRIVATE RIGHTS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

18 L. R. A.

PROXIMATE CAUSE. See also RAILROADS, 13, 14.

1. The continued flow of burning oil, which would have been at once checked except for the master's negligent failure to provide the usual facilities for cutting off the supply, is the proximate cause which will render him liable in case of injury resulting therefrom to a servant, although this would not have happened if a fellow servant had not also been negligent in failing to cut off the supply by the use of the less adequate facilities that did exist. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Laack (Ill.) 215

2. The negligence of a city in leaving a street in an unsafe condition is legally the proximate cause of an injury which resulted therefrom to a traveler, although it would not have occurred except for the running away of a horse which became frightened and unmanageable because the bit of the bridle became loosened, if there was no negligence on the part of the traveler. Joliet v. Shufelt (Ill.) 750

PUBLICATION. See HOLIDAY.

PUBLIC BUSINESS. See MARKETS; STOCK AND PRODUCE EXCHANGE, 1.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 2.

Assessment by special taxation is not justified by § 53 of the Illinois City and Village Act, providing that in condemnation proceedings on supplemental petition an assessment may be made to raise the amount necessary to pay the compensation and damages awarded. Bloomington v. Latham (Ill.) 487

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; validity of assessments for. 487

PUBLIC LANDS. See WATERS, 11.

PUBLIC MONEYS. See APPROPRIATIONS.

PUNISHMENT. See CRIMINAL LAW, 4.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

1. The details of practice and pleading may be supplied by a railroad commission which is constituted a court of record, under the inherent power of every court of record to make such rules, not inconsistent with the law, as are necessary to the exercise of the powers conferred upon it. Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 393

2. Authority is given to the railroad commission to hear and determine complaints of unjust discriminations and preferences, under the North Carolina Railroad Commission Act, which expressly provides that if a railroad company is guilty of a violation of the rules of the commission, and after due notice of such violation does not make full recompense for the wrong or injury done, it shall incur a penalty, and also constitutes such commission a court of record. Id.

RAILROADS. See also COMMERCE, 2, 5, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8, 9; CONTRACTS, 6; EMINENT DOMAIN, 6, 7; HIGHWAYS, 2, 3; INJUNCTION, 2; PENALTY.

1. A statute providing that a "corporation, company, or person," operating a railroad, shall place in the passenger depot of such "company" a blackboard upon which such "company or person" shall cause to be written the fact as to whether trains are on time, is clearly intended to apply to corporations, as well as natural persons, although the word "corporation" is not repeated in each clause. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 502

2. The words "each passenger depot . . . located at any station . . . at which there is a telegraph office," at which a railroad company is required by Ind. Act 1889 to provide a blackboard on which shall be stated whether a train is on time or not, do not mean merely the station-house for passengers, but include every station where a train stops, if there is a telegraph office at such point at which information is received as to the arrival of trains at such stopping place. Id.

3. The penalty for failure to report on a blackboard the time of the arrival of trains, provided by Ind. Act 1889, § 2, cannot be avoided by the failure to provide a blackboard, which is expressly required to be done by § 1 of the Act. Id.

4. Injury to a colt by running into a barbed-wire fence along a railroad when frightened off the track by a train whistle does not make the railroad company liable, although the colt got upon the track through defects in the fence, where the railroad company is not required by statute to fence out stock. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ferguson (Ark.) 110

5. The omission of a required warning signal is evidence of negligence in running a train. Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 792

6. No statute is necessary to make a railroad company liable for failure to run trains with care and caution at a highway crossing; and the duty of the company may require due warning of the approach of the train by whistle or bell or in some other way. Vandewater v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (N. Y.) 771

7. The failure of an engineer to give signals required by statute at a highway crossing does not, as matter of law, make the railroad company liable for neglect of duty, where the provisions of the statute impose the duty upon the engineer and make him liable for a misdemeanor if he fails to comply therewith. Id.

8. Extraordinary care must be shown by a railroad company in the use of its tracks on one of the principal streets of a city, which is constantly used for street travel and in which there are three tracks, in order to exempt it from liability for injuring travelers on the street. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 63

9. The jury may properly find a railroad company guilty of negligence in making a flying switch across a highway from which the view of its tracks is somewhat obstructed,—especially where the trainmen saw a top carriage approaching the crossing, at which there was no means of warning the traveler, and the 18 L. R. A.

tracks formed an acute angle with the highway so that the train came up behind the carriage. York v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 60

10. Negligence of a railroad company in making a flying switch across one of the principal streets without any watchman at the crossing or any lookout on the front of the cars, which are being pushed by an engine 60 feet away, although the bell is ringing, is so gross as to make the railroad company liable for injury to a boy thirteen years old who is struck at the crossing just after he has got out of the way of a train going in the other direction on a parallel track, even if he was guilty of ordinary negligence and was engaged at the time in picking up pebbles from the street and examining them. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 63

11. A traveler on a public road cannot recover against a railroad company for injuries received at a crossing, if his own negligence in any degree contributed to the injury, unless the defendant, having opportunity to avert the danger after becoming aware of it, fails to use ordinary caution to do so. Butcher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 519

12. The jury may properly find due care on the part of a traveler on a highway who, upon nearing a railroad crossing, becomes aware of the approach of a train thereto, although after seeing the engine and several cars cross the highway he attempts to cross the tracks without looking out for other cars which may have been cut off from the train for the purpose of making a flying switch. York v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 60

13. The failure of a railroad company to give the signals required by law at a crossing must be the proximate cause of an injury in order to make the company liable therefor. Butcher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 519

14. The obstruction of a railroad crossing by a freight train for a time longer than the statute allows may be a concurrent cause with smoke, steam, and noise of another train in frightening a team which is waiting to cross, and render the railroad company liable for the damages thus occasioned, where the team would not have been frightened by the other train if it had not been concealed from view by the freight train which obstructed the crossing. Sellick v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Mich.) 154

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Railroad; negligence of railroad company in respect to flying switches or detached cars moving by their own momentum; contributory negligence. 63

Liability for obstructing highway crossings. 154

Necessity of signals at crossings. 519

Liability for failure to give signals. 771

REAL PROPERTY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Real property; power to cut off contingent interests. 881

When remainder under trust is vested. 881

RECITAL. See COVENANT.

RECORD. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 8.

REHEARING. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 12-15; COURTS, 1.

RESUME.

Subjects discussed and points decided. 865

SALE. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 8.

1. On the passing of title under a conditional sale by the vendor's election, no lien or incumbrance enures to his benefit for any unpaid portion of the purchase money. Crompton v. Beach (Conn.) 187

2. There can be no contract which shall give to one party all the benefits, and to the other, as well as the public, all the burdens of both a conditional sale and a chattel mortgage. Id.

2. A contract for the sale of a certain number of "merchantable brick" which are not yet segregated, but which are to be taken from a kiln containing a larger number, some of which are unmerchantable, does not pass the title although the purchase price is paid. Anderson v. Crisp (Wash.) 419

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; when title passes. 419

SCHOOLS. See COUNTIES, 2.

SEAMEN.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Seamen; exemption of wages of. 810

SERVICE. See also HOLIDAY; MOTIONS; TIME; WRIT AND PROCESS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Service; of process, when valid. 498

Validity of; other than personal. 500

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. See

VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 2.

SPENDTHRIFT TRUSTS. See

TRUSTS, 4.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See BILLS AND NOTES, 6; CONTRACTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

STATUTES. See also COURTS, 6; MANDAMUS, 2.

1. Constitutional requirements as to a vote on the "final passage" of a bill apply to amendments concurred in, after the bill had passed both Houses, by the House in which the bill was originally passed. Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers of World's Col. Expo. (Ky.) 556

2. The title "An Act in Relation to the Formation of Co-operative Associations" sufficient.

18 L. R. A.

ciently expresses the purpose of a statute to authorize corporations of "trade, or of carrying on any lawful mechanical, manufacturing, or agricultural business." Finnegan v. Knights of Labor Bldg. Assn. (Minn.) 778

8. Courts will look to all parts of a statute to determine the legislative purpose and intent. Cleveland, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

4. A statute which will admit of two interpretations, one valid and the other invalid, will receive the interpretation sustaining its validity. Id.

5. An entire statute must be construed together and effect given to every part of it, if this can be done without manifestly violating the intent of the Legislature. Id.

6. The rule that penal statutes are to receive a strict construction is not violated by taking the common-sense view of the statute as a whole, and giving effect to the object of the Legislature if a reasonable construction of the words permits it. State v. Indiana & L. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 503

7. The amendment of a statute "so as to read as follows" does not operate as a repeal of provisions which are not retained in the same precise words, if they are substantially re-enacted in equivalent words. Es Prime's Estate (N. Y.) 718

STOCK AND PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

See also ASSOCIATIONS.

1. The fact that a livestock market owned by a private corporation is the largest in the world does not make the business therein of an incorporated stock exchange which has no corporate relation with the market company a public business, such that the exchange can be compelled to deal with all persons at that market without discrimination. American Livestock Commission Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch. (Ill.) 190

2. The transfer to a corporation by its former manager, of a certificate of membership in an incorporated exchange which he held merely as its representative, and the request of the corporation that a certificate be issued to its present manager, do not give the corporation or its new manager any rights as a member of such exchange, where the rules of the latter require a formal application for membership, with payment of an initiation fee and an approval of the new member by the board of directors. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Stock exchange; rights as to rejection of members. 194

STREET RAILWAYS. See CARRIERS, 6-9; EVIDENCE, 87.

SUNDAY.

Selling Sunday newspapers is not a work of necessity or charity within a proviso excepting such works from the operation of a statute imposing a penalty for doing and performing worldly employment on Sunday. Com. v. Matthews (Pa.) 761

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sunday; what are works of necessity. 76.

SUPERIOR EMPLOYEES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS. 827

TAXES. See also ASSIGNMENT; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11; COURTS, 4; MORTGAGE, 1

1. "The principal office or place of business" for the purpose of taxation under the Wisconsin statutes, of a corporation owning and employing a large number of vessels, is at the office of a firm of agents one of whom is the president and the other the secretary of the company, where all the business of the company, except the annual and special meetings of stockholders for the election of directors and the annual meeting of the directors to elect officers, is conducted by such agents, although such elections are held in another place which is designated as its principal office in its articles of association by an unauthorized provision, as the statute only required them to state "the name and location" of such corporation. Milwaukee Steamship Co. v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 858

2. Interstate commerce is not taxed by a state tax on the track of a railroad company within the state and a proportionate part of its rolling-stock. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 729

3. A constitutional provision for uniform and equal taxation is complied with in respect to railroad property, when the same basis of assessment is fixed for all such property, and the same rate fixed for all property in any district subject to taxation. Id.

4. Providing for the assessment of railroad property by a state board, while other property is assessed by local boards, does not violate a constitutional provision giving the Legislature power to "prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation." Id.

5. The Indiana state board of tax commissioners for the assessment of railroad property has the same power in relation to the property and assessment over which it has jurisdiction that is possessed by county boards as to hearing grievances and making corrections. Id.

6. Sufficient notice of the assessment of railroad property is given by the law regulating the assessment, where the statute itself fixes the time of the meeting for grievances and corrections, and also requires each company to furnish a schedule of its property for use in the assessment. Id.

7. The costs of the construction of a railroad and the equipment thereof, the market value of its stocks and bonds, and its gross and net earnings, with all other matters appertaining thereto that will assist in arriving at a true cash value of the property, are proper for consideration in determining the value of the railroad property for taxation. Id.

8. A statute providing that the rolling-stock of a railroad company shall be listed and taxed in the several counties, etc., in the proportion that the main track in such county bears to the total length of the main track, does not impose double taxation on the ground that values of rolling-stock taxable in other states are imported into the state for the purpose of taxation. Id.

9. The validity of a tax upon a mortgage interest in land cannot be questioned by the mortgagee on the ground that the description in the assessment varies from that in the mortgage, where the land has been divided into lots and blocks and the assessment description complies substantially with the statutory requirements as to the assessment of a mortgage interest in such property, and is sufficiently particular and certain to afford the mortgagee the means of identification without being misled, although the mortgage describes the property with reference to the government survey. San Gabriel Valley Land & W. Co. v. Witmer Bros. Co. (Cal.) 465

10. Mere assignment of a mortgage before the levy of the tax upon the mortgage interest will not discharge the obligation of the assignor to pay the tax, if the assignment was made after the date which the statute fixes for its assessment. Id.

11. The exemption from taxation of educational institutions "and the grounds attached . . . necessary for their proper occupancy, use, and enjoyment, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit," extends to houses on college grounds used as residences for professors without charge for rent, and which have never been leased or used for profit, but does not extend to unimproved and unused land partly swampy and partly covered with timber, constituting a part of the college tract of 40 acres, although at some indefinite future time it may become necessary and be used as a place of recreation, and such use is contemplated. Ramsey County v. Macalaster College (Minn.) 278

Collateral inheritance tax.

12. A statute conferring upon a corporation a limited privilege of taking and holding property in the state does not relieve it from a legacy duty. Re Prime's Estate (N. Y.) 718

13. The exemption of "any religious, educational . . . or charitable corporation, or corporation organized for . . . other than business purposes," from the collateral inheritance tax by N. Y. Laws 1890, chap. 553, extends only to domestic corporations. Id.

14. A tax on the right of succession under a will or devolution in case of intestacy is imposed by the New York Collateral Inheritance Tax Law of 1887, chap. 718, amending the Act of 1885, chap. 493, although the language of the statute is "all property which shall pass, etc., shall be and is subject to a tax." Re Swift's Estate (N. Y.) 709

15. Personal property of a resident decedent, wheresoever situated, whether within or without the state, is subject to the New York Collateral Inheritance Laws. Id.

16. Real estate situated out of the state, owned by a decedent residing in the state at the time of his death, is not subject to the Collateral Inheritance Tax Laws of New York even after it has been converted into money which is in the hands of the executors. Id.

17. The residuary estate is not subject to any deduction for the purpose of determining the collateral inheritance tax payable thereon, because of a provision of the will directing payment of the tax on the specific legacies as an expense of administration. Re Swift's Estate (N. Y.) 709

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; place of taxation of corporation. 858
Validity of, on mortgages. 465
On collateral inheritances. 709, 718

TENDER.

1. A tender by a debtor to a creditor who in good faith asserts that the amount tendered is insufficient is not good if coupled with conditions the acceptance of which will involve an admission that no more is due. Moore v. Norman (Minn.) 359

2. A demand for the surrender of notes will prevent a tender from being effectual so as to discharge a chattel mortgage securing the notes, where the creditor in good faith claims that a larger sum is due. Id.

TIME.

The day of service may be excluded and the return day included in computing the six days before the time of appearance required by How. (Mich.) Stat. § 6827, for the service of a summons. People, Chaddock, v. Barry (Mich.) 837

TRIAL. See also EQUITY, 2.

1. There is no right of trial by jury in equity proceedings. State, Rhodes, v. Saunders (N. H.) 646

2. It is for the jury to determine whether, from the notoriety attending the construction of a sewer, a gas company having a proper system of inspection would or ought to have had knowledge of a leak in its pipe caused by construction of the sewer, sooner than the leak was in fact discovered. Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co. (Pa.) 759

3. The jury must determine whether the plumber or the city was responsible for the acts of laborers in leaving unguarded an excavation made in the street to connect private property with the city water main, where a city ordinance prohibited any person without the consent of the water board from tapping or making any connection with a distributing pipe, which had been interpreted to include the making of the excavation by the board, whose custom had been to furnish men for that purpose, and the plumber employed by the landowner had in accordance with such custom applied for and received the men, who were to be paid by the city, which was to be reimbursed by the plumber. Wilson v. Troy (N. Y.) 449

4. What constitutes a passenger depot or a station at a particular place is a question of fact. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co. (Ind.) 502

5. Whether a freight train obstructing a highway crossing did or did not give to the noise, steam, and smoke of another passing train a character which they would not possess in the absence of the obstruction, so as to make a concurrent cause of the frightening of a team, is a question for the jury where there is evidence that the team was accustomed to trains. Sellick v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Mich.) 154

6. Whether the agreement of a shipper to furnish a railroad company certain goods at a given price relieves a discrimination of rates in his favor of its objectionable features is a question of fact for the jury. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson (Ind.) 105

7. Whether lumbermen's tools, second-hand furniture, and camp equipment, are included within a policy of insurance on a stock of dry goods, groceries, hardware, queen's ware, hats, caps, boots, shoes, and such other articles not more hazardous as are usually kept for sale in country stores,—is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting as to the character of the property. Steels v. German Ins. Co. (Mich.) 85

8. It is a question of fact for the jury whether a carrier exercised reasonable care for a passenger who was in a feeble mental and physical condition. Croom v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 603

9. Questions of negligent direction by the foreman to a member of a section gang, as to removing a hand car from the track in front of an approaching train, and of the latter's contributory negligence, are for the jury. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 827

10. The court is authorized to pronounce certain conduct negligent, only when no other construction may reasonably be placed upon it in the circumstances. Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 793

11. The defense in an action of tort, that the act was done by way of a joke, makes a question for the jury whether or not the parties had been perpetrating practical jokes upon each other in such a way that the defendant had a right to believe that the plaintiff would accept his act as a joke. Wartman v. Swindell (N. J. Err. & App.) 44

12. The court should define "temporary insanity," where it has charged under the Texas statute that the guilt of a person who has committed a homicide is to be tried without reference to his drunkenness, unless that produced temporary insanity. Evers v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 421

13. The court cannot properly charge the jury that the statements of a witness as to verbal admissions of another should be received with caution, under a constitutional provision that judges "shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact." Kaufman v. Maier (Cal.) 124

14. The judge presiding at the trial may properly suggest to the jury possible methods of harmonizing seemingly contradictory evidence, although counsel do not allude to such explanation and it might not, without such suggestion, have occurred to them. York v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 60

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; right to jury in equity case.

646

TROVER. See ACTION OR SUIT, 1; MORTGAGE, 2; DAMAGES, 4.

TRUSTS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; COMMERCE, 5; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; COURTS, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1.

1. Express trusts of realty which are valid in their creation are made indestructible by the New York Statute of Uses and Trusts, §§ 68, 65 (4 R. S. 8th ed. p. 2489), which declare that the beneficiary cannot assign or in any manner dispose of his interest, and that every sale, conveyance, or other act of the trustee in contravention of his trust shall be absolutely void. Cuthbert v. Chauvet (N. Y.) 745

2. A trustee's offer of judgment or failure to answer in a suit attacking the trust is within the prohibition of a statute declaring that any act in contravention of the trust shall be void. Id.

3. A woman who purchases land with money fraudulently obtained from a man by a promise to marry him and to hold such land in lieu of her right to dower under the marriage may be held to be a trustee on her refusal to marry him, and the land charged with a lien for such money. Edwards v. Culbertson (N. C.) 204

4. Creditors cannot reach the interest of a debtor under a will creating a trust for his support during life, providing that the trustee shall make quarterly payments to him until his death,—at least where it does not appear that there is any accumulation of the income over and above the sum needed for his support. Leigh v. Harrison (Miss.) 49

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trusts; power of court to dissolve. 745

UNBORN CHILDREN. See ACTION OR SUIT, 2.

USURY.

1. It is not usury to include in a promissory note a stipulation for 10 per cent as an attorneys' fee if the note is not paid when due and suit is brought thereon. Dorsey v. Wolf (Ill.) 428

2. The contract of a member borrowing money from a building and loan association is not within the usury laws, where the rate of interest to be paid cannot be known until the maturity of the shares, and whether it will be greater or less than the legal rate is wholly contingent on the prosperity of the association. Reeve v. Ladies Bldg. Assn. (Ark.) 129

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Usury; in loans by building associations; contract held usurious; effect of voluntary payment; contract not usurious; constitutionality of statutes; necessity of strict conformity with statute. 129

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 6.

1. A vendee who, after discovering a defect in the title, makes an oral agreement by 18 L. R. A.

which he remains in possession until the record title can be perfected in his vendor, and never offers to surrender the premises, thereby waives a provision requiring the execution of a deed within a specified time. Kent v. St. Michael's Church (N. Y.) 881

2. A purchaser of land who does not offer to perform the contract on his part until several days after the time set for performance cannot enforce a forfeiture for nonperformance on the part of the vendor. Kraak v. Fries (D. C.) 143

VERIFICATION. See PLEADING, 2.

VIEW. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 11.

VILLAGES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

Ballots are not so marked as to be illegal under a statute prohibiting any "ornaments, designation, mutilation, symbol, or mark of any kind whatsoever," except the names of the candidates and of the offices to be filled, by the fact that on the face of the tickets between the words "For Electors of President and Vice-President," at the head of the ticket, and the names of the electors, are printed the words "National Republican Ticket," or on the face of other tickets, at about the middle, between the names of certain candidates, are the words "Free Suffrage Ticket." State, Law, v. Sazon (Fla.) 721

WAGERS. See BETTING, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

WAGES. See LEVY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

WATERS. See also BOUNDARIES; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 8; ICE; WHARVES, 2, 8.

1. No prescriptive rights can be acquired by an individual in public waters. Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson (N. H.) 679

2. There may be a severance of an abutter's private right of use and occupation in a public body of water, from his adjoining upland. Id.

3. An abutter has a common-law right to improve and occupy tide land above and below low-water mark, where it ought to be improved and occupied. Id.
See also WHARVES.

4. An abutter's use of the bed of a public water is governed by the rule of reasonableness applied to the facts of his case. Id.

5. The manner in which, and the extent to which, the bed of a public body of water can be reasonably appropriated to the exclusive use of a littoral proprietor, is in New Hampshire determinable on a bill in equity. Id.

6. Explicit legislative authority is necessary to the alienation to an individual of the public rights in the beds of large ponds. Id.

7. The waters of a great pond in New Hampshire cannot be lawfully diverted to the damage of one owning land on a stream flowing from the pond. Id.

8. The title to land under the waters of small inland lakes and ponds is presumed to belong to the proprietors of adjoining uplands. Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. (N. Y.) 695

9. So long as inland lakes continue capable of being put to any beneficial public use they are public waters; and the definition or test of navigability must be sufficiently broad and liberal to include all public uses, including boating for pleasure. Lamprey v. State (Minn.) 670

10. If a lake is navigable in fact its waters and bed belong to the state in its sovereign capacity, and a riparian patentee takes the fee only to the water line, but with all the rights incident to riparian ownership on navigable waters, including accretions or relictions. Id.

11. A patent by the United States for land forming the bed, or former bed, of a meandered lake, after all the lands bordering thereon have been disposed of by patent without reservation or restriction, is void and inoperative, as there is nothing to convey. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; riparian rights. 670, 679.

Ownership of bed of. 670, 695

Ownership of bed of lakes and ponds; small lakes and ponds; derelict and accretions; artificial ponds. 695

WHARVES.

1. One erecting a structure below the edge of a public body of water without having the question of its reasonableness judicially determined assumes the risk of its being found to be unreasonable and abated as a nuisance. Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson (N. H.) 679

2. Wharves or channels extending below low-water mark may be made by the proprietor of land adjoining navigable water, to connect himself with such water, so long as he does nothing to interfere with the free navigation of the waters. Prior v. Swartz (Conn.) 668

3. The designation of land under navigable water for the planting of and cultivation of oysters, under Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 2346, 2349, does not destroy the right of an adjoining owner to build wharves or dig channels below low-water mark in front of his land, for the purpose of connecting himself with navigable water. Id.

WILLS. See also TAXES, 17.

1. The recognition of holographic wills by Wyo. Act 1891, providing that they may be proved in the same manner as other private writings are proved, does not dispense with the necessity of two witnesses in order to make them valid, as in the case of other wills under Wyo. Rev. Stat. § 2237. Neer v. Conshick (Wyo.) 598
:8 L. R. A.

2. Real estate is converted into personality by a provision of a will that the executors shall, as soon as may be conveniently done after his death, sell and convert into money all the real estate. Hope v. Brewer (N. Y.) 458

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Will; holographic, when valid. 598

WITNESSES. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 8.

1. One to whom a check is given merely for the purpose of making a gift causa mortis to a third person to whom he gives a due-bill of the amount is not incompetent, by reason of interest, to testify, in a controversy between the donee and the donor's administrator, as to the validity of the gift. Re Taylor's Estate (Pa.) 855

2. A witness who has been impeached by statements out of court is not incompetent to prove his own corroborating statements. Hobbs v. State (Ind.) 774

3. Statements by a witness out of court are admissible to corroborate him, where he has been impeached by proof of other statements out of court. Id.

WORLD'S FAIR. See APPROPRIATIONS, 8.

WRIT. See CORAM NOBIS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS; HOLIDAY; WRIT AND PROCESS.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

1. In an action on a contract against a foreign corporation, service, to be good, must be made on an agent conducting the business out of which the contract arose. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 524

2. A summons mailed to the defendant by another person on whom it is served by mistake is not sufficient to give jurisdiction under a statute requiring personal service, but declaring in terms that service by mail of notices and other papers in actions shall not apply to the service of a summons. St. Paul Sav. Bank v. Authier (Minn.) 496

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

CASES IN 18 L. R. A.

18 L. R. A. 33, FULLERTON v. HILL, 48 Kan. 558, 29 Pac. 583.

Rights and liabilities of indorsers.

Cited in footnotes to Sheahan v. Davis, 28 L. R. A. 476, which upholds right of indorser for third person's benefit to recover from maker; Ewan v. Brooks-Waterfield Co. 35 L. R. A. 786, which holds maker of note payable to own order, indorsing same, liable as maker only.

Parol evidence as to liability on negotiable instruments.

Approved in Kline v. Bank of Tescott, 50 Kan. 97, 18 L. R. A. 535, 34 Am. St. Rep. 107, 31 Pac. 688; Benham v. Smith, 53 Kan. 498, 36 Pac. 997; Atkinson v. Bennet, 103 Ga. 511, 30 S. E. 599; Janes v. Citizens Bank, 9 Okla. 562, 60 Pac. 290,—holding parol evidence admissible to show liability of indorser on promissory note.

Cited in footnotes to Gregg v. Groesbeck, 32 L. R. A. 266, which holds parol evidence inadmissible that indorser had given instruction to destroy indorsement before note transferred; Peterson v. Russell, 29 L. R. A. 612, which holds oral evidence admissible to explain writing of names on back of note to which one is not a party; United States Nat. Bank v. Geer, 41 L. R. A. 439, which holds inadmissible, parol evidence to vary indorsement on certificate of deposit for payment of certain person's order for indorser's account.

18 L. R. A. 37, ULRICH v. ULRICH, 136 N. Y. 120, 32 N. E. 606.

Recovery for services rendered parent or near relative.

Approved in Re Stevenson, 86 Hun, 327, 33 N. Y. Supp. 493, holding no legal presumption to exist against agreement to pay for services rendered by child to parent; Gorrell v. Taylor, 107 Tenn. 570, 64 S. W. 888, holding child cannot maintain action to recover compensation for services to parent in absence of contract; Marion v. Farnan, 68 Hun, 384, 22 N. Y. Supp. 946, holding daughter may recover for services rendered mother, if compensation was expected and promised.

Cited in footnote to Plate v. Durst, 32 L. R. A. 404, which sustains right of minor living with near relative to recover actual value of services rendered on promise of compensation.

18 L. R. A. 39, MANSFIELD v. PLACE, 93 Mich. 450, 53 N. W. 617.

Construction of deed.

Cited in footnote to Davenport v. Gwilliams, 22 L. R. A. 244, holding general language of deed not limited by recital of intent to pass wife's interest.

Acquirement of right to harvest ice.

Approved in Williams v. Barber, 104 Mich. 33, 62 N. W. 155, holding right to harvest ice acquired by prescription, as effective as if acquired by deed.

Cited in footnotes to Becker v. Hall, 56 L. R. A. 573, which holds marking, staking, or cleaning ice not thick enough for harvesting, insufficient appropriation; Marsh v. McNider, 20 L. R. A. 334, which authorizes sale by tenant of right to cut ice on running stream.

18 L. R. A. 44, WARTMAN v. SWINDELL, 54 N. J. L. 589, 25 Atl. 356.

Liability for injury from act committed as a joke.

Cited in footnote to State v. Monroe, 43 L. R. A. 861, which holds druggist dropping croton oil on candy for customer for joke on third person liable for assault.

18 L. R. A. 45, KILVINGTON v. SUPERIOR, 83 Wis. 222, 53 N. W. 487.

Power of municipality.

Approved in Smiley v. MacDonald, 42 Neb. 14, 27 L. R. A. 545, 47 Am. St. Rep. 684, 60 N. W. 355, holding contract for collection and disposition of foul refuse of municipality valid exercise of police power; State ex rel. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Sheboygan, 111 Wis. 38, 86 N. W. 657, holding municipality may exercise such implied powers as are essentially necessary to render corporate existence effective; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 61 C. C. A. 98, 126 Fed. 36, upholding right of city to grant exclusive franchise for removal of garbage for fifty years.

Competitive bidding for public work.

Approved in Holmes v. Detroit, 120 Mich. 232, 45 L. R. A. 124, footnote p. 121, 77 Am. St. Rep. 587, 79 N. W. 200, holding competitive bidding not precluded by municipality specifying patented material for street pavement; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Shawnee County, 57 Kan. 274, 45 Pac. 616, holding contract for erection of patented bridge will not be restrained by injunction, where there is opportunity for competitive bidding; Hurley Water Co. v. Vaughn, 115 Wis. 477, 91 N. W. 971, holding statute relating to letting of contracts to lowest bidder inapplicable to contract for public water supply.

Cited in footnotes to Diamond v. Mankato, 61 L. R. A. 448, which holds street improvement contract avoided by limiting asphaltum to two particular kinds and inserting other conditions tending to restrict bidding; Fishburn v. Chicago, 39 L. R. A. 482, which holds void, as creating monopoly, ordinance for paving with asphaltum from lake owned by private corporation.

Cited in note (26 L. R. A. 711) on right of lowest bidder on public contract.

Plans and specifications for public work.

Distinguished in Ricketson v. Milwaukee, 105 Wis. 602, 47 L. R. A. 690, footnote p. 685, 81 N. W. 864, which holds void, contract for garbage crematory, let without filing plan and on indefinite specifications, and referring particularly to the annotation in 18 L. R. A. 45.

Contracts for public work or service.

Distinguished in Erskine v. Steele County, 4 N. D. 344, 28 L. R. A. 647, 60 N. W. 1050, holding warrant issued by county in payment of services rendered under ultra vires contract void.

18 L. R. A. 49, LEIGH v. HARRISON, 69 Miss. 923, 11 So. 604.

Subjecting trust estate to claims of creditors.

Cited in footnotes to Re Qua v. Graham, 52 L. R. A. 641, which holds annuity in wife's will in lieu of other interest, accepted by husband, not trust beyond reach of creditors; Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 57 L. R. A. 384, which denies power to create equitable life estate free from debts of beneficiary; Murphy v. Delano, 55 L. R. A. 727, which holds income of spendthrift trust not within reach of creditors by void agreement of trustees to pay certain portion of income absolutely to beneficiary.

Distinguished in Stern v. Hampton, 73 Miss. 565, 19 So. 300, holding, where whole equitable interest is vested in widow and children, without restriction, latter may convey to former, and mortgage executed by her upon the property is valid as against her creditors.

18 L. R. A. 53, OLMSTEAD v. BACH (Md.) 25 Atl. 343.

Judgment as bar.

Reversed on rehearing in 78 Md. 132, 22 L. R. A. 74, 44 Am. St. Rep. 273, 27 Atl. 501, holding satisfied judgment for one week's wages of discharged employee bar to subsequent action.

18 L. R. A. 55, NICHOLS v. SOUTHERN P. CO. 23 Or. 123, 37 Am. St. Rep. 664, 31 Pac. 296.

Assignability of railroad coupon ticket.

Approved in The Willamette Valley, 71 Fed. 713, holding purchaser from ticket broker of return part of round-trip ticket containing no provision against transferability entitled to use same.

Ticket as prima facie evidence of right to ride.

Approved in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ing, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 399, 68 S. W. 722, holding excursion ticket prima facie evidence of possessor's right to ride.

Ticket limited to specified "branch."

Cited in footnote to Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Parry, 22 L. R. A. 251, which holds round-trip ticket by specified "branch" good on main line only on trains connecting with branch trains.

Ticket brokerage.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 152) on statutes against ticket brokerage or "scalping."

Right of stop-over on coupon ticket.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 774) on right of passenger to stop over.

18 L. R. A. 60, YORK v. MAINE C. R. CO. 84 Me. 117, 24 Atl. 790.

Negligence in making flying switch.

Cited in Smith v. Maine C. R. Co. 87 Me. 349, 32 Atl. 967, and Baker v. Kansa;

City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 147 Mo. 159, 48 S. W. 838, holding railroad company guilty of implied negligence in making "flying switch" at crossing without using proper precautions to protect travelers from injury.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 64) on negligence of railroad company as to flying switches or detached cars moving by their own momentum.

Contributory negligence at crossing.

Approved in Day v. Boston & M. R. Co. 96 Me. 217, 90 Am. St. Rep. 335, 52 Atl. 771, setting aside verdict against railroad company where evidence did not show that one killed at crossing looked or listened.

Distinguished in Giberson v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 344, 36 Atl. 400, holding person failing to look out for approach of cars at village railroad crossing guilty of contributory negligence.

Duty of trial judge.

Cited in Hamlin v. Treat, 87 Me. 316, 32 Atl. 909, and Jameson v. Weld, 93 Me. 358, 45 Atl. 299, holding presiding justice may suggest to jury the real issues, and harmonize contradictory arguments of counsel.

Setting aside verdict.

Approved in Pollard v. Maine C. R. Co. 87 Me. 62, 32 Atl. 735, and Griswold v. Lambert, 89 Me. 536, 36 Atl. 1046, holding court will not set aside verdict unless so clearly wrong that impartial men would not have rendered it, except by mistake.

Province of jury.

Followed in Goodwin v. Boston & M. R. Co. 84 Me. 210, 24 Atl. 816, holding determination of facts and circumstances attending injury, and whether acts or omissions of parties were prudent or negligent, questions for jury.

Waiver of objections to charge to jury.

Approved in State v. Richards, 85 Me. 257, 27 Atl. 122, holding failure of counsel to make proper and timely objections to erroneous charge to jury by court deemed a waiver.

18 L. R. A. 63, KENTUCKY C. R. CO. v. SMITH, 93 Ky. 449, 20 S. W. 392.

Care in use of tracks.

Cited in Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Foxworth, 41 Fla. 61, 79 Am. St. Rep. 149, 25 So. 338, holding it not erroneous to charge jury that failure of railway company to provide flagman at highway crossing in village while switching cars was gross negligence.

Cited in footnote to West Virginia C. & P. R. Co. v. State, 61 L. R. A. 574, which holds company liable for injury to bystander by car broken loose from train and thrown from track by collision with other car at foot of decline.

Flying switches.

Cited in Bradley v. Ohio River & C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 742, 36 S. E. 181, holding railway company guilty of negligence per se in shunting or "kicking" cars across highway in populous community, without proper precaution for safety of travelers.

Cited in footnotes to Roth v. Union Depot Co. 31 L. R. A. 855, which holds railroad liable for kicking car around curve down grade at place where track used as footpath; Tobey v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 496, which holds it negligent to kick cars at speed of more than 6 miles an hour, in violation of ordinance; Schaible v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 21 L. R. A. 600, which holds kicking cars without attendant in railroad yard not negligence per se; York v. Maine C. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 60, which authorizes finding of negligence in making flying switch across highway; Pomponio v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 32 L. R. A. 530, which requires reasonable care in making flying switch at crossing kept planked by company for employees.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 292) on duty to maintain lookout on railroad train.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Schleiger v. Northern Terminal Co. 43 Or. 15, 72 Pac. 324, holding it question for jury whether child exercises care required of one of his age and development; Monroe v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 129 Mich. 312, 88 N. W. 888, holding conflicting testimony as to care taken by one injured by train making flying switch at crossing properly submitted to jury.

View by jury.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 375) on view by jury.

Supplemental ground for motion for new trial.

Cited in Wooldridge v. White, 105 Ky. 252, 48 S. W. 1081, holding additional grounds for new trial may be offered after expiration of three days, if of such nature that they ought to be considered before original motion is disposed of.

Setting aside excessive verdict.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Long, 94 Ky. 420, 22 S. W. 747, holding verdict for $26,000 in personal injury case excessive.

18 L. R. A. 68, VENABLE v. WABASH WESTERN R. CO. 112 Mo. 103, 20 S. W. 493.

Inchoate right of dower.

Approved in Chouteau v. Missouri P. R. Co. 122 Mo. 384, 22 S. W. 458, holding voluntary conveyance of land by husband to railroad corporation destroyed wife's inchoate right of dower; Baker v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 122 Mo. 398, 30 S. W. 301 (distinguished in dissenting opinion), majority holding wife's inchoate right of dower completely cut off as to land conveyed by husband to railroad company; Bartlett v. Ball, 142 Mo. 36, 34 S. W. 583, holding inchoate right of dower subject to legislative changes until vested on death of husband; Bartlett v. Tinsley, 175 Mo. 332, 75 S. W. 143, holding legislature may modify or abolish inchoate right of dower.

Cited in footnote to Flynn v. Flynn, 42 L. R. A. 98, which denies wife's right to any part of proceeds of land taken in eminent domain, because of inchoate right of dower.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 79) on power of husband or his creditors to defeat wife's right of dower.

Public use.

Cited in Southern P. Co. v. Hyatt, 132 Cal. 243, 54 L. R. A. 524, 64 Pac. 272, holding land conveyed to railroad company for right of way constitutes dedication to public use; State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 588, 42 L. R. A. 126, 46 S. W. 981 (concurring opinion), holding statutory authorization of telegraph and telephone companies to obtain right of way and condemn lands recognizes such use as a public one; State ex rel. Allison v. Hannibal & R. County Gravel Road Co. 138 Mo. 346, 36 L. R. A. 460, 39 S. W. 910, holding expiration of turnpike company's charter in no wise affects public use of highway in which said company had only easement.

Consensus of opinion and practice of legal profession.

Approved in Watson v. Alderson, 146 Mo. 351, 69 Am. St. Rep. 615, 48 S. W. 478, holding general consensus of opinion of the bar that creditors of an heir have no right to contest validity of will is persuasive evidence of right; Matz v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 85 Fed. 189, holding uniform contemporaneous practice and opinion of the bar with reference to particular statute should have weight in determining its construction; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 125, 33 S. W. 480, holding municipal ordinance sanctioned by contemporaneous and long-continued practice will not be declared invalid except for most incontrovertible reasons; Fears v. Riley, 148 Mo. 64, 49 S. W. 836, holding common consent of legal profession of much persuasive force in determining meaning of statute providing for change of venue in case of joint defendants; Steinhauser v. Spraul, 127 Mo. 561, 27 L. R. A. 446, 28 S. W. 620, holding failure after diligent search to find rule of law fixing liability of wife for injuries suffered by domestic servant is cogent evidence of nonexistence of rule; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Meservey, 103 Mo. App. 194, 77 S. W. 137, holding opinion of legal profession as to construction of charter provision persuasive evidence of its true meaning.

18 L. R. A. 75, FLOWERS v. FLOWERS, 89 Ga. 632, 15 S. E. 834.

Competency of witness.

Cited on subsequent appeal in 92 Ga. 690, 18 S. E. 1006, holding one who defends application for dower individually, and not as executor, may testify as to transactions with deceased.

Right to, and defeat of, dower.

Approved in Redmond v. Redmond, 112 Ky. 766, 66 S. W. 745, holding widow entitled to dower in land conveyed to son at husband's request to defeat dower; Newton v. Newton, 162 Mo. 185, 61 S. W. 881, holding equity will enforce right to dower as against conveyance made by husband with intent to defraud wife of her marital rights.

Cited in footnotes to Phelps v. Phelps, 25 L. R. A. 625, which denies dower rights in land conveyed to third person on payment by husband; Venable v. Wabash Western R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 68, which holds inchoate right of dower destroyed by husband's voluntary conveyance for railroad right of way; Stroup v. Stroup, 27 L. R. A. 523, which holds dower right attaches to land paid for by husband, but conveyed by invalid trust to another for his benefit; Butler v. Fitzgerald, 27 L. R. A. 252, which holds dower interest in land alienated by husband reached by taking value at time of assigning dower, less value of improvements by alienees; Haggerty v. Wagner, 39 L. R. A. 384, which holds wife's inchoate interest in husband's interest as cotenant of land subject to defeat by partition; Dayton v. Corser, 18 L. R. A. 80, which holds inchoate dower right not defeated by execution sale.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 257) on power of legislatures to change or destroy estates by dower, curtesy, or similar estates.

18 L. R. A. 80, DAYTON v. CORSER, 51 Minn. 406, 53 N. W. 717.

Dower right.

Approved in Lynde v. Wakefield, 19 Mont. 29, 47 Pac. 5, and Butler v. Fitzgerald, 43 Neb. 200, 27 L. R. A. 254, 47 Am. St. Rep. 741, 61 N. W. 640, holding dower right of surviving husband or wife not defeated by execution sale; Aretz v. Kloos, 89 Minn. 438, 95 N. W. 216, holding that wife's interest in husband's land would not pass under execution sale; Holmes v. Holmes, 54 Minn. 355, 56 N. W. 46, holding that wife's statutory interest in husband's lands cannot be set off in divorce suit; Roberts v. Meighen, 74 Minn. 277, 77 N. W. 139, holding assignee of purchaser at mortgage sale has right to satisfy judgment lien subsisting against estate to preserve dower interest of purchaser's wife; Williamson v. Selden, 53 Minn. 77, 54 N. W. 1055, holding that action of insolvency against husband in no wise affects dower interest of wife.

Cited in Luse v. Reed, 63 Minn. 7, 65 N. W. 91, refusing to determine whether surviving husband's statutory interest subject to payment of wife's debts.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 78) on power of husband or his creditors to defeat wife's right of dower.

Limited in Johnson v. Minnesota Loan & T. Co. 75 Minn. 6, 74 Am. St. Rep. 438, 77 N. W. 421, holding surviving husband's statutory interest subject to payment of its just proportion of wife's debts.

Distinguished in Merrill v. Security Trust Co. 71 Minn. 65, 70 Am. St. Rep. 312, 73 N. W. 640, holding adjudication and sale of husband's estate in bankruptcy completely defeats inchoate interest of wife in such estate.

18 L. R. A. 82, DAVIS v. LANING, 85 Tex. 39, 34 Am. St. Rep. 784, 19 S. W. 846.

Civil rights of convict.

Approved in Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 112 Iowa, 44, 51 L. R. A. 143, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800, holding children of beneficiary, who forfeited her rights to insurance by murdering insured, cannot claim the insurance as her heirs.

Cited in footnotes to Smith v. Becker, 53 L. R. A. 141, which holds descent of property not cast on heirs of person by life sentence of latter; Kenyon v. Saunders, 26 L. R. A. 232, which upholds convict's right to maintain action to enforce property rights; Wilson v. King, 23 L. R. A. 802, which holds maintenance of civil action by person in one state not prevented by his sentence to death in another.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 515) on effect on marriage relation of conviction and sentence of either husband or wife.

18 L. R. A. 85, STEELE v. GERMAN INS. CO. 93 Mich. 81, 53 N. W. 514.

Failure to give notice or make proof of loss or injury.

Cited in Law v. New England Mut. Acci. Asso. 94 Mich. 268, 53 N. W. 1104; Allen v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 106 Mich. 209, 64 N. W. 15; Peck v. German F. Ins. Co. 102 Mich. 53, 60 N. W. 453,—holding failure of insured to furnish proof of loss within time stipulated bars right of action; Southern F. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 625, 52 L. R. A. 71, footnote p. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216, 36 S. E. 821, holding policy not avoided by failure to furnish proofs of loss within time specified; Mason v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 82 Minn. 339, 83 Am.

St. Rep. 433, 85 N. W. 13, holding that, in absence of provision for forfeiture, failure of insured to render proof of loss within time fixed by policy does not relieve insurer from liability; Rheims v. Standard F. Ins. Co. 39 W. Va. 684, 20 S. E. 670; Continental F. Ins. Co. v. Whitaker (Tenn.) 64 L. R. A. 456, 79 S. W. 119; Gerringer v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 133 N. C. 413, 45 S. E. 773,—holding policy not forfeited by failure to make timely proofs of loss.

Cited in footnotes to Ermentrout v. Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. 30 L. R. A. 346, which holds policy requiring "immediate notice" of loss forfeited by sixty days' delay in giving notice; Peabody v. Satterlee, 52 L. R. A. 956, which requires reception, not mere mailing, of statement as to time and origin of fire within time specified; Woodmen Acci. Asso. v. Byers, 55 L. R. A. 291, which holds failure to give notice of injury excused by derangement of insured; Foster v. Fidelity & C. Co. 40 L. R. A. 833, which holds twenty-nine days' delay in giving notice of accident fatal under policy requiring immediate notice.

Distinguished in White v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 128 Cal. 134, 60 Pac. 666, holding failure of insured to comply with provision in policy to furnish proof of loss within time stipulated, bar to right of action; California Sav. Bank v. American Surety Co. 87 Fed. 121, holding stipulation for giving notice of default on surety bond, material, performance of which is condition precedent to right of recovery.

Failure to serve notice of death.

Cited in Dezell v. Fidelity & C. Co. 176 Mo. 281, 75 S. W. 1102, holding policy not forfeited in absence of provision therefor, by failure to give timely notice of death.

Cited in footnote to Trippe v. Provident Fund Soc. 22 L. R. A. 432, which holds failure to serve notice of death within time stipulated waived by its retention and request for further information.

Proof of loss as conferring right of action.

Cited in Northern Assur. Co. v. Hanna, 60 Neb. 31, 82 N. W. 97, and Rynalski v. Insurance Co. 96 Mich. 396, 55 N. W. 981, holding compliance by insured with conditions of policy by offering proof of loss confers right to maintain action on policy.

Effect of agent's knowledge of falsity of application.

Cited in footnotes to Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 52 L. R. A. 665, which holds statement that life tenant has fee-simple title to insured property not avoid policy where agent knew facts; Sternaman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 57 L. R. A. 319, which denies insurer's right to rely on warranty by applicant that answers properly recorded, where medical examiner knew otherwise.

Binding effect of acts of agent.

Cited in Continental Ins. Co. v. Chew, 11 Ind. App. 332, 54 Am. St. Rep. 506, 38 N. E. 417, holding failure on part of insurance agent in filling out application, to record correctly answers of applicant, imputed negligence of company and not misrepresentations of applicant; Coles v. Jefferson Ins. Co. 41 W. Va. 267, 23 S. E. 732, and Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co. 122 Mich. 263, 80 N. W. 1088, holding action of insurance agent in naming condition of policy relative to use of factory at nighttime binding upon company.

— Acts of agents, clerks, or subagents.

Cited in Pollock v. German F. Ins. Co. 127 Mich. 472, 86 N. W. 1017, holding acts of agents or clerks, when done within scope of their general authority, binding upon insurer.

Cited in footnotes to Goode v. Georgia Home Ins. Co. 30 L. R. A. 842, which holds insurance company represented by agent's clerk; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Bradford, 55 L. R. A. 408, which holds company liable on policy delivered without knowledge of duly authorized agent, by his subagent; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Thornton, 55 L. R. A. 547, which holds appointment of subagents within implied authority of insurance agent for territory with radius of 35 miles; Bradford v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 49 L. R. A. 530, which denies insurance agent's liability for loss on forbidden policy on which clerk forged his name.

18 L. R. A. 88, NORTON v. TAYLOR, 35 Neb. 466, 37 Am. St. Rep. 441, 53 N. W. 481.

Approved on rehearing in 40 Neb. 394, 58 N. W. 953.

Caveat emptor as applicable to judicial sales.

Approved in Peterborough Sav. Bank v. Pierce, 54 Neb. 719, 75 N. W. 20, and Butler v. Fitzgerald, 43 Neb. 202, 27 L. R. A. 255, 47 Am. St. Rep. 741, 61 N. W. 640, holding purchaser at judicial sale takes property subject to rule of caveat emptor.

Cited in Hammond v. Chamberlain Bkg. House, 58 Neb. 447, 76 Am. St. Rep. 106, 78 N. W. 718, holding rule of caveat emptor applicable to judicial sales.

Setting aside judicial sales.

Cited in Kampman v. Nicewaner, 60 Neb. 211, 82 N. W. 623, holding court of equity warranted in setting aside judicial sales, even after confirmation, where purchase made through fraud or mistake.

— Notice of condition of title.

Approved in Hooper v. Castetter, 45 Neb. 76, 63 N. W. 135, holding court will not set aside mortgage sale if it is apparent that purchaser had full knowledge of existence of encumbrances upon estate purchased; Motley v. Motley, 53 Neb. 382, 68 Am. St. Rep. 608, 73 N. W. 738, holding purchaser of lands at administrator's sale chargeable with notice of dower interest apparent from record of proceedings under which sale is made; Nye & S. Co. v. Fahrenholz, 49 Neb. 278, 59 Am. St. Rep. 540, 68 N. W. 498, holding purchaser at judicial sale charged with notice of condition of title of property purchased and of appraisement.

— Proper party in interest.

Cited in Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Creighton Theatre Bldg. Co. 51 Neb. 664, 71 N. W. 279, holding, upon appeal from an order confirming judicial sale, successful bidder proper party in interest and subject to jurisdiction of court.

18 L. R. A. 95, JONES v. JONES, 95 Ala. 443, 11 So. 11.

Legislative divorce.

Cited in footnote to Re Christensen, 41 L. R. A. 504, which denies power of legislature to grant divorce at instance of party at fault, without other party's consent.

Divorce for desertion.

Cited in footnotes to Hardie v. Hardie, 25 L. R. A. 697, which holds divorce for desertion not authorized where wife, on receiving blow from husband, leaves house without intent to remain away permanently; Tirrell v. Tirrell, 47 L. R. A. 750, which holds mere payment of allowance to abandoned wife under order of court will not prevent divorce for desertion.

L. R. A. AU.—VOL. III.—8.

Allowance of alimony.

Cited in Downey v. Downey, 98 Ala. 377, 21 L. R. A. 679, 13 So. 412, holding court of equity will not, after dissolution of marriage, entertain suit for alimony against former husband.

Cited in footnote to Hooper v. Hooper, 44 L. R. A. 725, which sustains allowance of gross sum from husband's estate in addition to monthly alimony.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 679) on suit for alimony after decree of divorce.

18 L. R. A. 100, SCHAEFFER v. JACKSON TWP. 150 Pa. 145, 30 Am. St. Rep. 792, 24 Atl. 629.

Defective highways and bridges.

Cited in Cage v. Franklin Twp. 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 538, holding township liable for natural and probable consequences of failure to keep public ways in safe condition; Habecker v. Lancaster Twp. 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 556, 16 Lanc. L. Rev. 180, 44 W. N. C. 53, holding township not liable for injury to traveler on account of defective highway, where traveler's horse becomes unmanageable by breaking of harness; Kieffer v. Hummelstown, 151 Pa. 312, 17 L. R. A. 220, 24 Atl. 1060, holding township not liable for injuries suffered by traveler whose horses took fright on account of shooting, and ran into stone pile at road side, which in no wise obstructed wagon track; Kitchen v. Union Twp. 171 Pa. 156, 33 Atl. 76, holding township liable for failure to provide proper guard rail along dangerous part of highway, where plaintiff was precipitated over embankment by horse becoming frightened.

Distinguished in Yoders v. Amwell Twp. 172 Pa. 459, 37 W. N. C. 515, 51 Am. St. Rep. 750, 33 Atl. 1017, holding township liable for failure to maintain guard rails on highway bridge over stream, which failure resulted in plaintiff's being backed off bridge and into stream by frightened horse; Closser v. Washington Twp. 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 126, holding township liable to injured individual who, while riding along narrow highway, was thrown down unguarded embankment by horse becoming frightened.

— Liability for death of traveler.

Cited in Dixon v. Butler Twp. 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 340, 40 W. N. C. 212, holding township not liable for death of plaintiff's wife, which resulted from collision with passing train at dangerous railroad grade crossing; Card v. Columbia Twp. 191 Pa. 270, 43 Atl. 217, holding township not liable for death of plaintiff's wife, who was riding in conveyance of private carrier, through whose negligence tugs of harness became detached from whiffletrees, causing conveyance to go over embankment which was without guard rail.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 398, 58 L. R. A. 403, 89 Pac. 338, holding one liable only for natural and probable results of his conduct; McCauley v. Logan, 152 Pa. 205, 31 W. N. C. 438, 25 Atl. 499, holding lumberman whose boat or raft is swept from its moorings during extraordinary rise of water, and damages bridge builder's false work, not liable; Bockin v. Bethlehem, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 389, holding it duty of plaintiff to show by preponderance of evidence, proximate cause of injury complained of.

Modified in Cage v. Franklin Twp. 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 94, holding question of proximate cause of injury suffered by one having balky horse back off unprotected wing wall of bridge, properly for jury.

18 L. R. A. 105, LOUISVILLE, E. & ST. L. CONSOL. R. CO. v. WILSON, 132 Ind. 517, 32 N. E. 311.

Recovery of overcharge.

Cited in Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wolcott, 141 Ind. 279, 50 Am. St. Rep. 320, 39 N. E. 451, holding payment of advances made in freight rates after tender of freight for shipment not voluntary, and recoverable by express terms of Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 5333; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Condon, 10 Ind. App. 539, 38 N. E. 71, holding right of action to recover excessive freight charges is in consignor where consignee deducted amount from price of goods.

Discrimination in rates.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Southern R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 246, which denies carrier's right to discriminate in favor of high official, larger shipper, or powerful politician; Hoover v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 263, which authorizes giving lower rates for transportation of coal to manufacturing company than coal dealer; Barrington v. Commercial Dock Co. 33 L. R. A. 116, which denies power to discriminate between similar vessels using wharf for landing place; Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 394, which holds carrier not required to give equal facilities to express companies.

— By telegraph company.

Cited in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 44 Neb. 346, 27 L. R. A. 628, footnote p. 622, 48 Am. St. Rep. 729, 62 N. W. 506 (dissenting opinion), majority holding difference in telegraph rates to morning and evening paper not illegal discrimination.

— By water company.

Cited in footnote to Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 41 L. R. A. 240, which holds discrimination in rates charged consumers for water, unlawful.

— At common law.

Cited in Murray v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 C. C. A. 66, 92 Fed. 872, holding that, independent of statute, the common law affords shipper cause of action against common carrier for discriminating in rates of transportation.

Cited in footnote to Cowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. 18 L. R. A. 221, which holds discrimination between shippers in freight rates not remedial at common law.

Stipulation of shipper not to ship by rival carrier.

Cited in footnote to Lough v. Outerbridge, 25 L. R. A. 674, which denies right of one refusing to stipulate against shipping by rival vessel to special rates offered to persons stipulating.

18 L. R. A. 110, ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. CO. v. FERGUSON, 57 Ark. 16, 38 Am. St. Rep. 217, 20 S. W. 545.

Injury to animals.

Cited in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Scott, 68 Ark. 416, 59 S. W. 762, holding railroad company not liable to owner of horse which, upon taking fright, left highway and ran over railroad bridge and was injured.

Cited in footnote to Johnson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 744, which holds railroad company liable for horses killed on unfenced track.

18 L. R. A. 113, GOODRICH v. ATCHISON COUNTY, 47 Kan. 355, 27 Pac. 1006.

Condemnation proceedings.

Approved in Armstrong v. Moore, 1 Kan. App. 458, 40 Pac. 834, holding in proceedings to condemn mortgaged land, notice to mortgagor is legally sufficient.

Cited in Rand v. Ft. Scott, W. & W. R. Co. 50 Kan. 118, 31 Pac. 683, holding mortgagor in possession "owner" within meaning of statutes relating to condemnation; Mathewson v. Skinner, 66 Kan. 312, 71 Pac. 580, holding wife occupying homestead with husband not entitled to notice of highway proceedings; Clement v. Wichita & S. W. R. Co. 53 Kan. 687, 37 Pac. 133, holding recitals in report of condemnation commissioners prima facie proof of proper notice.

Condemnation proceedings as affecting liens or secret equities.

Cited in Phipps v. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 145, 48 Pac. 573, holding money paid on award in condemnation proceedings had in due form passes title to land condemned, free from secret equities of those failing to appeal at proper time; Williams v. Hutchinson & S. R. Co. 62 Kan. 413, 84 Am. St. Rep. 408, 63 Pac. 430, holding action of ejectment not maintainable by judgment creditor to recover land condemned, after payment of award to owner who was judgment debtor; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Need, 2 Kan. App. 496, 43 Pac. 997, holding rights of mere lien holder not affected by condemnation proceedings instituted by railroad company where such company is itself owner of fee; Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Thayer, 54 Kan. 260, 38 Pac. 266, holding mortgage creditors not being owners of land have no legal or equitable right in condemnation award for railroad right of way; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Nashua Sav. Bank, 52 Kan. 469, 35 Pac. 18, and Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Sheldon, 53 Kan. 172, 35 Pac. 1105, holding right of way of railroad company, acquired by eminent domain, free from mortgage.

18 L. R. A. 120, GRIGGS v. DAY, 136 N. Y. 152, 48 N. Y. S. R. 853, 32 Am. St. Rep. 704, 32 N. E. 612.

Rehearing denied in 137 N. Y. 542, 32 N. E. 1001.

Account books as evidence.

Cited in footnote to Re Fulton, 35 L. R. A. 133, which holds book containing charges against one person only inadmissible.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 539) on use of person's books of account as evidence on issues between other parties.

Value of collateral securities.

Cited in Whitehead v. Heidenheimer, 57 App. Div. 598, 68 N. Y. Supp. 704, holding face value of collateral securities is prima facie their real value; Barber v. Hathaway, 47 App. Div. 167, 62 N. Y. Supp. 329, holding, in absence of proof of insolvency of obligor in bond held as collateral, amount unpaid is prima facie the value of the security.

Value of book accounts or note.

Approved in Kennett v. Hopkins, 58 App. Div. 416, 69 N. Y. Supp. 18, holding liquidating partner, in absence of proof to contrary, chargeable with face value of book accounts.

Cited in Boyer v. Fenn, 19 Misc. 130, 43 N. Y. Supp. 533, holding note given in payment of stock presumably worth its face value.

Duty of pledgee.

Approved in Foot v. Utah Commercial Sav. Bank, 17 Utah, 295, 54 Pac. 104, holding that exercise of power of sale by pledgee must be in good faith and with due regard to rights of pledgeor; Hawley Bros. Hardware Co. v. Brownstone, 123 Cal. 649, 56 Pac. 468, holding pledgee of negotiable paper liable for failing to preserve legal validity of pledge; Farm Invest. Co. v. Wyoming College & Normal School, 10 Wyo. 268, 68 Pac. 561, holding creditor receiving pledge of collateral notes from debtor bound to exercise ordinary diligence in their collection.

Distinguished in First Nat. Bank v. Hall, 22 App. Div. 358, 47 N. Y. Supp. 1054, holding unauthorized sale of collateral by holder to himself void unless pledgeor consents.

Extent of pledgee's lien or recovery.

Approved in George R. Barse Live Stock Co. v. Range Valley Cattle Co. 16 Utah, 69, 50 Pac. 630, holding pledge of corporate stock valid, without making transfer thereof on books of corporation, and that subsequent sale and transfer in no wise affects pledgee's lien; Fullerton v. Chatham Nat. Bank, 17 Misc. 534, 40 N. Y. Supp. 874, holding bonds pledged with bank as security for individual loan cannot be retained to secure indebtedness of firm of which pledgeor is member.

Damages for conversion.

Subsequent appeal in 158 N. Y. 1, 52 N. E. 692, Reversing 21 App. Div. 442, 47 N. Y. Supp. 609, holding owner required to replace within reasonable time corporate stock converted by pledgee in good faith and entitled to recover as damages highest market price during such time.

Approved in Barber v. Hathaway, 47 App. Div. 168, 62 N. Y. Supp. 329, holding pledgee of collateral security who converts security liable for difference between its actual value and debt secured; Brown v. Union Sav. & L. Asso. 28 Wash. 663, 69 Pac. 383, holding pledgee of stock having right of action against corporation for conversion cannot recover full value of stock if his debt is less; Pawson v. Miller, 66 App. Div. 12, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1011, holding measure of damages for conversion of negotiable check to be amount unpaid thereon at time of conversion; Fisher v. George S. Jones Co. 108 Ga. 493, 34 S. E. 172, holding measure of damages in case of conversion of collateral security is actual loss at time of conversion; Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 430, 32 U. S. App. 554, 69 Fed. 798, holding damages recoverable by surety because of unauthorized exchange of stock held as collateral, to be difference in value of stock at time of exchange.

Cited in footnotes to Langford v. Rivinus, 33 L. R. A. 250, which holds value of judgment at date of conversion is measure of damages; Woods v. Nichols, 48 L. R. A. 773, which holds measure of recovery in trover by one retaining title as security for purchase price limited to balance due, less depreciation by use.

Collateral attack on compromise judgment.

Distinguished in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. King, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 640, 73 S. W. 71, holding compromise judgment, although open to direct attack as compromise by pledgee without consent of pledgeor, not open to collateral attack.

Termination of contract.

Cited in Ceballos v. Munson S. S. Line, 42 Misc. 26, 85 N. Y. Supp. 530, holding no novation shown, and that contract uncertain as to duration is terminable at will.

18 L. R. A. 124, KAUFFMAN v. MAIER, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481.

Review of order granting new trial.

Cited in Rand v. Kipp, 27 Mont. 141, 69 Pac. 714, holding on appeal from order refusing new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence, appellate court will accept such conclusion without further consideration; Siemens v. Oakland, S. L. & H. Electric R. Co. 134 Cal. 496, 66 Pac. 672, holding on appeal from order granting new trial for misconduct of juror, appellate court will not, as a rule, reconsider sufficiency of evidence; Menard v. Montana C. R. Co. 22 Mont. 345, 56 Pac. 592, holding on appeal from order granting new trial, appellate court may properly exclude from consideration, grounds excluded by lower court on making order appealed from; Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 362, 59 Pac. 791, and People v. Castro, 133 Cal. 12, 65 Pac. 13, holding order granting new trial to defendant convicted of rape will be sustained on appeal if such order rests on any proper ground raised by defendant; Newman v. Overland P. R. Co. 132 Cal. 74, 64 Pac. 110, holding order granting new trial on ground of insufficiency, matter within discretion of trial court, and ordinarily not reviewable on appeal; Reno Mill & Lumber Co. v. Westerfield, 26 Nev. 345, 67 Pac. 961, sustaining order granting new trial on other reasons than that given by trial court; Simon Newman Co. v. Lassing, 141 Cal. 175, 74 Pac. 761, holding that general order granting new trial will be sustained on appeal upon any tenable ground; Boyd v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 117 Iowa, 339, 90 N. W. 711, holding that motion for new trial appealed from will be treated as a whole, unless expressly ruled upon in part; Sweet v. Gray, 141 Cal. 69, 74 Pac. 439, upholding power of trial court to order new trial unless plaintiff remit portion of judgment.

Review of judgment sustaining demurrer.

Approved in Vincent v. Ellis, 116 Iowa, 618, 88 N. W. 836, holding appellate court in sustaining judgment on demurrer not limited to reasons given by trial court.

Defective premises.

Cited in footnote to Kinney v. Onsted, 38 L. R. A. 665, which holds owner of premises not liable for fall of person while leaning against defective railing on platform of grain elevator.

Admissibility of expert testimony.

Cited in Limberg v. Glenwood Lumber Co. 127 Cal. 605, 49 L. R. A. 42, 60 Pac. 176, holding, in action for damages for personal injuries suffered by teamster by reason of defective wagon and harness, testimony of expert on such matters inadmissible.

Distinguished in Snyder v. Holt Mfg. Co. 134 Cal. 327, 66 Pac. 311, holding testimony of expert in construction of harvester machinery clearly admissible in action for damages suffered by individual, caused by breaking of machine, claimed to be due to faulty construction.

Instructions to jury.

Cited in People v. Vereneseneckcockchoff, 129 Cal. 503, 62 Pac. 111, holding invasion of province of jury by trial judge in his charge to them, by reference to matters of fact, constitutes reversible error; People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 258, 63 Pac. 351, holding defendant found guilty of perjury will not be heard to complain of instruction to jury, cautioning it to weigh carefully verbal admissions, when given at his own request, notwithstanding instructions were contrary to Code provision; People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 591, 55 Pac. 407, holding, in trial of criminal cause, instructions by trial judge as to weight of evidence, invasion of province of jury; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 391, 77 Pac. 169, holding instruction as to weight to be given oral admission properly refused; People v. Wardrip, 141 Cal. 231, 74 Pac. 744, holding refusal to instruct as to weight to be given oral admissions not reversible error.

18 L. R. A. 129, REEVE v. LADIES' BLDG. ASSO. PERPETUAL, 56 Ark. 335, 19 S. W. 917.

Usurious contracts of loan association.

Approved in Black v. Tompkins, 63 Ark. 504, 39 S. W. 553, holding contract between shareholders and a building and loan association, whereby payment of usurious interest is exacted, valid and enforceable in foreclosure of mortgage given to secure loan; Taylor v. Van Buren Bldg. Asso. 56 Ark. 344, 19 S. W. 918, holding mortgage contract not usurious which provides for payment of 10 per cent interest on loan of stockholders of building and loan association; Farmers' Sav. & Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ferguson, 69 Ark. 356, 63 S. W. 797, holding contract with building and loan association not usurious because, in addition to legal interest, payment of monthly dues is required.

Cited in McCauley v. Workingman's Bldg. & Sav. Asso. 97 Tenn. 436, 35 L. R. A. 248, 56 Am. St. Rep. 813, 37 S. W. 212, holding loan by building association, usurious on its face, will be set aside on repayment of loan with legal interest; American Homestead Co. v. Linigan, 46 La. Ann. 1128, 15 So. 369, holding loan to shareholder by building association providing for payment of 8 per cent interest not usurious, where time of payment of shares given in security is contingent.

Cited in footnotes to Falls v. United States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. 24 L. R. A. 174, which holds annual instalments void for usurious agreement for loan payable in instalments, with interest on amount of original loan; Gray v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 54 L. R. A. 217, which holds percentage, payable to loan association indefinitely, usurious though called "premium;" People ex rel. Fairchild v. Preston, 24 L. R. A. 57, which holds valid, income stock of loan association on which 60 per cent is paid in advance, with cash dividends limited to 8 per cent; Pacific States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Hill, 56 L. R. A. 163, which holds requirement that borrower bid for stock and pay dues on same, device to cover usury; Borrowers' & Investors' Bldg. Asso. v. Eklund, 52 L. R. A. 637, which requires strict adherence to mode fixed by statute exempting loan associations from usury laws; Washington Nat. Bldg. Loan & Invest. Asso. v. Stanley, 58 L. R. A. 816, which holds exaction of monthly premium which, with interest, exceeds legal rate, unauthorized; Smoot v. People's Perpetual Loan & Bldg. Asso. 41 L. R. A. 589, which sustains retroactive statute relieving from usury all contracts with loan associations.

Annotation in 18 L. R. A. 129, referred to particularly in Post v. Mechanics' Bldg. & L. Asso. 97 Tenn. 411, 34 L. R. A. 203, 37 S. W. 216, holding loans made by building and loan association to its stockholders, without competitive bidding and in excess of legal rate of interest, unlawful and usurious.

— Construction of usurious contract.

Cited in Tilley v. American Bldg. & L. Asso. 52 Fed. 622, holding that whether contract between building and loan association and one of its shareholders is usurious is determinable by amount agreed to be paid as interest, or as "dues" on stock.

— Laws governing usurious contract.

Cited in footnotes to National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Brahan, 57 L. R. A. 793, which holds usury in loan by foreign loan association to resident, secured by mortgage on land in state, determined by local law; Bennett v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 34 L. R. A. 595, which holds contract to pay money to loan association governed by laws of state where association located; Floyd v. National Loan & Invest. Co. 54 L. R. A. 536, which holds contract with foreign loan association not within exemption of domestic associations as to usury, unless in conformity to local law.

Application of payments upon stock on mortgage.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 124) on right to apply payments made on stock in building and loan association on mortgage given for loan by same member.

18 L. R. A. 135, HALL v. NIAGARA F. INS. CO. 93 Mich. 184, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497, 53 N. W. 727.

Sole and unconditional ownership.

Cited in Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 48 Neb. 752, 58 Am. St. Rep. 726, 67 N. W. 774, holding policy containing clause of sole ownership of property covered by policy not rendered void, on discovery that insured had only equitable interest, in absence of fraud; Wooliver v. Boylston Ins. Co. 104 Mich. 135, 62 N. W. 149, holding insurance policy not vitiated where insured, upon oral application to agent, stated fact of conditional ownership of property; Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Abrams, 32 C. C. A. 429, 61 U. S. App. 276, 89 Fed. 932, holding insurer estopped to deny liability on policy covering personal property about which no inquiry was made concerning interest of insured at time of application; Haire v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 486, 32 Am. St. Rep. 516, 53 N. W. 623, holding policy covering interest of minor heirs as owners in fee simple not invalidated because property subject to widow's dower right, which she separately insured.

Distinguished in Peet v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 7 S. D. 420, 64 N. W. 206, holding existence of mortgage encumbrance upon property insured will avoid policy containing stipulation against known and existing encumbrances; Rosenstock v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co. 82 Miss. 686, 35 So. 309, holding vendor granting possession to vendee on payment of large part of purchase price not "sole and unconditional owner;" Hamilton v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 98 Mich. 541, 22 L. R. A. 529, 57 N. W. 735, holding vendor in contract of sale not "sole and unconditional owner."

— Waiver of clause.

Cited in German Mut. Ins. Co. v. Niewedde, 11 Ind. App. 629, 39 N. E. 534, holding failure of insurer to inquire of owner concerning encumbrances, upon oral application for insurance, deemed waiver of clause against encumbrances.

Rights of mortgagee.

Cited in footnote to Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 36 L. R. A. 673, which holds mortgagee to whom loss payable may recover on policy, notwithstanding conditions as to assignment which might defeat recovery by owner.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 321) on effect of settlement between insurer and mortgagor upon rights of mortgagee.

Construction of provision for forfeiture.

Cited in Farmers & M. Ins. Co. v. Newman, 58 Neb. 510, 78 N. W. 933, holding provision for forfeiture of policy will be strictly construed.

18 L. R. A. 142, KRAAK v. FRIES, 21 D. C. 100.

18 L. R. A. 144, ALTON v. FIRST NAT. BANK, 157 Mass. 341, 34 Am. St. Rep. 285, 32 N. E. 228.

Money paid on mistake of fact.

Cited in footnote to Behring v. Somerville, 49 L. R. A. 578, which holds money paid on mistake of fact, of which both were ignorant, not recoverable in absence of fraud.

Misrepresentation of fact.

Approved in Motherway v. Wall, 168 Mass. 338, 47 N. E. 135, holding grantor entitled to cancelation of deed of his interest in his wife's estate, executed because of misrepresentations as to his rights and state of title.

Conclusion of law.

Approved in Haskell v. Merrill, 179 Mass. 123, 60 N. E. 485, upholding master's report against objection that such words as "loan," "security," or "delivery" express conclusion of law from the facts.

18 L. R. A. 146, MEYER v. GRAHAM, 33 Neb. 566, 29 Am. St. Rep. 500, 50 N. W. 763.

Adverse possession.

Approved in Lantry v. Wolff, 49 Neb. 376, 69 N. W. 494, holding title to land becomes complete in occupant who has held it adversely under claim of title for ten years.

— Of public highway.

Followed in Lewis v. Baker, 39 Neb. 639, 58 N. W. 126, holding ten years' adverse possession of portion of city street, under claim of right, vests title in occupant.

Approved in Webster v. Lincoln, 56 Neb. 503, 76 N. W. 1076, holding occupant of portion of city street under claim of ownership acquires title thereto in ten years; Carneal v. Lynch, 91 Va. 121, 50 Am. St. Rep. 819, 20 S. E. 959, holding, under express provision of statute, owner of building which for over twenty years has encroached upon street acquires title by adverse possession.

Cited in Norrell v. Augusta R. & Electric Co. 116 Ga. 316, 59 L. R. A. 103, footnote p. 101, 42 S. E. 466, holding title by prescription not acquired by adverse possession of land dedicated and accepted as city street.

Cited in footnotes to Teass v. St. Albans, 19 L. R. A. 803, which holds title to street by adverse possession obtainable; Reuter v. Lawe, 34 L. R. A. 733, which sustains estoppel against claim of public to park by dedication on plat by one continuing in possession; St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth, 43 L. R. A. 433, which holds mere construction and occasional use of railroad track across unimproved platted street not adverse possession; McClellan v. Weston, 55 L. R. A. 898, which holds land within boundary of street as shown by plat not subject to adverse possession as against town.

Distinguished in Krueger v. Jenkins, 59 Neb. 642, 81 N. W. 844, holding individual cannot secure title to unused parts of public highway of county by adverse possession and use for statutory time.

Prescriptive right.

Cited in footnote to Webb v. Demopolis, 21 L. R. A. 62, which holds rights of public in street not lost by prescription or laches.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 898) on prescriptive right to maintain public nuisance.

Nonuser.

Cited in notes (18 L. R. A. 542) on effect of nonuser of easement; (26 L. R. A. 452) on abandonment of highway by nonuser, or otherwise than by act of public authorities.

18 L. R. A. 151, SNIDER v. ST. PAUL, 51 Minn. 466, 53 N. W. 763.

Negligence of public corporation.

Cited in Weltsch v. Stark, 65 Minn. 7, 67 N. W. 648, holding that in absence of statute, township, being agency of government, is not liable to private individual for injuries sustained by reason of defective highway; Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 279, 64 N. W. 812, holding villages not liable for failure to maintain suitable and comfortable prison, by reason of which plaintiff, who suffered arrest and detention therein, contracted permanent disability from rheumatism; Garre v. Clay County, 90 Minn. 532, 97 N. W. 422, holding county not liable for neglect of commissioners to repair ditch.

— Of private corporation.

Distinguished in Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. 62 Minn. 177, 29 L. R. A. 709, 64 N. W. 382, holding defendant, a private corporation, liable for negligence which resulted in injury to plaintiff while engaged in horse race under management of former.

18 L. R. A. 154, SELLICK v. LAKE SHORE & M. S. R. CO. 93 Mich. 375, 53 N. W. 556.

Obstruction of highways.

Cited in Beopple v. Illinois C. R. Co. 104 Tenn. 429, 58 S. W. 231, holding railroad liable for injuries to traveler, whose horses took fright on approach of train, while he was awaiting removal of cars negligently permitted to remain on crossing for undue length of time; Mueller v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 86 Wis. 344, 21 L. R. A. 723, 56 N. W. 914, holding street railroad company liable for damages caused to funeral carriage suddenly stopped by car at crossing, such being proximate cause of injury; Wall v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 App. Div. 603, 67 N. Y. Supp. 519, holding railroad company unreasonably obstructing highway liable, notwithstanding his contributory negligence, to one injured while climbing over bumper of cars on one track to avoid engine on adjoining track.

Cited in footnotes to Brunswick & W. R. Co. v. Hardey, 52 L. R. A. 396, which authorizes recovery by merchant specially damaged by wilful obstruction of street; Shields v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 680, which holds obstruction of highway by excursion train not proximate cause of injury to travelers on highway by passenger's misconduct.

Cited in note (39 L. R. A. 619) on municipal control over public nuisance on public streets and highways created by street railroads and other electrical companies.

Lookout to prevent frightening of teams.

Cited in footnote to Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Montgomery, 57 L. R. A. 781, which requires railroad company operating railroad bridge as toll bridge to keep lookout to prevent frightening teams by trains.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Laible v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 13 App. Div. 574, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1003, holding that whether obstruction of public highway by cars was proximate cause of injury received by one thrown out of her carriage when her horse became frightened on approach of another train, proper question for jury; Lincoln Twp. v. Koenig, 10 Kan. App. 509, 63 Pac. 90, holding proximate cause question for jury where one was injured by runaway team on defective highway; Simons v. Casco Twp. 105 Mich. 592, 63 N. W. 500, holding proximate cause of injury question for jury where horse became frightened on account of large hole in roadway, causing him to jump and thus throw plaintiff down high embankment; Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 312, 54 N. W. 891, holding adjacent land owner liable for failure to guard against spread of fire to his neighbor's land, although the wind contributed to injury; White v. Riley Twp. 113 Mich. 299, 71 N. W. 502 (dissenting opinion), majority holding fact that injury was due to horse's backing away from bridge because of its fright does not render want of barriers too remote a cause to permit recovery.

Cited in footnote to Western R. Co. v. Mutch, 21 L. R. A. 316, which holds excessive speed not proximate cause of death of boy attempting to catch on train.

Master and servant.

Cited in Noble v. Bessemer S. S. Co. 127 Mich. 114, 54 L. R. A. 400, 89 Am. St. Rep. 461, 86 N. W. 520, holding master liable for injuries suffered by servant, through use of defective tool, even though fellow servant of one injured knew of defect; McDonald v. Michigan C. R. Co. 108 Mich. 14, 65 N. W. 597, holding master liable for injury to servant which is proximate result of concurrent negligence of master and fellow servant.

Crossing track as negligence per se.

Cited in footnote to Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott, 23 L. R. A. 654, which holds attempt to cross track on flagman's invitation at crossing partly blocked by train not negligence per se.

Liability for unforeseen consequences of wrongful act.

Cited in footnotes to Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlin, 60 L. R. A. 462, which sustains liability for negligence likely to produce injury, though particular injury not anticipated; Osborne v. Van Dyke, 54 L. R. A. 367, which holds one unlawfully beating horse liable for injury by unintentional blow on bystander.

18 L. R. A. 158, GOSNELL v. FLACK, 76 Md. 423, 25 Atl. 411.

Right of set-off.

Cited in Hoffman v. Armstrong, 90 Md. 131, 44 Atl. 1012, holding that in administering estate it is duty of administrators to deduct amount of insolvent distributee's debts to estate before settlement of his share; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 88 Md. 62, 40 Atl. 712, and Armiger v. Reitz, 91 Md. 342, 46 Atl. 990, holding that in administering estate it is duty of administrator to deduct from share of distributee or legatee amount equal to claim against him on behalf of decedent estate.

Cited in footnotes to Oxsheer v. Nave, 37 L. R. A. 98, which sustains right to set off indebtedness of distributee against distributive share, although purchased by creditor; Webb v. Fuller, 22 L. R. A. 177, which authorizes set-off of amount due by legatee against distributive share; Ainsworth v. Bank of California, 39 L. R. A. 686, which authorizes setting off against claim due estate, debt due from deceased, though unmatured at time of death.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 313) on right to set off insolvent's obligation on claim in hands of his receiver or assignee or trustee for creditors.

18 L. R. A. 161, BROWN v. SEATTLE, 5 Wash. 35, 31 Pac. 313, 32 Pac. 214.

Taking of private property for public use.

Cited in Wendel v. Spokane County, 27 Wash. 125, 91 Am. St. Rep. 825, 67 Pac. 576, holding county liable for damages caused to lands of individual, by cutting canal through natural ridge, causing water to overflow land which was before protected; Pueblo v. Strait, 20 Colo. 18, 24 L. R. A. 394, 46 Am. St. Rep. 273, 36 Pac. 789, holding erection of viaduct in public street such extraordinary use as entitles abutting property owners to damages for depreciation of property; San Antonio v. Mullaly, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 599, 33 S. W. 256, holding damages recoverable from municipality for grading street to detriment of abutting property; Bigelow v. Ballerino, 111 Cal. 566, 44 Pac. 307, holding easement in public highway, being property right, may not be destroyed or impaired by municipality, without rendering compensation; Seattle Transfer Co. v. Seattle, 27 Wash. 526, 68 Pac. 90, holding municipality liable for damages caused to private property abutting on street, by erection of overhead roadway; State ex rel. Smith v. Superior Court, 26 Wash. 289, 66 Pac. 385, holding private property not subject to use by private corporation erecting elevated railroad through street, without first making due compensation to owner; Ft. Worth v. Howard, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 539, 22 S. W. 1059, holding owner of private property entitled to damages for depreciation of property abutting on street, grade of which was materially changed; Denver v. Bonesteel, 30 Colo. 111, 69 Pac. 595, holding city liable to abutting owner for damages caused by change of grade of street; Less v. Butte, 28 Mont. 32, 61 L. R. A. 603, 98 Am. St. Rep. 545, 72 Pac. 140, holding abutting owner entitled to damages resulting from fixing grade of street for first time.

Cited in footnote to Rauenstein v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 768, which denies liability to abutter for embankment to change grade, necessitated by railroad embankment in intersecting street.

Distinguished in Levee Dist. No. 9 v. Farmer, 101 Cal. 184, 23 L. R. A. 391, 35 Pac. 569, holding vacation of public highway by municipality not such injury to abutting property as to require payment of damages.

Payment a condition precedent.

Cited in Lewis v. Seattle, 5 Wash. 745, 32 Pac. 794, holding municipality must, upon exercising right of eminent domain, make payment before using property condemned; Geurkink v. Petaluma, 112 Cal. 310, 44 Pac. 570, holding payment of damages condition precedent to right of city to change water course along highway, causing injury to abutting property.

Enjoining taking private land for public use.

Approved in Olson v. Seattle, 30 Wash. 690, 71 Pac. 201, holding injunction proper remedy where public authorities seek to take private property for public use, without first making compensation.

18 L. R. A. 166, MEMPHIS & C. R. CO. v. BIRMINGHAM, S. & T. RIVER R. CO. 96 Ala. 571, 11 So. 642.

Taking private property.

Cited in Hamilton County v. Rape, 101 Tenn. 227, 47 S. W. 416, holding change in grade of public highway, causing material injury to abutting property, such taking within constitutional provision as to necessitate compensation to owner; Southern R. Co. v. Birmingham, S. & N. O. R. Co. 130 Ala. 670, 31 So. 509, holding that before land owner may be deprived of property under eminent domain proceeding, assessment and payment of damages a condition precedent; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Peoples Street R. & Improv. Co. 101 Ala. 332, 13 So. 308, holding, in absence of statutory authority, lands of one railroad corporation not subject to condemnation by another.

Cited in footnotes to St. Louis v. Hill, 21 L. R. A. 226, which holds prohibition against building on certain portion of land a "taking" of property; White v. Northwestern North Carolina R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 627, which holds use of street for steam railroad a taking of same.

Protection of private rights from public interference.

Cited in footnotes to Morton v. New York, 22 L. R. A. 241, which holds city has no right to build pumping station on own land, rendering adjoining buildings uninhabitable.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 544) on protection of private rights from interference by public.

Right of appeal in eminent domain proceedings.

Cited in Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 108 Ala. 159, 18 So. 845, holding provision of Code giving effect to constitutional provision for intersection and crossing of railroad unconstitutional, because of elimination of right of appeal from award of commissioners in assessing damages.

18 L. R. A. 170, PAGE v. LEWIS, 89 Va. 1, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848, 15 S. E. 389.

Gifts causa mortis.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 502, 55 L. R. A. 160, 86 Am. St. Rep. 698, 39 S. E. 126, holding valid gift causa mortis of bank stock by delivery of keys to depository containing gift; Leyson v. Davis, 17 Mont. 286, 31 L. R. A. 451, footnote p. 429, 42 Pac. 775, holding valid gift causa mortis of bank stock certificates by actual delivery to donee without indorsement; Johnson v. Colley, 101 Va. 418, 99 Am. St. Rep. 884, 44 S. E. 721; holding gift causa mortis, otherwise valid, not defeated by condition, "If I die, or anything happens to me."

Cited in footnotes to Royston v. McCulley, 52 L. R. A. 899, which upholds gift causa mortis of bank certificates made by donor asking to have trunks unlocked and certificates indorsed; Lord v. New York L. Ins. Co. 56 L. R. A. 597, which sustains gift of policy found among papers of insured at his death, on proof of his declarations that it was donee's; Hatcher v. Buford, 27 L. R. A. 507, which holds bank stock, given a few nights before donor's death from consumption, a gift causa mortis.

— Sufficiency of delivery.

Cited in Jones v. Weakley, 99 Ala. 445, 19 L. R. A. 701, 42 Am. St. Rep. 84, 12 So. 420, holding delivery of bank book insufficient delivery to sustain gift causa mortis, of funds in bank; Waite v. Grubbe, 43 Or. 411, 73 Pac. 206, holding act of donor in last illness in pointing out to donee places where money was concealed, with appropriate declarations of gift, valid delivery.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 700) on delivery of bank book to sustain gift of money in bank.

Distinguished in Newman v. Bost, 122 N. C. 529, 29 S. E. 848, holding delivery of keys to bureau not sufficient delivery of insurance policy contained therein to constitute valid gift causa mortis; Keepers v. Fidelity Title & D. Co. 56 N. J. L. 306, 23 L. R. A. 186, footnote p. 184, 44 Am. St. Rep. 397, 28 Atl. 583, holding delivery of key to box containing securities given, insufficient delivery.

Admissibility of evidence.

Cited in Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Miller, 34 C. C. A. 217, 63 U. S. App. 717, 92 Fed. 69, holding letter written by insured to his wife day before his death, admissible to rebut evidence that he had deliberately committed suicide after obtaining policy.

18 L. R. A. 187, CROMPTON v. BEACH, 62 Conn. 25, 36 Am. St. Rep. 323, 25 Atl. 446.

Vendor's election of remedies.

Cited in Tufts v. Brace, 103 Wis. 345, 79 N. W. 414, holding election to rescind conditional contract of sale, and retake possession of thing sold, bars vendor's right of recovery of balance due on purchase price; Smith v. Barber, 153 Ind. 328, 53 N. E. 1014, holding vendor of machinery to be erected in manufacturing plant, retaining title until paid for, may upon default of payment elect to treat contract as absolute and recover contract price, or rescind and recover property sold; Howell v. Campbell, 53 Kan. 749, 37 Pac. 120, holding, as between creditors of vendee, and vendor, election to treat contract of sale of goods as absolute will be conclusive upon vendor's right to recover unpaid portion of selling price; Turk v. Carnahan, 25 Ind. App. 128, 81 Am. St. Rep. 85, 57 N. E. 729, holding seller of property may not, upon default of payment by purchaser, repudiate contract, retake property, and also sue to recover balance of purchase price.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 463, 471) on rights and liabilities of vendor and purchaser by conditional sale, on default of payment.

Distinguished in Robinson's Appeal, 63 Conn. 296, 28 Atl. 40, holding vendor of goods retaining legal title until fully paid for does not, by receiving balance of goods upon insolvency of vendees, elect to take such balance in satisfaction of the debt.

Qualified in Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 126 Mo. 350, 26 L. R. A. 842, 47 Am. St. Rep. 675, 28 S. W. 870, holding that notwithstanding election by vendor of one of two inconsistent remedies in case of default of payment for goods sold, if remedy elected be dismissed before judgment, or intervening rights of others become vested, another and different remedy may be resorted to.

Vendor's lien.

Cited in Herrmann v. Central Car Trust Co. 41 C. C. A. 180, 101 Fed. 45, holding pledgee of bonds deposited as collateral to secure purchase price of rolling stock loses lien on security on default of payment by reclaiming property sold.

18 L. R. A. 190, AMERICAN LIVE STOCK COMMISSION CO. v. CHICAGO LIVE STOCK EXCHANGE, 143 Ill. 210, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274.

Sale of stock exchange seat.

Cited in footnote to Lowenberg v. Greenebaum, 21 L. R. A. 399, which holds levy on, and sale of, stock exchange seat ineffectual to pass title.

Equitable control of corporate action.

Cited in State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 461, 51 L. R. A. 168, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91, holding equity will not by mandamus compel voluntary association engaged in purely private enterprise, to render service and furnish news to one not member thereof; Greer v. Staller, 77 Fed. 8, holding equity will not reinstate suspended member in voluntary association, when he bases his action on contract of membership, portion of which he alleges to be illegal and in restraint of trade.

Dismissal of bill on dissolution of injunction.

Cited in Field v. Western Springs, 181 Ill. 190, 54 N. E. 929, holding court of equity may properly dismiss bill of complaint on sustaining motion to dissolve injunction without hearing on pleadings and proofs.

18 L. R. A. 201, BANK OF EDGEFIELD v. FARMERS' CO-OP. MFG. CO. 2 C. C. A. 637, 2 U. S. App. 282, 52 Fed. 98.

Conflict of laws.

Cited in The Carib Prince, 63 Fed. 268, holding vessel not liable for injury to cargo by water, under contract of shipment limiting liability for latent defects in construction; such contract being governed by law of place of execution; Manship v. New South Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 859, holding question whether contract between citizens of different states is to be construed by law of place of performance, or not, governed by general commercial law; Limerick Nat. Bank v. Howard, 71 N. H. 19, 93 Am. St. Rep. 489, 51 Atl. 641, holding question whether fraud of payee of Vermont note in obtaining it is defense against indorsee determinable by law of Vermont.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 194) on conflict of laws as to negotiable paper.

Bona fide holder of negotiable paper.

Cited in Kaiser v. First Nat. Bank, 24 C. C. A. 91, 41 U. S. App. 637, 78 Fed. 284, holding one purchasing negotiable paper before maturity, for valid consideration and without notice of existing equities, obtains good title.

Cited in note (46 L. R. A. 799) on rights of holder of negotiable paper transferred after maturity.

18 L. R. A. 204, EDWARDS v. CULBERTSON, 111 N. C. 342, 16 S. E. 233.

Following trust property.

Cited in Ross v. Davis, 122 N. C. 267, 29 S. E. 338, holding equity will follow funds invested in lands purchased from ancestors, heirs of whom subsequently repudiate sale and oust purchaser; Summers v. Moore, 113 N. C. 405, 18 S. E. 712, holding that where property is conveyed to one, and consideration furnished by another, equity will hold legal owner as trustee of the real owner; Pender v. Mallett, 123 N. C. 62, 31 S. E. 351, holding property assigned by insolvent husband to wife recoverable in equity by husband's creditors; Williams v. Walker, 111 N. C. 612, 16 S. E. 706, holding money loaned to married woman, and by her invested in real property, through fraudulent representation as to capacity, may be impressed with equitable lien; Barnard v. Hawks, 111 N. C. 339, 16 S. E. 329, holding equity will follow funds invested in stock, through as many hands as it may be traced, and impress it with original trust in favor of real owner; Fidelity & D. Co. v. Jordan, 134 N. C. 242, 46 S. E. 496, holding beneficiary under resulting trust entitled to follow property substituted for part of that affected with trust.

18 L. R. A. 206, GUNN v. WHITE SEWING MACH. CO. 57 Ark. 24, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 309, 38 Am. St. Rep. 223, 20 S. W. 591.

State interference with interstate commerce.

Cited in Hargraves Mills v. Harden, 25 Misc. 666, 56 N. Y. Supp. 937, holding state cannot deny right of foreign corporation to sue for breach of contract of sale within state of goods to be manufactured without state, because such corporation neglects to comply with state statute relative to foreign corporations doing business within state; Miller v. Goodman, 91 Tex. 43, 40 S. W. 718, and Allen v. Tyson-Jones Buggy Co. 91 Tex. 25, 40 S. W. 393, holding foreign corporation not precluded from maintaining action because of failure to obtain permit to do business; Murphy Varnish Co. v. Connell, 10 Misc. 560, 32 N. Y. Supp. 492, holding foreign corporation will not be denied aid of local state courts to enforce contract rights, even though it fail to comply with state statute requiring it to file copy of articles of incorporation with proper state officer; Davis & R. Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Dix, 64 Fed. 412, holding state legislature cannot deny right of foreign corporation to sell its goods in state through local salesmen; Havens & G. Co. v. Diamond, 93 Ill. App. 567, holding foreign corporation taking orders or making sales by sample not "doing business" in state within meaning of statute regulating transaction of business by foreign corporations.

Cited in footnotes to Re Sanders, 18 L. R. A. 549, which holds void as to original packages, act requiring marking on package of year in which seed grown; Smith v. Jackson, 47 L. R. A. 416, which holds agent collecting garments and sending them to laundry outside of state, and redelivering to owners, not engaged in commerce; Racine Iron Co. v. McCommons, 51 L. R. A. 134, which holds traveling agent taking orders and distributing contents of original package among customers not engaged in interstate commerce; Croy v. Epperson, 51 L. R. A. 254, which holds one taking orders in own name for articles manufactured in other state, and delivering separate articles to customers, not engaged in interstate commerce; French v. State, 52 L. R. A. 160, which holds agent of nonresident company selling organ taken with him, or taking orders for others to be delivered by him, engaged in interstate commerce; State v. Willingham, 452 L.

R. A. 198, which holds delivery of portraits and frames by agent previously taking order for nonresident manufacturer, interstate commerce.

18 L. R. A. 211, McAFEE v. REYNOLDS, 130 Ind. 33, 30 Am. St. Rep. 194, 28 N. E. 423.

Extinguishment of judgment lien.

Cited in Savings & Trust Co. v. Bear Valley Irrig. Co. 89 Fed. 38, holding lien of judgment creditor, being creature of statute, must be executed within statutory period, notwithstanding fact of debtor's asset being in hands of receiver, against whom suit is forbidden without permission of court; Bradfield v. Newby, 130 Ind. 60, 28 N. E. 619, holding land purchased from judgment debtor after expiration of lien of judgment not subject to sale under judgment; Miller v. Melone, 11 Okla. 253, 56 L. R. A. 625, footnote p. 620, 67 Pac. 479, holding creditor's bill fails on judgment forming basis of suit becoming dormant during its pendency; Ruth v. Wells, 13 S. D. 488, 79 Am. St. Rep. 902, 83 N. W. 568, holding lien of judgment debtor extinguished, notwithstanding action thereon was instituted sixty days before the period at which the judgment lien expired; Johnson v. Central Trust Co. 159 Ind. 609, 65 N. E. 1028, holding judgment of allowance against funds in hands of receiver not lien on property after discharge of receiver without reservation as to existing claims; Taylor v. McGrew, 29 Ind. App. 327, 64 N. E. 651, holding that judgment lien on legatee's real estate or proceeds perished eleven years from date of rendition.

Power of appellate court.

Cited in Matchett v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. 132 Ind. 345, 31 N. E. 792, holding appellate court may remand cause with instructions to award venire de novo or grant new trial.

Injunction.

Cited in Miller v. Bowers, 30 Ind. App. 118, 65 N. E. 559, holding taxpayer entitled to injunction to restrain contractor from using improper material in road in violation of contract; Hart v. Hildebrandt, 30 Ind. App. 418, 66 N. E. 173, denying injunction to prevent adverse use of private alley, which in time would ripen into an easement.

18 L. R. A. 215, PULLMAN'S PALACE CAR CO. v. LAACK, 143 Ill. 242, 32 N. E. 285.

Direction of verdict.

Approved in Finley v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 90 Ill. App. 370; Gartside Coal Co. v. Turk, 147 Ill. 123, 35 N. E. 467; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stanley, 158 Ill. 398, 41 N. E. 1012; Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. Meixner, 160 Ill. 322, 31 L. R. A. 332, 43 N. E. 823; Foster v. Wadsworth-Howland Co. 168 Ill. 517, 48 N. E. 163; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Wiswell, 168 Ill. 614, 48 N. E. 407; Kean v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 75 Ill. App. 41; Missouri Malleable Iron Co. v. Hoover, 77 Ill. App. 439; Ackerstadt v. Chicago City R. Co. 94 Ill. App. 130,—holding it duty of trial court to direct jury to return verdict for defendant in absence of evidence tending to establish plaintiff's right of recovery; Bayer v. Chicago, M. & N. R. Co. 68 Ill. App. 225, holding, in absence of evidence tending to establish plaintiff's cause of action, it is not reversible error for trial court to direct verdict for defendant; Landgraf v. Kuh, 188 Ill. 493, L. R. A. AN.—VOL. III.—9.

59 N. E. 501, holding instruction to find for defendant erroneous if there is evidence tending to show plaintiff's right to recover; Cooney v. United States Wringler Co. 101 Ill. App. 473, holding instruction to find for defendant erroneous, unless evidence wholly insufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff; Siddall v. Jansen, 168 Ill. 45, 39 L. R. A. 114, 48 N. E. 191, holding supreme court may review facts to ascertain if there was evidence tending to support the declaration, where error is assigned on direction of verdict for defendant.

Refusal of trial court to direct verdict.

Cited in Ashley Wire Co. v. Mercier, 163 Ill. 491, 45 N. E. 222, holding refusal to direct verdict for defendant in action for personal injury not erroneous where there is evidence tending to show negligence on part of defendant; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 72, 30 L. R. A. 42, 38 N. E. 773, holding motion to instruct jury to return verdict for defendant properly overruled, if there is sufficient evidence to support cause of action; Ide v. Fratcher, 194 Ill. 555, 62 N. E. 814, holding, in action against employer to recover for injury due to bursting emery wheel, case should be submitted to jury if there is any evidence showing right of recovery.

Proper questions for jury.

Cited in St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Holman, 53 Ill. App. 621, holding question whether two foremen are fellow servants one of fact for jury to determine; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Massey, 152 Ill. 151, 38 N. E. 787, holding it question of fact for jury whether shoveler and conductor of work train were fellow servants; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dwyer, 162 Ill. 493, 44 N. E. 815, holding question whether "gripman" and "starter" on cable road, employed by common master, are fellow servants, one of fact; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Langsdorf, 69 Ill. App. 180, holding question of weight and credibility given to testimony, one for jury to determine; Field v. French, 80 Ill. App. 90, holding question of owner's liability for defective elevator, resulting in injury to passenger therein, one of fact for jury; Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 197 Ill. 446, 64 N. E. 382, holding that whether relation of fellow servant exists is mixed question of law and fact, determinable fact being whether particular employee was fellow servant; Western Stone Co. v. Muscial, 196 Ill. 385, 89 Am. St. Rep. 325, 63 N. E. 664, holding question whether servant assumes risk of employment in particular case, for jury, upon submission of evidence tending to show right of action; Mobile & R. Co. v. Godfrey, 155 Ill. 82, 39 N. E. 590, holding it question for jury to determine, within rules laid down by court, who are fellow servants; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Delaney, 68 Ill. App. 311, holding it question for jury whether servant was injured by negligence of fellow servant.

Submission of evidence to jury.

Cited in Brezinski v. Swift, 91 Ill. App. 539, and Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gunderson, 174 Ill. 497, 51 N. E. 708, holding it not reversible error for trial court to submit whatever evidence there is tending to establish issues in plaintiff's behalf; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Marzalkiewicz, 75 Ill. App. 242, holding evidence tending to substantiate plaintiff's allegations must be submitted to jury, whose verdict in reference thereto must control; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Lyons, 167 Ill. 594, 42 N. E. 55, and Cummings v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 189 Ill. 614, 60 N. E. 51, holding sufficiency of evidence in favor of cause of action a question of law, decision of which determines question whether cause should be submitted to jury.

Instructions to jury.

Cited in Swift & Co. v. Fue, 66 Ill. App. 658, holding it not reversible error for trial court to refuse to give instructions on oral request, directing verdict in favor of defendant; Wenona Coal Co. v. Holmquist, 152 Ill. 588, 38 N. E. 946, holding refusal to instruct jury to find for defendant not reviewable unless instruction submitted in writing and marked "refused."

Failure to warn servant.

Cited in Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 207, 36 N. E. 39, holding master liable for injuries to car repairer who, being engaged in service, was injured through neglect of another to give proper notice of danger; McFarland v. Edmunds Mfg. Co. 97 Ill. App. 631, holding it duty of master to notify servant of increased danger arising by reason of destruction of building upon which latter is engaged at time of injury; Cheaney v. Ocean S. S. Co. 92 Ga. 732, 44 Am. St. Rep. 113, 19 S. E. 33, holding negligence of fireman in failing to provide "hatch tender" to notify servant in hold of ship of danger imputable to master; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bell, 111 Ill. App. 292, holding master liable for injury to servant by driving engine over ash pit without warning.

Distinguished in Lang v. H. W. Williams Transp. Line, 119 Mich. 83, 77 N. W. 633, holding defendant not liable for death of servant who had knowledge of all conditions of his employment.

Master's duty to servants.

Cited in National Syrup Co. v. Carlson, 155 Ill. 216, 40 N. E. 492, holding master liable for injuries to servant, resulting from failure to properly guard elevator opening in factory, down which injured one fell during nighttime; Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 65 Ohio St. 76, 55 L. R. A. 102, 87 Am. St. Rep. 547, 61 N. E. 143, holding mine owner cannot so delegate duty of furnishing safe place for miner to work as to absolve itself from liability for injury due to negligence of agent or servant charged with such duty; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Eaton, 194 Ill. 445, 88 Am. St. Rep. 161, 62 N. E. 784, holding master may not delegate to another, duty of notifying servant of defective track, which caused deceased's injury resulting in his death; Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Ligas, 172 Ill. 317, 64 Am. St. Rep. 38, 50 N. E. 225, Affirming 68 Ill. App. 528, holding master cannot absolve himself from liability for injury to servant by delegating duty of furnishing safe place for servant to work; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 487, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244, 38 N. E. 241, holding servant may assume employer has discharged his legal duty in selecting his coemployees, in absence of notice to contrary; McBeath v. Rawle, 93 Ill. App. 215, holding legal obligation of master to furnish reasonably safe places for servant to work cannot be shifted to other so as to relieve master of liability; Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 80, 34 L. R. A. 507, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, 68 N. W. 664, holding master cannot delegate duty to provide safe place, and is liable for injuries to servant, received while working in place furnished by other servants not fellow servants of one injured; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Robizas, 111 Ill. App. 52, holding coal company cannot delegate duty to furnish and place cars, and is liable for injury due to cars negligently placed by fellow servant; Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Thompson, 112 Ill. App. 469, holding switchman does not assume risk of injury due to maintenance of telegraph pole too close to track.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 39, 50, 87) on master's duty to instruct and warn his servants as to perils of employment.

— Safe appliances.

Cited in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Maroney, 170 Ill. 524, 62 Am. St. Rep. 396, 48 N. E. 953, holding master liable for failure to furnish safe scaffolding for servant to work upon; Rice & B. Malting Co. v. Paulsen, 51 Ill. App. 125, holding master cannot delegate duty of furnishing safe scaffolding and ladders for servants to work upon; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Heerey, 105 Ill. App. 648, holding master liable for death of servant, due to negligent coupling of engine and tender, whereby they separated, causing deceased to fall and be run over by tender; Goldie v. Werner, 50 Ill. App. 300, holding duty of master to furnish suitable appliances and material for servant to work upon and with may not be shifted so as to absolve him from liability; Slack v. Harris, 200 Ill. 108, 65 N. E. 669, holding master liable for injuries suffered by elevator operator, who, acting under orders of master's engineer, attempted to run defective elevator; Ralph v. American Bridge Co. 30 Wash. 507, 70 Pac. 1098, holding master liable for injury to servant, due to defective ladder.

Vice principalship.

Cited in notes (51 L. R. A. 590) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of servant; (54 L. R. A. 38, 52, 81, 97, 98, 171) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Concurrent negligence of master and fellow servant.

Cited in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 95 Ill. App. 59, holding master liable for injuries to servant received through combined negligence of master and fellow servant; St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Godfrey, 101 Ill. App. 50, holding company liable for injuries to employee, even though proximate cause thereof was combined negligence of company and coemployee of one injured; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillison, 173 Ill. 270, 64 Am. St. Rep. 117, 50 N. E. 657, holding master liable for injury to servant through combined negligence of fellow servant and defective appliances furnished by master; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Periguy, 138 Ind. 432, 37 N. E. 976, holding master liable for injury to servant resulting from concurrent negligence of fellow servant and master in failing to keep proper headlight on railroad engine; Swift v. Rutkowski, 82 Ill. App. 115, holding master liable for injury to servant resulting from insufficiency of help, concurring with negligence of fellow servant; Norris v. Illinois C. R. Co. 88 Ill. App. 620, holding that if negligence of master co-operates with negligence of fellow servant, and so produces injury, servant may recover.

Cited in footnotes to Noble v. Bessemer S. S. Co. 54 L. R. A. 456, which holds master liable for injury by defective tool, though defect known to fellow servant procuring tool; Loveless v. Standard Gold Min. Co. 59 L. R. A. 596, which holds master liable for injury from combined negligence of himself and fellow servant.

Negligence of master combined with independent cause.

Cited in Morris v. Stanfield, 81 Ill. App. 272, holding employer liable for injury to child servant whose employment was contrary to statute, such violation being proximate cause of injury; Malott v. Hood, 99 Ill. App. 363, holding it not necessary that master's negligence should be sole proximate cause of servant's injury to warrant recovery, where injury is result of master's negligence combined with ulterior cause; Springside Coal Min. Co. v. Grogan, 87 Ill. App. 492, holding master liable for injury to servant, resulting from combined accident and negligence of former in properly guarding mine shaft.

Distinguished in American Exp. Co. v. Risley, 179 Ill. 299, 53 N. E. 558, Affirming 77 Ill. App. 484, holding master liable to servant the proximate cause of whose injury is master's negligence, although other causes co-operated; Chicago Economic Fuel Gas Co. v. Myers, 168 Ill. 144, 48 N. E. 66, holding master liable for servant's injuries resulting from combined negligence of independent contractor and master, under whose direction work was being done; Western & A. R. Co. v. Bailey, 105 Ga. 103, 31 S. E. 547, holding master liable for injuries to servant, standing safe distance from track, by being struck by body of trespasser on track, who was thrown violently against plaintiff by train running at reckless rate of speed.

Injuries resulting from concurrent negligent causes.

Cited in Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hines, 183 Ill. 485, 56 N. E. 177, holding persons receiving injuries while riding on street car, through combined negligence of servants of street car company and railroad company, may recover of latter; Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Schmelling, 197 Ill. 631, 64 N. E. 714, holding one may recover for personal injuries suffered by reason of negligence of carrier in operating trains and failure to provide safe station facilities; Kornazewska v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 76 Ill. App. 372, and Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Harrington, 192 Ill. 29, 61 N. E. 622, holding recovery may be had from either or both of two parties, whose combined negligence resulted in injury to servant while switching cars for either one; Landon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 92 Ill. App. 223, holding passenger who, while riding in bus, is struck by passenger train at crossing, owing to combined negligence of driver and railroad company, may recover of either or both; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 69 Ill. App. 59, holding street railway company not liable to conductor whose injury resulted from negligent acts of fellow servant and independent contractor.

Contributory negligence as defense.

Cited in Chicago City R. Co. v. Canevin, 72 Ill. App. 85, holding want of due care on part of party injured will preclude recovery for negligence of another, even though such neglect contributed to injury complained of; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 75 Ill. App. 496, holding that to recover for negligence of another it must be shown one injured in no wise contributed to cause of injury; Metropolitan Acci. Asso. v. Taylor, 71 Ill. App. 139, denying recovery on accident policy providing against negligent exposure to danger where insured voluntarily sat down on railroad track and was run over after losing volition; Browne v. Siegel, C. & Co. 191 Ill. 235, 60 N. E. 815, holding master not liable for accidental death of servant, caused by falling down elevator shaft as result of his own contributory negligence; Peoria v. Walker, 47 Ill. App. 194, holding city not liable for injury to one driving along street in negligent manner and in dangerous place, where there is safer roadway elsewhere; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hessions, 150 Ill. 556, 37 N. E. 905, holding that to recover for death of one killed at railroad crossing, it must appear deceased exercised ordinary care and railroad company was negligent.

Proximate cause.

Cited in Chicago v. O'Malley, 95 Ill. App. 362, holding city liable for negligence of servant whose acts, combined with those of another, were proximate cause of injury to third person, who, while upon swing bridge, was driven therefrom while it was in motion; Joliet v. Shufeldt, 144 Ill. 411, 18 L. R. A. 752, 36 Am. St. Rep. 453, 32 N. E. 969, holding city liable for injury to person, due to defective construction of highway, which defect, in conjunction with runaway horse, was proximate cause of injury; Dixon v. Scott, 181 Ill. 119, 54 N. E. 897, holding city liable for negligence resulting in injury to individual, notwithstanding particular result could not have been foreseen, so as to make act complained of, proximate cause; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Almon, 100 Ill. App. 534, holding proximate cause of fire injuring apple orchard of one whose land was separated from railway by intervening land, over which fire spread to orchard, to be negligence of company; Peoria v. Adams, 72 Ill. App. 673, holding failure of city to provide drainage facilities not proximate cause of injury to one whose arm was so scalded, when foundation of building gave way, that amputation was necessary; True & T. Co. v. Woda, 104 Ill. App. 17, holding negligence of company in violating city ordinance forbidding piling of material on sidewalk, proximate cause of child's death; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 184 Ill. 489, 56 N. E. 796, holding master liable for injuries to servant, proximately caused by negligence of independent contractor in employ of master; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hoffman, 82 Ill. App. 462, holding carrier not liable for death of boy, resulting from his voluntary act in jumping from fast moving train; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Charman, 161 Ind. 103, 67 N. E. 923, holding failure of yardmaster to give warning, proximate cause of death of car coupler, due to backing of engine against cars, on signal from brakeman; Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. v. Willard, 111 Ill. App. 230, holding escape of fire from locomotive, proximate cause of resulting injury to cattle by spreading of flames; Chattanooga Light & P. Co. v. Hodges, 109 Tenn. 336, 60 L. R. A. 460, footnote p. 459, 97 Am. St. Rep. 844, 70 S. W. 616, holding employee's re-entering burning building to telephone fire alarm, proximate cause of his death; Terminal R. Asso. v. Larkins, 112 Ill. App. 370, holding defectively running car not proximate cause of injury to switchman, run over by stepping in front of moving train; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Creighton, 63 Ill. App. 169, holding master failing to furnish safe engineer liable to injured servant, where such failure was proximate cause of his injury.

Cited in footnotes to Western R. Co. v. Mutch, 21 L. R. A. 316, which holds excessive speed not proximate cause of death of boy attempting to catch on train; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 27 L. R. A. 583, which holds burning of mill by oil escaping from tank car not proximate result of shipper's negligence in not having valve in tank outlet.

— Question for jury.

Cited in Canfield v. North Chicago Street R. Co. 98 Ill. App. 5, holding question of proximate cause of person's injury, received by being struck by car on other track while alighting from street car, proper for jury to determine; O'Fallon Coal Co. v. Laquet, 89 Ill. App. 19, holding question of proximate cause of intestate's death one for jury to determine under proper instruction from court; Brownback v. Frailey, 78 Ill. App. 265, holding question of proximate cause of pregnant woman's miscarriage by alleged violence of trespasser, proper for jury to determine; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Feldstein, 160 Ill. 141, 48 N. E. 193, holding question of proximate cause of injury to individual, resulting from collision of cars, one of fact for jury to determine; Moore v. Grachowski, 111 Ill. App. 220, holding question whether presence of coal dust was proximate cause of injury to miner by explosion, properly submitted to jury; Swift & Co. v. Rutkowski, 182 Ill. 24, 54 N. E. 1038, holding question of proximate cause to be one of fact; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillison, 72 Ill. App. 221, holding question of proximate cause to be for jury; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 184 Ill. 489, 56 N. E. 796, holding question of proximate cause of injury one of fact; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Mochell, 193 Ill. 210, 86 Am. St. Rep. 318, 61 N. E. 1028, Affirming 96 Ill. App. 182, holding question whether excessive speed of train was proximate cause of injury, properly submitted to jury.

Assumed risk.

Cited in Swisher v. Illinois C. R. Co. 182 Ill. 541, 55 N. E. 555 (dissenting opinion), majority holding that finding of appellate court that injury to servant was result of risk or employment is fatal to recovery; Phinney v. Illinois C. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 491, 98 N. W. 358, holding under statute, that servant does not assume risk of negligence of coservant.

18 L. R. A. 221, COWDEN v. PACIFIC COAST U. S. CO. 94 Cal. 470, 28 Am. St. Rep. 142, 29 Pac. 873.

Discrimination in rates.

Cited in Railroad Commission v. Weld, 96 Tex. 405, 93 S. W. 529, upholding right of railroad commission to establish reasonable discriminating rates.

Cited in footnotes to Hoover v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 263, which authorizes giving of lower rates for transportation of coal to manufacturing company than coal dealer; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 27 L. R. A. 622, which authorizes difference in telegraph rates to morning and evening paper; Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 41 L. R. A. 240, which holds discrimination in rates charged consumers for water unlawful; State v. Southern R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 246, which denies carrier's right to discriminate in favor of high official, larger shipper, or powerful politician.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 105) on right of carrier at common law to discriminate between passengers or shippers.

18 L. R. A. 224, STATE v. HARRISON, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982.

Separation and misconduct of jury.

Cited in State v. Cobbs, 40 W. Va. 724, 22 S. E. 310, holding separation of jury over night will not vitiate verdict; State v. Church, 7 S. D. 292, 64 N. W. 152, holding new trial will be granted where jury have separated and been subjected to improper influence to prejudice of parties litigant; State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 563, 35 L. R. A. 535, 67 N. W. 1052, holding separation of jury without proof of prejudicial misconduct will not entitle convicted person to new trial; State v. Clark, 51 W. Va. 472, 41 S. E. 204, holding verdict of jury will not be set aside because of separation and misconduct of jury, in absence of proof showing that prisoner was prejudiced thereby.

Presumption raised by misconduct of jury.

Cited in State v. Cotts, 49 W. Va. 623, 55 L. R. A. 180, 39 S. E. 605, holding misconduct of trial jury in criminal cause raises rebuttable presumption that accused was prejudiced thereby.

New trial.

Cited in State v. Hobbs, 37 W. Va. 826, 17 S. E. 380, holding new trial will not be granted in criminal case unless it appear prisoner suffered injustice from bias or juror; State v. Morrison, 67 Kan. 166, 72 Pac. 554, holding mere prior expression of opinion by jurors insufficient ground for annulling verdict.

Continuance.

Cited in State v. Roberts, 50 W. Va. 424, 40 S. E. 484, holding it not error for trial court to deny motion for continuance, where it is apparent subterfuge has been resorted to to obtain such continuance; Maxwell v. Cunningham, 50 W. Va. 319, 40 S. E. 499, holding motion for continuance in action of ejectment being addressed to discretion of trial court, judgment will not be reversed unless plainly erroneous; State v. Emblem, 46 W. Va. 327, 33 S. E. 223, and State v. Lane, 44 W. Va. 732, 29 S. E. 1020, holding refusal of continuance in criminal cause not ground for reversal, unless such action is plainly erroneous; State v. Madison, 49 W. Va. 97, 38 S. E. 492, holding it not reversible error of trial court to refuse to grant motion for continuance of trial of one charged with murder, where such motion is without foundation in fact.

Insanity as affecting responsibility for crime.

Cited in State v. Maier, 36 W. Va. 770, 15 S. E. 991, holding person guilty of murder, who, though alleged to be insane, had sufficient power to appreciate difference between right and wrong of particular act; Copeland v. State, 41 Fla. 325, 26 So. 319, holding one taking human life under "irresistible impulse" criminally responsible in absence of proof of legal insanity; State v. Knight, 95 Me. 478, 55 L. R. A. 376, footnote p. 373, 50 Atl. 276, holding criminal responsibility not affected by uncontrollable impulse to commit crime; State v. Kelley, 74 Vt. 286, 52 Atl. 434, raising, but not deciding, question whether one with due capacity and understanding, conclusively presumed to act with free will, and referring particularly to annotation in 18 L. R. A. 224.

Cited in footnotes to Harnish v. People, 18 L. R. A. 237, which holds insanity, to take away accountability, must be such as to obliterate sense of right and wrong; Evers v. State, 18 L. R. A. 421, which authorizes taking into consideration temporary insanity, when design to kill was formed and executed.

Cited in note (38 L. R. A. 577, 580) on insanity after commission of criminal act.

18 L. R. A. 237, HORNISH v. PEOPLE, 142 Ill. 620, 32 N. E. 677.

Insanity as affecting responsibility for crime.

Cited in footnote to Evers v. State, 18 L. R. A. 421, which authorizes taking into consideration temporary insanity, when design to kill was formed and executed.

Cited in note (39 L. R. A. 745) on measure of proof of insanity in criminal cases.

18 L. R. A. 240, CAPITAL CITY BANK v. PARENT, 134 N. Y. 527, 47 N. Y. S. R. 643, 31 N. E. 976.

Jurisdiction.

Cited in Dittmar v. Gould, 60 App. Div. 100, 69 N. Y. Supp. 708, holding court without jurisdiction of creditor's suit to reach surplus of trust fund, where judgment has not been recovered against debtor or execution been returned; O'Donoghue hue v. Boies, 159 N. Y. 99, 53 N. E. 537, holding judgment of partition and sale of real estate held in trust for infant, being contrary to will and forbidden by statute, open to collateral attack in subsequent action, on account of want of jurisdiction of court in particular case; Patchen v. Rofkar, 12 App. Div. 477, 42 N. Y. Supp. 35, holding that court of equity will take jurisdiction of creditor's suit to set aside assignment of nonresident debtor and subject property within state to equitable lien for his claim; Scharmann v. Schoell, 23 App. Div. 402, 48 N. Y. Supp. 306, holding court having jurisdiction of subject of action may render effective judgment against absconding executrix on her bond, holding sureties liable for her default.

Attachment.

Distinguished in Dunn v. Arkenburgh, 48 App. Div. 520, 62 N. Y. Supp. 861, holding action maintainable in aid of attachment upon interest of legatee which has been ascertained by probate court.

18 L. R. A. 242, BOLTON v. SCHRIEVER, 135 N. Y. 65, 47 N. Y. S. R. 870, 31 N. E. 1001.

Collateral attack on judgments.

Cited in Kelly v. Jay, 79 Hun, 540, 29 N. Y. Supp. 933, holding judgment of surrogate court appointing administrators not open to collateral attack in suit between heir and mortgagee of deceased; O'Connor v. Felix, 87 Hun, 184, 33 N. Y. Supp. 1074, holding judgment of court of general jurisdiction, rendered in due form and after lawful hearing, not open to collateral attack in absence of fraud and collusion; O'Donoghue v. Bois, 159 N. Y. 106, 53 N. E. 537, holding judgment of partition and sale of infant's estate open to collateral attack in action by him on coming of age, against purchaser; Soules v. Robinson, 158 Ind. 99, 92 Am. St. Rep. 301, 62 N. E. 999, holding jurisdiction of circuit court as to person will be presumed, in collateral attack on judgment; Re Law, 56 App. Div. 458, 67 N. Y. Supp. 857, holding decree of foreign probate court admitting will to probate subject to collateral attack.

Cited in footnote to Springer v. Shavender, 33 L. R. A. 772, which holds void and subject to collateral attack judgment for sale of living person's land as that of decedent.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 682) on conclusiveness of probate as res judicata.

Distinguished in Re Patterson, 146 N. Y. 331, 40 N. E. 990, holding unrevoked letters of administration to one claiming to be surviving husband not estop next of kin from asking that estate be turned over to them; Plant v. Harrison, 36 Misc. 690, 74 N. Y. Supp. 411, holding decree of Connecticut probate court open to collateral attack by legatee claiming deceased's domicile was in another jurisdiction.

The annotation in 18 L. R. A. 242, was referred to with approval in Ames v. Williams, 72 Miss. 771, 17 So. 762, holding appointment of clerk of chancery court as guardian of a minor on ground that minor was not a resident of the county, not open to collateral attack.

Proceedings in probate court.

Cited in Carr v. Brown, 20 R. I. 222, 38 L. R. A. 296, footnote p. 294, 78 Am. St. Rep. 855, 38 Atl. 9, holding statute authorizing administration on estate of person not heard from in seven years not constitutional; Doe Brass Mfg. Co. v. Savlik, 35 C. C. A. 392, 93 Fed. 521, holding it error of court of foreign jurisdiction to grant letters of administration upon estate of nonresident having no property within its jurisdiction at time of death; Re Killan, 172 N. Y. 564, 63 L. R. A. 112, 65 N. E. 561 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding right of unknown brother of intestate, not cited or appearing at judicial settlement, to independent accounting; Knox v. Nobel, 77 Hun, 232, 28 N. Y. Supp. 355, holding jurisdiction of surrogate to appoint administrator does not depend upon any inquiry as to age of proposed administrator.

Validity of acts of executor or administrator.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. Wildman, 36 L. R. A. 834, which holds sale by administrator to pay debt barred by limitation, void.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 157) on validity of acts done by executor or administrator under letters testamentary, or of administration afterwards revoked or held invalid.

18 L. R. A. 249, FARR v. GRAND LODGE, A. O. U. W. 83 Wis. 446, 35 Am. St. Rep. 73, 53 N. W. 738.

Joint tenancy.

Cited in Noble v. Teeple, 58 Kan. 400, 49 Pac. 598, holding that upon death of one joint tenant, estate passes ipso facto to surviving tenants; Fiedler v. Howard, 99 Wis. 393, 67 Am. St. Rep. 865, 75 N. W. 163, holding that there may be joint tenancy of personalty; Citizens Loan & T. Co. v. Witte, 116 Wis. 63, 92 S. W. 443, holding agreement of husband and wife in deed running to them jointly, to assume and pay mortgage, binding upon each.

Distinguished in Brown v. Iowa L. of H. 107 Iowa, 443, 78 N. W. 73, holding insurance policies bequeathed to "legal heirs" does not create estate of joint tenancy; Wallace v. St. John, 119 Wis. 596, 97 N. W. 197, holding that under statute, deed to husband and wife conveys estate in joint tenancy.

18 L. R. A. 252, BUCKEYE MARBLE & FREESTONE CO. v. HARVEY, 92 Tenn. 115, 36 Am. St. Rep. 71, 20 S. W. 427.

Ultra vires.

Cited in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Improv. & Contract Co. 69 Fed. 435, holding, in absence of statutory authority, corporation guaranteeing bonds of another acts ultra vires; Byrne v. Schuyler Electric Mfg. Co. 65 Conn. 350, 28 L. R. A. 308, 31 Atl. 937, holding contract of purchase by one corporation of stock of another ultra vires and void; McCutcheon v. Merz Capsule Co. 31 L. R. A. 419, 19 C. C. A. 113, 37 U. S. App. 586, 71 Fed. 792, holding sale of entire properties of manufacturing corporation to another, in consideration of shares of stock to be held as investment, ultra vires; Marbury v. Kentucky Union Land Co. 10 C. C. A. 401, 22 U. S. App. 267, 62 Fed. 342, holding it not ultra vires for corporation to guarantee bonds and dividends on preferred stock of subsidiary corporation, where relation is such as to render actual existence of one dependent upon guaranty; Humboldt Min. Co. v. American Mfg. Min. & Mill. Co. 10 C. C. A. 420, 22 U. S. App. 334, 62 Fed. 361, holding guaranty of contract or debt of one corporation by another ultra vires and void; Tennessee Ice Co. v. Raine, 107 Tenn. 151, 64 S. W. 29, holding corporation having received benefit of contract made beyond scope of its powers will not be allowed to escape liability thereon by plea of ultra vires; Tod v. Kentucky Union Land Co. 57 Fed. 51, holding whether particular contract of corporation is beyond scope of corporate powers determinable by its charter.

Cited in footnotes to Trust Co. v. State, 48 L. R. A. 520, which sustains consolidation of street railway companies, resulting in giving increased facilities at less cost to public; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. 29 L. R. A. 839, which holds valid, appointment of other corporation to act as sole agent for sale of water within city by plants of both corporations; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 76, which denies right to corporation owning majority of other company's stock to cause default on mortgage given by latter; Joseph Bancroft & Sons Co. v. Bloede, 52 L. R. A. 734, which sustains power of cotton manufacturing company to purchase stock in company manufacturing dyes used by former; Bank of Commerce v. Hart, 20 L. R. A. 780, which denies right of banking corporation to own stock in insurance company.

Distinguished in Coal Creek Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. 106 Tenn. 669, 62 S. W. 162, holding lease of corporate property not ultra vires.

— As valid defense.

Cited in De La Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. German Sav. Inst. 175 U. S. 59, 44 L. ed. 72, 20 Sup. St. Rep. 20, holding plea of ultra vires good defense against enforcement of contract made by corporation contrary to statute of public policy; Miller v. American Mut. Acci. Ins. Co. 92 Tenn. 176, 20 L. R. A. 769, 21 S. W. 39, holding no recovery can be had on accident policy issued by company in excess of its corporate powers; Williams v. Bank of Commerce, 71 Miss. 868, 42 Am. St. Rep. 503, 16 So. 238, holding defense of ultra vires no bar to recovery in equity, where corporation has had full benefit of contract.

Distinguished in Goodland v. Bank of Darlington, 74 Mo. App. 378, holding defense of ultra vires not available in favor of corporation in case contract is executed in part, and not contrary to public policy.

18 L. R. A. 256, NEW HAVEN v. NEW HAVEN & D. R. CO. 62 Conn. 252, 25 Atl. 316.

Requirement that railway pave street.

Cited in Central R. & Electric Co's Appeal, 67 Conn. 222, 35 Atl. 32, holding municipality, being trustee and custodian of public highways, may exact equitable compensation from railway to cover extra cost of repairing street; Snouffer v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. 118 Iowa, 307, 92 N. W. 79, holding requirement that street railway remove tracks to middle of street, place at grade, and pave space occupied, reasonable.

Municipality as trustee.

Cited in footnote to Clayton v. Hallett, 59 L. R. A. 407, which sustains city's power to take property in trust for education of poor white male orphans.

Obstruction of street.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. McDowell, 22 L. R. A. 393, which holds stone wall inclosing areaway obstructing street, a nuisance.

Taking easement for private use.

Cited in footnote to Van Witsen v. Gutman, 24 L. R. A. 403, which denies right to take away for private use abutter's easement in public alley.

Compensation for use of private property.

Cited in Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co. 69 Conn. 176, 36 Atl. 1107, holding grant of franchise to railway to use public highway, valuable property right for which compensation is due adjoining property owners.

Interest of third person in contract.

Cited in Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co. 103 Mo. App. 502, 77 S. W. 1004, holding that contractor's bond to protect adjoining property did not inure to benefit of adjoining owner.

Distinguished in St. Louis use of Glencoe Lime & Cement Co. v. Von Phul, 133 Mo. 573, 54 Am. St. Rep. 695, 34 S. W. 843, holding contract between two parties, with conditions for benefit of third person, may be enforced by such third person, even though not named in the contract.

18 L. R. A. 260, LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. BOLAND, 96 Ala. 626, 11 So. 667.

Interchange of railroad cars.

Cited in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 450, 66 Am. St. Rep. 456, 71 N. W. 42, holding it matter of common knowledge that railroads haul cars of other companies over their lines; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Merrill, 61 Kan. 676, 60 Pac. 819, holding demands of commerce necessitate interchange and hauling of cars of various railroad lines.

Risks of employment.

Followed in Boland v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 106 Ala. 645, 18 So. 99, holding railroad company need not warn employee of increased risk of using coupling apparatus.

Cited in East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Turvaille, 97 Ala. 125, 12 So. 63, holding master not liable for failure to instruct servant of increased danger incident to coupling cars having double bumpers; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Banks, 104 Ala. 516, 16 So. 547, holding master not liable for injuries to servant, resulting from dangers so obvious as to be seen and known by servant exercising reasonable care; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stutts, 105 Ala. 376, 53 Am. St. Rep. 127, 17 So. 29, holding master not liable for death of servant due to his own negligence while engaged in service particularly hazardous, the nature of which he had knowledge of; Davis v. Western R. Co. 107 Ala. 630, 18 So. 173, holding servant guilty of contributory negligence in going between cars equipped with double deadwoods or buffers, he having seen and known of extra risk incident to their use; Whitcomb v. Standard Oil Co. 153 Ind. 518, 55 N. E. 440, holding handling and coupling of cars equipped with double bumpers risk incident to brakeman's employment; Southern R. Co. v. Arnold, 114 Ala. 189, 21 So. 954, holding switchman having knowledge of extraordinary dangers incident to coupling cars equipped with double bumpers cannot recover for personal injury due to his carelessness.

Cited in footnote to Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 845, which holds railroad company liable for injury while coupling freight cars without bumpers.

Master's duty to warn servant of danger.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Binion, 107 Ala. 655, 18 So. 75, holding it duty of employer to inform servant of latent defects; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Binion, 107 Ala. 655, 18 So. 75, holding it duty of employer to ascertain and inform servant of dangers incident to appliances used and services engaged in; Robinson Min. Co. v. Tolbert, 132 Ala. 466, 31 So. 519, holding it duty of master to inform servant of obvious and known dangers incident to employment, of which servant had no knowledge; Alabama Steel & Wire Co. v. Wrenn, 136 Ala. 493, 34 So. 970, holding question whether inexperienced servant had been properly warned of dangers of employment correctly submitted to jury on conflicting testimony.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 53, 66, 82) on master's duty to instruct and warn servants as to perils of employment.

Failure to inspect.

Cited in footnote to Budge v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 58 L. R. A. 333, which holds master failing to inspect foreign cars liable for consequences of defects discoverable by ordinary inspection.

18 L. R. A. 264, ANGEVINE v. KNOX-GOODRICH (Cal.) 31 Pac. 529.

Recovery by injured servant against other than master.

Cited in note (46 L. R. A. 92) on right of servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in performance of duties.

Implied warranty.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 452) on implied covenant in lease as to fitness of property for purpose intended.

18 L. R. A. 266, LEIGHTON v. YOUNG, 3 C. C. A. 176, 10 U. S. App. 298, 52 Fed. 439.

Federal practice.

Cited in Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 159, 41 L. R. A. 344, 51 N. E. 80, holding construction put upon state statute by highest state court, if constitutional, will be followed by Federal courts; Frey v. Willoughby, 11 C. C. A. 464, 27 U. S. App. 417, 63 Fed. 866, holding Federal court will not entertain equitable action to regain possession of real property, where there is plain and adequate remedy at law.

Statutory lien for land improvements.

Cited in McIntire v. Pryor, 10 App. D. C. 438, upholding statute giving one in possession of lands under claim of title, making valuable improvements thereon, in good faith, a lien thereon until compensation by real owner, in case of ejectment; Lindt v. Uihlein, 116 Iowa, 58, 89 N. W. 214, holding lien for improvements under claimant's act lost by surrendering possession before filing petition.

Distinguished in Hardeman v. Turner, 50 C. C. A. 112, 112 Fed. 43, holding, after judgment determining title in ejectment against occupant and fixing lien, that he is chargeable with rental value of land and improvements.

Purchaser's notice of defects in title.

Cited in Henderson v. Wanamaker, 25 C. C. A. 183, 49 U. S. App. 174, 79 Fed. 739, holding purchaser of land from one not in possession bound to take notice of defects in title, even to defenses such occupant might make as against vendor's title.

Partition.

Cited in Truth Lodge No. 213 A. F. & A. M. v. Barton, 119 Iowa, 239, 97 Am. St. Rep. 303, 93 N. W. 106, holding that partition may be ordered where parties own land jointly, and buildings thereon in severalty.

18 L. R. A. 275, MARK v. HYATT, 135 N. Y. 306, 48 N. Y. S. R. 70, 31 N. E. 1099.

Damages caused by injunction or unauthorized judgment.

Cited in Harless v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. 14 Ind. App. 548, 43 N. E. 456, holding one maliciously enjoined may recover damages; Burt v. Smith, 84 App. Div. 50, 82 N. Y. Supp. 186, holding mere issue of injunction pendente lite not evidence of probable cause sufficient to defeat action for malicious prosecution.

Cited in footnote to Columbus, H. Valley & T. R. Co. v. Burke, 32 L. R. A. 329, which denies liability on injunction bond on dissolution of injunction by consent.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 800, 801) on liability for tort in doing acts authorized by subsisting judgment which is afterwards reversed.

18 L. R. A. 278, RAMSEY COUNTY v. MACALASTER COLLEGE, 51 Minn. 437, 53 N. W. 704.

Property exempt from taxation.

Cited in Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 328, 43 L. R. A. 494, 42 Atl. 87, holding buildings used as dormitories and dining-halls, being part of college equipment, free from taxation; Academy of Sacred Heart v. Ireys, 51 Neb. 757, 71 N. W. 752, holding property used directly for educational purposes exempt from taxation, although portion of grounds were used for raising vegetables for school tables.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 292) on effect of using property of religious, charitable, or educational institution in secular business or for revenue, on its right to exemption from taxation.

18 L. R. A. 281, FARWELL v. COHEN, 138 Ill. 216, 32 N. E. 893, 28 N. E. 35.

Jurisdiction of county court over assignment proceedings.

Cited in Howe v. Warren, 154 Ill. 244, 40 N. E. 472, Affirming 44 Ill. App. 173, holding that by terms of general assignment act (May 22, 1877) of Illinois, county court is vested with primary exclusive jurisdiction to make equitable adjustment of creditor's claims; First Nat. Bank v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 41 Ill. App. 391, holding proceedings in voluntary assignment before county court which has not jurisdiction are without legal effect; Pease v. Francis, 63 Ill. App. 339, holding voluntary assignment having been made, court possessed jurisdiction to protect property from levy under execution against assignor; John V. Farwell v. Patterson, 76 Ill. App. 607, holding administration of estate in voluntary assignment proceedings being vested in county court is nevertheless governed by rules of equity; Harbaugh v. Costello, 184 Ill. 116, 75 Am. St. Rep. 147, 56 N. E. 363, holding state statute relative to assignments being construed to be insolvency law, its operation being suspended by enactment of national bankruptcy act, jurisdiction of county court under state statute is also suspended; Baer v. John V. Farwell Co. 66 Ill. App. 404, holding county court without jurisdiction to declare transfer of property by debtor to certain creditors voluntary assignment for benefit of all creditors.

— Prerequisites to jurisdiction.

Cited in Cantrell v. Seaverns, 64 Ill. App. 276, holding that, before county court has jurisdiction to compel assignee to settle claims of creditors, there must have been made a valid assignment; Osborne v. Williams, 34 Ill. App. 423, holding recording of deed of assignment in county recorder's office sufficient to perfect assignment and give county court exclusive jurisdiction.

Voluntary assignments.

Cited in Walker v. Ross, 150 Ill. 57, 36 N. E. 986, Affirming 52 Ill. App. 143, holding mortgage executed to secure certain creditors, containing power of immediate sale, an assignment for benefit of all debtor's creditors; Leeper v. Greensfelder, 48 Ill. App. 548, holding instrument in form of power of attorney, assignment for benefit of creditors generally when it assigns choses in action to be converted into money to pay specified debts; Price v. Laing, 152 Ill. 384, 38 N. E. 921, holding constructive assignment of personal property for benefit of particular creditors not sanctioned by statute relative to voluntary assignments; Smith v. Goodman, 149 Ill. 80, 36 N. E. 621, holding leasehold interest of insolvent debtor passes by assignment, though not included in schedule of property attached to assignment; Wright v. Hutchinson, 54 Ill. App. 540, holding partner not standing in attitude of a creditor not entitled to have assignment made by his copartner for benefit of his individual creditors declared assignment for benefit of all his creditors.

Distinguished in Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Smith, 158 Ill. 427, 41 N. E. 1076, holding preferential voluntary assignment of portion of corporation's estate to meet particular indebtedness not affected by statute prohibiting voluntary assignments; Moore v. Meyer, 47 Fed. 105, holding voluntary transfer of property specifically described to particular creditors not converted into general assignment by force of statute pertaining to assignments; Morriss v. Blackman, 179 Ill. 106, 53 N. E. 547, holding instrument lacking defeasance clause is mortgage, and not assignment.

Excessive costs.

Cited in Fox v. Oriel Cabinet Co. 70 Ill. App. 325, holding it proper for trial court to disallow excessive fees for services rendered in procuring dissolution of injunction.

Preferential assignments.

Cited in Cutter v. Pollock, 4 N. D. 213, 25 L. R. A. 381, 50 Am. St. Rep. 644, 59 N. W. 1062, holding that giving of mortgages to particular creditors to secure claims, with power of immediate foreclosure, not illegal preferential assignment; Einstein v. Lewis, 54 Ill. App. 522, holding partial assignment for particular creditors attaches only to property mentioned; Sweet v. Scherber, 42 Ill. App. 249, holding judgment creditors not entitled to priority in distribution of assets of insolvent estate under law of assignments of 1877, which requires pro rata distribution among creditors; Farwell v. Nilsson, 35 Ill. App. 109, holding assignment act of 1887 merely prohibits preferential assignments; Marshall v. Livingston Nat. Bank, 11 Mont. 363, 28 Pac. 312, holding instrument purporting to be chattel mortgage, but in fact assignment, void, so far at least as it affects preference given to employees for wages; Wright v. Hutchinson, 156 Ill. 583, 41 N. E. 172, holding deed of trust executed for benefit of certain creditors, together with pledge of personal property, not general assignment for benefit of all debtor's creditors; Juillard v. Walker, 54 Ill. App. 520, holding preference to creditors made by insolvent corporation winding up through a receiver in concert with creditors not void.

Cited in footnote to Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Max, 24 L. R. A. 524, which holds conveyance in absolute payment of debt not unlawful preference.

Cited in note (37 L. R. A. 342, 343) on whether preference by mortgage or sale is assignment for creditors.

Acknowledging and recording assignment.

Cited in Mann v. Reed, 49 Ill. App. 411, holding failure to acknowledge and record assignment otherwise valid will not render it inoperative; Feltenstein v. Stein, 157 Ill. 30, 45 N. E. 502, holding failure to record deed of assignment will not invalidate trust, where assignee has taken possession of property assigned.

18 L. R. A. 298, DEELEY v. DWIGHT, 132 N. Y. 59, 43 N. Y. S. R. 409, 30 N. E. 258.

Mortgage or lease as affecting after-acquired property.

Cited in People ex rel. Mathews v. Woodruff, 75 App. Div. 93, 77 N. Y. Supp. 722, holding failure to demand execution of mortgage as agreed upon, no extinguishment of right to enforce lien; Stewart v. Fidelity Loan Asso. 19 Misc. 51, 40 N. Y. Supp. 705, holding chattel mortgage of property not in esse, and not belonging at execution of mortgage to mortgagor, ineffective to support action at law thereon; Stewart v. Fidelity Loan Asso. 19 Misc. 51, 40 N. Y. Supp. 705, holding chattel mortgage on stock of goods, constantly changing, only affects property in existence at time mortgage executed; Graves Elevator Co. v. Callanan, 11 App. Div. 304, 42 N. Y. Supp. 930, holding mortgagee of vendee under conditional sale of elevator in process of erection by vendor on premises of mortgagor takes property mortgaged subject to conditions of sale; Anchor Brewing Co. v. Burns, 32 App. Div. 273, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1005, holding liquor-tax license certificate not yet in existence not recoverable by action of replevin on lien created by chattel mortgage; Fleetham v. Reddick, 82 Hun, 391, 31 N. Y. Supp. 342, holding grain not potentially in existence not subject to chattel mortgage; Perkins v. Batterson, 66 Hun, 586, 21 N. Y. Supp. 815, holding appointment of receiver of defunct corporation did not divest mortgagees of right to after-acquired property of mortgagor nor proceeds arising from sale thereof; Re Sentenne & G. Co. 120 Fed. 438, holding provision in chattel mortgage on machinery to include after-acquired property valid as between parties; National Bank of Deposit v. Rogers, 166 N. Y. 390, 59 N. E. 922, holding equity will enforce mortgage lien upon after-acquired property.

Cited in footnotes to New Lincoln Hotel Co. v. Shears, 43 L. R. A. 588, which holds ineffectual as against mortgage, provision in lease for lien for rent on personal property subsequently brought on premises; Brown v. Neilson, 54 L. R. A. 328, which holds stipulation for lien for rent on all property then or thereafter on leased premises does not create lien for rent in arrears on crops and other property not in being at time of lease; Horner-Gaylord Co. v. Fawcett, 57 L. R. A. 869, which holds deed of trust to secure bona fide debt on stock of goods covering after-acquired property not fraudulent per se; Townsend Brick & Contracting Co. v. Allen, 52 L. R. A. 323, which holds unmanufactured clay not covered by mortgage on clay and brick materials; New England Nat. Bank v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 60 L. R. A. 256, which holds mortgage of chattels to be acquired invalid against one taking possession under other mortgage executed by mortgagor after acquiring them.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 477) on sale or mortgage of future crops.

Action for conversion.

Cited in Hoff v. Coumeight, 14 Misc. 316, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1052, holding that complainant must show legal right of possession to deposit in bank in order to maintain action for its conversion.

Cited in footnote to Dean v. Cushman, 55 L. R. A. 959, which denies liability for conversion without demand, of purchaser in good faith of mortgaged chattels from mortgagor in possession.

Replevin.

Approved in National Bank of Deposit v. Rogers, 1 App. Div. 627, 37 N. Y. Supp. 365, holding mere equitable right of possession to satisfy lien created by chattel mortgage not sufficient to support action of replevin; Haas v. Altieri, 2 Misc. 253, 21 N. Y. Supp. 950, holding drawer of check may maintain replevin against one wrongfully retaining it.

Validity of oral agreement.

Approved in Mathews v. Hardt, 79 App. Div. 576, 80 N. Y. Supp. 462, Affirming 37 Misc. 655, 76 N. Y. Supp. 134, holding oral agreement by president of corporation with one loaning money to enable it to continue business valid as against trustee in bankruptcy of corporation, unless made within four months before petition filed.

18 L. R. A. 305, TOD v. KENTUCKY UNION R. CO. 3 C. C. A. 60, 6 U. S. App. 186, 52 Fed. 241.

Who are laborers or employees.

Cited in Clark v. Renninger, 89 Md. 71, 44 L. R. A. 415, footnote p. 413, 42 Atl. 928, holding person cutting timber, part of whose earnings are retained till completion of work, not employee within laborers' lien law; Gulf & B. Valley R. Co. v. Berry, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 410, 72 S. W. 1049, holding civil engineer not entitled to lien as laborer for wages earned in construction of railroad; Farmer v. St. Croix Power Co. 117 Wis. 89, 98 Am. St. Rep. 914, 93 N. W. 830, holding second subcontractor not employee of first subcontractor within lien law.

Distinguished in Van Frank v. St. Louis, C. G. & Ft. S. R. Co. 93 Mo. App. 423, 67 S. W. 688, holding civil engineer entitled to lien for services for surveying and staking out line of roadbed.

Preferential lien for services.

Cited in Lewis v. Fisher, 80 Md. 143, 26 L. R. A. 280, footnote p. 278, 45 Am. St. Rep. 327, 30 Atl. 608, holding compensation for services of attorney for insolvent corporation not entitled to statutory preference.

Cited in footnotes to Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 38 L. R. A. 402, which holds employee at monthly salary to sell and set up machines and unpack and repack them when necessary entitled to preference as employee; Cawood v. Wolfley, 31 L. R. A. 538, which holds wages due clerk before and during employer's last illness within statute classifying claims against estate; Falconio v. Larsen, 37 L. R. A. 254, which holds preference of claims for wages assignable; Latta v. Lonsdale, 52 L. R. A. 479, which denies right of attorney employed by railroad company on yearly salary, to preference as laborer.

Statutory requirement that wages be paid in lawful money.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 276) on validity and effect of statutes requiring wages to be paid in lawful money.

L. R. A. Au.—Vol. III.—10.

18 L. R. A. 313, STATE ex rel. SUMMERFIELD v. CLARKE, 21 Nev. 333, 37 Am. St. Rep. 517, 31 Pac. 545.

Eligibility of Federal officer to hold state office.

Cited in State ex rel. McMillan v. Sadler, 25 Nev. 173, 83 Am. St. Rep. 573, 58 Pac. 284, holding under Constitution of Nevada, person appointed or elected to lucrative office under United States government precluded, ipso facto, from accepting or retaining state office.

Gubernatorial power of appointment.

Cited in footnote to Fox v. McDonald, 21 L. R. A. 529, which holds power to appoint to fill vacancy not inherent in governor.

Statutory construction.

Cited in State ex rel. Thompson v. Washoe County, 23 Nev. 258, 45 Pac. 529. (dissenting opinion by Bonfield, J.), who holds plain and unambiguous language of statute must control in its construction.

18 L. R. A. 315, BLAGEN v. THOMPSON, 23 Or. 239. 31 Pac. 647.

Measure of damages for breach of contract.

Cited in Ironton Land Co. v. Butchart. 73 Minn. 49, 75 N. W. 749, holding measure of damages upon breach of land contract is difference in value of land as it was, and as it would have been upon fulfilment of contract; Fraser v. Echo Min. & Smelting Co. 9 Tex. Civ. App. 213, 28 S. W. 714, holding measure of damages upon breach of contract to furnish machinery, proximate and natural loss flowing from breach; McLane v. Maurer, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 77, 66 S. W. 693, holding commissions that agents would have earned from sale of land but for breach of contract recoverable as damages; Occidental Consol. Min. Co. v. Comstock Tunnel Co. 125 Fed. 246, holding general damages necessarily resulting from breach of contract, recoverable; Lanahan v. Heaver, 79 Md. 422, 29 Atl. 1036, holding, in action for breach of contract to build houses, anticipated profits from their possible sale not recoverable.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 40, 42, 96) on loss of profits as element of damages for breach of contract.

Distinguished in Coos Bay R. Co. v. Nosler, 30 Or. 556, 48 Pac. 361, holding speculative profits anticipated from completion of railroad, being too remote, are not recoverable or available as set-off in action on contract of subscription.

18 L. R. A. 323, MILLER v. GEORGIA R. & BKG. CO. 88 Ga. 563, 30 Am. St. Rep. 170, 15 S. E. 316.

Charge for storage.

Cited in Dixon v. Central R. Co. 110 Ga. 184, 35 S. E. 369, holding common carrier may lawfully charge reasonable sum for storing property of shipper, whether it be in cars or warehouse.

Demurrage charge.

Cited in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Adams, 90 Va. 395, 22 L. R. A. 534, 44 Am. St. Rep. 916, 18 S. E. 673, and Kentucky Wagon Mfg. Co. v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 98 Ky. 162, 36 L. R. A. 855, 56 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 S. W. 595, holding charge of $1 per day car service not an unreasonable charge upon shipper for delay in loading or unloading cars; Swan v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 106 Tenn. 234, 61 S. W. 57, holding valid, regulation of common carrier to charge reasonable compensation for unreasonable delay of consignee in unloading cars; Schumacher v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 207 Ill. 208, 69 N. E. 825, Affirming 108 Ill. App. 523, upholding right of railroad to demurrage for unreasonable detention of cars; Darlington v. Missouri P. R. Co. 99 Mo. App. 14, 72 S. W. 122, holding that right to demurrage exists, independent of contract.

Cited in note (22 L. R. A. 531) on right of railroad company to make charge for detention of its cars by consignees, "demurrage."

18 L. R. A. 329, Re ALBRECHT, 136 N. Y. 91, 32 Am. St. Rep. 700, 49 N. Y. S. R. 65, 32 N. E. 632.

Tenancy by entirety and cotenancy.

Cited in Carey v. Griffin, 36 Misc. 470, 73 N. Y. Supp. 766, holding conveyance to husband and wife as tenants by entirety entitles survivor to entire estate; Wilcox v. Murtha, 41 App. Div. 409, 58 N. Y. Supp. 783, holding wife's executors entitled to whole of estate left to her as surviving tenant by entirety of her husband; Re Meehan, 59 App. Div. 158, 69 N. Y. Supp. 9, holding deposits in bank in name of husband and wife inure absolutely on death of one to survivor; Hiles v. Fisher, 67 Hun, 236, 22 N. Y. Supp. 795 (concurring opinion), majority holding deed to husband and wife creates estate by entirety, entitling survivor to make valid mortgage of whole estate; Luttermoser v. Zeuner, 110 Mich. 188, 68 N. W. 117, holding wife's interest in mortgage held in joint tenancy with husband passes upon her death to her executor; Baumann v. Guion, 21 Misc. 123, 46 N. Y. Supp. 715, holding husband and wife owners in common of personal estate; Wetherow v. Lord, 41 App. Div. 417, 58 N. Y. Supp. 778, holding husband unable to make gift of bank deposit made to credit of himself and wife jointly, in excess of one half interest therein; Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 105, 61 L. R. A. 171, 96 Am. St. Rep. 486, 73 S. W. 202, holding that estates by entirety may be created in personal property.

Cited in footnote to Thornburg v. Wiggins, 22 L. R. A. 42, which holds tenancy by entirety not created by conveyance to husband and wife "in joint tenancy."

Cited in notes (22 L. R. A. 595) on tenancy by entireties in personal property; (30 L. R. A. 318) on tenancy by entireties.

18 L. R. A. 331, KENT v. CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL, 136 N. Y. 10, 49 N. Y. S. R. 19, 32 Am. St. Rep. 693, 32 N. E. 704.

Jurisdiction of equity to compel execution of instruments.

Cited in Engelbach v. Simpson, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 194, 33 S. W. 596, holding that equity will compel holder of record title to realty to execute new deed upon loss or destruction of old; Miles v. Graham, 181 Mass. 48, 62 N. E. 980, holding re-execution of instrument wrongfully mutilated may be decreed.

Distinguished in Dull v. Rohr, 13 Misc. 531, 35 N. Y. Supp. 523, holding that infant heirs will not be compelled in equity to execute conveyance of land, title to which they do not adversely claim.

Contingent estates.

Cited in Perkins v. Burlington Land & Improv. Co. 112 Wis. 522, 88 N. W. 648, holding unborn children of cestui que trust bound by judgment in suit against trustee; Ruggles v. Tyson, 104 Wis. 507, 48 L. R. A. 812, 79 N. W. 766, holding that for all purposes of rendering effective judgment, court has jurisdiction if contingent interests in estate are represented by those in being having vested interest therein; Adami v. Backer, 29 Misc. 95, 60 N. Y. Supp. 683, holding afterborn grandchildren bound by judgment of sale directed as against their contingent interests, which were properly represented in litigation by persons in being; Ridley v. Halliday, 106 Tenn. 616, 53 L. R. A. 481, footnote p. 477, 82 Am. St. Rep. 902, 61 S. W. 1025, and Springs v. Scott, 132 N. C. 556, 44 S. E. 116, holding judgment of sale of estate effective as against unborn children whose contingent interests were represented by living owners of inheritance; Boskowitz v. Held, 15 App. Div. 312, 44 N. Y. Supp. 136, holding that living persons, trustees of express trust, or parent, cannot, either by collusion or neglect, so deal with property in trust as to cut off contingent interests of unborn children for whom trust was in fact created; Gray v. Smith, 76 Fed. 532, holding contingent interests of afterborn children effectually cut off by judgment against those living, in whom is vested present estate of inheritance; Kirk v. Kirk, 137 N. Y. 516, 33 N. E. 552, holding contingent interests of unborn children concluded by judgment of partition and sale of estate in which those living represented full vested interest, and were made parties to action; Myers v. McCullagh, 63 App. Div. 327, 71 N. Y. Supp. 520, holding interests of afterborn children sufficiently cared for under judgment of partition and sale, if proceeds are properly secured in behalf of such contingent interests; Barnes v. Luther, 77 Hun, 236, 28 N. Y. Supp. 400, holding that judgment of partition and sale may effectually cut off contingent interests of persons not in being, provided those interests are provided for and protected in some equitable manner; Smith v. Secor, 157 N. Y. 405, 52 N. E. 179, holding judgment of partition ineffectual to cut off contingent interests of afterborn children; Fox v. Fee, 24 App. Div. 323, 49 N. Y. Supp. 292, holding judgment of partition and sale not defective because of failure to provide for unborn children who in fact could have no interest in estate partitioned and sold; Rhodes v. Caswell, 41 App. Div. 232, 58 N. Y. Supp. 470, holding contingent remainder interests of unborn children concluded by judgment against living representatives; Re Asch, 75 App. Div. 495, 78 N. Y. Supp. 561, holding judgment of sale affecting contingent interest of unborn children valid, rights of such being fully represented by their parents; Janpole v. Lasky, 94 App. Div. 356, 88 N. Y. Supp. 50, holding partition sale decree involving trust estate, substituting trust fund for land, conclusive upon all interests.

Cited in footnotes to Harrison v. Turnbull, 41 L. R. A. 703, which holds unborn heirs bound by decree in action to establish claims against estate to which living heirs of same class are parties; Gavin v. Curtin, 40 L. R. A. 776, which holds afterborn children bound by decree directing sale of land to preserve remainderman's interest; Hale v. Hale, 20 L. R. A. 247, which authorizes court to order conversion into personalty of land in which persons not in being may have interest; Loring v. Hildreth, 40 L. R. A. 127, which holds representation of unborn children by guardian ad litem sufficient in suit to remove cloud.

Necessary parties.

Cited in footnote to Brown v. Brown, 33 L. R. A. 810, which denies right to cancel deed on ground of nondelivery without making party, persons in esse having remainder interest.

Contracts affecting interests of afterborn child.

Distinguished in McGillis v. McGillis, 154 N. Y. 548 49 N. E. 145, Modifying 11 App. Div. 369, 42 N. Y. Supp. 921, holding afterborn child not bound by contract made by legatee having no vested interest in estate.

Vesting of contingent estate.

Cited in Re Brown, 154 N. Y. 328, 48 N. E. 537, holding that estates in remainder, to be held in trust until termination of life estates, will become vested in issue of children of testator, in being at time of his death, subject to life estates created by will.

Power of legislature over contingent interests in property.

Cited in Ebling v. Dreyer, 149 N. Y. 467, 44 N. E. 155, Reversing 79 Hun, 324, 29 N. Y. Supp. 459, holding it competent for state legislature to authorize sale of contingent interests of persons not in esse.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 248) on legislative power to defeat contingent interests in property.

Right of possessor of land under verbal agreement.

Cited in Brown v. Crabb, 156 N. Y. 450, 51 N. E. 306, holding one in possession of real property under verbal agreement to purchase entitled to maintain action to determine title to property.

18 L. R. A. 335, MAHONEY v. DETROIT STREET R. CO. 93 Mich. 612, 32 Am. St. Rep. 528, 53 N. W. 793.

Right to ride on cars.

Cited in Van Dusan v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 97 Mich. 442, 37 Am. St. Rep. 354, 56 N. W. 848, holding passenger upon boarding train without evidence of right to ride may be ejected on refusal to pay fare; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Cates, 14 Ind. App. 173, 41 N. E. 712, holding face of passenger's ticket conclusive evidence of his right to ride.

Cited in footnotes to Nashville Street R. Co. v. Griffin, 49 L. R. A. 451, which denies authority to eject passenger who, after paying fare inside station, enters car which has stopped just outside station; O'Rourke v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 614, which holds void, conditions on transfer check requiring passengers to ascertain correctness of date, time, and direction; Curtis v. Louisville City R. Co. 21 L. R. A. 649, which denies right to eject for nonpayment of fare, passenger receiving 45 cents as change for 50-cent piece.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 711) on passenger's duty to pay fare wrongfully demanded, in order to avoid expulsion and lessen damages.

Distinguished in Vining v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. 122 Mich. 250, 80 N. W. 1080, holding carrier liable to passenger for his wrongful eviction from car before reaching point to which his ticket entitled him to be carried.

Damages for ejection.

Cited in Brown v. Rapid R. Co. 130 Mich. 487, 90 N. W. 290, holding only extra fare paid by reason of ejection recoverable, where by reason of error of conductor on outward trip, wrong coupons were presented on return.

Passenger giving away transfer.

Cited in footnote to Ex parte Lorenzen, 50 L. R. A. 55, which sustains penal ordinance against passenger selling or giving away street railway transfer.

18 L. R. A. 337, PEOPLE ex rel. CHADDOCK v. BARRY, 93 Mich. 342, 53 N. W. 785.

Computation of time.

Cited in Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 163 N. Y. 63, 79 Am. St. Rep. 565, 57 N. E. 168, and Crozier v. Allen, 117 Mich. 172, 75 N. W. 300 holding that on computation of time of service of process, day of service and Sundays excluded, and day of appearance included; Lemon v. Hampton, 128 Mich. 183, 87 N. W. 53, holding service on 7th, returnable on 10th of month, Sunday intervening, valid under statute requiring service at least two days before appearance.

Cited in note (49 L. R. A. 201, 219) on rule as to first and last days in computation of time.

18 L. R. A. 339, HENRY GAUS & SONS MFG. CO. v. ST. LOUIS, K. & N. W. R. CO. 113 Mo. 308, 20 S. W. 658.

Construction of railroad on public street.

Qualified in Sherlock v. Kansas City Belt R. Co. 142 Mo. 182, 64 Am. St. Rep. 551, 43 S. W. 629, holding laying of steam railway at established grade of street not additional servitude different from contemplated use in original dedication.

Cited in D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 147 U. S. 255, 37 L. ed. 159, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299, holding construction and operation of steam railroad on public street not additional servitude entitling abutting property owners to compensation; Stephenson v. Missouri P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 648, holding abutting lot owner's right to use of street a property right, subservient, however, to public use, even to maintenance of steam railroad; Montgomery v. Santa Ana Westminster R. Co. 104 Cal. 193, 25 L. R. A. 657, 43 Am. St. Rep. 89, 37 Pac. 786; Lockwood v. Wabash R. Co. 122 Mo. 97, 24 L. R. A. 519, 43 Am. St. Rep. 547, 26 S. W. 698; Ruckert v. Grand Ave. R. Co. 163 Mo. 278, 63 S. W. 814, — holding laying of railroad on public street not additional servitude entitling adjoining lot owner to damages therefor; De Geofroy v. Merchants Bridge Terminal R. Co. 179 Mo. 705, 64 L. R. A. 963, 101 Am. St. Rep. 524, 79 S. W. 386, holding abutting owner entitled to damages for construction and operation of elevated railroad in street; Hulett v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 80 Mo. App. 90, holding railroad liable to abutting owner for damages resulting from cutting in street to reach grade established by city.

Distinguished in Knapp, S. & Co. v. St. Louis Transfer R. Co. 126 Mo. 38, 28 S. W. 627, holding that injunction will issue to compel removal of railway constructed on sidewalk space of public street; Corby v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 150 Mo. 464, 52 S. W. 282, holding void ordinance granting right to construct and operate steam railway on public street, thereby monopolizing its use.

Damages for, or injunction against, unlawful use of street.

Cited in Steffen v. Fox, 56 Mo. App. 21 (dissenting opinion), as to right of abutting property owner to damages due to unlawful construction of sidewalk in front of his premises; Thomas v. Hunt, 134 Mo. 398, 32 L. R. A. 859, 35 S. W. 581, holding that abutting lot owner upon highway has peculiar incorporeal interest in highway in nature of easement, for violation of which appropriate action will lie.

Elevated railroad as railway.

Cited in footnote to Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co. 26 L. R. A. 246, which holds elevated railroad a "railway."

18 L. R. A. 343, McDONOUGH v. MARTIN, 88 Ga. 675, 16 S. E. 59.

18 L. R. A. 347, ERICKSON v. BROOKINGS COUNTY, 3 S. D. 434, 53 N. W. 857.

18 L. R. A. 350, BLANK v. NOHL, 112 Mo. 159, 20 S. W. 477.

Contracts as to separation or divorce.

Cited in Gentry v. Gentry, 67 Mo. App. 553, holding agreement between man and wife to secure legal separation void as against public policy; Rosenfeld v. Rosenfeld, 67 Mo. App. 30, holding repudiation of collusive agreement anterior to date of trial not bar to rendition of valid decree of divorce; Palmer v. Palmer, 26 Utah, 48, 61 L. R. A. 647, footnote p. 641, 99 Am. St. Rep. 820, 72 Pac. 3, holding void, contract between husband and wife to secure divorce; Brown v. Brown, 64 Neb. 788, 90 N. W. 860, holding deed from husband and wife, providing for termination of cohabitation at option of wife upon payment of annuity, void; Trammell v. Vaughan, 158 Mo. 222, 51 L. R. A. 856, 81 Am. St. Rep. 302, 59 S. W. 79, holding that state has direct interest in all contracts of marriage, consummation or dissolution of which must be according to law.

Cited in footnotes to Baum v. Baum, 53 L. R. A. 650, which holds void, separation agreement on consideration that husband support wife and children, and assign policies on his life; Henderson v. Henderson, 48 L. R. A. 766, which holds unmodifiable without wife's consent, decree in conformity with separation agreement for payment of stipulated monthly sum for wife's maintenance; Foote v. Nickerson, 54 L. R. A. 554, which denies power to make valid contract of separation.

18 L. R. A. 353, MILWAUKEE S. S. CO. v. MILWAUKEE, 83 Wis. 590, 53 N. W. 839.

Situs of corporate property for purpose of taxation.

Cited in State ex rel. Milwaukee Street R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Wis. 565, 63 N. W. 746, holding proper place to tax property of quasi-public corporation is district in which its "principal office and place of business" is situated.

18 L. R. A. 356, GIFFORD v. WIGGINS, 50 Minn. 401, 52 N. W. 904.

False arrest and imprisonment.

Cited in Hofschulte v. Doe. 78 Fed. 441, holding ministerial officer not personally liable for arrest of individual on warrant regular on its face; Strozzi v. Wines, 24 Nev. 398, 57 Pac. 832, holding person causing arrest of mortgagee in possession liable for false imprisonment; Tillman v. Beard, 121 Mich. 480, 46 L. R. A. 217, 80 N. W. 248, and Whaley v. Lawton, 62 S. C. 101, 56 L. R. A. 651, 40 S. E. 128, holding one not liable for false imprisonment who in good faith states facts charging violation of ordinance afterwards declared void; Niven v. Boland, 177 Mass. 14, 52 L. R. A. 788, 58 N. E. 282, holding physician not liable for signing certificate causing person's commitment to hospital for insane without cause.

Cited in footnote to Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 21 L. R. A. 278, which holds arrest and imprisonment in civil cause on void process unjustifiable.

18 L. R. A. 359, MOORE v. NORMAN, 52 Minn. 83, 38 Am. St. Rep. 526, 53 N. W. 809.

Good faith as affecting tender.

Cited in Malone v. Wright, 90 Tex. 57, 36 S. W. 420, holding tender of payment not made in good faith ineffectual to discharge lien created by pledge.

Conditional tender.

Cited in Fields v. Danenhowe, 65 Ark. 400, 43 L. R. A. 523, 46 S. W. 938, holding that tender, to be good discharge of mortgage lien, must be without conditions objectionable to creditor; Davies v. Dow, 80 Minn. 229, 83 N. W. 50, holding that tender sufficient to discharge lien of mortgage must be unconditional.

18 L. R. A. 361, KING v. BRIGHAM, 23 Or. 262, 31 Pac. 601.

Equity jurisdiction as to boundary lines.

Cited in Norton v. Elwert, 29 Or. 595, 41 Pac. 926, holding that equity has jurisdiction to grant mandatory relief in boundary line dispute in case legal remedy at law be inadequate and inefficient; Humboldt County v. Lander County, 22 Nev. 258, 26 L. R. A. 750, footnote p. 749, 58 Am. St. Rep. 750, 38 Pac. 578, holding suit to determine disputed boundary line between counties not within jurisdiction of equity; School District No. 70 v. Price, 23 Or. 296, 31 Pac. 657, holding equitable jurisdiction of confused boundary lines not inclusive of power to try title to land in dispute; Miner v. Caples, 23 Or. 304, 31 Pac. 655, holding that jurisdiction of equity to determine boundary line cannot be extended to determination of title; Williams v. Tschantz, 88 Iowa, 132, 55 N. W. 202 (dissenting opinion), majority holding court not limited to inquiry as to government lines in statutory proceeding to establish boundaries.

Adverse possession.

Cited in Gist v. Doke, 42 Or. 229, 70 Pac. 704, holding unconditional claim of ownership for over ten years to boundary line located by mistake constitutes adverse possession.

18 L. R. A. 367, FT. WAYNE v. LAKE SHORE & M. S. R. CO. 132 Ind. 558, 32 Am. St. Rep. 277, 32 N. E. 215.

Vote of public officer as affected by interest.

Cited in footnotes to Weston v. Syracuse, 43 L. R. A. 678, which sustains city's right to set up as defense corruption in passage of resolution by city council; Sylvester v. Webb, 52 L. R. A. 518, which sustains contract to erect school building, with member of building committee and selectmen of town, although his vote necessary to authorize contract; State ex rel. Rylands v. Pinkerman, 22 L. R. A. 653, which holds alderman not deprived by interest of right to vote against confirmation of his successor as police commissioner.

Compensation of officer for extra services.

Cited in footnote to Tacoma v. Lillis, 18 L. R. A. 372, which holds councilman not entitled to compensation for extra services in official capacity.

Removal of officer.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Childs v. Kiichli, 19 L. R. A. 779, which holds president of city council removable at pleasure.

Disposal or use of property devoted to public purpose.

Cited in Lake County Water & Light Co. v. Walsh, 160 Ind. 39, 98 Am. St. Rep. 264, 65 N. E. 530, denying right of city to sell water-works plant to private corporation; De Motte v. Valparaiso, 161 Ind. 321, 66 L. R. A. 119, 67 N. E. 985, holding that city may sell reserved right to purchase water works; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. State, 159 Ind. 519, 65 N. E. 508, affirming award of mandamus to compel railroad to construct highway crossing; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 30 Ind. App. 658, 66 N. E. 919, upholding right of telegraph company to acquire right of way along and over railroad right of way; Gold v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 153 Ind. 243, 53 N. E. 285, sustaining right to locate highway across railroad track and right of way; Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. v. Anderson, 139 Ind. 492, 47 Am. St. Rep. 285, 38 N. E. 167, holding that city street cannot be extended across railway tracks, thereby destroying use of its engine house, turntable, and water tank; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Starkweather, 97 Iowa, 162, 31 L. R. A. 185, footnote p. 183, 59 Am. St. Rep. 404, 66 N. W. 87, sustaining right to open street across depot grounds; Terre Haute v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 149 Ind. 178, 37 L. R. A. 192, 46 N. E. 77, holding that municipalities possessed of power to open streets across highways may appropriate land to a second public use, notwithstanding such second use may be inconsistent with existing uses; Chattanooga Terminal R. Co. v. Felton, 69 Fed. 280, denying right of one corporation to condemn property already appropriated to public use by another corporation for a similar purpose.

Cited in footnote to Douglass v. Montgomery, 43 L. R. A. 376, which denies city's power to grant right to lay railroad across public park, and then abandon it and confirm reversioner's title.

Construction of deed.

Cited in Waldorf v. Elkhart & W. R. Co. 13 Ind. App. 136, 41 N. E. 396, holding that reservations and exceptions in deed will be construed against grantor.

Dedication by user.

Cited in footnote to Sturmer v. County Court, 36 L. R. A. 300, which holds public square dedicated when used for more than eighty years as such.

18 L. R. A. 372, TACOMA v. LILIS, 4 Wash. 797, 31 Pac. 321.

Recovery of money voluntarily paid.

Cited in Ward v. Barnum, 10 Colo. App. 498, 52 Pac. 412, holding money paid by town board to attorney for services it had no power to authorize, recoverable; Frederick v. Douglas County, 96 Wis. 425, 71 N. W. 798, holding money voluntarily paid by public officer recoverable in equity; Wiles v. McIntosh County, 10 N. D. 599, 88 N. W. 710, upholding right of county to recover overpayment of compensation to superintendent of schools, induced by false statements of latter.

Mandamus to compel payment of salary.

Cited in Bardsley v. Sternberg, 17 Wash. 255, 49 Pac. 499, holding that mandamus will not issue to compel payment of salary warrants issued without authority.

Compensation for extra services of public officers.

Cited in James v. Seattle, 22 Wash. 658, 79 Am. St. Rep. 957, 62 Pac. 84, holding members of city council not entitled to extra compensation for going on tour of inspection to other cities.

Interest as affecting vote of officer.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 368) on validity of vote of common council or similar body as affected by personal interests of members.

Estoppel.

Cited in Johnson v. Cedar, 117 Iowa, 326, 90 N. W. 713, holding school district accepting benefits of contract estopped from asserting illegality.

18 L. R. A. 375, FRANKE v. FRANKE (Cal.) 31 Pac. 571.

18 L. R. A. 381, GREEN v. GRANT, 143 Ill. 61, 32 N. E. 369.

Necessary parties.

Cited in Perkins v. Burlington Land & Improv. Co. 112 Wis. 522, 88 N. W. 648, holding unborn children of cestui que trust bound by judgment in suit by third party on trust deed against trustee.

Trustee as fee owner.

Cited in King v. King, 168 Ill. 285, 48 N. E. 582, holding trustee given complete power of disposal takes title in fee; Security Ins. Co. v. Kuhn, 207 Ill. 171, 69 N. E. 822, holding widow with equitable life estate and legal title as executrix and trustee, fee owner within terms of insurance policy.

18 L. R. A. 385, SWAIN v. SCHIEFFELIN, 134 N. Y. 471, 47 N. Y. S. R. 910, 31 N. E. 1025.

Damages recoverable.

Cited in Malone v. Weill, 67 App. Div. 172, 73 N. Y. Supp. 700, holding mere uncertainty in amount of damage suffered by one having rights violated does not preclude recovery; Florence Oil & Ref. Co. v. Farrar, 55 C. C. A. 657, 119 Fed. 151, holding measure of damages for breach of contract to furnish machinery is its difference in value in proper and defective condition; Trapp v. McClellan, 68 App. Div. 368, 74 N. Y. Supp. 130, holding damages not recoverable when injury is result of efficient intermediate cause operating until injury is produced.

Breach of warranty.

Cited in Springfield Mill. Co. v. Barnard & L. Mfg. Co. 26 C. C. A. 395, 49 U. S. App. 438, 81 Fed. 267, and Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque Street R. Co. 12 C. C. A. 46, 27 U. S. App. 364, 64 Fed. 79, holding vendee of machinery may recover of manufacturers damages resulting from breach of warranty, also immediate and probable loss resulting from breach; Detroit White Lead Works v. Knaszak, 13 Misc. 622, 34 N. Y. Supp. 924, holding, upon breach of warranty in sale of goods to be used for particular purpose, damages recoverable are those naturally flowing from breach; Bruce v. Fiss, D. & C. Horse Co. 26 Misc. 473, 56 N. Y. Supp. 234, holding measure of damages recoverable for breach of warranty on sale of horse is loss sustained to person and property of vendee due to horse running away; Elwood Planing Mills Co. v. Harting, 21 Ind. App. 412, 52 N. E. 621, holding vendor of coal dust who warrants it free from soft coal dust liable for damage resulting to vendee from breach of the warranty; United States Trust Co. v. O'Brien, 143 N. Y. 288, 38 N. E. 266, holding liability for breach of warranty coextensive with liability for tort, exclusive of punitive damages; Smith v. Foote, 81 Hun, 131, 30 N. Y. Supp. 679, holding on breach of warranty to furnish goods "like" sample, measure of damages is actual loss sustained up to discovery of breach; Tower v. Pauly, 67 Mo. App. 638, holding damages arising from discomfort and cost of extra fuel recoverable in action for breach of warranty as to heating capacity of furnace.

Distinguished in American Forcite Powder Mfg. Co. v. Brady, 4 App. Div. 97, 38 N. Y. Supp. 545, holding dealer not bound by implied warranty against latent defects in goods sold.

What constitutes warranty.

Cited in Bull v. Bath Iron Works, 75 App. Div. 385, 78 N. Y. Supp. 181, holding stipulation in contract to build steamship of certain speed, warranty.

Loss of profits.

Cited in Brauer v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 66 App. Div. 607, 73 N. Y. Supp. 291, holding damages recoverable for breach of shipping contracts do not include commissions arising from collateral contract; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Rubenstein, 5 Colo. App. 125, 38 Pac. 76, holding passenger injured while traveling entitled to recover, as element of damage, profits arising from his employment; Evins v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 47 App. Div. 514, 62 N. Y. Supp. 495, holding attorney arrested and maliciously prosecuted may show loss of practice under general allegation of damages; Laufer v. Boynton Furnace Co. 84 Hun, 313, 32 N. Y. Supp. 362, holding that to ascertain damages accruing from defective heating apparatus, causing injury to plants in greenhouse, it is competent to show number of cut flowers of previous years.

Cited in notes (52 L. R. A. 50) on damages for tort as affected by loss of profits; (52 L. R. A. 217) on loss of profits of sale or purchase as damages.

18 L. R. A. 390, JOSEPH SCHLITZ BREWING CO. v. COMPTON, 142 Ill. 511, 34 Am. St. Rep. 92, 32 N. E. 693.

Damages recoverable for nuisance.

Cited in Centralia v. Wright, 156 Ill. 566, 41 N. E. 217, holding that injury resulting from temporary nuisance, damages accruing up to time of suit only are recoverable; Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Patchette, 59 Ill. App. 254, holding suit maintainable for recovery of continuing damages; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Pattison, 67 Ill. App. 354, holding if infliction of past damages does not abate temporary nuisance successive actions are maintainable; Chicago N. S. Street R. Co. v. Payne, 192 Ill. 247, 61 N. E. 467, holding erection of power house temporary nuisance, entitling one injured thereby to damages only to commencement of suit; Sanitary District v. Ray, 199 Ill. 67, 93 Am. St. Rep. 102, 64 N. E. 1048, holding land owner entitled to maintain successive actions for damages to land occasioned by continuing nuisances; Steinke v. Bentley, 6 Ind. App. 669, 34 N. E. 97, holding obstruction of drainage ditch continuing nuisance entitling land owner to accrued damages only; Bailey v. Heintz, 71 Ill. App. 190, holding obstruction placed in channel of stream not permanent nuisance or authorizing recovery of damages accruing subsequent to commencement of suit; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ferrell, 108 Ill. App. 667, denying tenant's right to recover for overflow of land by water, partly due to permanent dam lawfully built by railroad.

Distinguished in Peck v. Michigan City, 149 Ind. 683, 49 N. E. 800, holding action for damages not maintainable until some damages accrue from wrong complained of.

— Measure of damages.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. King, 23 Ind. App. 577, 55 N. E. 875, holding measure of damages in case of temporary nuisance not depreciation of property; Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 411, 68 N. E. 388, holding judgment for damages not bar to proceeding by riparian owner to enjoin pollution of stream.

Damages recoverable for trespass.

Cited in Cosgriff Bros v. Miller, 10 Wyo. 235, 98 Am. St. Rep. 977, 68 Pac. 206, holding damages after commencement of action, directly due to trespass by pasturing of sheep, recoverable.

18 L. R. A. 393, ATLANTIC EXP. CO. v. WILMINGTON & W. R. CO. 111 N. C. 463, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 294, 32 Am. St. Rep. 805, 16 S. E. 393.

Acts concerning regulations, rates, or prices.

Affirmed in Leavell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 116 N. C. 220, 27 L. R. A. 843, 47 Am. St. Rep. 798, 21 S. E. 391, holding railroad and telegraph commission act authorizing establishment of rates, constitutional.

Cited in Mayo v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 112 N. C. 345, 16 S. E. 1006, holding act creating railroad commission, and investing it with power to make rules and regulations and hear complaints, constitutional; Hendon v. North Carolina R. Co. 125 N. C. 128, 34 S. E. 227, upholding general regulation that one seeking reissue of lost certificate of stock furnished indemnity bond and leave reissued certificate with company for five years; State ex rel. Godard v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 843, 49 L. R. A. 675, 60 Pac. 1068 (dissenting opinion), as to whether delegation of power to railroad commission to make and regulate rules is unconstitutional; Corporation Commission v. Seaboard Air Line System R. Co. 127 N. C. 288, 37 S. E. 266, holding valid, rates fixed for transportation of freight.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 183) on legislative power to fix tolls, rates, or prices.

Authority of railroad commission.

Cited in State ex rel. Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 472, 28 S. E. 554, and State ex rel. Railroad Comrs. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 113 N. C. 220, 22 L. R. A. 570, 18 S. E. 389, holding railroad commission, court of record with general jurisdiction over all matters within constituted authority; Henderson v. Durham Traction Co. 132 N. C. 787, 44 S. E. 598, raising, but not deciding, question whether act permitting commission to make exemptions from operation of penal statute is constitutional.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Tompkins v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 47 L. R. A. 569, which sustains railroad commissioner's authority to require building of depot.

— To punish for contempt.

Cited in State ex rel. Pate v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 122 N. C. 880, 29 S. E. 334, holding railroad commission a court of record capable of administering punishment for contempt.

Discrimination in facilities.

Cited in footnote to Barrington v. Commercial Dock Co. 33 L. R. A. 116, which denies power to discriminate between similar vessels using wharf for landing place.

Delegation of power.

Cited in Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 133, 50 L. R. A. 70, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89, upholding power of board of health to exclude unvaccinated child from public schools during epidemic.

18 L. R. A. 398, INSTITUTION FOR EDUCATION OF MUTE & BLIND v. HENDERSON, 18 Colo. 98, 31 Pac. 714.

Appropriation and payment of public moneys.

Cited in Goodykoontz v. Acker, 19 Colo. 363, 35 Pac. 911, holding appropriation necessary prerequisite to payment of public moneys; Re Bounties, 18 Colo. 273, 32 Pac. 423, upholding power of legislature to make appropriation to reimburse county treasurers for moneys paid out under unconstitutional bounty act, when act was void simply as to manner of payment of premiums; Carlile v. Hurd, 3 Colo. App. 15, 31 Pac. 952, holding it duty of state treasurer to investigate and determine legality of all claims against state funds; State ex rel. Orr v. New Orleans, 50 La. Ann. 892, 24 So. 666, holding city ordinance appropriating public moneys for charitable purposes unconstitutional; Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 119, 28 L. R. A. 191, footnote p. 187, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221, 39 Pac. 437, holding statute providing bounty of $5 for each coyote destroyed, payable out of general fund in treasury, not appropriation.

Cited in footnotes to Patty v. Colgan, 18 L. R. A. 744, which holds appropriation for sufferers from flood illegal; Conlin v. San Francisco, 21 L. R. A. 474, which holds void, act for relief of street contractor; Re Clark, 19 L. R. A. 138, which holds suit maintainable to compel investment of taxes from railroads in sinking fund to pay railroad-aid bonds; Michigan Sugar Co. v. Dix, 56 L. R. A. 329, which holds beet sugar bounty unconstitutional; Board of Education v. State 25 L. R. A. 770, which holds unconstitutional, act authorizing board of education to levy tax to pay claim for which no obligation exists.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 37, 63) on what claims constitute valid demands against state.

— Preferred claims.

Cited in Collier & C. Lithographing Co. v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 263, 32 Pac. 417, holding claim for public printing not preferred claim upon public funds, in absence of specific appropriation therefor; Parks v. Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 91, 43 Pac. 542, holding, in case appropriations exceed revenues, salaries of public officers are preferred claims; Stuart v. Nance, 28 Colo. 200, 63 Pac. 323, Affirming 12 Colo. App. 130, 54 Pac. 867, holding state treasurer bound to pay warrants for salaries of public officers according to priority of issue.

— Excessive appropriations.

Cited in Re Loan of School Fund, 18 Colo. 200, 32 Pac. 273, holding attempted appropriation of public money in excess of constitutional limit of revenue unconstitutional.

18 L. R. A. 401, STATE ex rel. FOWLER v. FINLEY, 30 Fla. 325, 11 So. 674.

Disbarment of attorneys.

Cited in Re Boone, 83 Fed. 947, and State ex rel. Johnson v. Gebhardt, 87 Mo. App. 548, holding allegations against attorney to disbar him should be clear and specific, enabling him to know exactly charges made, and giving him opportunity to defend; Re Duncan, 64 S. C. 482, 42 S. E. 433, holding mere depositing of client's money by attorney in his own name and checking against it not sufficient misconduct to authorize disbarment.

Cited in footnotes to Re Evans, 53 L. R. A. 952, authorizing disbarment of attorney for champerty and agreement against public policy; Re Kirby, 39 L. R. A. 856, which authorizes disbarment for receiving stolen government property, with intent to convert to own use; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. MacCabe, 19 L. R. A. 231, which holds anonymous advertisement as to obtaining divorce, ground for disbarment; Re Thompson, 40 L. R. A. 194, which holds disbarment not precluded by attorney's resignation pending disbarment proceedings; Re Lentz, 50 L. R. A. 415, which denies right to disbar attorney for single wrongful appropriation without actual intent to defraud, for which full restitution has been made.

Rights of accused in disbarment proceedings.

Cited in Re Duncan, 64 S. C. 479, 42 S. E. 433, holding accused attorney in disbarment proceedings entitled to have witnesses against him examined in open court.

18 L. R. A. 409, BLANCHARD v. STATE, 30 Fla. 223, 11 So. 785.

License tax on lawyers.

Cited in footnotes to Ex parte Williams, 21 L. R. A. 783, which holds lawyers subject to occupation tax; Petersburg v. Cocke, 36 L. R. A. 432, which holds attorney having office within, though residing outside of, city subject to license tax.

18 L. R. A. 410, STATE ex rel. ATTY. GEN. v. JOHNSON, 30 Fla. 433, 11 So. 845.

Suspension or removal from office.

Cited in Cameron v. Parker, 2 Okla. 329, 38 Pac. 14, holding power of suspending public officer rests primarily with governor; Re Advisory Opinion, 31 Fla. 4, 18 L. R. A. 595, 12 So. 114, holding ultimate end of suspension from public office can be no more than removal for remainder of term.

Cited in footnotes to People ex rel. Engley v. Martin, 24 L. R. A. 201, which holds governor's power to remove member of fire and police board dependent on terms of charter; Speed v. Detroit, 22 L. R. A. 842, which holds misconduct before appointment no ground for removal.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 415) on poll taxes, as to governor's power of suspension of collector for neglect of duty.

Mandamus to secure possession of public office.

Cited in State ex rel. Moore v. Archibald, 5 N. D. 383, 66 N. W. 234, and Cruse v. State, 52 Neb. 832, 73 N. W. 212, holding mandamus proper remedy to compel suspended public officer to deliver property, books, etc., to successor; State ex rel. Ayers v. Kipp, 10 S. D. 498, 74 N. W. 440, holding that mandamus will not issue to try title to public office, but is proper to secure possession of property of office; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Johnson, 35 Fla. 12, 31 L. R. A. 370, 16 So. 786, holding title to public office not determinable by mandamus; Stevens v. Carter, 27 Or. 556, 31 L. R. A. 352, 40 Pac. 1074, holding duty of incumbent of public office on expiration of term, to surrender insignia of office to successor, enforceable by mandamus.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 343, 345, 362) on mandamus to compel surrender of office.

Constitutional construction.

Cited in Godwin v. King, 31 Fla. 533, 13 So. 108, holding, to ascertain intent embodied in Constitution, it is proper to refer to construction of former instrument of which latter is revision.

18 L. R. A. 419, ANDERSON v. CRISP, 5 Wash. 178, 31 Pac. 638.

Passing of title on sale.

Cited in footnote to H. M. Tyler Lumber Co. v. Charlton, 55 L. R. A. 301, which holds title does not pass by acceptance of offer to sell lumber piled at mill, to be inspected by common employee.

18 L. R. A. 421, EVERS v. STATE, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 318, 37 Am. St. Rep. 811, 20 S. W. 744.

Later appeal in 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 283, 22 S. W. 1019.

Intoxication or resulting insanity as defense for crime.

Cited in Hernandez v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 272, 22 S. W. 972, holding refusal to charge on trial for assault with intent to murder, that mental state of defendant, caused by intoxication, could be taken into consideration in determining question of intent, not error; Wright v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 632, 40 S. W. 491, holding intoxication no defense against charge of theft; Tipsett v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 192, 39 S. W. 120, holding it error of court to charge jury that temporary insanity, superinduced by drunkenness, complete defense to charge of murder; Delgado v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 159, 29 S. W. 1070, holding instruction that mental condition of defendant, due to intoxication produced by voluntary recent use of spirits, might be considered as to degree of murder, more favorable to defendant than he was entitled to; DeAlberty v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 510, 31 S. W. 391, upholding charge that neither intoxication nor temporary insanity induced by recent use of intoxicating liquors constitutes any excuse for crime.

Cited in note (36 L. R. A. 466) on what intoxication will excuse crime.

Definition of crimes by trial court.

Cited in Brittain v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 412, 37 S. W. 758, holding it not error for court on trial of one charged with murder in second degree, to fail to define manslaughter or justifiable homicide.

Record in criminal cause.

Cited in Arrano v. People, 24 Colo. 236, 49 Pac. 271, holding record in criminal cause must show essential steps taken precedent to rendition of judgment of conviction.

18 L. R. A. 425, SANDERS v. McMILLIAN, 98 Ala. 144, 39 Am. St. Rep. 19, 11 So. 750.

Dower right in surplus.

Cited in footnote to Holden v. Dunn, 19 L. R. A. 481, which holds widow entitled to dower in excess paid at foreclosure sale after husband's death.

18 L. R. A. 428, DORSEY v. WOLFF, 142 Ill. 589, 34 Am. St. Rep. 99, 32 N. E. 495.

Promissory notes.

Cited in Smith v. Myers, 207 Ill. 132, 69 N. E. 858, Affirming 107 Ill. App. 412, holding written promise to pay fixed sum, interest and taxes, not promissory note; Beatty v. Western College, 177 Ill. 289, 42 L. R. A. 801, 69 Am. St. Rep. 242, 52 N. E. 432, Affirming 71 Ill. App. 597, holding written instrument containing promise to pay on or before certain date, valid promissory note.

Negotiability of note.

Cited in Leader v. Plante, 95 Me. 342, 85 Am. St. Rep. 415, 50 Atl. 54, holding writing "within one year after date I promise," etc., a valid negotiable promissory note; Sylvester Bleckley Co. v. Alewine, 48 S. C. 311, 37 L. R. A. 88, 26 S. E. 609; Shenandoah Nat. Bank v. Marsh, 89 Iowa, 276, 48 Am. St. Rep. 331, 56 N. W. 458; Lockwood v. Lindsey, 6 App. D. C. 400,—holding stipulation for attorney's fees not destructive of negotiability of promissory note; Stapleton v. Louisville, Bkg. Co. 95 Ga. 804, 23 S. E. 81, holding stipulation to pay "all costs and 10 per cent on amount for counsel fees," etc., not destructive of negotiability of promissory note; Seiberling v. Lewis, 93 Ill. App. 551, holding contract to pay weekly sum on contract price, evidenced by promissory notes, not inconsistent with their negotiability; Cowing v. Cloud, 16 Colo. App. 330, 65 Pac. 417, holding negotiability of note not destroyed by agreement to pay attorney's fee; Gehlbach v. Carlinville Nat. Bank, 83 Ill. App. 137, and Hunter v. Clarke, 184 Ill. 162, 75 Am. St. Rep. 160, 56 N. E. 297, Affirming 83 Ill. App. 106, holding condition in note permitting maker to pay before date of maturity does not affect negotiability; Bowie v. Hume, 13 App. D. C. 311, holding commercial character of promissory note not affected by option permitting maker to pay before date of maturity.

Liability for attorney's fee.

Cited in Merchants' Bank v. Thomas, 57 C. C. A. 380, 121 Fed. 312, holding attorney's fee stipulated for in note provable against bankrupt maker's estate.

Cited in footnote to Pattillo v. Alexander, 29 L. R. A. 616, which sustains payee's guaranty of attorney's fees if note has to be collected by law.

18 L. R. A. 431, VAN WALTERS v. CHILDRENS' GUARDIANS, 132 Ind. 567, 32 N. E. 568.

Custody and guardianship of children.

Cited in Wilkison v. Children's Guardians, 158 Ind. 9, 62 N. E. 481, reaffirming constitutionality of act of 1889, creating board of children's guardians.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Bailey, 59 L. R. A. 435, which holds parents' rights not infringed by compulsory education law; Re Reiss, 25 L. R. A. 798, which denies power of court to compel father to send children to visit their grandmother; People v. Ewer, 25 L. R. A. 794, which holds valid, act prohibiting employment of girls under fourteen as dancers or in theatrical exhibitions; Stapleton v. Poynter, 53 L. R. A. 784, which holds custody of child will be taken against its will from wealthy grandparent and given to parent of moral habits; Hibbette v. Bains, 51 L. R. A. 839, which sustains father's right to custody of child, notwithstanding assent to wife's deathbed contract to give custody to her relatives; State ex rel. Lasserre v. Michel, 54 L. R. A. 927, which denies father's absolute right to custody of minor child.

18 L. R. A. 433, ALABAMA G. S. R. CO. v. CARROLL, 97 Ala. 126, 38 Am. St. Rep. 163, 11 So. 803.

Same cause in Federal court, 28 C. C. A. 211, 52 U. S. App. 442, 84 Fed. 776.

Presumption as to common law.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 472) on presumption as to law of other states.

Negligence of fellow servants.

Cited in Laughran v. Brewer, 113 Ala. 518, 21 So. 415, holding, under employees' liability act, master not liable for injury suffered by servant, due to negligence of fellow servant disobeying master's instructions; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woods, 105 Ala. 569, 17 So. 41, allowing amendment to complaint under employers' liability act, alleging that injury to brakeman was due to negligence of defendant's engineer, a fellow servant of plaintiff; Dormidy v. Sharon Boiler Works, 127 Fed. 486, holding master liable under Alabama statute for injury to servant by negligence of fellow servant; Woodward Iron Co. v. Cook, 124 Ala. 353, 27 So. 455, holding that to render master liable for maintenance of defective tram track in charge of fellow servants, want of care in selection of such servants must be shown.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 793, 797) on who are fellow servants.

Vice principalship.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 153) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Conflict of laws in negligence causes.

Cited in Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Reed, 158 Ind. 28, 56 L. R. A. 470, footnote p. 468, 92 Am. St. Rep. 293, 62 N. E. 488, denying right to recover in other state for injury from fellow servant's negligence in state where no remedy given; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williams; 113 Ala. 404, 21 So. 938, holding maintenance of action for death of person, caused by wrongful act of another, governed by law of place where act was committed.

Cited in footnotes to Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Rouse, 44 L. R. A. 410, which holds master's liability for fellow servant's act governed by law of place where cause of action arises; Jones v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 640, which holds statute of state where railroad employee was injured, as to presumptive evidence of employer's knowledge of defect in appliance, not govern in action in other state; Turner v. St. Clair Tunnel Co. 36 L. R. A. 134, which upholds master's liability for injury to employee sent from Michigan side to work on Canadian side without warning of dangers governed by law of Canada.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 195, 216, 217) on conflict of laws as to action for death or bodily injury.

L. R. A. Au.—VOL. III.—11.

Limitation of carrier's liability.

Cited in footnotes to Central R. Co. v. Murphey, 53 L. R. A. 720, which holds negligent carrier liable for true value, notwithstanding arbitrary preadjustment in bill of lading assented to by shipper; Tecumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 558, which holds prohibition against carriers' limiting liability inapplicable to contract by domestic corporation in other state for transportation entirely outside of state.

18 L. R. A. 440, McCANDLESS v. RICHMOND & D. R. CO. 38 S. C. 103, 16 S. E. 429.

Police power.

Cited in Darlington v. Ward, 48 S. C. 581, 38 L. R. A. 338, 26 S. E. 906 (dissenting opinion by Pope, J.), who holds town ordinance forbidding keeping of hogs within corporate limits not valid exercise of police power; Thomas v. Moultrieville, 52 S. C. 184, 29 S. E. 647, holding tax of $8 per year on each lot owner within incorporated town, to keep streets in repair, proper exercise of police power; State ex rel. George v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 264, 26 L. R. A. 363, 20 S. E. 221 (dissenting opinion), majority holding dispensary act of South Carolina (act of 1893) valid exercise of police power; Stehmeyer v. Charleston, 53 S. C. 279, 31 S. E. 322, denying right of city in exercise of police power to assess cost of water mains upon owners of lots abutting on streets in which pipes are laid.

Alteration or amendment of corporate charter.

Cited in Mathis v. Southern R. Co. 53 S. C. 257, 31 S. E. 240, holding charter of private corporation subject to alteration or amendment as state legislature may declare.

Equal protection and privileges.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 790) on class legislation.

— Making railroads absolutely liable for fires or stock killed.

Cited in Simmons v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 63 S. C. 432, 57 L. R. A. 610, 41 S. E. 521, holding statute making all railroads liable for damages by fire not unconstitutional on account of affecting particular class of interests; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 21, 41 L. ed. 619, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243, upholding statute of Missouri fixing liability upon railroads for damages sustained by fires emanating from locomotives; Dean v. Charleston & W. Car. R. Co. 55 S. C. 506, 33 S. E. 579; Mobile Ins. Co. v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 41 S. C. 414, 44 Am. St. Rep. 725, 19 S. E. 858; Lipfeld v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 41 S. C. 287, 19 S. E. 497; Hunter v. Columbia N. & L. R. Co. 41 S. C. 89, 19 S. E. 197,—upholding statute fixing liability of railroads for fires caused by sparks from locomotives; McCullough v. Brown, 41 S. C. 242, 23 L. R. A. 419, 19 S. E. 458, holding statute fixing upon railroad liability for fire originating from locomotives, valid exercise of police powers; Brown v. Carolina Midland R. Co. 67 S. C. 486, 100 Am. St. Rep. 756, 46 S. E. 283, upholding statute fixing liability for communicated fires.

Cited in footnote to Wadsworth v. Union P. R. Co. 23 L. R. A. 812, which holds unconstitutional, act creating absolute liability for stock killed or injured by trains.

Cited in notes (25 L. R. A. 161) on constitutionality of statutes making railroad companies absolutely liable for damage by fires set out by them, or for stock killed by them, irrespective of negligence.

— Discrimination against carriers.

Cited in Porter v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 63 S. C. 179, 90 Am. St. Rep. 670, 41 S. E. 108, upholding act making carriers liable for penalty for failure to pay loss caused by breakage in transit.

Statute imposing liability on county for injury on highway.

Cited in Blum v. Richland County, 38 S. C. 294, 17 S. E. 20, holding constitutional, act permitting person injured on defective highway to recover damages from county.

Liability of railroad for fire.

Cited in Wilson v. Southern R. Co. 65 S. C. 426, 43 S. E. 964, holding railroad liable under statute for fire communicated by locomotive or originating within right of way.

State interference with interstate commerce.

Cited in Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. 106 Mich. 596, 29 L. R. A. 473, 64 N. W. 501, holding act of legislature making steamboat company liable for damages by fire not regulation of commerce among states.

Contracts made with reference to existing laws.

Cited in Geiger v. Geiger, 57 S. C. 526, 35 S. E. 1031, holding homestead acts giving exemption to widow not unconstitutional as to debts created since adoption of laws.

18 L. R. A. 447, MILLIKIN v. EDGAR COUNTY, 142 Ill. 528, 32 N. E. 493.

Power of municipality as to contracts.

Cited in Carlyle v. Carlyle Water, Light & P. Co. 52 Ill. App. 582, holding city ordinance repudiating contract to supply water for fixed time and rate, void; Illinois Central Hospital v. Jacksonville, 61 Ill. App. 202, holding contract of municipality to furnish water for specific period at fixed rate ultra vires, as limiting its governmental powers; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 178 Ill. 313, 69 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 118, holding it not to be within constitutional power of municipality to contract for supply of water at fixed rate for fixed period.

Distinguished in Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport City, 180 U. S. 615, 45 L. ed. 694, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493 (dissenting opinion by Justice White), who holds contract to supply water for given time at fixed rate not subject of abrogation by changes of rates during existence of contracts.

Power of regents to remove teacher.

Cited in footnote to Gillan v. Normal Schools, 24 L. R. A. 336, which holds power of board of regents to remove normal school teacher at pleasure cannot be limited by by-law or contract of board.

18 L. R. A. 449, WILSON v. TROY, 135 N. Y. 96, 48 N. Y. S. R. 364, 31 Am. St. Rep. 817, 32 N. E. 44.

Implied notice.

Cited in Stedman v. Rome, 88 Hun. 281, 34 N. Y. Supp. 737, holding notice of dangerous condition of cross-walk imputed to city whose officers were negligent in constructing said walk; Stephani v. Manitowoc, 89 Wis. 472, 62 N. W. 176, holding absolute duty of city to render bridge safe, failure so to do being negligence, notice of which is imputable to it; Akers v. New York, 14 Misc. 526, 35 N. Y. Supp.

1099, holding notice of dangerous character of excavation made under direction of city, and improperly guarded, attributable to it; Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 491, 37 N. W. 506, holding plaintiff not bound to show actual or constructive notice to city of fact that ditch dug by its authority across public street was unguarded; Tinker v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 71 Hun, 434, 24 N. Y. Supp. 977, holding knowledge of foreman that sticks of timber were placed in ditch along highway on railroad company's land imputable to company, and question of notice, therefore, unimportant; Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 317, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, holding actual notice to city as to negligent construction of patrol line operated by it, unnecessary.

Interest as damages.

Cited in Laycock v. Parker, 103 Wis. 182, 79 N. W. 327, holding creditor entitled to recover interest on claim against debtor from date of demand; Coughlin v. New York, 35 Misc. 448, 71 N. Y. Supp. 91, holding contractor entitled to interest on claim for work done, payment of which was unreasonably delayed; Lakeside Paper Co. v. State, 55 App. Div. 210, 66 N. Y. Supp. 959, holding interest recoverable on claim of trespass from date of filing; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 4 C. C. A. 454, 10 U. S. App. 629, 54 Fed. 481, holding it not prejudicial error of trial court to charge that jury "will allow" interest on claim for damages, instead of "may allow;" Lakeside Paper Co. v. State, 45 App. Div. 114, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1081, holding interest recoverable on damage claim from date of filing; Devlin v. New York, 4 Misc. 120, 24 N. Y. Supp. 116, holding interest recoverable as element of damages on loss sustained for breach of contract by municipality; Gray v. Central R. Co. 157 N. Y. 492, 52 N. E. 555 (dissenting opinion by O'Brien, J.), who holds interest recoverable on sum representing damage sustained for breach of contract.

Cited in footnotes to Norcross v. Cambridge, 33 L. R. A. 843, which sustains eminent domain statute, notwithstanding failure to provide for interest from time of formal taking to date of actual entry; Sargent v. Tuttle, 32 L. R. A. 822, which denies right to interest on sewer assessments, unless law so provides.

Question for jury.

Cited in State ex rel. Roberts v. Hope, 121 Mo. 39, 25 S. W. 893, holding allowance of interest on claim for damages from trespass, question for jury.

Cited in footnote to King v. Southern P. Co. 29 L. R. A. 755, which holds allowance of interest on value of property negligently destroyed within discretion of jury.

18 L. R. A. 458, HOPE v. BREWER, 136 N. Y. 126, 48 N. Y. S. R. 834, 32 N. E. 558.

Conversion of realty into personalty.

Cited in Trask v. Sturges, 31 Misc. 200, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1084, holding valid, trust created in personalty which, by terms of will, is to be converted from sale of realty; Re Hogarty, 62 App. Div. 83, 70 N. Y. Supp. 839, holding provision in will directing sale of realty operates as equitable conversion into personalty, notwithstanding failure of executor to carry out said provision; Re Russell, 59 App. Div. 246, 69 N. Y. Supp. 563, holding direction to executor to sell real estate for specified purposes of distribution, equitable conversion of real estate into personalty.

Unlawful perpetuities.

Cited in Deegan v. Wade, 144 N. Y. 576, 39 N. E. 692, holding provision in will directing executor to sell lands at certain time within statutory period not creation of unlawful perpetuity.

Cited in footnote to Murphy v. Whitney, 24 L. R. A. 123, which holds agreement that land descending to brothers and sisters shall on death of last survivor pass to child of only married one not void as perpetuity.

Definiteness of trust.

Cited in Re Botsford, 23 Misc. 391, 52 N. Y. Supp. 238, holding bequest to public officer in trust for poor widows and orphans void for indefiniteness.

Conflict of laws.

Cited in Re Leo-Wolf, 25 Misc. 470, 55 N. Y. Supp. 650, holding legality of bequest to foreign religious society depends upon legatee's ability to take under laws of its domicile; Re Sturges, 28 Misc. 111, 59 N. Y. Supp. 783, holding illegal bequest to foreign legatee valid if he is competent to take under laws of his domicile; Kurzman v. Lowy, 23 Misc. 383, 52 N. Y. Supp. 83, upholding trust in personalty is to be executed in foreign jurisdiction according to its laws; Re Lang, 9 Misc. 529, 30 N. Y. Supp. 388, holding law of foreign legatee's domicile controls as to validity of bequest.

Distinguished in Dammert v. Osborn, 140 N. Y. 41, 35 N. E. 407, holding bequest by foreign testator to domestic charity not void because of testator's failure to provide specifically for execution of trust under domestic laws; Re Robertson, 23 Misc. 454, 51 N. Y. Supp. 502, holding bequest to foreign corporation, valid by law of testator's domicile, void, where law of domicile of corporation forbids it to take.

Denied in Congregational Church Bldg. Soc. v. Everitt, 85 Md. 107, 35 L. R. A. 697, 36 Atl. 654, holding validity of bequest to foreign corporation determinable by law of testator's domicile.

18 L. R. A. 465, SAN GABRIEL VALLEY LAND & WATER CO. v. WITMER BROS. CO. 96 Cal. 623, 31 Pac. 588, 29 Pac. 500.

Recovery of money paid under duress.

Cited in Hoadley v. Dumois, 11 Misc. 55, 31 N. Y. Supp. 853, holding money paid under duress to protect one's interests, which ought to have been paid by another, recoverable.

Recovery of tax money.

Cited in Colusa County v. Glenn, 124 Cal. 503, 57 Pac. 477, holding taxes paid to county not entitled thereto recoverable by county so entitled; Kessler v. Kedzie, 106 Ill. App. 4, holding taxes paid on mortgaged property by mortgagor not recoverable from mortgagee after discharge of mortgage; Angus v. Plum, 121 Cal. 608, 54 Pac. 97, holding mortgagor entitled to recover money paid for taxes of mortgagee; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Eudey, 59 C. C. A. 122, 123 Fed. 42, holding assignee of mortgage bound by agreement of prior assignee assuming and agreeing to pay taxes on mortgaged property.

Distinguished in McPike v. Heaton, 131 Cal. 111, 82 Am. St. Rep. 335, 63 Pac. 179, holding taxes paid on land subsequently sold or assigned not recoverable by succeeding grantee or assignee, upon covenant against encumbrances implied from deed.

Taxation of judgments.

Cited in footnote to Hamilton v. Wilson, 48 L. R. A. 238, which holds void, statute for taxation of personal judgments with specified exceptions.

18 L. R. A. 473, JEWELL v. JEWELL, 84 Me. 304, 24 Atl. 858.

Qualifications of jurors.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Pickett, 39 L. R. A. 302, which holds juror's inability to read or write English not ground for new trial; Coughlin v. People. 19 L. R. A. 57, which holds trial court's determination that juror not disqualified by opinion reviewable on appeal.

Waiver of forfeiture.

Cited in Hanscom v. Home Ins. Co. 90 Me. 339, 38 Atl. 324, holding defense of forfeiture for nonoccupancy waived by call for schedule of property lost, and conduct leading insured to believe for four months after fire that loss would be paid.

18 L. R. A. 479, BURT v. DOUGLAS COUNTY STREET R. CO. 83 Wis. 229, 53 N. W. 447.

Injuries arising from electrical appliances.

Cited in Eickhof v. Chicago N. S. Street R. Co. 77 Ill. App. 199, holding electric railway company prima facie guilty of negligence in permitting electricity to escape, causing injury to passengers.

Cited in footnote to Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Nugent, 39 L. R. A. 161, which denies carrier's liability for injury to passenger by breaking of trolley wire, which comes in contact with him.

Care of electric wires.

Cited in footnote to Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 25 L. R. A. 552, which holds reasonable care to keep electric wires safe, due towards persons licensed to approach them.

Injunction against erection of wires.

Cited in footnote to Rutland Electric Light Co. v. Marble City Electric Light Co. 20 L. R. A. 821, which holds electric light company entitled to injunction against erection of wires carrying dangerous current.

Liability for injury to passenger.

Cited in footnote to Proud v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 50 L. R. A. 468, which denies liability for injury by filth on car step in nighttime within half hour after car inspected.

Negligence of passenger.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 720) on negligence of passenger in passing from one car to another.

18 L. R. A. 481, BEEBE v. OHIO FARMERS' INS. CO. 93 Mich. 514, 32 Am. St. Rep. 519, 53 N. W. 818.

Ownership for insurance purposes.

Cited in footnotes to Hamilton v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 22 L. R. A. 527, which holds vendor not sole and unconditional owner of insured building; Weber v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 30 L. R. A. 719, which holds warranty of joint ownership of husband and wife not untrue because title of family homestead in wife, and of personalty in husband; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 26 L. R. A. 591, which holds policy avoided by sale of interest to one taken in as partner.

Severability of insurance.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 218) on severability of insurance in same policy.

Waiver of or estoppel to rely on conditions.

Followed in Rediker v. Queen Ins. Co. 107 Mich. 227, 65 N. W. 105, holding condition in policy against encumbrances waived by agent issuing same with knowledge of existing mortgage.

Cited in Cronin v. Fire Asso. 119 Mich. 77, 77 N. W. 648, holding knowledge of encumbrance and consent to foreclosure thereof by insurer's agent valid waiver of condition in policy against encumbrances and foreclosure; Raymond v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 114 Mich. 389, 72 N. W. 254, holding insurer estopped to deny liability on policy of insurance issued by its secretary having full knowledge of condition of title of property insured; Robison v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 535, 53 N. W. 821, holding knowledge by insurer's agent of true condition of applicant's title to property insured estops company from asserting misrepresentation; Lord v. National Protective Soc. 129 Mich. 341, 88 N. W. 876, holding benefit society estopped by acceptance and retention of past-due assessments from claiming forfeiture; Hilt v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 110 Mich. 523, 68 N. W. 300, holding acceptance of premium by agent with knowledge of insured's ill health, valid waiver of condition in policy against physical defects of insured; German Ins. Co. v. Shader (Neb.) 60 L. R. A. 922, 93 N. W. 972, holding condition requiring payment of premium before attachment of risk waived by company not repudiating extension of credit by agent; Maupin v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 53 W. Va. 575, 45 S. E. 1003 (dissenting opinion), majority holding oral evidence of waiver by agent of "Iron Safe Clause" in policy inadmissible.

Cited in footnotes to Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 52 L. R. A. 665, which holds statement that life tenant has fee-simple title to insured property does not avoid policy where agent knew facts; Sternaman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 57 L. R. A. 319, which denies insurer's right to rely on warranty by applicant that answers properly recorded, where medical examiner knew otherwise.

18 L. R. A. 486, PIERCE v. JOHNSON, 93 Mich. 125, 53 N. W. 16.

Followed on same state of facts in Ripon Knitting Works v. Johnson, 93 Mich. 129, 53 N. W. 17.

Fraud as basis for attachment.

Cited in note (30 L. R. A. 474) on what intent to defraud will sustain attachment.

18 L. R. A. 487, BLOOMINGTON v. LATHAM, 142 Ill. 462, 32 N. E. 506.

Local improvements.

Cited in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Joliet, 153 Ill. 653, 39 N. E. 1077, holding it not necessary, upon levying assessment by special taxation, to ascertain benefits to property taxed by jury as in eminent domain proceedings; Hawes v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 659, 30 L. R. A. 227, 42 N. E. 373, holding ordinance compelling substitution of cement walk in place of plank walk in front of vacant 20-acre lot unreasonable.

Eminent domain.

Cited in Leopold v. Chicago, 150 Ill. 576, 37 N. E. 892, holding, in condemning portion of private lands for public use, damage occasioned by such taking cannot be offset by supposed special benefits accruing to land remaining; Payne v. South Springfield, 161 Ill. 293, 44 N. E. 105, holding assessment of cost of condemning private property upon property not in fact benefited thereby violative of constitutional right.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 544) on protection of private rights from interference by public.

Distinguished in Waggeman v. North Peoria, 155 Ill. 547, 40 N. E. 485, holding it not violative of constitutional right in condemnation proceedings to offset special benefits against damages.

18 L. R. A. 491, HEYWOOD v. FULMER, 158 Ind. 658, 32 N. E. 574.

Distinction between lease, license, and contract of sale.

Cited in Lacey v. Newcomb, 95 Iowa, 296, 63 N. W. 704, holding lessor entitled to lien for rent, under agreement granting exclusive right to mine coal.

Cited in footnotes to Genet v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 19 L. R. A. 127, which holds no sale of coal in place under agreement in form of lease; Hutchins v. Durham, 32 L. R. A. 706, which holds occupant of market stall licensee and not lessee; Paul v. Cragnas, 47 L. R. A. 540, which holds instrument leasing for year undivided interest in mine, to be worked on royalty basis, lease and not mere license; Reynolds v. Van Beuren, 42 L. R. A. 129, which holds grant of privilege to use roof of building for advertising purposes, mere license, and not lease.

18 L. R. A. 496, REED v. EQUITABLE F. & M. INS. CO. 17 R. I. 785, 24 Atl. 833.

Notice of prior or other insurance.

Cited in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Norwood, 16 C. C. A. 139, 32 U. S. App. 490, 69 Fed. 74, holding insurer estopped to deny liability after loss, on policy issued by general agent having knowledge of insured's intention to secure other and additional insurance; Spalding v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 443, 52 Atl. 858, holding insurer estopped to deny liability on policy issued with knowledge of prior insurance.

Avoidance of prior policy by subsequent policy.

Cited in footnote to Sweeting v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 32 L. R. A. 570, which holds earlier insurance policy not avoided by subsequent insurance, invalid because of former policy.

Notice to insurance agent.

Cited in Leonard v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 22 R. I. 521, 48 Atl. 808, holding notice to agent writing application after insurance no notice to insurer sufficient to create estoppel; O'Rourke v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 23 R. I. 459, 57 L. R. A. 499, 91 Am. St. Rep. 643, 50 Atl. 834, holding statement by solicitor of insurer to applicant as to materiality of facts brought to his attention not binding on insurer.

Authority of agent.

Cited in Bryan v. National L. Ins. Asso. 21 R. I. 152, 42 Atl. 513, denying authority of agent, other than "regular" or general agent, to extend time for payment of premium.

18 L. R. A. 498, SAVINGS BANK v. AUTHIER, 52 Minn. 98, 53 N. W. 812.

Erroneous or defective service.

Cited in Slingluff v. Gainer, 49 W. Va. 10, 37 S. E. 771, holding decree based on process served upon wrong person, of no effect.

Cited in footnote to Treftz v. Stahl, 18 L. R. A. 500, which holds defective service of notice of motion to place case on short-cause calendar by leaving with occupant of office waived by permitting trial without objection.

18 L. R. A. 500, TREFTZ v. STAHL, 46 Ill. App. 462.

Motion to set aside judgment.

Cited in Hahn v. Gates, 67 Ill. App. 598, holding affidavit on which motion to set aside judgment is based should state facts, not conclusions; Grosvenor v. Doyle, 50 Ill. App. 49, holding neglect of defendant in default to give notice to set aside default judgment estops him to contest final decree.

Short-cause calendar.

Cited in Auburn Cycle Co. v. Foote, 69 Ill. App. 647, holding irregularities in service of notice of motion to strike cause waived where adverse party files affidavit; Johnston v. Brown, 51 Ill. App. 551, holding failure of litigant to take prompt advantage of irregularities in service of notice to place cause on short-cause calendar deemed waiver; McGuire v. Gilbert, 99 Ill. App. 518; Belinski v. Brand, 76 Ill. App. 407; Union Book Co. v. Robinson, 105 Ill. App. 237,—holding objection to cause being on short-cause calendar should be made in trial court, at once upon service of notice; Freund v. Huylers, 102 Ill. App. 487, holding long delay in making motion to strike cause from short-cause calendar waiver of alleged irregularities; Wheatley, B. & Co. v. Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank, 64 Ill. App. 615, holding irregularities incident to preparation for trial of cause which is upon short-cause calendar waived by failure of parties to move for removal of cause from calendar until day of trial.

18 L. R. A. 502, STATE v. INDIANA & I. S. R. CO. 133 Ind. 69, 32 N. E. 817.

Followed without discussion in Pennsylvania Co. v. State, 142 Ind. 434, 41 N. E. 937; State v. Pennsylvania Co. 133 Ind. 700, 32 N. E. 822.

Construction of penal statutes.

Cited in Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. State, 13 Ind. App. 531, 41 N. E. 952, holding statute requiring railroads to post information on blackboards, concerning arrival of trains at stations where "there is a telegraph office," not violated for failure to post such information at night, when no operator on duty; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 102 Ky. 310, 53 L. R. A. 152, 43 S. W. 458, holding statute requiring stations and ticket offices to be open thirty minutes before departure of trains not applicable to night trains at stations not kept open; Gustavel v. State, 153 Ind. 617, 54 N. E. 123, construing clause in statute forbidding taking of fish, except with hook and line, during certain season "in any of the waters of this state," to mean "any of the other waters," where preceding clause forbade any taking by any means in "any of the streams" of the state.

State regulation of railroads.

Cited in State v. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. 136 Ind. 198, 35 N. E. 991, holding statute requiring railroad companies to place blackboards in stations on which to write time of arrival of trains not applicable to company operating trains on schedule less than time required in statute for posting notice of train arrivals; State v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 157 Ind. 291, 61 N. E. 669, holding penalty imposed on railroad company under blackboard law applies to failure to maintain blackboard, and not to variance from prescribed dimensions.

Judicial notice.

Approved in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Heck, 151 Ind. 312, 50 N. E. 988; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 42 C. C. A. 199, 102 Fed. 107; Youree v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 110 La. 795, 34 So. 779,—holding that court will take judicial notice of use of telegraph to control movement of trains.

Penalties.

Cited in Southern Exp. Co. v. Com. 92 Va. 64, 41 L. R. A. 438, 22 S. E. 809, holding recovery of penalty in nature of fine or forfeiture for violating statutory duty not violation of constitutional provision pertaining to fines assessed for crimes; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 40, 60 N. E. 679, holding statute providing for individual recovery of penalty for failure to send telegraphic message constitutional; Adams Exp. Co. v. State, 161 Ind. 343, 67 N. E. 1033, upholding constitutionality of act providing penalty for unjust discrimination by express companies.

Prosecuting attorney's interest in penalties.

Cited in State ex rel. Goodman v. Halter, 149 Ind. 300, 47 N. E. 665, holding statute giving prosecuting attorney interest in penalty constitutional.

Statutory restriction of contracts.

Cited in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Eddins, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 127, 26 S. W. 161, holding state statute imposing restraints upon power to contract by carriers not unlawful regulation of interstate commerce.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 790) on constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business.

18 L. R. A. 509, BOYCE v. UNION P. R. CO. 8 Utah, 353, 31 Pac. 450.

Negligent maintenance of bathing resorts.

Cited in footnotes to Brotherton v. Manhattan Beach Improv. Co. 33 L. R. A. 598, which requires keeper of bathing resort to take proper precautions for safety of bathers; McGraw v. District of Columbia, 25 L. R. A. 691, which holds municipality not responsible for safety of bathing beach which it is required to maintain.

18 L. R. A. 510, SOUTHERN P. R. CO. v. FERRIS, 93 Cal. 263, 28 Pac. 828.

Effect of public user of private way.

Cited in footnote to Stickley v. Sodus Twp. 59 L. R. A. 287, which holds private way, built for private gain from highway to private wharf, and maintained by private enterprise, does not become public by user without objection.

User as acceptance.

Cited in footnote to Downend v. Kansas City, 51 L. R. A. 170, which holds mere user of land as street not acceptance rendering city liable for failure to keep in repair.

18 L. R. A. 512, FULLER & F. CO. v. McHENRY, 83 Wis. 573, 53 N. W. 896.

Married woman's contracts.

Cited in Emerson-Talcott Co. v. Knapp, 90 Wis. 35, 62 N. W. 945, holding wife's contract as surety on husband's note void; Haggett v. Hurley, 91 Me. 557, 41 L. R. A. 367, 40 Atl. 561, holding wife cannot become partner of her husband and so contract in reference thereto as to bind her separate estate; Gaynor v. Blewett, 86 Wis. 401, 57 N. W. 44, holding contractual power of married woman limited to engagements convenient to use or enjoyment of her separate estate; Hoaglin v. Henderson, 119 Iowa, 725, 81 L. R. A. 758, footnote p. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335, 94 N. W. 247, holding statutory power conferred upon married women to contract with reference to separate property not inclusive of power to contract partnership relation with husband; Mayers v. Kaiser, 85 Wis. 394, 21 L. R. A. 632, 39 Am. St. Rep. 849, 55 N. W. 688, holding wife incapable of entering into partnership with husband; Kriz v. Peege, 119 Wis. 115, 95 N. W. 108, holding married woman without separate estate bound by lease signed by husband and herself.

Cited in footnotes to Haggett v. Hurley, 41 L. R. A. 362, which denies married woman's power to form partnership with husband; Vail v. Winterstein, 18 L. R. A. 515, which holds married woman may enter firm in which husband not a partner.

Action against married woman.

Cited in Gallagher v. Mjelde, 98 Wis. 513, 74 N. W. 340, holding, in any action against married woman other than one affecting individual estate, husband must be joined.

Assignments.

Cited in Northern Nat. Bank v. Weed, 86 Wis. 216, 56 N. W. 634, holding voluntary assignment under form of bill of sale void as creating preference; Collins v. Corwith, 94 Wis. 523, 69 N. W. 349, holding transaction by which two creditors take debtor's property to pay themselves, with reversion to debtor if any property left, is in effect a voluntary assignment; Strong v. Kalk, 91 Wis. 32, 51 Am. St. Rep. 863, 64 N. W. 295, holding chattel mortgages given to certain creditors an assignment; Duryea v. Muse, 117 Wis. 404, 94 N. W. 365, holding statute requiring general assignee to file bond not suspended by passage of Federal bankruptcy act.

Cited in note (37 L. R. A. 366) on whether preference by mortgage or sale is assignment for creditors.

18 L. R. A. 515, VAIL v. WINTERSTEIN, 94 Mich. 230, 34 Am. St. Rep. 334, 53 N. W. 932.

Husband and wife as business partners.

Cited in footnotes to Hoaglin v. Henderson, 61 L. R. A. 756, which sustains wife's right to enter into partnership agreement with husband; Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry, 18 L. R. A. 512, which denies wife's right to become husband's partner.

Distinguished in Haggett v. Hurley, 91 Me. 557, 41 L. R. A. 367, footnote p. 362, 40 Atl. 561, holding married woman legally incapable of transacting business in partnership with husband.

18 L. R. A. 519, BUTCHER v. WEST VIRGINIA & P. R. CO. 37 W. Va. 180, 16 S. E. 457.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 42 W. Va. 192, 33 L. R. A. 73, 24 S. E. 570, holding intoxicated passenger obstinately going upon platform steps, contrary to request of conductor, guilty of contributory negligence; Woodell v.

West Virginia Improv. Co. 38 W. Va. 46, 17 S. E. 386, holding contributory negligence matter of defense, where not appearing by plaintiff's showing, which may be proved under general issue.

Cited in notes (21 L. R. A. 724) on denial of liability for negligence in failing to take precautions required by statute on ground that they would have been insufficient to prevent injury; (40 L. R. A. 134) on intoxication as affecting negligence.

— At railroad crossings.

Cited in footnotes to Passman v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. 61 L. R. A. 609, which holds cutting of train on side track at highway crossing not invitation to cross without using ordinary precaution; Keenan v. Union Traction Co. 58 L. R. A. 217, which holds failure to look for train when within 35 feet of track, negligence; Western & A. R. Co. v. Ferguson, 54 L. R. A. 803, which holds failure to look when within 30 feet of track not prevent recovery.

18 L. R. A. 524, WINNEY v. SANDWICH MFG. CO. 86 Iowa, 608, 53 N. W. 421.
Service of process on foreign corporation.

Cited in Moffitt v. Chicago Chronicle Co. 107 Iowa, 412, 78 N. W. 45, holding service of process upon local agent of foreign corporation valid to give local court jurisdiction over defendant.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 495) on who may be served with process in suit against foreign corporation.

Pleading of statute of limitation by foreign corporation.

Cited in Burns v. White Swan Min. Co. 35 Or. 308, 57 Pac. 637, holding statute of limitation may be pleaded by foreign corporation having agent in state where sued.

Cited in footnotes to Turcott v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 768, which sustains right of foreign corporation not complying with statutory requirements to plead statute of limitations; Williams v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 64 L. R. A. 794, which denies right of foreign corporation to avail itself of statute of limitations.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 224) on who or what is included in term "persons" within meaning of statute of limitations.

Distinguished in Smyth v. Peters Shoe Co. 111 Iowa, 390, 82 N. W. 898, holding foreign corporation may plead statute of limitations of state of domicile in action against it in state where suit is brought.

Interest.

Cited in Frick v. Kabaker, 116 Iowa, 511, 90 N. W. 498, holding instruction to allow interest not claimed in petition erroneous.

18 L. R. A. 527, LITTLE ROCK & FT. S. R. CO. v. CRAVENS, 57 Ark. 112, 38 Am. St. Rep. 230, 20 S. W. 803.

Contract limiting carrier's liability.

Cited in Pacific Exp. Co. v. Wallace, 60 Ark. 104, 29 S. W. 32, holding carrier not permitted to limit liability by special contract; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Spann, 57 Ark. 135, 20 S. W. 914, holding carrier not permitted to limit liability against negligence by special contract; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Craig, 102 Tenn. 302, 52 S. W. 164, holding common carrier may limit liability for loss or damage to freight, provided it affords shipper alternative of shipping with or without such limitation; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 79 Miss. 122, 30 So. 43, holding bill of lading exempting carrier from loss by fire invalid, where common-law transportation not offered.

Cited in footnotes to Tecumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 557, which holds prohibition against carriers limiting liability inapplicable to contract by domestic corporation in other state for transportation entirely outside of state; Mears v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 884, which authorizes carrier to stipulate for exemption from liability for wet; Ullman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 246, which sustains carrier's right to secure entire exemption from liability as insurer for loss not due to negligence or misfeasance; Central R. Co. v. Murphey, 53 L. R. A. 720, which holds negligent carrier liable for true value, notwithstanding arbitrary preadjustment in bill of lading, assented to by shipper; Willock v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 228, which holds carrier not protected against own negligence by requirement that shipper shall insure for carrier's benefit.

Distinguished in Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Odom, 63 Ark. 331, 38 S. W. 339, and Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Sharp, 64 Ark. 118, 40 S. W. 781, holding carrier may limit liability by contract where goods shipped are destined to place beyond end of initial carrier's line; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Carter, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 685, 29 S. W. 565, holding carrier accepting goods for transportation under verbal contract without limitation of liability not permitted to impose limitation in written contract executed after acceptance of shipment.

18 L. R. A. 533, KLINE v. BANK OF TESCOTT, 50 Kan. 91, 34 Am. St. Rep. 107, 31 Pac. 688.

Extrinsic evidence to explain written instrument.

Cited in Janes v. Citizens Bank, 9 Okla. 560, 60 Pac. 290, and Benham v. Smith, 53 Kan. 498, 36 Pac. 997, holding extrinsic evidence admissible to show intention of parties to negotiable note executed by officers of corporation; Gardner v. Cooper, 9 Kan. App. 592, 58 Pac. 230, and Shaffer v. Hohenschild, 2 Kan. App. 520, 43 Pac. 979, holding extrinsic evidence admissible to show that corporate officers signed instrument in official capacity.

Cited in note (20 L. R. A. 705) on admissibility of extrinsic evidence to show who is liable as maker of note.

Descriptio personæ.

Distinguished in Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Essex, 66 Kan. 102, 71 Pac. 268, holding service upon corporation as individual not binding upon it as trustee.

18 L. R. A. 535, WELSH v. TAYLOR, 134 N. Y. 450, 47 N. Y. S. R. 301, 31 N. E. 896.

Extinction or abandonment of easement.

Cited in Nicklas v. Keller, 9 App. Div. 220, 41 N. Y. Supp. 172, holding easement in street created by deed of conveyance of lot abutting thereon not extinguished by abandonment of such street as public highway; Weaver v. Getz, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 421, 18 Lanc. L. Rev. 230, holding right in wagon road acquired by deed as appurtenant to land conveyed not affected by failure of grantee to use; Woodside v. Ciceroni, 35 C. C. A. 183, 93 Fed. 7, holding easement to enter and prospect for mining being created by deed, mere failure to exercise right will not extinguish it; Haight v. Littlefield, 147 N. Y. 344, 41 N. E. 696, Affirming 71 Hun, 290, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1097, holding right of easement in highway not extinguished by digging of ditch across, or erection of fences thereon, even with knowledge of grantee.

— Mere nonuser.

Cited in Suydam v. Dunton, 84 Hun, 509, 32 N. Y. Supp. 333, holding cessor to use, coupled with clear intention to abandon, an effective extinguishment of easement; Lambert v. Huber, 22 Misc. 466, 50 N. Y. Supp. 793, holding right to easement in alley not lost by nonuser merely; Kerrigan v. Backus, 69 App. Div. 335, 74 N. Y. Supp. 906, holding easement acquired by deed as appurtenant to land conveyed not lost by nonuser by grantee; Weed v. McKeg, 79 App. Div. 221, 79 N. Y. Supp. 807, holding mere nonuser does not create abandonment; Marshall v. Wenninger, 20 Misc. 529, 46 N. Y. Supp. 670; Valentine v. Schreiber, 3 App. Div. 241, 38 N. Y. Supp. 417; Conabeer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 156 N. Y. 484, 51 N. E. 402,—holding mere nonuser does not create abandonment of right or title to property created or conveyed by deed; Andrus v. National Sugar Ref. Co. 93 App. Div. 378, 87 N. Y. Supp. 671, holding easement by grant not extinguished by nonuser.

Cited in footnote to Nichols v. Peck, 40 L. R. A. 81, which holds original barway not abandoned by using other for eleven years after former rendered impassable by lowering of highway.

Effect of acquiescence in erection of impediment.

Cited in Weed v. McKeg, 37 Misc. 110, 74 N. Y. Supp. 250, holding owner of lot having easement in alley in common with others estopped to complain of erection and maintenance of gate at entrance thereto, when such was done with his consent and long acquiescence; Boyd v. Hunt, 102 Tenn. 504, 52 S. W. 131, holding erection and maintenance of gate at entrance to alley, coupled with nonuse, by dominant estate not abandonment of easement; Johnson v. Stitt, 21 R. I. 433, 44 Atl. 513, holding erection of iron fence across way, even with silent acquiescence, not sufficient evidence of nonuser to constitute abandonment.

Rights of owners of dominant and servient tenements.

Cited in Smith v. Cornell University, 21 Misc. 225, 79 N. Y. S. R. 640, 45 N. Y. Supp. 640, holding trespass not maintainable against owner of dominant estate for using water, right to which was created by deed of conveyance, excepting that right out of servient estate; Knabe v. Levelle, 23 N. Y. Supp. 821, holding conveyance of easement in alley forming boundary line between two lots gives to each owner thereof equal rights therein; Sebald v. Mulholland, 6 Misc. 354, 26 N. Y. Supp. 913, holding equity will refuse to interfere with maintenance of building wall erected contrary to party-wall agreement, but with acquiescence of adjoining owner; Mattes v. Frankel, 157 N. Y. 611, 68 Am. St. Rep. 804, 52 N. E. 585 (dissenting opinion), majority holding grantor estopped by declarations from denying right of way over his land to grantee.

18 L. R. A. 543, FORSTER v. SCOTT, 136 N. Y. 577, 49 N. Y. S. R. 699, 32 N. E. 976.

What constitutes an encumbrance.

Cited in Ray v. Adams, 44 App. Div. 175, 60 N. Y. Supp. 663, holding covenants against erection and maintenance of nuisances to be encumbrances on title sufficient to relieve execution purchaser having no knowledge of same, from completing purchase; Koezly v. Koezly, 31 Misc. 400, 65 N. Y. Supp. 613, holding encumbrance to be any right in or burden upon land depreciative of its value; Turner v. Walker, 40 Misc. 381, 82 N. Y. Supp. 340, holding right of way reserved for railroad, an encumbrance upon land.

— Filing map as encumbrance.

Cited in German-American Real Estate Title Guarantee Co. v. Meyers, 32 App. Div. 43, 52 N. Y. Supp. 449, holding statute creating encumbrance upon lands by filing map indicating proposed streets unconstitutional; People v. Adirondack R. Co. 160 N. Y. 243, 54 N. E. 689, Reversing 39 App. Div. 49, 56 N. Y. Supp. 869, holding filing of map indicating lands to be taken under power of eminent domain, with no provision for compensation, creates no valid encumbrance; Singer v. New York, 47 App. Div. 45, 62 N. Y. Supp. 347, holding filing of map indicating proposed street not an encumbrance upon title to property indicated; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Haffen, 90 Hun, 261, 35 N. Y. Supp. 806, holding filing of map showing proposed street does not create cloud on title, precluding vendee from completing contract of purchases.

Compensation for private property taken for public use.

Cited in Re New York, 24 App. Div. 11, 49 N. Y. Supp. 119, holding owner of land appropriation of which is authorized by statute entitled to receive value of building erected after passage of act, but before final appropriation; Pape v. New York & H. R. Co. 74 App. Div. 188, 77 N. Y. Supp. 725, holding deprivation of use and free enjoyment of one's property is taking property within constitutional sense requiring compensation to be made therefor; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. State, 37 App. Div. 63, 55 N. Y. Supp. 685, holding that knowledge by owner of land of location of flow line of proposed reservoir and that work is being done in construction of dam does not prevent owner's recovery for injury by subsequent flooding; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 597, 42 L. ed. 291, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966, holding act of Congress March 2, 1893, requiring recording of map of all lands and streets in District of Columbia, does not entitle landowners to compensation for property taken for public use; Edwards v. Bruorton, 184 Mass. 532, 69 N. E. 328, holding provision in statute denying compensation for injuries by change of grade in certain cases unconstitutional; Sadlier v. New York, 40 Misc. 83, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308, holding owner entitled to compensation for flooding of roof with water and other matter from public bridge.

Cited in footnote to Shanfelter v. Baltimore, 27 L. R. A. 648, which denies right of action for damages from ordinance selecting courthouse site and authorizing its condemnation.

Assessment of land condemned as confiscation.

Cited in footnote to Bloomington v. Latham, 18 L. R. A. 487, which holds assessment on landowner for land condemned confiscation.

Maintenance of nuisance by public.

Cited in footnote to Morton v. New York, 22 L. R. A. 241, which holds city has no right to build pumping station on own land, rendering uninhabitable adjoining buildings.

Construction and validity of statutes.

Cited in People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 56 App. Div. 108, 67 N. Y. Supp. 701, and Swiehard v. Michels, 81 Hun, 330, Affirming 8 Misc. 573, 29 N. Y. Supp.

777, holding statute providing for sewer construction to be construed with reference to its practical effect and operation within constitutional limit; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 8, 42 L. R. A. 494, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257, Affirming 10 Misc. 67, 31 N. Y. Supp. 115, holding that to determine constitutionality of legislative act, plain, reasonable effect, object, and operation thereof must be considered; Kobbe v. New Brighton, 20 Misc. 478, 45 N. Y. Supp. 777, holding defective erection and offensive operation of cremator of village garbage, offal, etc., deprivation of constitutional right of neighboring property owners; Barry v. Port Jervis, 64 App. Div. 271, 72 N. Y. Supp. 104, holding provision of village charter requiring forty-eight hours' notice of injuries received from defective highways to be served on village clerk unconstitutional as depriving person injured of property right, without due process of law; Buffalo v. Hill, 79 App. Div. 408, 79 N. Y. Supp. 449, upholding constitutionality of ordinance requiring dealers to obtain license for sale of meats outside public markets; New York Sanitary Utilization Co. v. Public Health Department, 32 Misc. 582, 67 N. Y. Supp. 324, holding statute requiring discontinuance and removal of garbage-rendering plant unconstitutional attempt to exercise police power; Re Marshall, 102 Fed. 326, holding game ordinance relative to size and character of gun used in shooting game to be unconstitutional exercise of police powers.

Judicial scrutiny of police regulations.

Cited in Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 197, 60 Am. St. Rep. 609, 47 N. E. 302, holding statute providing for protection of oyster beds, police regulation and therefore subject to judicial scrutiny; Re Wilshire, 103 Fed. 622, holding ordinances enacted by municipalities in exercise of police power, subject to judicial scrutiny; Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 531, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177, 69 Pac. 261, dissenting opinion by Van Dyke, J., who holds game statute a police regulation subject to judicial scrutiny.

18 L. R. A. 547, HERNDON v. IMPERIAL F. INS. CO. 111 N. C. 384, 16 S. E. 465.

Petition for rehearing.

Cited in State v. Council, 129 N. C. 512, 39 S. E. 814, holding petition to rehear will not be granted as matter of right in criminal cause, contrary to court rules; Blacknall v. Rowland, 118 N. C. 421, 24 S. E. 1, denying rehearing in action where purchaser of stock recovered on warranty, although he did not examine into truth of representations as he had privilege of doing; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 322, 24 S. E. 746, denying motion to modify opinion as repealing requirement of certificate of counsel indorsed by member of court as preliminary to rehearing.

Rules of practice.

Cited in Bird v. Gilliam, 125 N. C. 79, 34 S. E. 196, holding supreme court not subject to rules of practice prescribed by legislature contrary to court rules; Calvert v. Carstarphen, 133 N. C. 27, 45 S. E. 353, holding that legislature cannot enact rules of practice and procedure for supreme court.

18 L. R. A. 549, Re SANDERS, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 305, 52 Fed. 802.

State regulations affecting interstate commerce.

Cited in Re Tinsman, 95 Fed. 651, holding municipal ordinance requiring soliciting agents of manufacturers to pay license unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce; People v. Hawkins, 20 App. Div. 497, 47 N. Y. Supp. 56, holding statute requiring labeling of all convict-made goods before offering for sale unconstitutional burden on commerce; Louisiana v. Lagarde, 60 Fed. 191, holding state statute regulating labeling and sale of manufactured fertilizers unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce.

18 L. R. A. 553, KUEHN v. MILWAUKEE, 83 Wis. 583, 53 N. W. 912.

Private remedies for public nuisances.

Cited in footnotes to Griffith v. Holman, 54 L. R. A. 178, which denies private individual's right to abate public nuisance consisting of fence across navigable stream; South Carolina S. B. Co. v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 542, which denies steamboat owner's right of action for obstructing navigation of river; Farmers' Co-operative Mfg. Co. v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 700, which authorizes private action for public nuisance by one having common misfortune with class of persons, but not with entire public.

Right to fish.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 513, 525) on right to fish.

18 L. R. A. 556, NORMAN v. KENTUCKY BD. OF MANAGERS, 93 Ky. 537, 20 S. W. 901.

Appropriation of funds for public purposes.

Cited in Minneapolis v. Janney, 86 Minn. 119, 90 N. W. 312, holding industrial exposition of such public use and benefit as to authorize expenditure of public funds in support thereof; Shelby County v. Tennessee Centennial Exposition Co. 96 Tenn. 662, 33 L. R. A. 719, footnote p. 717, 36 S. W. 694, holding appropriation of public funds for purpose of exhibiting resources of county to be for public purpose; State ex rel. Douglas County v. Cornell, 53 Neb. 563, 39 L. R. A. 516, footnote p. 513, 68 Am. St. Rep. 629, 74 N. W. 59, holding appropriation of public moneys for industrial and agricultural exposition to be for public use; House of Reform v. Lexington, 112 Ky. 178, 65 S. W. 350, upholding power of city to make appropriation to secure location near by, of state house of reform.

Board of managers as agents of state.

Cited in Gross v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers, 105 Ky. 849, 43 L. R. A. 705, 49 S. W. 458 (dissenting opinion by Paynter, J.), who holds state board of exposition managers to be agents of state in providing exhibit for public benefit.

Observance of constitutional requirements for passage of law.

Cited in Glenn v. Wray, 126 N. C. 734, 36 S. E. 167, holding statutes and amendments thereto pertaining to public revenue and expenditure must be passed by legislature in manner provided in Constitution; Cohn v. Kingsley, 5 Idaho. 441, 38 L. R. A. 84, 49 Pac. 985, holding it competent for court to examine journals of both branches of legislature to ascertain whether law was constitutionally enacted.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 344, 348) on conclusiveness of enrolled bill.

Judicial notice.

Distinguished in Hall v. Com. 94 Ky. 326, 22 S. W. 333, holding judicial notice will be taken of election of circuit judges who are public officers.

Presumption as to constitutionality of legislative action.

Cited in Lafferty v. Huffman, 99 Ky. 83, 32 L. R. A. 204, 35 S. W. 123, and L. R. A. AC.—VOL. III.—12.

Owensboro & N. R. Co. v. Barclay, 102 Ky. 20, 43 S. W. 177, holding bill properly authenticated by presiding officers of legislature and signed by governor not subject to impeachment by reference to journals of legislature; Union Bank v. Oxford, 119 N. C. 214, 34 L. R. A. 489, 25 S. E. 966, holding presumption of constitutionality of legislative enactment impeachable by reference to journal of legislative bodies.

Unconstitutionality as defense.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 516) on unconstitutionality of statute as defense against mandamus to compel its enforcement.

18 L. R. A. 567, PARKER v. STATE, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119.

Judicial questions.

Cited in Denney v. State. 144 Ind. 509, 31 L. R. A. 729, 42 N. E. 929, holding constitutionality of apportionment legislation being judicial question, court has jurisdiction to determine controversy; Fesler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 90, 32 L. R. A. 583, 44 N. E. 37 (dissenting opinion by Monks, J.), who holds constitutionality of apportionment act passed by state legislature judicial question; State ex rel. Morris v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. L. 188, 22 L. R. A. 550, footnote p. 548, 28 Atl. 56, holding constitutionality of act of legislature providing for election of members of assembly to be subject to judicial inquiry.

Cited in footnotes to Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 39 L. R. A. 794, which holds approval and adoption or modification of plan for street railway not a judicial power; Covington v. Buffett, 47 L. R. A. 622, which denies court's jurisdiction to determine existence of vacancy in office of senator; Fletcher v. Tuttle, 25 L. R. A. 143, which denies right to enjoin giving of election notices, on ground that apportionment unconstitutional.

Judicial notice.

Cited in Legler v. Paine, 147 Ind. 193, 45 N. E. 604, holding court will take judicial notice of whether legislature has complied with constitutional provision requiring regulation of salaries of county officers by general law.

Apportionment acts.

Cited in Fesler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 72, 32 L. R. A. 579, 44 N. E. 37, as holding apportionment act of 1885 unconstitutional.

— Discretion under.

Cited in footnote to People ex rel. Baird v. Broom, 20 L. R. A. 81, which requires discretion of supervisors in dividing county into assembly districts to be honest and fair.

De facto officer.

Cited in Bradford v. Frankfort, St. L. & T. R. Co. 142 Ind. 392, 40 N. E. 741, holding persons elected to office under unconstitutional act are de facto officers with colorable authority to act; Roberts v. Hill, 137 Ind. 218, 36 N. E. 843, holding failure to file election certificate as required by statute, rendering elected officer de facto officer, does not make his acts in office ipso facto void.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 142) on de facto offices and officers under unconstitutional statutes.

Collateral attack on title of de facto officer.

Cited in State ex rel. Bishop v. Crowe, 150 Ind. 462, 50 N. E. 471, holding title of person to office of township trustee, being de facto, not open to question in collateral proceeding; Segal v. Krag-Reynolds Co. 21 Ind. App. 209, 51 N. E. 959, holding right of one occupying office of notary public, and validity of acts done in discharge of that office, cannot be questioned in collateral proceeding; Grim v. Adkins, 21 Ind. App. 108, 51 N. E. 494, holding office of justice of peace being public one, right of one exercising duties thereof cannot be questioned in action of replevin.

Determination of constitutionality of statute.

Cited in Henderson v. State, 137 Ind. 557, 24 L. R. A. 473, 36 N. E. 257; Harmon v. Madison County, 153 Ind. 76, 54 N. E. 105; State ex rel. Winnie v. Stoddard, 25 Nev. 460, 51 L. R. A. 232, 62 Pac. 237; Vickery v. Hendricks County, 134 Ind. 555, 32 N. E. 880,—holding court justified in refusing to pass upon constitutionality of statute when not necessary to pass upon merits of controversy; People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 465, 40 N. E. 307, holding court will refuse to declare legislative act unconstitutional, except in very clear case of violation; State v. Atkinson, 139 Ind. 429, 39 N. E. 51, holding court will not assume to decide constitutionality of liquor law when not essential to disposition of cause upon its merits; Deniston v. Terry, 141 Ind. 682, 41 N. E. 143, to statement that court will not, as rule, pass upon constitutionality of statute if cause may be decided upon its merit without such decision.

Amicus curiæ* not real party in interest.

Cited in Boyd v. Brazil Block Coal Co. 152 Ind. 544, 49 N. E. 797, holding amicus curiæ has not such real interest as to invoke jurisdiction of court.

Rehearing.

Cited in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hays, 17 Ind. App. 277, 46 N. E. 597, holding court precluded from granting rehearing in cause after lapse of sixty days and certification of judgment; State ex rel. Taylor v. Mount, 151 Ind. 694, 51 N. E. 417, holding petition for rehearing will be denied when questions in litigation become settled, and parties litigant are no longer interested.

Power of court to correct its own record.

Cited in Thompson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 139 Ind. 355, 38 N. E. 796, recognizing power of court to correct its own record to conform to truth of its findings.

18 L. R. A. 582, CROSS v. WEST VIRGINIA C. & P. R. CO. 37 W. Va. 342, 16 S. E. 587.

Amendment of corporate charter.

Cited in footnote to Maynard ex rel. Dusenbury v. Looker, 56 L. R. A. 947, which sustains power to change terms of office of directors by amending charter.

Nonresident stockholders.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 253) on right of nonresidents to become stockholders in corporations.

18 L. R. A. 586, ELLIOT v. HALL, 2 Idaho, 1142, 35 Am. St. Rep. 285, 31 Pac. 796.

Exemption of wages from garnishment.

Cited in footnotes to Kirkman v. Bird, 58 L. R. A. 670, which sustains, as to prior obligations, statute exempting wages for sixty days preceding levy; Rustad

v. Bishop, 50 L. R. A. 168, which denies right to hold back successive exempt wages by successive garnishments and reach same by new garnishment after exemption period expires.

18 L. R. A. 588, NEER v. COWHICK, 4 Wyo. 40, 31 Pac. 862.

18 L. R. A. 590, EICHENLAUB v. ST. JOSEPH, 113 Mo. 395, 21 S. W. 8.

Ratification of municipal contract.

Cited in Kolkmeier v. Jefferson, 75 Mo. App. 683, holding contract made to grade city's streets without legislative sanction can be ratified only by ordinance duly passed and signed by mayor; Unionville v. Martin, 95 Mo. App. 37, 68 S. W. 605, holding unauthorized contract of municipality is not ratified by simple resolution of board of aldermen without concurrence of mayor.

Necessity of ordinance.

Cited in State ex rel. Carthage v. Cowgill & H. Mill. Co., 156 Mo. 632, 57 S. W. 1008, holding matters confided to council by city charter may be dealt with by resolution, not necessarily formal ordinance.

Bribery.

Cited in State v. Butler, 178 Mo. 340, 77 S. W. 560, holding offer of reward for vote for contract under ordinance, before its approval by mayor, not attempt to bribe.

Validity of legislation restricting business.

Cited in St. Louis v. Fischer, 167 Mo. 664, 64 L. R. A. 683, 99 Am. St. Rep. 614, 67 S. W. 872, holding city ordinance prohibiting establishment and maintenance of dairy within city limits, without permission from municipal authorities, not obnoxious to Federal Constitution.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 794) on constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business.

Issuance of unlawful building permits.

Cited in Hibbard v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 97, 40 L. R. A. 623, 50 N. E. 256, holding unlawful issuance of permit to erect awning over street, no estoppel against enforcement of general ordinance.

Abatement of public nuisance.

Cited in Police Comrs. v. Wagner, 93 Md. 196, 52 L. R. A. 778, 86 Am. St. Rep. 423, 48 Atl. 455, holding replevin will not lie to recover slot machine seized by police officers under statutory authority; Lemmon v. Guthrie Center, 113 Iowa. 39, 86 Am. St. Rep. 361, 84 N. W. 986, holding judicial proceedings not necessary to warrant public officials to remove buildings erected in violation of law.

Cited in note (38 L. R. A. 170) on municipal power over buildings and other structures as nuisances.

18 L. R. A. 594, Re ADVISORY OPINION, 31 Fla. 1, 12 So. 114.

19 L. R. A. 596, THIBAUT v. KEARNEY, 45 La. Ann. 149, 12 So. 139.

License or privilege tax.

Cited in Hall v. State, 39 Fla. 675, 23 So. 119, holding plantation owner maintaining general store thereon, making sales of supplies to tenants and employees only, required to pay privilege tax.

18 L. R. A. 599, YARNELL v. KANSAS CITY, FT. S. & M. R. CO. 113 Mo. 570, 21 S. W. 1.

Variance.

Cited in E. O. Stanard Mill. Co. v. White Line Central Transit Co. 122 Mo. 278, 26 S. W. 704, holding evidence that warehouse was unsafe because close by refining establishment inadmissible under allegation merely charging failure to use due care while property was stored in warehouse; Chitty v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 148 Mo. 75, 49 S. W. 868, holding recovery not authorized under allegation charging injury by negligent collision, and proof of injury in jumping from car to avoid collision.

Modification of instructions.

Cited in Feary v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 162 Mo. 96, 62 S. W. 452, holding modification of plaintiff's instruction by court, to conform to issue tendered, not reversible error.

Injuries in getting off or on trains.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hale, 102 Ky. 603, 42 L. R. A. 297, 44 S. W. 213, holding carrier not guilty of negligence in starting train before passenger seated after entering train; Saxton v. Missouri P. R. Co. 98 Mo. App. 490, 72 S. W. 717, holding mere starting of train before one boarding it to assist departing passenger has had time to alight not negligence.

Cited in notes (21 L. R. A. 354) on injuries in getting on and off railroad trains; (42 L. R. A. 293) on starting car before passenger is seated.

Duty of carrier as to passenger getting on or off train.

Cited in Hanks v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 60 Mo. App. 281, holding blind, aged, and infirm or sick passenger entitled to more care and attention in getting on or off train than one without such disability; Deming v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 80 Mo. App. 156, holding instruction that it is carrier's duty to discharge passenger safely at station platform or other reasonably safe place, erroneous because misleading; Young v. Missouri P. R. Co. 93 Mo. App. 273, holding passenger with weak ankle not entitled to assistance in alighting, carrier not having knowledge of infirmity.

Cited in footnote to Croon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 602, which holds it negligent to fail to render necessary assistance to feeble person accepted as passenger.

Presumptions.

Cited in State v. Lackland, 136 Mo. 33, 37 S. W. 812, holding fact from which presumption arises must be proved; Spencer v. Farmer's Mut. Ins. Co. 79 Mo. App. 218, holding presumption of wilful destruction of insured premises cannot be inferred from burning thereof; Schlereth v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. 110, 21 S. W. 1110 (dissenting opinion by Gantt, J.), who holds verdict ought not to be based upon mere presumption; Howard v. Missouri P. R. Co. 173 Mo. 531, 73 S. W. 467, holding mere breaking of handle bar of hand car not proof of negligence; Hornstein v. United R. Co. 97 Mo. App. 276, 70 S. W. 1105, holding negligence not to be inferred from mere happening of injury.

Cited in footnote to Dixon v. Pluns, 20 L. R. A. 699, which upholds presumption of negligence arising from fall of chisel on sidewalk from scaffold.

Burden of proof.

Cited in footnote to Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acci. Asso. 26 L. R. A. 406, which throws on insurance company burden of proving that accidental death was from excepted cause.

Risks of employment.

* Distinguished in Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 178 Mo. 543, 101 Am. St. Rep. 434, 77 S. W. 890, holding risk of cars running loose and unattended on main tracks not assumed by engineer.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Bascom v. Wabash R. Co. 102 Mo. App. 433, 76 S. W. 697, holding carrier not liable for injury to passenger alighting from moving train in broad daylight.

18 L. R. A. 602, CROOM v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. CO. 52 Minn. 296, 33 Am. St. Rep. 557, 53 N. W. 1128.

Duty of carrier to passengers requiring assistance.

Cited in Newark & S. O. R. Co. v. McCann, 58 N. J. L. 644, 33 L. R. A. 129, 34 Atl. 1052, holding it duty of carrier to exercise more than ordinary care toward passenger known to be ill; Burke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 108 Ill. App. 576, holding carrier liable for negligence in leaving intoxicated passenger at destination in place of danger; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gilmer, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 682, 45 S. W. 1028, holding carrier liable for negligence of conductor while carrying from train passenger unable to walk; Owens v. Macon & B. R. Co. (Ga.) 63 L. R. A. 948, 46 S. E. 87, holding carrier entitled to reasonable notice to provide proper means for transportation of insane person.

Cited in footnotes to Weightman v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 19 L. R. A. 671, which holds carrier liable for carrying sick passenger past destination; Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 599, which holds it no part of employee's duty to assist passengers to enter.

— To accept passenger.

Cited in Furgason v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 16 Ind. App. 180, 44 N. E. 936, holding carrier not bound to accept as passenger one whose physical or mental condition renders him unable to take care of himself.

18 L. R. A. 604, EPHRAIM v. KELLEHER, 4 Wash. 243, 29 Pac. 985.

Chattel mortgage as affected by provision giving mortgagor possession with power of sale.

Cited in Benham v. Ham, 5 Wash. 135, 34 Am. St. Rep. 851, 31 Pac. 459, holding chattel mortgage upon stock of goods, allowing mortgagor to continue in possession to sell goods and apply proceeds to extinguishment of debt secured, valid; Donohue v. Campbell, 81 Minn. 109, 83 N. W. 469, holding mortgage on stock of goods not fraudulent in law because it contains no provision requiring mortgagor to pay proceeds from sales of goods left in his possession; F. Meyer Boot & Shoe Co. v. C. Shenkberg Co. 11 S. D. 628, 80 N. W. 126, and Red River Valley Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 8 N. D. 442, 79 N. W. 880, holding mortgage upon stock of general merchandise not fraudulent in law because mortgagor retains possession of goods to sell, devoting proceeds thereof to payment of mortgage debt; Adams v. Dempsey, 29 Wash. 157, 60 Pac. 738, holding chattel mortgage not constructively fraudulent because mortgagor allowed small portion of proceeds thereof.

Cited in footnote to Noyes v. Ross, 47 L. R. A. 400, which sustains mortgage of goods with authority to sell on thirty days' credit and account for proceeds, less living expenses.

Distinguished in Eckman v. Munnerlyn, 32 Fla. 376, 37 Am. St. Rep. 109, 13 So. 922, holding chattel mortgage on stock of merchandise containing provision permitting mortgagor to retain possession of goods to sell, fraudulent as against existing creditors, notwithstanding proceeds therefrom are to be devoted to payment of mortgage debt; Thompson v. Huron Lumber Co. 4 Wash. 603, 30 Pac. 741, holding mortgage by insolvent corporation, providing for its retention of mortgaged property and indefinite renewal of notes secured, void as device to delay creditors.

Fraudulent execution as question of fact.

Cited in Adams v. Dempsey, 22 Wash. 286, 79 Am. St. Rep. 933, 60 Pac. 649, holding question of alleged fraudulent execution of chattel mortgage to secure particular creditor, one of fact.

Right of debtor to pay or secure particular creditors.

Cited in Viotor v. Glover, 17 Wash. 42, 40 L. R. A. 301, 48 Pac. 788, holding that debtor may legally pay, or secure, one or more creditors to exclusion of others, even to exhaustion of entire property; Drake v. Paulhaumus, 14 C. C. A. 165, 29 U. S. App. 522, 66 Fed. 898, holding conveyance of debtor's property to secure particular bona fide debt not void as preferential assignment; Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 546, 33 Pac. 830, holding that debtor may, in good faith, dispose of his entire estate to pay portion of debts, even to exclusion of others.

Extension of time of payment of chattel mortgage debt.

Cited in Sanders v. Main, 12 Wash. 667, 42 Pac. 122, holding that agreement extending time of payment of chattel mortgage debt does not invalidate mortgage as to unsecured creditors.

Efficacy of mortgage on chattels to be made or acquired.

Cited in note (18 L. R. A. 298) on efficacy of mortgage on chattels to be manufactured or acquired as independent articles, and not as increase or fruits of existing property.

18 L. R. A. 627, LAWSON v. CONAWAY, 37 W. Va. 159, 38 Am. St. Rep. 17, 16 S. E. 564.

Duty of physician to patient and degree of skill required.

Cited in Dashiell v. Griffith, 84 Md. 381, 35 Atl. 1094, holding that upon establishment of relation of physician and patient duty rests on physician to continue attendance upon patient so long as is reasonably necessary; Whitesell v. Hill, 101 Iowa. 637, 37 L. R. A. 839, 70 N. W. 750, holding it duty of physician or surgeon to possess and exercise that degree of care, skill, and knowledge ordinarily possessed and exercised by physicians and surgeons in similar localities; Tompkins v. Pacific Mnt. L. Ins. Co. 53 W. Va. 491, 62 L. R. A. 495, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1006, 44 S. E. 439, holding insurance company liable for negligence of its physician in replacing plaster cast after examining injury to policy holder.

Cited in note (37 L. R. A. 830) on degree of care and skill which physician or surgeon must exercise.

Physician's right to determine frequency of visits.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 298) on physician's right to determine frequency of visits to patient.

Recovery by physician as bar to action for malpractice.

Cited in Gates v. Newman, 18 Ind. App. 419, 46 N. E. 654 (dissenting opinion by Black, J.), who holds that judgment by default against patient in favor of physician for services does not estop patient from prosecuting cross action for malpractice; Jordahl v. Berry, 72 Minn. 121, 45 L. R. A. 545, 71 Am. St. Rep. 469, 75 N. W. 10, and Sale v. Eichberg, 105 Tenn. 343, 52 L. R. A. 897, 59 S. W. 1020, holding judgment by default in favor of physician for services rendered to patient not a bar to action by patient against physician for malpractice, unless defense was made to first action by patient.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 544) on recovery by physician as bar to action for malpractice.

18 L. R. A. 634, McCLAIN v. DAVIS, 37 W. Va. 330, 16 S. E. 629.

Entry of judgments.

Cited, but not passed upon, in Griffin v. Haught, 45 W. Va. 464, 31 S. E. 957, and Richmond v. Henderson, 48 W. Va. 396, 37 S. E. 653, holding that judgment of justice of peace cannot be entered more than one day after rendition of verdict: Marstill v. Ward, 52 W. Va. 84, 43 S. E. 178, holding entry of judgment by court enforceable by mandamus.

Cited in note (20 L. R. A. 147) on entry of judgment nunc pro tunc.

18 L. R. A. 639, Ex parte PLESSY, 45 La. Ann. 80, 11 So. 948.

Civil rights — Statutes authorizing separation of races.

Cited in Anderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 766, 62 Fed. 50, holding it to be within power of state to enact statute requiring carriers to furnish, and passengers of different races to occupy, separate compartments or cars: State v. Pearson, 110 La. 390, 34 So. 575, upholding constitutionality of act requiring street car companies to furnish separate accommodations for white and colored passengers.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. State, 41 L. R. A. 432, which upholds state statute providing for equal, but separate, accommodations for negroes on railroads.

— Rules of carrier requiring separation.

Cited in footnotes to Chilton v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 19 L. R. A. 269, which authorizes carrier to exclude colored woman from particular car, when she is given opportunity to ride in car set apart for her own race, and which is equal in accommodations to other; Bowie v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 50 L. R. A. 632, which sustains rule of street railway company requiring colored and white passengers to occupy different ends of car; Smith v. Chamberlain, 19 L. R. A. 710, which authorizes carrier to provide separate waiting rooms for white and colored passengers.

— Right of colored man to compel sale of soda water to him.

Cited in footnote to Cecil v. Green, 32 L. R. A. 566, which holds drug store where soda water, etc., is sold, not place of accommodation and amusement within civil rights act, requiring keeper to sell soda water to colored man.

18 L. R. A. 644, FRARY v. AMERICAN RUBBER CO. 52 Minn. 264, 53 N. W. 1156.

Employer's right to discharge servant.

Cited in Blaine v. Publishers George Knapp & Co. 140 Mo. 250, 41 S. W. 787, and Williams v. Kansas City Suburban Belt R. Co. 85 Mo. App. 110, holding contract for personal service to "satisfaction of employer" gives him absolute right to discharge servant in case of dissatisfaction.

18 L. R. A. 646, STATE ex rel. RHODES v. SAUNDERS, 66 N. H. 39, 25 Atl. 588.

Adoption of English common law in United States.

Cited in Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 149, 47 L. R. A. 240, 44 Atl. 398, holding that feudal usages of early English common law relative to construction of deeds creating estates tail have no place in our jurisprudence; Edgerly v. Barker, 66 N. H. 457, 28 L. R. A. 334, 31 Atl. 900, holding act of Parliament allowing creation of estates tail not part of common law of this country; Ricker's Petition, 66 N. H. 226, 24 L. R. A. 748, 29 Atl. 559, holding principles and practice of common law, being unsuited to local conditions, inapplicable to admission of attorneys in New Hampshire.

Right of jury trial.

Cited in State ex rel. Blanpied v. Currier, 66 N. H. 622, 19 Atl. 1000, holding question whether building was used as place in which to sell liquors triable by jury; State v. Griffin, 66 N. H. 327, 29 Atl. 414, holding constitutional right to jury trial not infringed by law requiring one appealing from sentence of justice of the peace to pay fees of appeal, recognizance, and copies; State v. Gerry, 68 N. H. 496, 38 L. R. A. 229, 38 Atl. 272, holding right to jury trial violated by attempt to give police courts concurrent jurisdiction with supreme court in criminal cases where fine does not exceed $200 nor term of imprisonment one year.

Cited in footnote to Hall v. Armstrong, 20 L. R. A. 366, which denies right to jury trial in actions of book account.

— In equity proceedings.

Cited in Davis v. Auld, 96 Me. 568, 53 Atl. 118, raising, without deciding, question as to right to jury trial in equity proceeding; State ex rel. Borthwick v. Harrington, 69 N. H. 497, 45 Atl. 404, holding verdict upon questions of fact submitted to jury by equity court advisory only.

Jurisdiction of equity to abate nuisance or enjoin abuse of corporate privileges.

Cited in State v. Strickford, 70 N. H. 297, 47 Atl. 262, holding that injunction will not issue against liquor nuisance after its abatement; State ex rel. Hubbard v. Piper, 70 N. H. 282, 47 Atl. 703, holding that equity cannot enjoin sale of liquors as nuisance on premises other than those described in petition; State v. O'Leary, 155 Ind. 532, 52 L. R. A. 303, footnote p. 299, 58 N. E. 703, denying right of state to injunction for suppression of gambling house; Columbian Athletic Club v. State, 143 Ind. 108, 28 L. R. A. 731, 52 Am. St. Rep. 407, 40 N. E. 914, holding that equity will enjoin abuse of corporate privileges in conducting prize fights; State v. Sunapee Dam Co. 72 N. H. 120, 55 Atl. 899, upholding jurisdiction of equity to enjoin unreasonable use of right of flowage, on ground of nuisance: Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Olcott Falls Co. 65 N. H. 290, 13 L. R. A. 830, 21 Atl. 1090, holding bill in equity maintainable by riparian owner to cause removal of dam as nuisance, which interferes with right of floatage.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 322, 328, 329) on injunctions by municipalities against nuisances affecting public morals, peace, and good order, and health and safety.

Abatement of nuisance a civil proceeding.

Cited in Rancour's Petition, 66 N. H. 175, 20 Atl. 930, and State ex rel. Thorndike v. Collins, 68 N. H. 302, 44 Atl. 495, holding petition for writ of injunction to abate liquor nuisance a civil proceeding.

Amendment of petition for abatement of nuisance.

Cited in State ex rel. Thorndike v. Collins, 68 N. H. 46, 36 Atl. 550, holding petition for abatement of liquor nuisance amendable by substitution of names of legal voters as required by statute; State ex rel. Hyde v. Lynch, 72 N. H. 185, 55 Atl. 553, upholding jurisdiction of court to substitute county solicitor for superintendent of police, in petition for abatement of liquor nuisance.

18 L. R. A. 657, STATE v. PHIPPS, 50 Kan. 609, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 297, 34 Am. St. Rep. 152, 31 Pac. 1097.

Who engaged in interstate commerce.

Cited in footnotes to French v. State, 52 L. R. A. 160, which holds agent of non-resident company selling organ taken with him, or taking orders for others to be delivered by him, engaged in interstate commerce; State v. Willingham, 52 L. R. A. 198, which holds as interstate commerce, delivery of portraits and frames by agent previously taking orders for nonresident manufacturer; Croy v. Epperson, 51 L. R. A. 254, which holds one taking orders in own name for articles manufactured in other state, and delivering separate articles to customers, not engaged in interstate commerce; Racine Iron Co. v. McCommons, 51 L. R. A. 134, which holds traveling agent taking orders and distributing contents of original package among customers not engaged in interstate commerce; Smith v. Jackson, 47 L. R. A. 416, which holds agent collecting garments and sending them to laundry outside of state and redelivering to owners not engaged in commerce.

Combinations or contracts in restraint of trade.

Cited in footnotes to Cummings v. Union Blue Stone Co. 52 L. R. A. 262, which holds void, agreement by persons controlling 90 per cent of sale of blue stone, to sell through common agent and maintain agreed prices; John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Asso. 62 L. R. A. 632, which upholds validity of agreement between manufacturers of medicines and wholesalers, designed to maintain fixed selling prices; Com. v. Grinstead, 56 L. R. A. 709, which holds agreement not to resell goods at less than specified price not within statute for suppression of conspiracies; Fuqua v. Pabst Brewing Co. 35 L. R. A. 241, which holds contract not to sell any beer except that of one company, which in turn agrees not to sell to any other party in that vicinity, void as in restraint of trade; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 24 L. R. A. 428, which holds monopoly not involved in control of business of refining and selling sugar; State ex rel. Crow v. Armour Packing Co. 61 L. R. A. 464, which holds unlawful combination to fix prices shown by acts of competing dealers, such as selling at fixed rate from which rebates are given and giving notice of change in prices which always follows; People v. Sheldon, 23 L. R. A. 221, which holds combination to prevent competition in prices of coal, unlawful conspiracy; Hawarden v. Youghiogheny & L. Coal Co. 55 L. R. A. 828, which sustains retail coal dealer's right to enjoin wholesalers and favored retailers combining to drive other retailers out of business; Brown v. Jacobs Pharmacy Co. 57 L. R. A. 548, which sustains right to injunction against combination of merchants to prevent sales to other dealer unless he sells at fixed prices.

Cited in note (64 L. R. A. 705, 722, 723, 726) on illegal trusts under modern anti-trust laws.

— Contracts to regulate insurance rates.

Cited in Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 265, 22 L. R. A. 491, footnote p. 483, 24 S. W. 397, holding combination of insurance companies to establish uniform rates of insurance and fix agents' commissions, legal; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Com. 106 Ky. 879, 45 L. R. A. 359, 51 S. W. 624, holding contracts regulating insurance rates not within statute prohibiting combinations to regulate, control, and fix price of "any merchandise, manufactured article, or property of any kind."

Cited in footnote to State v. Lancashire F. Ins. Co. 45 L. R. A. 348, which holds combination between foreign insurance companies to fix rates of insurance in foreign countries not subject to penalty.

Restrictions on department stores.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 261) on legal restrictions on department stores.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 646) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause.

Legislative control over foreign corporations.

Cited in State v. Stone, 118 Mo. 402, 25 L. R. A. 247, 40 Am. St. Rep. 388, 24 S. W. 164, holding it within constitutional power of state to prescribe conditions upon which foreign insurance companies may transact business within state, and to provide penalties for violation thereof; Maine Guarantee Co. v. Cox, 146 Ind. 109, 42 N. E. 915, holding it within legislative province to prescribe conditions upon which foreign corporation may do business within state.

Cited in notes (24 L. R. A. 298) on restrictions on business of foreign insurance companies; (24 L. R. A. 312) on exclusion of foreign corporations as interference with interstate commerce.

18 L. R. A. 663, JACKSON v. NATIONAL BANK, 92 Tenn. 154, 36 Am. St. Rep. 81, 20 S. W. 802.

Authority of agent to take, indorse, and collect checks or notes.

Cited in William Deering & Co. v. Kelso, 74 Minn. 43, 73 Am. St. Rep. 324, 76 N. W. 792, holding that mere collecting agent has no implied authority to indorse checks in name of principal; Carolina Nat. Bank v. State, 60 S. C. 473, 85 Am. St. Rep. 865, 38 S. E. 629, holding that agent cannot bind principal by indorsement of commercial paper, except under express authority; Jackson Paper Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 199 Ill. 158, 59 L. R. A. 661, 93 Am. St. Rep. 113, 65 N. E. 136, and T. M. Sinclair & Co. v. Goodell, 93 Ill. App. 594, holding authority to receive payment in checks in lieu of cash not impliedly authorize agent to indorse and collect checks; National Bank v. Old Town Bank, 50 C. C. A. 445, 112 Fed.

727, upholding authority of attorney of legatees to collect checks payable to his clients upon settlement of estate.

Cited in footnote to Baldwin v. Tucker, 57 L. R. A. 451, which holds purchaser from agent bound to know latter's lack of authority to take purchase money note payable to himself.

Cited in note (27 L. R. A. 401) on power of agents to indorse negotiable paper.

Payment of check on unauthorized indorsement.

Cited in Commercial Nat. Bank v. Lincoln Fuel Co. 67 Ill. App. 168, holding that drawee pays check indorsed without authority, at his peril; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Bi-Metallic Bank, 17 Colo. App. 233, 68 Pac. 115, holding drawee bank liable for payment of check delivered by mistake of maker's agent to one of same name as payee.

18 L. R. A. 668, PRIOR v. SWARTZ, 62 Conn. 132, 36 Am. St. Rep. 333, 25 Atl. 398.

Rights of riparian or upland owners in navigable waters.

Cited in Chamberlain v. Hemingway, 63 Conn. 8, 22 L. R. A. 48, 38 Am. St. Rep. 330, 27 Atl. 239, holding that owner of uplands bordering on navigable waters has right incident to such ownership to fill in and reclaim submerged lands lying between high and low water marks, so long as navigation of water is not interfered with; Lane v. New Haven Harbor, 70 Conn. 694, 40 Atl. 1058, holding right of owner of land bordering upon tide water, to erect and maintain wharf out to navigable channel, subservient to paramount right of public navigation.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 604) on right of owner of upland to access to navigable water.

Distinguished in People v. Mould, 24 Misc. 292, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1032, holding that owner of land bordering on tide water has no right, as against state, to construct and maintain wharf extending from high-water mark to navigable channel; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 20, 38 L. ed. 339, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548, holding that grants by Congress of land in territory bordering on navigable waters, convey no title below high-water mark, and do not affect the title of the future state thereto.

18 L. R. A. 670, LAMPREY v. STATE, 52 Minn. 181, 38 Am. St. Rep. 541, 53 N. W. 1130.

Property rights in unmeandered waters.

Cited in Lamprey v. Danz, 86 Minn. 321, 90 N. W. 578, holding that unmeandered lakes are absolute property of owner of beds, free from all right of state or public therein.

Distinguished in Albert Lea v. Nielsen, 80 Minn. 105, 81 Am. St. Rep. 242, 82 N. W. 1104, holding owners of land bordering on unmeandered lake, claiming title by patent issued by government, not estopped to claim damages for overflowing lands by raising of water by maintenance of dam.

Law of state to govern construction of riparian grants.

Cited in Sapp v. Frazier, 51 La. Ann. 1725, 72 Am. St. Rep. 493, 26 So. 378, holding that questions concerning riparian rights growing out of land granted from United States, without reservation or restriction, are to be settled by law of state in which land lies.

Rights of upland or riparian owners in lakes and streams.

Cited in Lamprey v. Mead, 54 Minn. 298, 40 Am. St. Rep. 328, 55 N. W. 1132, holding that voidable patent of land bounded by meandered lake can only be avoided by United States in proceeding to which patentee is party; State v. Lake St. Clair Fishing & Shooting Club, 127 Mich. 598, 87 N. W. 117, holding rights of riparian owners of land bordering on Great Lakes not cut off by grant by state of submerged lands for private use; Kirwan v. Murphy, 28 C. C. A. 351, 49 U. S. App. 658, 83 Fed. 278, holding same rules applicable to construction of rights of riparian owners on lakes as upon streams.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 596) on right of owner of upland to access to navigable water.

— Non-navigable.

Cited in Fuller v. Shedd, 161 Ill. 488, 33 L. R. A. 159, 52 Am. St. Rep. 380, 44 N. E. 286; Shell v. Matteson, 81 Minn. 41, 83 N. W. 491; Security Land & Exploration Co. v. Burns, 87 Minn. 103, 63 L. R. A. 160, 94 Am. St. Rep. 684, 91 N. W. 304,—holding that riparian owner on non-navigable lake takes title to center thereof; Olson v. Huntamer, 6 S. D. 373, 61 N. W. 479, holding that patent in fee simple of land bordering on lake or river carries with it, as appurtenant thereto, title to center of lake or stream; Sizor v. Logansport, 151 Ind. 628, 44 L. R. A. 815, 50 N. E. 377, holding that owners of lands bordering on streams not navigable take title to center of stream unless restricted by terms of grant.

Cited in footnotes to Noyes v. Collins, 26 L. R. A. 609, which holds non-navigable lake not to belong to riparian owners.

— Navigable.

Cited in Steinbuchel v. Lane, 59 Kan. 12, 51 Pac. 886, holding patentee of lands bordering on meandered navigable stream not entitled to island separated from main shore by well-defined, navigable channel; Rood v. Wallace, 109 Iowa, 8, 79 N. W. 449, holding title in beds of all navigable lakes to be in state in trust for public; Mendota Club v. Anderson, 101 Wis. 492, 78 N. W. 185, holding patent issued to convey title to submerged lands of navigable lake or stream void, where title to uplands is in another, by virtue of patent containing no reservation or limitation; Sanborn v. People's Ice Co. 82 Minn. 54, 51 L. R. A. 833, 83 Am. St. Rep. 401, 84 N. W. 641, holding riparian owners upon navigable lakes or rivers have no title to lands submerged, nor right superior to common right of all to take ice from waters of lake or river; Witty v. Nicollet County, 76 Minn. 288, 79 N. W. 112, holding meandered lakes capable of public use belong to state in its sovereign capacity in trust for public.

Cited in footnote to Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 18 L. R. A. 679, as to abutter's rights in public water and land under same.

Rights of riparian owners to accretions or relictions.

Cited in Murphy v. Kirwan, 103 Fed. 110; Crandall v. Allen, 118 Mo. 411, 22 L. R. A. 593, 24 S. W. 172; French Live Stock Co. v. Springer, 35 Or. 320, 58 Pac. 102,—holding owner of uplands bordering on lake or stream entitled to accretions or relictions formed in front of his land by action of water; De Lassus v. Faherty, 164 Mo. 361, 58 L. R. A. 203, 64 S. W. 183, holding that owner of lands bordering on stream does not lose title to accretions separated from main land by change in stream's course, causing separation; Knudsen v. Omanson, 10 Utah, 128, 37 Pac. 250, holding patentee of lands bordering on meandered lake entitled to lands formed by reliction of waters; Hinckley v. Peay, 22 Utah, 26, 30 Pac. 1012, holding that conveyance of land bordering on meandered lake carries with it right to accretions and relictions between such line and low-water mark.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 207) on law of accretion to shore lands.

What waters are navigable.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 317, 320, 322) on what waters are navigable.

18 L. R. A. 679, CONCORD MFG. CO. v. ROBERTSON, 66 N. H. 1, 25 Atl. 718.

Legislative grant of riparian privileges to private corporation.

Cited in Winnepiseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Gifford, 67 N. H. 517, 35 Atl. 945, holding right of corporation to use of shore-lands granted in charter practically same as if they owned upland in fee, with appurtenant water right; State v. Sunapee Dam Co. 70 N. H. 460, 59 L. R. A. 61, 50 Atl. 108, holding it to be competent for legislature to authorize private corporation to lower level of public lake for manufacturing purposes, although public rights of navigation thereby impaired.

Riparian rights.

Cited in footnotes to Lamprey v. State, 18 L. R. A. 670, which holds grant of public lands bordering on non-navigable lakes extends only to water line; Webb v. Demopolis, 21 L. R. A. 62, which holds riparian owner's title extends to low-water mark on navigable river.

— As to wharf privileges.

Cited in Winnepesaukee Camp-Meeting Asso. v. Gordon, 67 N. H. 99, 29 Atl. 412, holding that abutting landowner has right to erect wharf into lake, subject to restrictions imposed by state; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 20, 38 L. ed. 339, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548, holding that no title below high-water mark passes by grant by Congress of public land in territory bordering on navigable water; Cobb v. Lincoln Park, 202 Ill. 434, 63 L. R. A. 269, 95 Am. St. Rep. 258, 67 N. E. 5, denying right of owner of land bordering on lake to wharf out on submerged land not owned by him.

Jurisdiction of equity to determine rights of littoral proprietors.

Cited in Percy Summer Club v. Welch, 66 N. H. 180, 28 Atl. 22, holding injunction will not issue at instance of littoral proprietors to restrain individual from fishing in public pond; State v. Sunapee Dam Co. 72 N. H. 116, 55 Atl. 899, upholding jurisdiction of equity to assess damages in action to restrain wrongful use of waters of lake; Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 135, 47 L. R. A. 233, 44 Atl. 398, holding abutters right to use of shore-lands for wharf purposes determinable by bill in equity.

Severance of riparian rights from upland.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 394) on separation of riparian rights from upland.

Prescriptive rights in public waters.

Cited in State v. Welch, 66 N. H. 179, 28 Atl. 21, holding title to bed of ponds in New Hampshire being in state in trust for public, it cannot be acquired by prescription or grant by littoral proprietors.

Right to take or sell ice from navigable or non-navigable waters.

Cited in Rossmiller v. State, 114 Wis. 185, 58 L. R. A. 98, footnote p. 93, 91 Am. St. Rep. 910, 89 N. W. 839, sustaining right to take ice from public waters within state, and holding statute exacting compensation for enjoyment of such waters void.

Cited in footnotes to Marsh v. McNider, 20 L. R. A. 334, which authorizes sale by tenant of right to cut ice on running stream; Sanborn v. People's Ice Co. 51 L. R. A. 829, which holds taking of ice in large quantities from public lake not exercise of common right in its waters; Eidemiller Ice Co. v. Guthrie, 28 L. R. A. 581, which holds right to take ice from pond in non-navigable stream in owner of land, as against owner of pond with right of flowage; Becker v. Hall, 56 L. R. A. 573, which holds marking, staking, or cleaning ice not thick enough for harvesting, insufficient appropriation.

What constitutes public pond, and its reasonable use.

Cited in Dolbeer v. Suncook Waterworks Co. 72 N. H. 563, 58 Atl. 504, holding natural pond, containing from 15 to 18 acres, public pond.

Cited in footnote to Auburn v. Union Water-Power Co. 38 L. R. A. 188, which holds taking of 1/15 of water supply of great pond for city not unreasonable as to owners of mill privileges.

Declarative judgments.

Cited in Atty. Gen. v. Taggart, 66 N. H. 373, 25 L. R. A. 618, 29 Atl. 1027, holding that, in construction of boundaries of water ways, declarative judgment may afford complete remedy for settling controversies.

Adoption of English common law in America.

Cited in State ex rel. Rhodes v. Saunders, 66 N. H. 73, 18 L. R. A. 650, 25 Atl. 588; Re Ricker, 66 N. H. 226, 24 L. R. A. 748, 29 Atl. 559; Edgerly v. Barker, 66 N. H. 457, 28 L. R. A. 334, 31 Atl. 900. — holding that only so much of English common law as was conformable to American conditions and republican institutions was adopted by colonists.

18 L. R. A. 695, GOUVERNEUR v. NATIONAL ICE CO. 134 N. Y. 355, 30 Am. St. Rep. 669, 47 N. Y. S. R. 601, 31 N. E. 865.

Title to lands under and bordering on waters.

Cited in Deuterman v. Gainsborg, 9 App. Div. 153, 41 N. Y. Supp. 185; Hazleton v. Webster, 20 App. Div. 183, 46 N. Y. Supp. 922; Robinson v. Davis, 47 App. Div. 406, 62 N. Y. Supp. 444. — holding title to land under water of non-navigable lake ordinarily presumed to be in owner of uplands bordering thereon; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 194, 18 L. R. A. 676, footnote p. 670, 38 Am. St. Rep. 541, 53 N. W. 1139, holding that grant of public lands bordering on non-navigable lakes extends to center; Olson v. Huntamer, 6 S. D. 373, 61 N. W. 479, holding that under common law, grantee of real property contiguous to non-navigable lake takes to center, ratably with other riparian owners; Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. v. South Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. 102 Mich. 236, 25 L. R. A. 818, footnote p. 815, 47 Am. St. Rep. 516, 60 N. W. 681, which holds relative rights of shore owners on small navigable lake dependent on frontage and form of lake; Re Brookfield, 78 App. Div. 523, 79 N. Y. Supp. 1022, holding that title to land under non-navigable water presumptively belongs to owner of adjacent lands; Wilcox v. Bread, 92 Hun, 11, 37 N. Y. Supp. 867, holding that conveyance of land bordering on non-navigable lake, which describes it as running "to the lake and thence along the same," carries title to center of lake; Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 126, 47 L. R. A. 228, 44 Atl. 398, holding that bed of river between middle of stream and abutting land belongs to owner of latter under exception in deed of piece fronting on river, "12 rods in length on bank of river and extending back far enough to inclose 1 acre;" Carr v. Moore, 119 Iowa, 156, 97 Am. St. Rep. 292, 93 N. W. 52, holding that title of abutting owners on meandered waters extends only to high-water mark; East Fishkill v. Wappinger, 41 Misc. 428, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1067, raising, but not deciding, question whether words "thence up and along west bank of creek" established town boundary line along the bank.

Cited in footnotes to Noyes v. Collins, 26 L. R. A. 609, which holds land under non-navigable lake not to belong to riparian owners, under deed describing land as running to a lake, then by the meandering line of said lake; Webster v. Harris, 59 L. R. A. 324, which holds that grant of land bounded by water's edge at low-water mark on lake will not extend title to center; Concord Mfg. Co. v. Robertson, 18 L. R. A. 679, as to abutter's rights in public water and land under same; People v. Silberwood, 32 L. R. A. 694, which holds fee of land under waters of Lake Erie in state; Axline v. Shaw, 28 L. R. A. 391, which holds land below high-water mark in lake does not necessarily pass to grantee of upland; Fuller v. Shedd, 33 L. R. A. 146, which holds grant of meandered lake goes only to water's edge.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 175) on title to land under water.

Separation of riparian rights from upland.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 394) on separation of riparian rights from upland.

Right of access to public waters.

Cited in footnote to New England Trout & Salmon Club v. Mather, 33 L. R. A. 569, which denies right of action for mere crossing of uncultivated land to reach public waters for purpose of fishing.

Adoption of common law.

Cited in note (22 L. R. A. 506) on adoption of common law in United States.

18 L. R. A. 702, CHARTIERS BLOCK COAL CO. v. MELLON, 152 Pa. 286, 34 Am. St. Rep. 645, 25 Atl. 597.

Right of access to minerals, oils, gas, etc., in subsolls.

Followed, without discussion, in Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. Mellon, 152 Pa. 303, 25 Atl. 601.

Cited in Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. Royal Gas Co. 27 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 73, holding that right to drill for oil or gas exists in owner of surface of soil, notwithstanding substrata of coal belonging to another has to be drilled through.

Ownership and conveyance of minerals.

Cited in Kirk v. Mattier, 140 Mo. 31, 41 S. W. 252, holding that owner of fee may grant estate to another in minerals or other products of subsoil; Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 257, 25 L. R. A. 233, 19 S. E. 436, holding petroleum in place among strata of the earth, part of realty; Murray v. Allred, 100 Tenn. 119, 39 L. R. A. 253, 66 Am. St. Rep. 740, 43 S. W. 355, holding, in case of ownership of mineral lands, surface may be possessed by one and substrata containing minerals by another; Williams v. South Penn Oil Co. 52 W. Va. 187, 60 L. R. A. 798, 43 S. E. 214, holding that owner of land may convey coal underlying surface to one, and surface to another; Snoddy v. Bolen, 122 Mo. 487, 24 L. R. A. 511, 24 S. W. 142, holding that minerals reserved upon dedication for street purposes of soil covering them will pass by owner's conveyance, if no mention of them is made.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 225) on nature of property in mineral, oil, or gas.

When injunction will be denied.

Cited in Keeling v. Pittsburg, V. & C. R. Co. 205 Pa. 34, 54 Atl. 485, denying injunction to stay elevation of tracks after expenditure of large sums of money by railroad.

18 L. R. A. 709, Re SWIFT, 137 N. Y. 77, 50 N. Y. S. R. 91, 32 N. E. 1096.

Validity of inheritance or transfer tax.

Cited in Re Stanford, 126 Cal. 116, 45 L. R. A. 789, 58 Pac. 462, sustaining constitutional power of state to enact statute providing for imposition and collection of succession tax; Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 597, 51 N. E. 176; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 119, 26 L. R. A. 262, 38 N. E. 512; Dixon v. Ricketts, 26 Utah, 218, 72 Pac. 947; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 680, 28 L. R. A. 180, 30 S. W. 750,—holding tax on succession or inheritance of property, constitutional; Ferry v. Campbell, 110 Iowa, 295, 50 L. R. A. 95, 81 N. W. 604, holding inheritance tax act, which contains no provision for notice to, and hearing of, parties interested in distribution of estate, unconstitutional; Re Hoyt, 37 Misc. 722, 76 N. Y. Supp. 504, upholding right of state to exact tax for privilege of bequeathing property; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 131, 44 L. ed. 1006, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, holding imposition of inheritance tax upon estate consisting chiefly of United States securities, not unconstitutional.

Distinguished in Black v. State, 113 Wis. 212, 90 Am. St. Rep. 853, 89 N. W. 522, holding statute authorizing inheritance tax where estate is $10,000 in value, but not where it is less, beneficiaries being of the same class, void.

What subject to inheritance tax.

Cited in Frothingham v. Shaw, 175 Mass. 62, 78 Am. St. Rep. 475, 55 N. E. 623, holding stock and bonds of foreign corporations, mortgage bonds on property outside of state, deposits in foreign banks all of which had been with agents outside of state but which executor in Massachusetts now has in possession, taxable as "property within state;" Carver's Estate, 4 Misc. 593, 25 N. Y. Supp. 991, and Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 6, 46 N. E. 1032, holding United States government bonds which pass under will, or intestate laws, subject to transfer tax; Re Dows, 167 N. Y. 230, 52 L. R. A. 435, 88 Am. St. Rep. 509, 60 N. E. 439, holding tax on transfers not tax on property so as not to be applicable to funds invested in incorporated companies, liable to taxation on their own stock, or in exempt securities; Re Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 218, 55 N. E. 850, Reversing 43 App. Div. 191, 59 N. Y. Supp. 362, holding legacies, right to which became vested long prior to enactment of transfer tax, not taxable; Re Delano, 82 App. Div. 151, 81 N. Y. Supp. 762, holding property passing under deed of trust to life beneficiary and then to certain remaindermen, with power in beneficiary to dispose of property among them, not taxable as against one to whom life beneficiary devises, as latter takes under deed and not under will.

— Future estates.

Cited in Re Curtis, 142 N. Y. 223, 36 N. E. 887, holding contingent beneficial interest not subject to inheritance tax until contingency is removed and interest liable to become vested; Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 75, 41 N. E. 401, Reversing 85 Hun. 247, holding inheritance tax being upon right of succession, it is applicable to succession to remainder even though possession thereof does not pass until death of life tenant; Re Pell, 171 N. Y. 53, 57 L. R. A. 542, footnote p. 540, 89 Am. St. Rep. 791, 63 N. E. 789, holding vested remainder not subject to transfer tax although remainderman did not come into possession till after passage of act, since such tax would diminish value of vested estate and impair obligation of contract.

L. R. A. Av.—Vol. III.—13.

Cited in footnote to People v. McCormick, 64 L. R. A. 775, which holds that succession tax cannot be imposed on remainder falling to uncertain beneficiaries.

— Residuary estate.

Cited in Re Wolfe, 89 App. Div. 351, 85 N. Y. Supp. 949, holding renounced legacy falling into residuary estate taxable as if originally bequeathed to residuary legatee.

Distinguished in Jones's Estate, 27 Pa. Co. Ct. 140, holding residuary estate not subject to collateral tax under will of "all rest and residue of estate after payment of bequests, taxes, costs, and expenses of whatever kind."

— Charitable and religious bequests.

Cited in Re Kimberly, 27 App. Div. 474, 50 N. Y. Supp. 586, holding legacy given to charitable hospital exempt from transfer tax.

Cited in footnote to Re Prime, 18 L. R. A. 713, which holds legacy to foreign religious corporation subject to succession tax.

— Bequests to government or municipality.

Cited in Cullom's Estate, 5 Misc. 174, 25 N. Y. Supp. 699; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 629, 41 L. ed. 288, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 484, 36 N. E. 505, Affirming 73 Hun. 590, 26 N. Y. Supp. 191,— holding gift of personal property to United States subject to inheritance tax; Re Hamilton, 148 N. Y. 313, 42 N. E. 717, holding bequests to municipal corporations for purpose of providing ornamental fountain for street, not exempt from collateral inheritance tax.

— Property outside of state.

Cited in Re Dingman, 66 App. Div. 230, 72 N. Y. Supp. 694, holding property owned by one who resided and died in New York, but located in another state, subject to transfer tax; Re Corning, 3 Misc. 163, 23 N. Y. Supp. 285, holding testator's whole estate subject to inheritance tax, although three fourths of it consisted of notes, bonds, and mortgages upon lands in another state and which testator's agents in such state had in their hands at time of his death.

Distinguished in Re Handley, 181 Pa. 345, 40 W. N. C. 306, 37 Atl. 587, holding proceeds from sale of real property situated in state foreign to domicile of decedent subject to inheritance tax.

— Property of nonresident.

Cited in Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 6, 34 L. R. A. 241, 55 Am. St. Rep. 632, 44 N. E. 707, Modifying 1 App. Div. 548, 37 N. Y. Supp. 476, holding that bonds of domestic corporation which nonresident owner holds not "property within the state" subject to transfer tax; Re Houdayer, 3 App. Div. 478, 38 N. Y. Supp. 323, holding individual deposit of nonresident in his name as trustee in loan and trust company, not taxable; Re Embury, 19 App. Div. 214, 79 N. Y. S. R. 884, 45 N. Y. Supp. 881, denying power of surrogate's court to impose collateral inheritance tax upon bank stock and deposits in banks in New York and belonging to estate of nonresident decedent, and which were removed by executors from state after passage of act; Re Phipps, 77 Hun, 327, 28 N. Y. Supp. 330, holding debts due nonresident decedent from resident, not subject to inheritance tax; Re Whiting, 2 App. Div. 601, 38 N. Y. Supp. 131 (dissenting opinion), majority holding inheritance tax applicable to bonds of foreign corporations owned by nonresident, and being actually within state at time of death of owner.

Distinguished in Re James, 144 N. Y. 12, 38 N. E. 961, 43 Am. St. Rep. 725, Affirming 77 Hun, 213, 28 N. Y. Supp. 351, holding certificates of stock and bonds of foreign corporations, owned by nonresident decedent, though deposited here at time of death, not to be included in appraisal of estate to determine collateral inheritance tax.

— Gifts inter vivos.

Cited in Re Spaulding, 22 Misc. 423, 50 N. Y. Supp. 398, Affirmed in 49 App. Div. 550, 63 N. Y. Supp. 694, holding bona fide gifts inter vivos not subject to inheritance tax after death of donor; Re Edgerton, 35 App. Div. 130, 54 N. Y. Supp. 700, holding absolute gift inter vivos, not made in contemplation of death of donor, not subject to transfer tax.

— Assessment of inheritance or transfer tax.

Cited in Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 330, 38 N. E. 311, holding transfer tax applicable to aggregate value of all property transferred, not to separate value of each several transfer; Re Sutton, 3 App. Div. 210, 38 N. Y. Supp. 277, and Re Bartow, 30 Misc. 30, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1000, holding that transfer tax should be assessed upon property on farm in which testator left it and before equitable conversion.

— Deductions before assessment.

Cited in Re Gihon, 169 N. Y. 447, 62 N. E. 561, and Re Irish, 28 Misc. 650, 60 N. Y. Supp. 30, holding that Federal war revenue tax being upon succession, and not on property, it should not be deducted before passing on value of estate for purpose of imposing inheritance tax; Re Kennedy, 20 Misc. 532, 46 N. Y. Supp. 906, holding authorizing deduction of commissions of foreign executor before assessing inheritance tax; Millward's Estate, 6 Misc. 426, 1 Power, 587, 27 N. Y. Supp. 286, holding debts of deceased, funeral expense and expense of administration, not to be deducted from value of deceased's estate before levy of inheritance tax.

— Power of surrogate as to descent of property.

Cited in Re Ullmann, 137 N. Y. 408, 33 N. E. 480, upholding power of surrogate to determine whether property of deceased person passes under will or descends by laws of intestacy, for purposes of taxation.

— What chargeable with testator's debts.

Cited in Deyo v. Morss, 30 App. Div. 60, 51 N. Y. Supp. 785, holding proceeds of sale by devisee of real property situate outside of state of testator's domicile not chargeable with latter's debts.

— Taxation of corporations.

Cited in Binghamton Trust Co. v. Binghamton, 72 App. Div. 345, 76 N. Y. Supp. 517, holding that courts should adopt such construction of law taxing trust companies as will avoid double taxation; People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 79 App. Div. 195, 80 N. Y. Supp. 85 (concurring opinion), on point that franchise tax against corporations is not a tax but a charge by the state on the right to do business therein; People ex rel. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Barker, 23 Misc. 190, 51 N. Y. Supp. 1105, holding real estate held by railroad company outside of state not subject to tax; People ex rel. Kursheedt Mfg. Co. v. Feitner, 32 Misc. 85, 66 N. Y. Supp. 179, holding funds deposited in English bank by domestic corporation to defray expenses incurred abroad, not taxable.

18 L. R. A. 713, Re PRIME, 136 N. Y. 347, 49 N. Y. S. R. 658, 32 N. E. 1091.

Repeals or amendments of statute, and their effect.

Cited in Guaranty Trust Co. v. Troy Steel Co. 33 Misc. 487, 68 N. Y. Supp. 915, and Re Connellan, 25 Misc. 597, 56 N. Y. Supp. 157, holding that amendment of former statute "so as to read as follows," repeals by implication omitted and inconsistent provisions of former law; Ottman v. Hoffman, 7 Misc. 717, 28 N. Y. Supp. 28, holding act providing that former act shall be amended "so as to read as follows," substituted in place of it so as to repeal it; Bank of the Metropolis v. Faber, 150 N. Y. 206, 44 N. E. 779, Affirming 1 App. Div. 346, 37 N. Y. Supp. 423, holding statute relating to liability of directors of corporation for failure to file report, not repealed by amendment "so as to read as follows;" Koons v. Cluggish, 8 Ind. App. 238, 34 N. E. 651, holding repeal of former act by implication not a repeal so as to affect a duty which had accrued under prior law; McAvoy v. New York, 52 App. Div. 488, 65 N. Y. Supp. 274, holding no change made in law by an amendment in which there is a mere change in phraseology or in the arrangement or division of sections of the former law; Re Embury, 20 Misc. 78, 45 N. Y. Supp. 821, holding successive transfer tax acts continuation each of the other; Stevenson Brewing Co. v. Eastern Brewing Co. 22 App. Div. 525, 48 N. Y. Supp. 89, holding chattel mortgage, filed before passage of act requiring filing of statement in order to continue mortgage, invalidated by failure to file statement required by that act; New York v. Union R. Co. 31 Misc. 454, 64 N. Y. Supp. 483, holding amendment of ordinance in same language as original a continuation of same, preserving all rights available thereunder; Ely v. Azoy, 39 Misc. 671, 80 N. Y. Supp. 620, holding former acts not repealed so as to defeat remedy or abate proceedings properly begun by re-enactment in same or equivalent words; Re Brundage, 31 App. Div. 353, 52 N. Y. Supp. 362, holding assessment and collection of inheritance tax not prevented by re-enactment of transfer tax act with nearly identical provisions, after death of person whose estate is sought to be taxed; Stone v. Broome County, 166 N. Y. 91, 59 N. E. 708, and Thacher v. Steuben County, 21 Misc. 276, 47 N. Y. Supp. 124, holding act repealing act entitling towns to demand contribution from counties where expenses for bridges in one year exceeded one sixth of 1 per cent, not retroactive so as to destroy town's right as to bridges built or repaired before its passage; Wirt v. Allegany County, 90 Hun. 210, 35 N. Y. Supp. 887, holding right of town under statute to compel county to contribute toward support of bridges lost by repeal of such statute four days before submission of controversy to supervisors; People v. England, 91 Hun. 153, 36 N. Y. Supp. 534, holding amendment of statute making bribery of voter a misdemeanor by changing the punishment, not a repeal of original section as to past offenses; Shayne v. Evening Post Pub. Co. 56 App. Div. 438, 67 N. Y. Supp. 937 (dissenting opinion), majority holding provision of Laws 1848.

against dissolution of corporation impairing any remedy or liability against it, not preserved by saving clause in general corporation law repealing entire act of 1848; Allison v. Welde, 172 N. Y. 431, 65 N. E. 263, holding provisions of law relating to commissioner of jurors in New York city repealing prior law, and which substantially re-enact prior law, construed as continuation of such prior law; Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 88, 18 L. R. A. 713, 32 N. E. 1096, raising, without deciding, question as to effect of amendatory provision of inheritance tax law upon prior statute.

Distinguished in People v. Wilmerding, 136 N. Y. 374, 32 N. E. 1099, holding original act not revived by repeal of amendatory act amending and re-enacting the former act so as to read as prescribed in the amendatory act.

State statutes as affecting foreign corporations.

Approved in Vanderpoel v. Gorman, 140 N. Y. 575, 24 L. R. A. 552, 56 N. Y. S. R. 509, 37 Am. St. Rep. 601, 35 N. E. 932, Reversing 3 Misc. 61, 22 N. Y. Supp. 541, holding prohibition of New York statutes against assignment by domestic corporation in contemplation of insolvency, no bar to such assignment by foreign corporation having property in state, when such act valid in state where corporation organized; Re Hulbert Bros. 38 App. Div. 330, 57 N. Y. Supp. 38, upholding general assignment by foreign corporation for creditors with preferences, though such assignment by domestic corporation is prohibited; National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Pinkston, 79 Miss. 483, 30 So. 692, holding exception in favor of loan associations in statute fixing maximum rate of interest chargeable, confined to domestic associations.

Cited in Re Lampson, 22 Misc. 212, 49 N. Y. Supp. 576, holding foreign educational corporation not subject to provision that no devise or bequest to a corporation shall be valid unless made two months before testator's death.

Cited in notes (24 L. R. A. 289) on recognition or exclusion of foreign corporations; (60 L. R. A. 91) on corporate taxation in the United States as to exemptions of foreign corporations.

Distinguished in Fowler v. Bell, 90 Tex. 160, 39 L. R. A. 257, 59 Am. St. Rep. 788, 37 S. W. 1058, holding that validity of chattel mortgage executed by insolvent foreign corporation in state creating it, to secure a creditor residing therein must be determined by laws of state where property is situated.

Collateral inheritance tax.

Cited in Re Althouse, 63 App. Div. 256, 71 N. Y. Supp. 445, holding tenant's leasehold interest in land, personal property subject to transfer tax, though buildings erected by and reserved to him are assessed against him as land; Re Huntington, 62 App. Div. 99, 70 N. Y. Supp. 853, holding corporations exempt from general tax, not exempt, under amendment to tax law, from payment of transfer tax.

Distinguished in Re Kimberly. 27 App. Div. 475, 50 N. Y. Supp. 586, holding legacy to domestic charitable hospital exempt from transfer tax.

— Bequest to foreign religious or educational corporation.

Approved in Re Balleis, 144 N. Y. 133, 38 N. E. 1007, Affirming 78 Hun, 276, 29 N. Y. Supp. 261; Re Smith, 77 Hun, 135, 28 N. Y. Supp. 476; Re Fayerweather, 31 Abb. N. C. 288, 62 N. Y. S. R. 74, 30 N. Y. Supp. 273; Re Taylor, 80 Hun, 590, 30 N. Y. Supp. 582; James's Estate, 6 Misc. 207, 1 Power, 604, 27 N. Y. Supp. 288,—holding legacy to foreign religious corporation subject to inheritance tax; Humphreys v. State, 70 Ohio St. 81, 65 L. R. A. 781, 101 Am. St. Rep. 888, 70 N. E. 957, holding foreign boards, societies, and auxiliaries, organized for charitable purposes, not exempt from inheritance tax, although some of their work is carried on within the state; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 126, 26 L. R. A. 265, 38 N. E. 512, holding charitable, educational, or religious society of other state not exempt from succession tax; Re Wolfe, 23 Misc. 440, 52 N. Y. Supp. 415, holding foreign religious corporation subject to transfer tax, notwithstanding statutory provision enabling it to take by devise and hold property within the state.

— Bequest to United States.

Approved in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 630, 41 L. ed. 289, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 484, 36 N. E. 505; Cullom's Estate, 5 Misc. 176, 25 N. Y. Supp. 699. — holding bequest to United States not exempt from payment of inheritance tax.

Power of surrogate as to descent of property.

Approved in Re Ullmann, 137 N. Y. 408, 33 N. E. 480, upholding power of surrogate to determine whether decedent's property passes under will or descends by laws of intestacy, for purpose of taxation.

18 L. R. A. 721, STATE ex rel. LAW v. SAXON, 30 Fla. 668, 32 Am. St. Rep. 46, 12 So. 218.

Elections as affected by failure to comply literally with statute.

Cited in Stackpole v. Hallahan, 16 Mont. 56, 28 L. R. A. 508, 40 Pac. 80, holding bona fide election not invalid because certificate of nomination of successful candidate did not show that he had previously been selected to fill vacancy; Lynip v. Buckner, 22 Nev. 439, 30 L. R. A. 357, 41 Pac. 762, holding that ballots from which inspectors have unintentionally omitted to take strip-containing numbers, will not be rejected as containing "distinguishing mark;" State ex rel. Crawford v. Norris, 37 Neb. 313, 55 N. W. 1086, holding that ballot prepared contrary to directory provision of election law should not, in absence of fraud of election officers, vitiate vote of elector.

What constitutes "distinguishing mark."

Cited in footnote to Sego v. Stoddard, 22 L. R. A. 468, as to what constitutes a "distinguishing mark" on ballot.

Governor's power of appointment.

Cited in State v. Murphy, 32 Fla. 143, 13 So. 705, holding governor's power to fill vacancies not limited by constitutional provision that old officers shall hold over until successors are duly qualified.

18 L. R. A. 729, CLEVELAND, C. C. & ST. L. R. CO. v. BACKUS, 133 Ind. 513, 33 N. E. 421.

Followed without discussion in Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. West, 138 Ind. 696, 37 N. E. 1013, and Baltimore & O. & C. R. Co. v. Sawvel, 138 Ind. 697, 37 N. E. 1013.

Constitutionality of statute creating state board of tax commissioners.

Cited in Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. West, 139 Ind. 256, 37 N. E. 1009, and Indianapolis & V. R. Co. v. Backus, 133 Ind. 613, 33 N. E. 443, holding state statute constitutional which creates state board of tax commissioners.

Jurisdiction of state board of tax commissioners.

Cited in State Tax Comrs. v. Halliday, 150 Ind. 253, 42 L. R. A. 839, 49 N. E. 14 (dissenting opinion), majority holding it not within jurisdictional power of state tax commissioners to include paid-up or nonforfeitable and partly paid-up life insurance policies in list of taxable property.

Distinguished in Cummings v. Stark, 138 Ind. 98, 34 N. E. 444, holding state board of tax commissioners without original jurisdiction to revise individual tax lists other than "railroad property."

Statutory construction.

Cited in Harris v. State, 96 Tenn. 569, 34 S. W. 1017, holding it duty of court so to construe tax law as to effectuate legislative purpose by giving effect to all its parts and render its operation uniform; Edward C. Jones Co. v. Perry, 26 Ind. App. 563, 57 N. E. 583, and Johnson v. Schloesser, 146 Ind. 518, 36 L. R. A. 63, 58 Am. St. Rep. 367, 45 N. E. 702, holding that such construction should be given to statute as will render effective all its parts without violating legislative intention.

Equal protection, and due process, of law.

Cited in Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 77 Miss. 779, 25 So. 355, holding railroad not denied equal protection of law when all railroads are accorded same notice and opportunity for hearing relative to tax assessments; Newton v. Roper, 150 Ind. 632, 50 N. E. 749, holding that due process of law is secured to property owners under tax laws when notice of time, place, and tribunal to make assessments is given; People v. Hasbrouck, 11 Utah, 306, 39 Pac. 918, holding that due process of law is secured when statute provides uniform rule and uniform process for ascertaining qualifications of those engaged or desirous of engaging in practice of medicine and surgery; Carroll v. Alsop, 107 Tenn. 278, 64 S. W. 193, holding notice in general law regulating assessment and collection of taxes sufficient to constitute due process of law so far as individual citizen is concerned; Bowlin v. Cochran, 161 Ind. 488, 69 N. E. 153, upholding constitutionality of act for taking of property for roads, which requires notice and preserves right to hearing and appeal.

Cited in footnote to Brown v. Markham, 30 L. R. A. 84, which holds valid statute authorizing logger's lien without notice to owner but giving subsequent opportunity to intervene.

Uniform and equal taxation.

Cited in Henderson v. London & L. Ins. Co. 135 Ind. 38, 20 L. R. A. 833, 41 Am. St. Rep. 410, 34 N. E. 565, holding that constitutional uniformity of taxation requires that all persons or property of particular district or class shall be subjected to same rate of assessment; Deniston v. Terry, 141 Ind. 682, 41 N. E. 143, holding paid-up building and loan stock taxable to holders notwithstanding statute assessing the association; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, 146 Ind. 61, 44 N. E. 793, holding that rule of uniform and equal taxation is not violated by reason of classification of property for purposes of assessment; State ex rel. Lewis v. Smith, 158 Ind. 550, 63 L. R. A. 120, 63 N. E. 25, holding statute authorizing deduction of mortgage indebtedness to extent of $700 for purposes of assessment, not in violation of constitutional requirement as to uniformity of taxation.

Cited in footnote to Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 53 L. R. A. 921, which holds exemption from privilege tax not included in exemption from ad valorem tax.

Validity of assessments.

Cited in Youngstown Bridge Co. v. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. 64 Fed. 442, holding assessment of bridge property, lying in two states, by state board of tax commissioners, not void because of error in including property outside of state.

Situs of property for purposes of taxation.

Cited in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 20, 41 L. ed. 56, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1054, Affirming 141 Ind. 285, 60 L. R. A. 689, 40 N. E. 1051, holding that state tax on that portion of property of interstate telegraph company which is within the state may be made by considering value of whole line as a unit and assessing tax on mileage basis.

Cited in footnotes to Grigsby Constr. Co. v. Freeman, 58 L. R. A. 349, which holds contractor's outfit brought into state for use several months in constructing railroad taxable in state; Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Lynch, 48 L. R. A. 790, which authorizes taxation of cars within state under lease from foreign corporation; Cumberland & P. R. Co. v. State, 52 L. R. A. 764, which sustains state tax on proportionate part of gross receipts of interstate railroad within its borders and which corresponds to proportion of mileage within such state; Hall v. American Refrigerator Transit Co. 56 L. R. A. 89, which sustains tax on average number of refrigerator cars coming into state in course of interstate business.

Basis of taxation of railroad corporations.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Virginia & T. R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 759, which holds earning capacity of railroad main consideration in determining taxable value; Wells, F. & Co.'s Express v. Crawford County, 37 L. R. A. 371, which holds assessment at true value of property of interstate express company within state proper mode of taxation.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in notes (60 L. R. A. 341, 344, 346, 356, 368, 373) on constitutional equality in the United States in relation to corporate taxation; (60 L. R. A. 642, 652) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause.

Delegation of legislative or judicial authority.

Cited in Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 133, 50 L. R. A. 70, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89, holding power granted to boards of health and school boards to require vaccination of children attending school, not unlawful delegation of legislative authority; Bellingham Bay Improv. Co. v. New Whatcom, 20 Wash. 59, 54 Pac. 774, holding statute conferring authority upon city council to determine correctness of tax assessments not unconstitutional as being a delegation of judicial authority.

18 L. R. A. 744, PATTY v. COLGAN, 97 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 1133.

Purposes for which public funds may be used.

Cited in Taylor v. Mott, 123 Cal. 500, 56 Pac. 256, holding appropriation of public funds to pension exempt firemen, unconstitutional; Powell v. Phelan, 138 Cal. 275, 71 Pac. 335, holding appropriation of county funds to payment of fees of jurors for services rendered prior to enactment of law, unconstitutional.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. New Richmond v. Davidson, 58 L. R. A. 739, which sustains appropriation by legislature to pay city debt for burying dead, removing débris, and caring for injured and homeless; Ingram v. Colgan, 28 L. R. A. 187, which upholds bounty for killing coyotes; Re Stanford, 45 L. R. A. 788, which holds statute exempting certain persons from liability for inheritance tax, invalid, under provision against state's making gifts or releasing indebtedness; Conlin v. San Francisco, 33 L. R. A. 752, which denies legislative right to direct use of city money to pay claim based on merely moral obligation; Conlin v. San Francisco, 21 L. R. A. 474, which holds void, act for relief of street contractor; Board of Education v. State, 25 L. R. A. 770, which holds unconstitutional, act authorizing board of education to levy tax to pay claim for which no obligation exists; Dodge v. Mission Twp. 54 L. R. A. 242, which holds promotion of construction and operation of sugar mills a private purpose not authorizing taxation; Pritchard v. Magoun, 40 L. R. A. 381, which authorizes taxes to aid in building for highway and railway purposes toll bridge owned by private corporation; Opinion of Justices, 49 L. R. A. 564, which holds legislative right to appropriate money for widow, heirs, etc., of deceased officer dependent on whether public good will be served; People ex rel. Einsfeld v. Murray, 32 L. R. A. 344, which holds valid, excise law giving two thirds of the taxes thereby imposed to the towns and cities in which raised.

18 L. R. A. 745, CUTHBERT v. CHAUVET, 136 N. Y. 326, 49 N. Y. S. R. 671, 32 N. E. 1088.

Equitable jurisdiction over trusts and trustees.

Cited in Glasscock v. Tate, 107 Tenn. 402, 64 S. W. 715, holding equity court without jurisdiction to render decree dissolving express trust, even with consent of beneficiary; O'Donoghue v. Boies, 92 Hun, 8, 37 N. Y. Supp. 961, holding judgment of court ordering partition and sale of trust estate, void, as being in contravention of last will of testator creating said trust; Oviatt v. Hopkins, 20 App. Div. 171, 46 N. Y. Supp. 959, holding court without jurisdiction to render judgment compelling trustee of express trust to so act in reference thereto as to cause destruction of trust; Rochevot v. Rochevot, 74 App. Div. 590, 77 N. Y. Supp. 788, holding that, notwithstanding assumed power of parties in interest to make agreement terminating trust, court of equity will not compel destruction of trust against protest of trustees or some interested beneficiaries.

Distinguished in Martin v. Pine, 79 Hun, 432, 29 N. Y. Supp. 995, denying court's power to dissolve trust before scheme outlined by testator has been accomplished.

Termination of express trusts.

Cited in Re New York, 81 App. Div. 33, 81 N. Y. Supp. 32, holding lease by trustee of trust estate for period longer than time fixed for its duration void, as contravening statute of uses and trusts; Hunt v. Hunt, 124 Mich. 504, 83 N. W. 371, holding it not to be within power of trustees and their cestuis que trust to transform active trust in real property into passive one; Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Div. 424, 83 N. Y. Supp. 849, denying right of beneficiaries to have continuance of testator's business, directed in will, terminated; Metcalfe v. Union, Trust Co. 87 App. Div. 148, 84 N. Y. Supp. 183, denying right of remainder men. by releasing their interests, to terminate trust to pay income of estate to widow for life, or until remarriage.

Distinguished in Re Heinze, 20 Misc. 373, 46 N. Y. Supp. 247, holding express-trust in personalty terminated by conveyance of life interest to remainderman; Gomez v. Gomez, 81 Hun, 573, 31 N. Y. Supp. 206, holding that death of life beneficiary terminates trust providing that trustees shall convey trust property to person designated, and vests property in remainderman.

Relief to trustee for predecessor's default.

Cited in Griswold v. Caldwell, 14 Misc. 303, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1057, holding that court will extend partial relief to substituted trustee for predecessor's default in pleading.

Action by trustee representing diverse interests.

Cited in Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 66 Fed. 176, holding that trustee representing various mortgage interests in extensive railroad system should not bring action alone to ascertain various liens, but representative of each interest should be admitted.

18 L. R. A. 750, JOLIET v. SHUFELT, 144 Ill. 403, 36 Am. St. Rep. 453, 32 N. E. 969.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Mochell, 96 Ill. App. 183, holding excessive speed of running trains in city contrary to ordinance proximate cause of injury to passenger riding on street car.

Cited in footnotes to Western R. Co. v. Mutch, 21 L. R. A. 316, which holds excessive speed not proximate cause of death of boy attempting to catch on train; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 20 L. R. A. 582, as to proximate cause of injury to shipper while stepping from stock car to caboose; Mueller v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 21 L. R. A. 721, which holds sudden stopping of street car in front of funeral procession cause of injury to first carriage by pole of second.

Two causes producing injury.

Cited in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 95 Ill. App. 59, holding master liable for injuries to servant due to combined negligence of master and fellow servant; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 184 Ill. 487, 56 N. E. 796, Affirming 83 Ill. App. 533, holding street railway company liable for injuries to servant due to negligence of third party combined with that of company; Armour v. Golkowska, 202 Ill. 149, 66 N. E. 1037, holding master liable for injury to servant hit by barrel rolling off unguarded platform, and servant need not show what force put barrel in motion; Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 98, 37 Pac. 1012, holding that where two causes combine to produce injury, both proximate in nature, one being negligent defect in street, other some accident for which city or injured party is not responsible, city is liable; Eskildsen v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 586, 70 Pac. 64, holding city liable for injury to boy run over by cars after catching foot between rail and planking in highway; Chicago v. McCabe, 93 Ill. App. 291, holding city liable for hole in street into which wheel of wagon dropped causing driver to fall out, notwithstanding team was apparently unmanageable at time of injury; Lockport v. Richards, 81 Ill. App. 536, holding city liable for allowing trap door in walk to get out of repair causing injury to one who fell into hole, notwithstanding door may have been misplaced by some third party; Rock Falls v. Wells, 169 Ill. 227, 48 N. E. 440, Affirming 65 Ill. App. 565, holding city liable for allowing unused car tracks to remain in street thereby preventing plaintiff from crossing to avoid injury from collision with runaway.

Negligence as question for jury.

Cited in Mt. Vernon v. Cockrum, 59 Ill. App. 545, holding it to be question for jury whether city was negligent in constructing bridge diagonally across brook and in failing to erect railing.

18 L. R. A. 753, MALMGREN v. PHINNEY, 50 Minn. 457, 52 N. W. 915.

Second appeal in 65 Minn. 25, 67 N. W. 649.

Distribution between lien holders.

Followed in Miller v. Stoddard, 54 Minn. 490, 56 N. W. 131, giving rule of distribution upon sale of mortgaged property under foreclosure of mechanic's lien Priority of liens.

Cited in Walters v. Ward, 153 Ind. 582, 55 N. E. 735, holding that owner of land covered by mortgage, who sells to one who agreed to pay mortgagee's claim and difference between selling price and such claim, has lien on such difference superior to that of mortgagee against land, where mortgagee secretly released purchaser from payments after latter had delivered possession of land to him; Thorpe Block Sav. & L. Asso. v. James, 13 Ind. App. 526, 41 N. E. 978, holding that junior mortgagee given priority by agreement with senior mortgagee waives such priority by subsequently permitting mechanics' liens to be filed.

Holiday law as to matters other than negotiable paper.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 319) on how far law of holidays extends to matters other than those relating to negotiable paper.

18 L. R. A. 756, FOGARTY v. JUNCTION CITY PRESSED BRICK CO. 50 Kan. 478, 31 Pac. 1052.

Liability for maintenance of nuisance.

Cited in footnotes to Hauck v. Tide Water Pipe-Line Co. 20 L. R. A. 642, which holds pipe-line proprietor absolutely liable for escape of oil; Frost v. Berkeley Phosphate Co. 26 L. R. A. 693, which holds owner of factory liable for damage by fumes; Swift v. Broyles, 58 L. R. A. 390, which sustains right to compensation for discomfort from noxious gases, etc., from chemical works on adjoining premises.

Undertaking as "offensive business."

Cited in footnote to Rowland v. Miller, 22 L. R. A. 182, which holds undertaking establishment within restrictive agreement against business "injurious or offensive to neighboring inhabitants."

18 L. R. A. 759, KOELSCH v. PHILADELPHIA CO. 152 Pa. 355, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653, 25 Atl. 522.

Care required in dealing with dangerous agencies.

Followed in Heh v. Consolidated Gas Co. 201 Pa. 447, 88 Am. St. Rep. 819, 50 Atl. 994, holding that gas, being dangerous agency, one dealing in same required to exercise more than ordinary care; Fuchs v. St. Louis, 133 Mo. 180, 34 L. R. A. 120, 31 S. W. 115, holding blowing up of sewer into which large quantities of petroleum have flowed entitled to consideration in determining whether city exercised proper care; Anderson v. Standard Gaslight Co. 17 Misc. 627, 40 N. Y. Supp. 671, holding company liable for losses sustained by reason of failure properly to maintain gas works and use such care in its inspection as dangerous character of agency dealt with demanded; Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Lawrence, 31 Colo. 318, 73 Pac. 39, holding light company liable to one receiving terrific charge of electricity in turning on incandescent lamp; Coffeyville Min. & Gas Co. v. Carter, 65 Kan. 568, 70 Pac. 635, holding owner liable for explosion of gas escaping from well and igniting in unknown manner; Indianapolis Abattoir Co. v. Temperly, 159 Ind. 654, 95 Am. St. Rep. 330, 64 N. E. 906, holding landlord liable to tenant for injury due to gas escaping from defective pipes.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 338) on liability for negligence in escape and explosion of gas.

Duty of gas company as to fittings and inspection.

Cited in Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker, 82 Md. 123, 31 L. R. A. 788, 33 Atl. 423, holding gas company guilty of negligence for permitting escape of gas from service pipes after having had due notice of such fact, and failing to take necessary and known precautions in preventing pipe line from getting out of order; Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Long, 27 Ind. App. 226, 59 N. E. 410, holding it, not only duty of gas company to furnish safe and adequate facilities for distributing gas, but also to provide proper inspection of same; Prichard v. Consolidated Gas Co. 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 182, 39 W. N. C. 30, holding it to be duty necessitated from dangerous character of gas that one dealing in same should use every precaution known in providing and maintaining facilities for handling same; German-American Ins. Co. v. Standard Gaslight Co. 34 Misc. 595, 70 N. Y. Supp. 384, holding gas company liable for damage resulting from its employee applying lighted match to gas pipe to locate leak; Aurora Gaslight Co. v. Bishop, 81 Ill. App. 501, holding it duty of gas company to guard against injury to its pipes caused by construction of sewer by city; United Oil Co. v. Roseberry, 30 Colo. 184, 69 Pac. 588, holding gas company liable for explosion due to negligence of servant in not inspecting pipes upon making connections.

Negligence as question for jury.

Cited in Paden v. Van Blarcom, 100 Mo. App. 193, 74 S. W. 124, holding it question for jury whether master was negligent in ordering gas turned on in range without examining valves.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 542, 41 L. R. A. 798, 51 N. E. 1, holding negligence in storing oil upon station platform and permitting it to remain in violation of statute, not proximate cause of damage by fire started by lighted match dropped upon platform; Leeds v. New York Teleph. Co. 178 N. Y. 126, 70 N. E. 219 (dissenting opinion), majority holding failure of telephone company to inspect chimney used as anchor for wire, not proximate cause of injury to traveler struck by bricks caused to fall by boom of derrick striking wire.

Action against joint wrongdoers.

Cited in Johnson v. Chapman, 43 W. Va. 641, 28 S. E. 744, holding that one suffering injury from concurrent negligence of two wrongdoers may maintain joint or separate action against both or either of wrongdoers; Dutton v. Lansdowne, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 210, 7 Del. Co. Rep. 402, 44 W. N. C. 293, holding it not error to join as parties defendant, wrongdoers whose concurrent negligence, though of varying degree, resulted in injury to plaintiff.

18 L. R. A. 761, COM. v. MATTHEWS, 152 Pa. 166, 25 Atl. 548.

What acts may be performed on Sunday.

Followed without comment in Com. v. Suppert, 152 Pa. 170, 25 Atl. 549.

Cited in Com. v. Diffenbaugh, 26 Pa. Co. Ct. 69, 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 22, holding selling of meats on Sunday to be violation of Sunday law; Com. ex rel. Gottschall v. Newcomet, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 510, holding operation of street cars on Sunday not such public nuisance as to subject operators to penalties for violation of Sunday law.

Cited in footnotes to First M. E. Church v. Donnell, 46 L. R. A. 858, which sustains subscription to church indebtedness made on Sunday; State v. McBee, 60 L. R. A. 638, which holds pumping oil well on Sunday work of necessity, if permanent, material loss and injury would otherwise result; Arnheiter v. State, 58 L. R. A. 392, which holds sale of meat by butcher to customers on Sunday not work of necessity or charity.

18 L. R. A. 764, BIRMINGHAM v. ROCHESTER CITY & B. R. CO. 137 N. Y. 13, 49 N. Y. S. R. 888, 32 N. E. 995.

Liability of railroad company for negligence of third party.

Cited in Richmond v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 8 App. Div. 386, 40 N. Y. Supp. 812, holding railroad company not liable for injuries to brakeman, due to falling of wire which was strung up by third person.

Cited in footnote to New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Baker, 50 L. R. A. 201, which denies carrier's liability for injury to passenger through negligent operation of derrick by state board employees in raising grade of railroad bridge.

18 L. R. A. 768, RAUENSTEIN v. NEW YORK, L. & W. R. CO. 136 N. Y. 528, 32 N. E. 1047.

Injury to abutter's easement in street.

Cited in footnote to Lockwood v. Wabash R. Co. 24 L. R. A. 516, which denies city's power to authorize steam railroad company to locate tracks in narrow highway devoted to wholesale business.

— Right to damages.

Cited in Re Grade Crossing, 154 N. Y. 557, 49 N. E. 127, Affirming 6 App. Div. 331, 40 N. Y. Supp. 520, holding that, in absence of statute, no compensation is due to abutting property owners for changing grade of public street; Colclough v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 186, 65 N. W. 1039, holding change in grade in public highway or street not such an injury or taking of private property as to entitle abutting property owner to compensation; Brand v. Multnomah County, 38 Or. 102, 50 L. R. A. 396, 84 Am. St. Rep. 772, 62 Pac. 209, holding change in grade on side or lateral streets made necessary to effectuate crossing over railway on another street is not additional burden or injury to abutting property owner entitling him to compensation therefor; Fries v. New York & H. R. Co. 169 N. Y.

277, 62 N. E. 358, holding that rule of damnum absque injuria properly applies to case of abutting property owner suffering injury by reason of improvement in public street made under lawful authority.

Cited in footnotes to Pueblo v. Strait, 24 L. R. A. 392, which holds abutter entitled to damages on building of viaduct over railroad practically closing access to street; Spencer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 668, which denies right to construct viaduct in street without compensating abutters.

Distinguished in Egbert v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 6 Ind. App. 357, 33 N. E. 659, holding that change in grade of public street by railroad in order to make convenient crossing, entitles abutting owner to compensation for any injury to property rights in highway.

Condemnation proceedings to destroy easement in street.

Cited in Ray v. New York Bay Extension R. Co. 34 App. Div. 5, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1052, holding that plaintiff having an easement in highway, has property right therein which can be extinguished only by condemnation proceedings.

Duty of railroad company carrying highway across tracks.

Cited in Deming v. Terminal R. Co. 49 App. Div. 500, 63 N. Y. Supp. 615, holding railroad company employing independent contractor to carry highway across tracks, liable for injury resulting from failure to guard embankment.

18 L. R. A. 771, VANDEWATER v. NEW YORK & N. E. R. CO. 135 N. Y. 583, 49 N. Y. S. R. 55, 32 N. E. 636.

Duty of railroad company to give warning at crossings.

Followed on second appeal in 74 Hun, 33, 26 N. Y. Supp. 397, holding it duty of railroad companies to run trains with due care and to give warning upon approaching crossings, either by bells, whistles, or other adequate means.

Cited in Hickey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 8 App. Div. 125, 40 N. Y. Supp. 484, holding railroad company bound to give due and reasonable warning on approaching crossing; Finn v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 42 App. Div. 527, 59 N. Y. Supp. 771, holding railroad company liable for injuries to child resulting from failure to give signals and to station flagman to guard public against danger at crossing; Petrie v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 63 App. Div. 476, 71 N. Y. Supp. 866; Shapter v. Carroll, 18 App. Div. 390, 46 N. Y. Supp. 202; Friess v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 67 Hun, 210, 22 N. Y. Supp. 104,—holding that even in absence of statutory requirement of railroads to ring bells and blow whistles at crossing, yet they owe duty to public to give adequate warnings and use due caution in running of trains; Coulter v. Great Northern R. Co. 5 N. D. 584, 67 N. W. 1046, holding common-law duty of railroad company not diminished by existence of statute requiring ringing of bell and blowing of whistle upon approaching crossings; Henavie v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 166 N. Y. 284, 59 N. E. 901, holding railroad company guilty of negligence for operating trains in city without using adequate facilities to warn people at crossings; Philadelphia & B. C. R. Co. v. Holden, 93 Md. 423, 49 Atl. 625, holding failure to give signals at public crossing not negligence as to person injured at private crossing where signals could have been heard.

Duty of traveler at crossing.

Cited in footnote to Passman v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. 61 L. R. A. 609, which holds cutting of train on side track at highway crossing not invitation to cross without using ordinary precaution.

18 L. R. A. 774, HOBBS v. STATE, 133 Ind. 404, 32 N. E. 1019.

Plea in abatement.

Cited in State v. Katzman, 161 Ind. 505, 69 N. E. 157, holding that question as to right to prosecute by information may be raised by plea in abatement.

Sufficiency of information or indictment.

Cited in Musgrave v. State, 133 Ind. 304, 32 N. E. 885, holding that conspiracy, being a public offense, indictment charging it, is not bad on account of surplusage; State v. Fidler, 148 Ind. 222, 47 N. E. 464, and Koetting v. State, 88 Wis. 510, 60 N. W. 822, holding indictment not bad for duplicity, though charging conjunctively, commission of acts made criminal disjunctively by statute; Selby v. State, 161 Ind. 672, 69 N. E. 463, holding information charging defendant with forging, uttering, etc., a certain forged note, not bad for repugnancy; Wilson v. State, 156 Ind. 635, 59 N. E. 380, holding indictment charging accused with presenting false and fraudulent claim not bad for duplicity.

Cruel and unusual punishments.

Cited in Miller v. State, 149 Ind. 617, 40 L. R. A. 112, 49 N. E. 894, holding reformatory act providing for parole of persons convicted of crime not unconstitutional on ground of imposing cruel and unusual punishment.

Cited in footnote to Com. v. Murphy, 30 L. R. A. 734, which sustains statute imposing imprisonment for life for criminal intimacy with girl under sixteen.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 562, 567, 568) on cruel and unusual punishments.

18 L. R. A. 778, FINNEGAN v. KNIGHTS OF LABOR BLDG. ASSO. 52 Minn. 239, 38 Am. St. Rep. 552, 53 N. W. 1150.

What is a de facto corporation.

Cited in Johnson v. Okerstrom, 70 Minn. 311, 73 N. W. 147, and Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. South Pub. Co. 4 Misc. 175, 23 N. Y. Supp. 675, holding that to constitute a de facto corporation there must exist valid law, an attempt to organize under such law, and bona fide user of corporate powers conferred by such law; Gibbs's Estate, 157 Pa. 69, 22 L. R. A. 281, 27 Atl. 383, holding that de facto corporation is an apparent corporate organization, asserted to be a corporation by its member and actually acting as such, but lacking creative fiat of law.

Right to deny existence of de facto corporation.

Cited in Hause v. Mannheimer, 67 Minn. 195, 69 N. W. 810, holding that as between de facto corporation and stockholder, latter cannot successfully deny corporate existence.

Collateral attack upon de facto corporation.

Cited in Washington Nat. Bldg. Loan & Invest. Asso. v. Stanley, 38 Or. 319, 58 L. R. A. 819, 84 Am. St. Rep. 793, 63 Pac. 489, holding that borrowers from loan association, who have accepted stock, cannot defeat its action to foreclose mortgage, on ground that articles of incorporation were not properly acknowledged.

Partnership liability of member or stockholder of de facto corporation.

Cited in Richards v. Minnesota Sav. Bank, 75 Minn. 207, 77 N. W. 822, holding that one who deals with de facto corporation, as such, cannot charge members or stockholders as partners with debts contracted with corporation; Doty v. Patterson, 155 Ind. 66, 56 N. E. 668, holding stockholders of de facto corporation not liable as partners to one contracting with corporation.

Cited in footnotes to Taylor v. Branham, 39 L. R. A. 362, which holds liable as partners, members of foreign corporation carrying on business in state without being incorporated therein; Slocum v. Head, 50 L. R. A. 324, which holds persons attempting to incorporate by filing original articles, instead of copies, entitled to all rights of corporation as to persons dealing with them as such; Wechselberg v. Flour City Nat. Bank, 26 L. R. A. 470, which holds liable as partner, negligent signer of recorded articles of incorporation negligently permitting use of name as officer without legal incorporation.

18 L. R. A. 781, HANCOCK v. McAVOY, 151 Pa. 460, 31 Am. St. Rep. 774, 25 Atl. 47.

Interest in land sufficient to support ejectment.

Cited in Mannerback v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 625, holding clause in deed "excepting and forever reserving the graveyard on the lands hereby conveyed, at all times hereafter to enter thereon without hindrance or denial of, . . . his heirs and assigns" an exception sufficient to support action of ejectment; Fisk v. Brayman, 21 R. I. 197, 42 Atl. 878, holding action of trespass and ejectment will not lie to recover possession of premises, title to which is claimed through reservation; Doe ex dem. Stewart v. Garrett (Ga.) 64 L. R. A. 100, footnote p. 99, 46 S. E. 427, holding interest of purchaser of cemetery lot not sufficient to support ejectment.

Cited in footnotes to Cahill v. Cahill, 60 L. R. A. 706, which holds possessory rights only will not sustain ejectment without showing legal title; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Peet, 19 L. R. A. 467, which authorizes railroad company to maintain ejectment for property condemned.

Ejectment for land in street.

Cited in footnotes to San Francisco v. Grote, 36 L. R. A. 502, which holds dedication of street by parol not sufficient to support ejectment by city against fee owner; San Francisco v. Grote, 41 L. R. A. 335, which sustains city's right of ejectment for land dedicated for street; Thomas v. Hunt, 32 L. R. A. 857, which holds ejectment proper remedy by owner of fee to recover possession of street from one placing permanent obstruction thereon; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Eaton, 39 L. R. A. 722, which sustains right to ejectment for removal of telegraph poles placed in highway without compensation to owner; French v. Robb, 57 L. R. A. 956, which sustains right of owner of soil in street to maintain ejectment against person wrongfully claiming exclusive possession.

Adverse possession of highway.

Cited in footnote to Teass v. St. Albans, 19 L. R. A. 803, which holds title to street obtainable by adverse possession.

Nature of owner's interest in cemetery lots.

Cited in McWhirter v. Newell, 200 Ill. 590, 66 N. E. 345, holding that purchaser of lot in public cemetery obtains easement only.

Liability for disinterment of dead bodies.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 725) on liability for disinterment of dead bodies and actions relating thereto.

Appeal from order appointing receiver pendente lite.

Cited in Popp v. Daisy Gold Min. Co. 22 Utah, 462, 63 Pac. 185, holding order appointing receiver pendente lite upon ex parte motion, not final from which appeal will lie.

18 L. R. A. 792, DIXON v. CHICAGO & A. R. CO. 109 Mo. 413, 19 S. W. 412.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Card v. Eddy, 129 Mo. 516, 36 L. R. A. 808, 28 S. W. 979, holding track hand working in road department and engineer in operating department of same railroad are not fellow servants; Schlereth v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. 105, 21 S. W. 1110, holding engineer and track repairer not fellow servants; Church v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 119 Mo. 208, 23 S. W. 1056, holding as on former appeal that quarryman is not fellow servant of those operating train, even though all are engaged in common enterprise; Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 153 Mo. 396, 48 L. R. A. 406, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 55 S. W. 108, holding engineer, fireman, and conductor of freight train fellow servants within rule exempting master from liability for injury to either due to negligence of others; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 412, 18 L. R. A. 817, footnote p. 802, 19 S. W. 1119, on question whether railroad section hands ballasting railroad tracks are fellow servants with train men unloading stone used therefor, each group working under different foreman; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 93, 18 L. R. A. 820, footnote p. 817, 20 S. W. 480, which holds brakeman and firemen on different trains fellow servants.

Cited in footnotes to Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 321, which holds boss of gang unloading dirt on railroad fellow servant of member of gang; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 25 L. R. A. 833, which holds a conductor of construction train leaving switch open a fellow servant of fireman on passenger train; Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson, 29 L. R. A. 137, which holds section man and fireman not fellow servants; Canadian P. R. Co. v. Johnston, 25 L. R. A. 470, which holds freight conductor and brakeman not fellow servants; Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 827, which holds foreman not fellow servant of man under his orders; Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 823, which holds foreman of section gang not fellow servant of members of gang.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 447, 458) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment apart from statutes where no questions as to vice principalship arise.

Injury due to act of fellow servant.

Cited in Irmer v. St. Louis Brewing Co. 69 Mo. App. 28, holding negligence of master in failing properly to light trap door not excused because injury resulting to servant was caused by negligence of fellow servant in leaving door open.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Church v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 119 Mo. 208, 23 S. W. 1056, on second appeal, holding question of contributory negligence one for jury where the facts are in dispute; Evans v. Wabash R. Co. 178 Mo. 514, 77 S. W. 515, holding experienced hand, stepping in front of approaching train, without looking or listening, negligent, as matter of law.

Omission of warning signal.

Cited in Hornstein v. United R. Co. 97 Mo. App. 277, 70 S. W. 1105, holding omission of motorman to sound gong on approaching crossing, negligence.

18 L. R. A. 802, PARKER v. HANNIBAL & ST. J. R. CO. 109 Mo. 362, 19 S. W. 1119.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 153 Mo. 396, 48 L. R. A. 405, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 55 S. W. 108, holding engineer of train and track-repairer not fellow servants. Schlereth v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. 99, 21 S. W. 1110, holding engineer and track repairer employed by same company not fellow servants within rule exempting master from liability for death of track hand due to negligence of engineer. Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817, 20 S. W. 480, holding brakeman of one freight train fellow servant of fireman on another train operating on same road under same master; Zellars v. Missouri Water & Light Co. 92 Mo. App. 126, holding that servant to whom master delegates performance of personal duty owing by master to other employees, is not fellow servant of such employees; Hawk v. McLeod Lumber Co. 166 Mo. 129, 65 S. W. 1022, holding sawyer and deck hand in sawmill fellow servants; Neal v. Northern P. R. Co. 57 Minn. 372, 59 N. W. 312, holding lineman engaged in repairing telegraph line and members of road-bed repairing crew, fellow servants; Card v. Eddy, 129 Mo. 516, 36 L. R. A. 808, footnote p. 806, 28 S. W. 979, holding fireman and track hand to whom he attempted to deliver weighted message from moving train engaged in same department of service, within rule exempting master from injury inflicted by fellow servant; Shaw v. Bambrick-Bates Constr. Co. 102 Mo. App. 672, 77 S. W. 96, holding workman loading stone in box fellow servant of one signalling engineer when to hoist it.

Cited in footnotes to Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 827, which holds foreman not fellow servant of man under his orders; Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 792, which holds laborer working in quarry of railroad company under direction of foreman not fellow servant of employees operating passenger train; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 817, which holds brakemen and firemen on different trains fellow servants; Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 823, which holds foreman of section gang not fellow servant of members of gang.

Cited in notes (46 L. R. A. 361) as to when conductor is deemed to be common servant of other railway employees; (50 L. R. A. 419, 448, 450, 452, 454) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment apart from statutes where no questions as to vice principalship arise.

Distinguished in Swadley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 118 Mo. 276, 40 Am. St. Rep. 366, 24 S. W. 140, holding track hand walking along right of way, not fellow servant of crew of train, some cars of which were derailed, causing death of track hand.

Safe appliances.

Cited in Hogan v. Citizens' R. Co. 150 Mo. 49, 51 S. W. 473, holding allegation of negligent failure to provide car with fender to prevent its running over children, properly stricken out since company not required to furnish best appliances if those used are reasonably safe.

18 L. R. A. 817, RELYEA v. KANSAS CITY, FT. S. & G. R. CO. 112 Mo. 86, 20 S. W. 480.

Who are fellow servants.

Followed in Sheehan v. Prosser, 55 Mo. App. 574, holding workman on building receiving lumber hoisted by engine fellow servant of engineer.

Cited in Hawk v. McLeod Lumber Co. 166 Mo. 128, 65 S. W. 1022, holding sawyer and deck hand at sawmill to be fellow servants; Ryan v. McCully, 123 Mo. 647, 27 S. W. 533, holding bridge laborer and an engineer operating hoisting engine used in constructing bridge, fellow servants.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 109) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Who are not fellow servants.

Cited in footnote to Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 823, which holds foreman of section gang not fellow servant of members of gang; Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 827, which holds foreman not fellow servant of man under his orders.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 448, 452, 455) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment apart from statutes where no questions as to vice principalship arise.

Railroad employees as fellow servants.

Cited in Card v. Eddy, 129 Mo. 517, 36 L. R. A. 808, 28 S. W. 979, holding fireman and track hand to whom he attempted to deliver weighted message from moving train engaged in same department of service, within rule exempting master from injury inflicted by fellow servant; Oglesby v. Missouri P. R. Co. 150 Mo. 180, 51 S. W. 758, separate opinion per Sherwood, J., who holds conductor, engineer, and others of train crew fellow servants of brakeman employed on same train; Neal v. Northern P. R. Co. 57 Minn. 373, 59 N. W. 312, concurring opinion, by Cauty, J., who holds fireman on one train to be fellow servant of brakeman on another owned by common master; Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 153 Mo. 396, 48 L. R. A. 405, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 55 S. W. 108, holding fireman and brakeman though employed on different trains fellow servants being engaged in same department of service for common master.

Cited in footnotes to Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 792, which holds laborer working in quarry of railroad company under direction of foreman not fellow servant of employees operating passenger train; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 802, which holds track repairer and members of section gang under different management not fellow servant; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 25 L. R. A. 833, which holds a conductor of construction train leaving switch open a fellow servant of fireman on passenger train; Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 321, which holds boss of gang unloading dirt on railroad fellow servant of member of gang.

Employment of servants.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 393) on duty of master as to employment of servants.

Duty of master or his representative to follow up servants.

Cited in Martin v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 65 Fed. 386, holding train master not obliged to follow up servants—conductors, brakemen, and engineers,—to see that orders of master are properly executed.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 115) on theory that master is bound merely to supervise one to whom he has committed the duty of inspection.

Duty of master to provide rules for servants.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 320, 337) on duties of master and servant as to rules promulgated for safe conduct of business.

18 L. R. A. 323, RUSS v. WABASH WESTERN R. CO. 112 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 472.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Donahoe v. Kansas City, 136 Mo. 670, 38 S. W. 571, holding foreman in charge of gang of men engaged in digging sewer trench not fellow servant of laborer under his charge, though both were engaged in service for municipality; Haworth v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 94 Mo. App. 224, 68 S. W. 111, holding foreman charged with duty of supervising and directing work of track gang not fellow servant because, for a moment, he assists his men in doing particular act; Keown v. St. Louis R. Co. 141 Mo. 94, 41 S. W. 926, holding foreman of street railway and grip-man not fellow servants; Foster v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. 180, 21 S. W. 916, holding roadmaster in charge of gang of laborers engaged in track construction not fellow servants of member of gang; Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 317, 72 S. W. 522, holding ground foreman in mine not fellow servant of minor though both have a general superintendent over them.

Cited in footnotes to Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 321, which holds boss of gang unloading dirt on railroad fellow servant of member of gang; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 802, which holds track repairer and members of section gang under different management not fellow servants; Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 827, which holds foreman not fellow servant of man under his orders; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 817, which holds brakeman and firemen on different trains fellow servants; Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 792, which holds laborer working in quarry of railroad company under direction of foreman not fellow servant of employees operating passenger train.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 553, 598, 614, 616) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant.

Injury inflicted by fellow servant.

Cited in Card v. Eddy, 129 Mo. 527, 36 L. R. A. 811, 28 S. W. 979 (dissenting opinion), majority denying railroad company's liability for injury inflicted on employee by another employee who threw weighted message from moving train.

Liability of master for acts of representative.

Approved in Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 668, 65 N. E. 1026, holding master's liability for failure of representative to fully perform delegated duty not confined to negligent orders.

Hypothetical questions.

Cited in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 49 L. R. A. 88, 41 C. C. A. 39, 100 Fed. 738, holding not reversible error to permit answers to be made to hypothetical questions based upon facts, existence of which are assumed from evidence already admitted; Hicks v. Citizens' R. Co. 124 Mo. 125, 25 L. R. A. 513, 27 S. W. 542, holding hypothetical question propounded to expert witness should be founded upon facts fairly justified by evidence; Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 531, 44

S. W. 1053, holding sufficient basis for introduction of opinion evidence of expert witness if facts assumed to exist are justified by evidence already introduced; Smith v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 119 Mo. 255, 23 S. W. 784, holding not improper to accept answer of physician, testifying as an expert, to question founded upon facts, assumed from evidence which fairly tends to their proof; Woodward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 58 C. C. A. 404, 122 Fed. 68, holding it unnecessary for hypothetical question to state every fact in case; State v. Dunn, 179 Mo. 111, 77 S. W. 848, holding that facts tended to be proved by defendant's testimony may be incorporated in hypothetical question.

Waiver of objection to introduction of evidence.

Cited in Salt Lake City v. Smith, 43 C. C. A. 650, 104 Fed. 471, holding objection and exception to admission of improper evidence not waived by subsequent introduction of same class of evidence.

Effect of attorney's admission in opening statement.

Cited in Pratt v. Conway, 148 Mo. 299, 71 Am. St. Rep. 602, 49 S. W. 1028, holding ownership to note conceded, by admission of counsel in opening statement, cannot be controverted; Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co. 102 Mo. App. 579, 77 S. W. 314, denying right to nonsuit on admissions in opening statement of counsel.

18 L. R. A. 827, SCHROEDER v. CHICAGO & A. R. CO. 108 Mo. 322, 18 S. W. 1094.

Right to have jury pass upon evidence.

Cited in Lane v. Missouri P. R. Co. 132 Mo. 32, 33 S. W. 645, holding question of credibility of evidence tending to establish contributory negligence one for jury to determine; Seehorn v. American Nat. Bank, 148 Mo. 265, 49 S. W. 886, holding though fact is prima facie established by one having burden of proof, and no evidence is introduced contradictory thereto, defendant is entitled to have jury pass upon evidence; Clark v. Shrimski, 77 Mo. App. 172, holding question of credibility of witness testifying to establish guilt of one charged with burglary one for jury to determine; Adams County Bank v. Hainline, 67 Mo. App. 488, holding, even in absence of contradictory evidence, party litigant has right to have jury pass upon credibility of evidence; Horner v. Missouri P. R. Co. 70 Mo. App. 294, holding question of character of assignment made, one for jury to determine even though there was no contradictory evidence introduced; Kenney v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 79 Mo. 207, holding, though prima facie case is made out against defendant, he is entitled to have jury pass upon credibility of evidence introduced by plaintiff; Church v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 119 Mo. 222, 23 S. W. 1056, separate opinion by Barclay, J., who holds even though party having burden of proof introduces evidence establishing fact alleged, credibility of evidence, though uncontradicted, should be submitted to jury.

Fact as basis of instruction.

Cited in Fahy v. Gordon, 133 Mo. 425, 34 S. W. 881, holding instruction may properly be based on fact essential to plaintiff's case drawn out by defendant in his evidence and uncontradicted.

Master's liability for negligent injury.

Cited in Hough v. Grants Pass Power Co. 41 Or. 541, 69 Pac. 655, holding master not relieved from liability for death of servant resulting from negligence caused by fellow workman failing to perform duty which master owed personally to servant; Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 401, 46 L. R. A. 356, 27 S. E. 278 (dissenting opinion), as to master's liability for negligence in performance of nonassignable duty; Flannegan v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 40 W. Va. 440, 52 Am. St. Rep. 896, 21 S. E. 1028, holding master bound to nonassignable duty to establish and enforce proper rules and regulations governing servants, failure of which renders master liable for injuries to servant resulting from such neglect; Bloyd v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 58 Ark. 72, 41 Am. St. Rep. 85, 22 S. W. 1089, holding master liable for injuries to servant resulting from negligence of master or vice principal in directing work servant engaged in when injured.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Haney v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 38 W. Va. 580, 18 S. E. 748, holding section hand riding on work train and conductor thereof not fellow servants within rule relieving master of both from liability for negligent injury to section hand.

Cited in footnotes to Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 792, which holds laborer working in quarry of railroad company under direction of foreman not fellow servant of employees operating passenger train; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 802, which hold track repairer and members of section gang under different management not fellow servants; Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 321, which holds boss of gang unloading dirt on railroad fellow servant of member of gang; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 817, which holds brakemen and firemen on different trains fellow servants; Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 823, which holds foreman of section gang not fellow servant of members of gang.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 546, 553, 591, 615) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant.

Injury of servant in obeying master's command.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 757, 758, 765) on servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying direct command.

Risks of employment.

Cited in Nickel v. Columbia Paper Stock Co. 95 Mo. App. 231, 68 S. W. 955, holding paper assorter not presumed to have assumed extraordinary risk from poisonous waste matter from hospital.

Incurring danger to save life.

Cited in note (49 L. R. A. 715, 718) on voluntarily incurring danger to save life of another person as contributory negligence.

18 L. R. A. 832, STEVENS v. ST. MARY'S TRAINING SCHOOL, 144 Ill. 336, 36 Am. St. Rep. 438, 32 N. E. 962.

Judicial interference with legislative or administrative body.

Cited in Lewis v. Denver City Waterworks Co. 19 Colo. 239, 41 Am. St. Rep. 248, 34 Pac. 993, holding board of trustees of municipality when acting in legislative capacity, immune from judicial interference; State ex rel. Rose v. Superior Court, 105 Wis. 677, 48 L. R. A. 829, 81 N. W. 1046, and Adams v. Brennan, 177 Ill. 198, 42 L. R. A. 720, 69 Am. St. Rep. 222, 52 N. E. 314, holding equity has power to restrain unlawful execution of power vested in corporate body created to administer public trust; Seward v. Liberty, 142 Ind. 552, 42 N. E. 39, holding powers of judiciary do not extend to interfering with discretionary powers vested by law in municipal corporations; Tebbetts v. People, 31 Colo. 468, 73 Pac. 869, holding court without power to enjoin passage of ordinance on ground that it is impolitic; Sherburne v. Portsmouth, 72 N. H. 540, 58 Atl. 38, upholding power of court to enjoin city council from authorizing building of base ball park on common.

Unauthorized acts of public officers.

Cited in Snyder v. Mt. Pulaski, 176 Ill. 403, 44 L. R. A. 409, 52 N. E. 62, holding municipality, not estopped from revoking unauthorized act; Hibbard v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 99, 40 L. R. A. 623, 50 N. E. 256, holding license to erect permanent awning in street, granted without authority, revocable; State ex rel. Scott v. Hart, 144 Ind. 109, 33 L. R. A. 120, 43 N. E. 7, holding unlawful action of county commissioners in leasing rooms to individual for private use, not binding upon county.

18 L. R. A. 838, STATE v. CALHOUN, 50 Kan. 523, 34 Am. St. Rep. 141, 32 Pac. 38.

Writ of error coram nobis.

Cited in Dobbs v. State, 62 Kan. 109, 61 Pac. 408, holding writ of error coram nobis proper remedy by one convicted of crime to secure new trial as against state; Howard v. State, 58 Ark. 232, 24 S. W. 8, holding writ of coram nobis will not be sustained in favor of one convicted of crime on ground of newly discovered evidence after time for new trial has expired; Asbell v. State, 62 Kan. 212, 61 Pac. 690, recognizing right to common-law writ of error coram nobis in proper case, but holding it to be supplementary to and not exclusive of Code provision for correction of error in criminal cause; Collins v. State, 66 Kan. 202, 60 L. R. A. 574, footnote p. 572, 97 Am. St. Rep. 361, 71 Pac. 251, denying right to writ from inability to prepare record on appeal within statutory period; Hamlin v. State, 67 Kan. 727, 74 Pac. 242, holding writ not available because of discovery that jurors swore falsely on their voir dire.

Cited in footnote to Withrow v. Smithson, 19 L. R. A. 762, which holds writ of error coram nobis not proper for reversing judgment against insane person.

— Statute of limitation.

Cited in Dobbs v. State, 63 Kan. 326, 65 Pac. 658, holding Statute of Limitations does not run against application for writ of coram nobis.

Suit against state.

Distinguished in Asbell v. State, 60 Kan. 56, 55 Pac. 338, holding state not subject to summons and suit at instance of individual to set aside verdict and judgment rendered against him in criminal cause.

Privileged communication to attorney.

Cited in footnotes to Koeber v. Somers, 52 L. R. A. 512, which holds conversation authorizing attorney to compromise action not privileged; Bruley v. Garvin, 48 L. R. A. 839, which holds conversation with attorney in reference to contemplated law suit privileged, although attorney not retained.

18 L. R. A. 845, MASON v. RICHMOND & D. R. CO. 111 N. C. 482, 16 S. E. 698.

Obligation of railroad to inspect foreign cars.

Cited in Leak v. Carolina C. R. Co. 124 N. C. 457, 32 S. E. 884, holding fact that defective stirrup was on foreign car, no defense to action for resulting injury.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 103, 139) on duty as to inspection of cars and engines.

Duty of master to provide safe appliances.

Cited in Troxler v. Southern R. Co. 124 N. C. 191, 44 L. R. A. 314, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, 32 S. E. 550, holding failure of company to equip cars with automatic couplers negligence per se, entitling brakeman to recover for injuries sustained while in act of making coupling; Greenlee v. Southern R. Co. 122 N. C. 978, 41 L. R. A. 400, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, 30 S. E. 115, holding railroad liable for injuries to brakeman due to failure to have cars properly equipped with automatic couplers; Chesson v. John L. Roper Lumber Co. 118 N. C. 66, 23 S. E. 925, holding it duty of master to provide safe ways or appliances and to inspect same that dangerous defects may be remedied, saving servants from injury; Elmore v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 132 N. C. 878, 44 S. E. 620, Reversing on rehearing, 131 N. C. 579, 42 S. E. 989, holding railroad company liable for injury to brakeman using foot to kick bumper in place because of defective coupling appliance; Williams v. Southern R. Co. 119 N. C. 749, 26 S. E. 32, holding it question for jury whether master used due diligence to prevent rope used in hoisting logs from slipping.

Obedience to orders.

Cited in Williams v. Southern R. Co. 119 N. C. 749, 26 S. E. 32, holding act of servant otherwise negligent not so if done suddenly under command of his master's representative; Shadd v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 116 N. C. 970, 21 S. E. 554, holding brakeman entitled to recover for personal injuries received while coupling cars under orders of conductor; Fleming v. Southern R. Co. 132 N. C. 719, 44 S. E. 551 (dissenting opinion) as to whether instruction as to waiver of rules of railroad company by conductor and one as to effect of fellow servant law constitute only one instruction.

Cited in notes (48 L. R. A. 760, 765, 766) on servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying direct command; (47 L. R. A. 189) on fact that servant's motive for obedience was fear of dismissal; (24 L. R. A. 660) on disobedience of master's rules as contributory negligence.

Distinguished in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley, 12 C. C. A. 598, 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. 231, holding master not liable for injuries to brakeman received while making coupling of cars in violation of express order of master that brakeman should couple cars with stick, and under no circumstances go between cars when engine is attached.

Judicial notice.

Followed in Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 114 N. C. 721, 19 S. E. 362, second appeal, holding court will take judicial notice of relation of conductor and brakeman of train.

Burden of proof.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 150) on burden of proving employer's knowledge of danger to which servant was exposed.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Means v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 429, 35 S. E. 813, holding engineer in charge of train discharging additional duties of conductor not fellow servant of brakeman; Ward v. Odell Mfg. Co. 126 N. C. 954, 36 S. E. 194, holding boy engaged in carrying quills in spinning mill and boss of looms not fellow servants; Turner v. Goldsboro Lumber Co. 119 N. C. 397, 26 S. E. 23, holding common laborer and foreman of planing mill not fellow servants; Purcell v. Southern R. Co. 119 N. C. 737, 26 S. E. 161, holding conductor in charge of freight train and brakeman not fellow servants; Lamb v. Littman, 132 N. C. 980, 44 S. E. 646, holding boss of spinning room not fellow servant of ten-year old boy floor sweeper.

Cited in notes (46 L. R. A. 352) as to when conductor is deemed to be coservant of other railway employees; (51 L. R. A. 551, 618) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant.

Distinguished in Pleasants v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 121 N. C. 496, 61 Am. St. Rep. 674, 28 S. E. 267, holding conductor and engineer of independent trains not fellow servants; Wright v. Southern R. Co. 80 Fed. 261, holding conductor and engineer of passenger train fellow servants of track hand riding on hand car with which train collides.

Right to discharge as affecting liability.

Approved in Bryan v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 390, 38 S. E. 914, holding master not liable for negligence of "boss" whereby employee whom he had no right to discharge is injured.

Negligence per se.

Cited in Witsell v. West Asheville & S. S. R. Co. 120 N. C. 560, 27 S. E. 125, holding it negligence per se for carrier to use transportation appliances which ordinary inspection would show to be defective.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 728, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823, 21 S. E. 550, holding, in absence of contributory negligence of pedestrian, municipality liable for leaving street in dangerous condition.

18 L. R. A. 850, BOARD OF EDUCATION v. BLADEN COUNTY, 111 N. C. 578, 16 S. E. 621.

Poll or highway taxes.

Cited in Board of Education v. Bladen Comrs. 113 N. C. 385, 18 S. E. 661, holding unconstitutional, special levy of poll tax for school purposes in excess of constitutional amount.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 407) on poll taxes.

Distinguished in Hornthall v. Washington County, 126 N. C. 32, 35 S. E. 191, dissenting opinion per Furches, J., majority denying right to recover on contract for repairing public highways of county any sum in excess of tax permitted to be levied.

18 L. R. A. 855, Re TAYLOR, 154 Pa. 183, 25 Atl. 1061.

Competency of witness as to gift causa mortis.

Cited in Conway's Estate, 18 Lanc. L. Rev. 140, holding one to whom bonds are given as a gift causa mortis for the benefit of a certain church is a competent witness.

Equitable assignment.

Cited in Penn Iron Co. v. Lancaster, 14 Lanc. L. Rev. 180, holding order drawn for full amount of particular fund constitutes valid equitable assignment; Adam's Estate, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 447, holding request by depositor just before his death to cashier of bank to take care of note coming due, not an equitable assignment.

Gifts.

Cited in Conway's Estate, 18 Lanc. L. Rev. 135, holding delivery of order for bonds made the subject of gift causa mortis fully executes gift.

Cited in footnotes to Picksley v. Starr, 32 L. R. A. 703, which sustains Christmas gift by check to employee according to habit as against subsequent claim of forgetfulness of increase of salary; Re Wagoner, 32 L. R. A. 766, which holds valid, bond with warrant of attorney to be delivered on donor's death.

Cited in note (19 L. R. A. 700) on delivery of bank book to sustain gift of money in bank.

18 L. R. A. 859, BERNARD v. TAYLOR, 23 Or. 416, 37 Am. St. Rep. 693, 31 Pac. 968.

Wagering contracts.

Cited in footnotes to Specht v. Beindorff, 42 L. R. A. 429, which holds void, note payable if maker elected to certain office; Hankins v. Ottinger, 40 L. R. A. 76, which upholds agreement between owners to divide premiums and stake moneys offered by racing associations; Rich v. State, 38 L. R. A. 719, which holds putting up money as forfeit on agreement to put up larger sum put up by other party, not bet.

Conspiracy as preventing relief between partners.

Cited in footnotes to Morrison v. Bennett, 40 L. R. A. 159, which holds partnership for horse racing on bet with one deceived by partners into believing horse untrained, conspiracy preventing relief between partners.

Validity of illegal contract as between parties.

Approved in Bradtfeldt v. Cooke, 27 Or. 199, 50 Am. St. Rep. 701, 40 Pac. 1, holding mortgage made to defraud mortgagor's creditors valid between the parties thereto when there is a consideration to support it.

Recovery of money wagered or paid on illegal contract.

Cited in Snyder v. Nelson, 101 Ill. App. 622, holding money paid to stakeholder as bet on foot race may be demanded back before race takes place; Ferguson v. Yunt, 13 S. D. 124, 82 N. W. 509, holding that money deposited with stakeholder as wager on horse race may be demanded back before race takes place; Stansfield v. Kunz, 62 Kan. 801, 64 Pac. 614, holding that illegal contract to sell intoxicating liquor may be rescinded before execution and that money paid thereon may be recovered; Saunders v. Phelps Co. 53 S. C. 177, 31 S. E. 54, holding that money paid to broker to be used in gambling in cotton futures may be recovered back before illegal contract is consummated, Dauler v. Hartley, 178 Pa. 29, 35 Atl. 857, holding money paid to broker agent to be used in wagering contracts recoverable by principal before execution of contract.

Cited in footnote to Ullman v. St. Louis Fair Asso. 56 L. R. A. 606, which denies right to abandon partly executed illegal bookmaking contract for specified period, and recover back pro rata amount of money paid.

J

3 6105 063 243 880

